Ver. 23. And he turned him unto his diſciples, &c.] Both to the twelve apoſtles, and ſeventy diſciples; and ſaid privately; or to them apart: the phraſe privately is wanting in the Vulgate Latin verſion: bleſſed are the eyes that ſee the things that ye ſee; the perſon of the Meſſiah, his kingdom ſetting up in the world, miracles wrought by him, and ſatan falling before him; ſee the note on Matt. xiii. 16.

Ver. 24. For I tell you that many prophets and kings, &c.] As Abraham, Iſaac, Jacob, who were prophets, as well as patriarchs, and David, Solomon, and others: have deſired to ſee thoſe things which ye ſee, and have not ſeen them, and to hear thoſe things which ye hear, and have not heard them; meaning himſelf, doctrines, and miracles; ſee the note on Matt. xiii. 17.

Ver. 25. And behold a certain lawyer ſtood up, &c.] From his ſeat, having been hearing Chriſt preach, very likely, in ſome ſynagogue: when and where this was, is not certain. The Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions call this man a Scribe; and a lawyer and a Scribe were the ſame, as appears from Matt. xxii. 35. compared with Mark xii. 28. and tempted him; or tried him whether he underſtood the law, or whether he would ſay any thing contrary to it, and ſee if he could gain any advantage againſt him, and expoſe him, and get credit and applauſe to himſelf: ſaying, maſter, what ſhall I do to inherit eternal life? the ſame queſtion as was put by the young ruler in Mark x. 17. ſee the note on Matt. xix. 16. for they were both of the ſame complexion, and upon the ſame foundation, ſeeking eternal life by their own works: he ſaid unto him; that is, Jeſus, as all the Oriental verſions expreſs it.

Ver. 26. What is written in the law? &c.] Chriſt, with great propriety, ſends him to the law, to ſee and obſerve what was written there, what are the terms and conditions of life, as fixed there; partly, becauſe this man, by his office and character, was an interpreter of the law; and partly, becauſe his queſtion was, what ſhall I do? how readeſt thou? in the law, every day; referring to the Keriat Shema, the reading of the Shema, i. e. thoſe words in Deut. vi. 4, &c. Hear, O Iſrael, &c. morning and evening [i], as appears by his anſwer.

Ver. 27. And he anſwering ſaid, thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God, &c.] This was part of their phylacteries, which they recited every day; ſee the notes on Matt. xxii. 37, 39. and on Mark xii. 28, 29.

Ver. 28. And he ſaid unto him, thou haſt anſwered right, &c.] It is ſo written, and read; and this, as if he ſhould ſay, is the ſum and ſubſtance of the law, and what that requires men ſhould do: wherefore, do this, and thou ſhalt live; for the bare reading of it was not ſufficient; tho' theſe men placed great confidence in reading this paſſage, or in reciting their phylacteries, of which this was a part, morning and night. Our Lord intimates by this, that, according to the tenor of the law, eternal life was not to be had without a complete and perfect performance of the duties of love to God, and to the neighbour, contained in theſe words; and this he ſuggeſts, in order to convict him of the impoſſibility of obtaining life by the works of the law, ſince ſuch a performance cannot be made by man.

Ver. 29. But he willing to juſtify himſelf, &c.] Upon the foot of his own righteouſneſs, and to make himſelf appear to be righteous to others; for this the Jews thought themſelves able to do, both to juſtify themſelves before God by their own works, and make it out to men, that they were truly righteous perſons; and it is a maxim with them, that "every one, המצדיק את עצמו, that juſtifies him-" "ſelf, below (on earth,) they juſtify him above (or" "in heaven) [k]." No wonder then that this man was deſirous of juſtifying himſelf; and in order to which he ſaid, and who is my neighbour? he takes no notice of God, and love to him, as coming into the account of his juſtification, only of his neighbour; thinking when this queſtion was anſwered, he ſhould be very able to make it out, that he was not wanting neither in doing juſtice between himſelf and his neighbour, nor in ſhewing kindneſs and beneficence to him; for by his neighbour he meant only an Iſraelite; one of the ſame nation and religion with him. So the Jews commonly interpret the word neighbour, either of one that is related to them in nature, קרובו, that is, near a-kin to them in blood [l]; or that profeſſes the ſame religion as they do, and whom they call a neighbour in the law; and ſo they explain the paſſage now cited, and thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thyſelf, שהוא רעך בתורה; that is, who is thy neighbour in the law [m]: for they will not allow a Gentile, no, not even a proſelyte of the gate to be a neighbour: for thus they ſay [n], "an Iſraelite that ſlays a proſelyte of the gate, or the" "ſtranger that dwells with him, is not ſlain for" "him by the Sanhedrim; for it is ſaid, Exod. xxi." "14. but if a man comes preſumptuouſly upon his" "neighbour to ſlay him, &c. and there is no need" "to ſay he is not ſlain for a Gentile." And again [o], "when a man ſees one of them (the Gentiles) fall" "into the ſea, he need not take him up; as it is ſaid," "Lev. xix. 16. neither ſhalt thou ſtand againſt the" "blood of thy neighbour, ואין זה רעך, but this is" "not thy neighbour." This notion Chriſt oppoſes and diſproves in the following parable, which is an anſwer to the lawyer's queſtion.

Ver. 30. And Jeſus anſwering, ſaid, &c.] The following things; which may either be conſidered as a narrative of matter of fact, or as a ſuppoſed caſe, and delivered by way of parable; and in either way, though the general deſign of it is in anſwer to the lawyer's queſtion, to ſhew who may be called a neighbour; and that a man who is a ſtranger, and accounted an enemy, yet doing acts of mercy, kindneſs, and beneficence, to one in diſtreſs, ought to be accounted a neighbour; and has a much better title to ſuch a character, than one of the ſame nation and religion, who takes no notice of a diſtreſſed object; yet it may be conſidered, as repreſenting the ſad eſtate and condition of mankind by the fall, and their recovery by Chriſt; whereby he ſhews himſelf to be their beſt neighbour, and trueſt friend: a certain man went down from Jeruſalem to Jericho. The diſtance between theſe two places, the Jews ſay [p], was ten parſa's, that is, forty miles for every parſa was four miles, and ten parſa's ar expreſsly ſaid [q] to be forty miles; which muſt b underſtood of the leſſer miles, otherwiſe a parſa it ſelf, was but a mile: the Jews had two ſorts o miles, the greater was 2000 cubits, the leſſe 1000 cubits: the man is ſaid to go down from th one to the other, becauſe Jeruſalem ſtood on hig ground, and Jericho in a valley. This certain ma may repreſent mankind falling in Adam, from ſtate of happineſs, into miſery: human nature w originally in one man, but one man was created firſt, and he had all human nature in him, and was the repreſentative of mankind; he was made upright, but ſinned, and fell from his uprightneſs, and all mankind in him: he may be ſaid to go down from Jeruſalem, which ſignifies peace, and the viſion of it; and was a city compact together, beautiful and well ſituated; where were the worſhip of God, and his Shekinah, or divine preſence; to Jericho, a city accurſed by Joſhua, and a very wicked place in the days of Chriſt: ſince man by ſinning againſt God, departed from his happy and peaceful ſtate, from a ſtate of peace and tranquillity with God, with the holy angels, and even with the beaſts of the field; and alſo from peace and ſerenity in his own conſcience, as well as from communion with God; and from his pure worſhip and ſervice, to a ſenſual, earthly, worldly, wicked, and accurſed ſtate: and fell among thieves: in the way to Jericho, was a place called Adomim, which ſignifies bloods, becauſe much blood was ſhed there, by the frequent incurſions of thieves and robbers, as Jerom obſerves[r]; and was about four hours journey from Jericho[s]: and by the man's falling among thieves, may be expreſſed mankind coming into the hands of ſin and ſatan, which are as robbers, that ſteal, kill, and deſtroy; ſince theſe have robbed man of his honour, defaced the image of God in him, and deprived him of the glory of God, and were murderers of him from the beginning: which ſtripped him of his raiment; as thieves and robbers are uſed to do; ſignifying the loſs of original righteouſneſs by ſin, which was a covering to man, in which he could appear before God; and was very ornamental to him, being pure and perfect in its kind, though only a creatures righteouſneſs, and a created one; and which was natural and loſeable, as the event has ſhewn: hence man is become a naked creature, has nothing to cover himſelf with, but ſtands expoſed to the law, juſtice, and wrath of God; is deſtitute of a righteouſneſs, nor can he work out one that will ſtand him in any ſtead, or juſtify him before God: and wounded him; which is the common uſage of ſuch men; and may ſet forth the morbid and diſeaſed condition that ſin has brought man into; being from the crown of the head, to the ſole of the foot, full of wounds, bruiſes, and putrifying ſores; and ſuch as are in themſelves mortal, and incurable by any, but the great phyſician of ſouls, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and yet men are naturally inſenſible of them, and unconcerned about them: and departed, leaving him half dead; or near death, as the Arabic verſion renders it; which may be applied to death, natural, ſpiritual, and eternal: to death natural, which comes by ſin, ſeeing it is but one part, or half of the man that dies this death, namely, his body; and to a ſpiritual death, or the death of the ſoul, which is dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, whilſt the body is alive; and to eternal death, to which men are expoſed for ſin, and are under the ſentence of it, though not executed; and in each of theſe ſenſes may be ſaid to be half dead: and which is no ways to the advantage of the doctrine of man's free-will, and the powers and abilities of it; as if man was not in a ſpiritual ſenſe ſo dead, that he can do nothing in a ſpiritual manner; but the phraſe is uſed, to ſhow the power of ſin, and the malice of ſatan, and yet that man is ſtill recoverable by the grace of God.

Ver. 31. And by chance there came down a certain prieſt that way, &c.] Who had been at Jeruſalem, to take his turn in the courſes, and was now returning to Jericho, where the ſtationary men were, to which he belonged: for it is ſaid[t], that "the former prophets appointed twenty and four courſes; and for every courſe there was a ſtation at Jeruſalem, of prieſts, and of Levites, and of Iſraelites; and when the time of the courſe came to go up, the prieſts and Levites went up to Jeruſalem. The Rabbans teach, that there were twenty-four courſes in the land of Iſrael, and there were twelve at Jericho." And which is elſewhere[u] related thus; "the former prophets appointed four and twenty courſes, and for every courſe there was a ſtation at Jeruſalem, of prieſts, of Levites, and of Iſraelites; the tradition is, that four and twenty thouſand were the ſtation from Jeruſalem, and half a ſtation from Jericho; though Jericho was able to furniſh out a perfect ſtation itſelf; but for the ſake of dividing the glory to Jeruſalem, it produced but half a ſtation." So that it is no wonder to hear of prieſts and Levites, paſſing to and fro in this road. Nor was this a chance matter with reſpect to God, by whoſe providence all things are ordered, directed, and governed; nor any wonderful thing with reſpect to men, which fell out in an uncommon way, beyond expectation; the phraſe only ſignifies, that ſo it came to paſs: and when he ſaw him, he paſſed by on the other ſide; when he ſaw him naked, and in ſuch a bloody condition, he might take him for one really dead, and therefore croſſed the way on purpoſe, leſt he ſhould any ways touch him, and be defiled by him, and ſo break the law, and incur the penalty of it, mentioned in Numb. xix. 16. or to ſhun ſo horrible a ſight; or rather, through hardneſs of heart, and want of compaſſion.

Ver. 32. And likewiſe a Levite, when he was at the place, &c.] Where the poor man lay in this deplorable condition: came and looked on him; and that was all; but neither ſpoke a comfortable word, nor adminiſtered any relief to him, or in the leaſt aſſiſted him: and paſſed by on the other ſide; as the prieſt had done before him: by the prieſt may be meant, the moral law, and by the Levite the ceremonial law; and ſo by both, the whole law of Moſes; and intimates, that no mercy is to be expected from thence: the law makes no abatement in its demands, nor any allowance for the fall and weakneſs of man; nor is it become milder under the Goſpel-diſpenſation; nor will it accept of an imperfect, though ſincere obedience, in the room of a perfect one; and is deaf to all repentings, cries, and tears: no relief is to be had from thence, for a naked, wounded, and dead man; no robe of righteouſneſs to cover a naked ſoul; for by the law is the knowledge of ſin, but not a juſtifying righteouſneſs by the deeds of it: for the deeds of the law, performed by ſinful men, are impure and imperfect; and were they pure and perfect, they would be unprofitable, and could not juſtify in the ſight of God from former ſins; for could they, they would eſtabliſh boaſting, and diſanull the death of Chriſt, and fruſtrate the grace of God; and therefore righteouſneſs cannot be by the law, that leaves a man as naked as it finds him: nor is there any healing by it to a wounded conſcience; there's no pity from it, no juſtification by it, no pardon through it, no expiation or atonement of ſin, by obedience to it; no word of comfort is ſpoken by it; ſo far from it, that when it comes with power, it opens the wounds of ſin, fills the conſcience with wrath and terror, deſtroys all the man's former hopes of happineſs, and leaves him where it found him; without healing him itſelf, or pointing out a phyſician to him; much leſs can it give life to a dead ſinner: ſpiritual life is not communicated by it, nor can eternal life, or any true hope of it, be attained through it; it is ſo far from it, that it is the killing letter, and the miniſtration of condemnation and death.

Ver. 33. But a certain Samaritan, &c.] By whom Chriſt may be meant; not that he was really ſo, for he was a Jew, a ſon of Abraham, and of David, according to the fleſh, but he was ſo called by the Jews, John viii. 48. and was treated as ſuch by them: and ſince it is the deſign of the parable in general to ſhew, that he that does acts of kindneſs and mercy to perſons in diſtreſs, is a neighbour in the trueſt ſenſe, tho' he is not an Iſraelite, but even a Samaritan, who was, above all men, hated by the Jews; why may it not be thought to be the view of Chriſt in particular, to prove himſelf to be the beſt neighbour and friend of men, though he was traduced by the Jews as a Samaritan? as he journeyed; which may deſign the aſſumption of human nature, which is ſometimes expreſſed, by his coming from his Father, by his deſcending from heaven, and coming into this world; which phraſes intend his incarnation, and carry in them the idea of journeying: for as his aſcent to heaven is expreſſed by taking a journey, Matt. xxv. 15. ſo may his deſcent from heaven; and while he was here on earth, he was as a ſtranger and pilgrim, as a ſojourner and traveller: came where he was; put himſelf in the law-place, and ſtead of his people, who fell with the reſt of mankind in Adam; he became their ſurety from eternity, and cloathed himſelf with their nature in time; he took upon him their ſins, as their repreſentative, and fulfilled the righteouſneſs of the law on their account, and bore the penalty of it in their room: and when he ſaw him; Chriſt ſaw the elect before the fall, as they were choſen in him, and given unto him, in all the glory they were to be brought into; when he loved them, and his delight was with them: and when he came to redeem them, he ſaw them as follows; as loſt, as weak and ſtrengthleſs, as wicked, and as the worſt of ſinners, as ungodly, and enemies, as children of wrath by nature, as others; and he ſhed his blood for them, and waſhed them from their ſins, that he might preſent them to himſelf a glorious church, without ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing; juſt ſuch an one he had ſeen them to be, in the glaſs of his Father's purpoſes, in his council and covenant; and he ſees them in their blood, and in the impurity of their nature, when he comes to call them by his grace: and he had compaſſion on him. The compaſſion of Chriſt on his elect, is to be ſeen in his eternal covenant engagements; for his tender mercies have been ever of old; and in his aſſumption of their nature, which was through his own, as well as the tender mercy of his Father; and in the redemption of them, which was in love and pity; and alſo in their regeneration and converſion, for the great things there, and then done for them by him, are owing to his compaſſion.

Ver. 34. And went to him, and bound up his wounds, &c.] Which ſin had made; it being part of the work of Chriſt, to bind up the broken-hearted, to heal wounded ſinners, and reſtore comforts to mourners; and which he does, by pouring in oil and wine: by which, in general, may be deſigned, the blood of Chriſt, applied to the conſcience of a wounded ſinner; which cleanſes from all ſin, heals all the wounds and diſeaſes of ſin, chears and revives fainting ſpirits, gives eaſe, peace, and pleaſure, and is therefore exceeding valuable and precious: and in particular by oil may be meant, the grace of the Spirit of God; compared unto it, for its ſweet ſmell, its chearing and refreſhing virtue and efficacy, and its cooling, ſoftening, ſuppling, and healing nature: and by wine, the doctrines of the Goſpel; ſuch as free juſtification by Chriſt's righteouſneſs, and pardon through his blood; which when applied to diſtreſſed minds, cauſe joy and gladneſs, and them to forget their ſorrow, and remember their miſery no more: and the pouring in of theſe, may denote the plentiful effuſion of Chriſt's blood, and the riches of his grace in the application of it; and the freeneſs and generouſneſs of this action, which is his own; for man cannot do it. It was uſual with the Jews, to mix oil and wine together, for the healing of wounds: hence thoſe rules and traditions [w]; "they anoint a linen "cloth for a ſick man on the ſabbath; when? "when they mingle the oil and the wine on the ſabbath-eve, but if they do not mingle it on the "ſabbath-eve, it is forbidden; it is a tradition, ſays "R. Simeon ben Eleazar, R. Meir pronounced it "lawful, לטרוף יין ושמן, to mingle wine and oil, and "to anoint the ſick on the ſabbath." So oil and wine were mingled together, and uſed to heal the ſore occaſioned by circumciſion [x]: and ſet him on his own beaſt; by which may be meant, either the red horſe of Chriſt's humanity, Zech. i. 8. to which he has united all his people; and in which he has bore their perſons, and has repreſented them, and ſtill bears them on his heart: or the white horſe of the Goſpel, Rev. vi. 2. compared to a horſe, for its ſtrength, ſwiftneſs, and uſefulneſs in battle; and to a white one, for the purity of its doctrines, the joy and peace it brings, and the victory it obtains: and this is Chriſt's own, and on which he himſelf rides, and ſhews his glory, and goes forth conquering and to conquer; and on which he ſets his people, and they are carried out of the reach of men and devils to deſtroy them, and are cauſed to ride on the high places of the earth: and brought him to an inn; a church of Chriſt, where the Goſpel guides, directs, and carries ſouls: ſaints are not at home in their proper city and country, they are travellers here, and need refreſhment by the way; and a church of Chriſt is as an inn, for the entertainment of ſuch: 'tis large, and has room enough for as many as come to it; and is well ſtored with proviſions of all ſorts, ſignified by bread, and milk, and wine, a feaſt of fat things, a furniſhed table, Zion's proviſions, the goodneſs and fatneſs of God's houſe; and has rivers of pleaſure, and very good lodgings, ſure dwellings, and quiet habitations; all which is agreeable to weary travellers: and hither Chriſt brings his people, whom he ſaves and calls; it is his will that they ſhould be in a church-ſtate, and it is his own act to bring them there, and 'tis their great privilege to be thither brought: and took care of him; clothed him with his righteouſneſs, fed him with the choiceſt of proviſions, gave him reviving cordials of love, refreſhing promiſes, exceeding great and precious ones; and larger ſupplies of grace, with protection and preſervation from all evils.

Ver. 35. And on the morrow when he departed, &c.] Having taken care of him all night, and put him into a comfortable way, leaves him, though in good hands; as Chriſt does his people, to learn to live by faith upon him: and he took out two pence; two

Roman Denarii, or pence; which amount to about fifteen pence of our money, and were equal to the half ſhekel, paid for the redemption of an Iſraelite: by which may be meant, not the law and Goſpel; for though theſe both bear the image and ſuperſcription of God, and are his current coin, and are both delivered by Chriſt, and to be regarded and diſpenſed by the miniſters of the word; yet they are not of equal value and uſe, as theſe two pence ſeem to be: wherefore, rather the two Teſtaments, Old and New, may be deſigned, ſince they are both inſpired by God, and dictated by the ſame Spirit, and bear the ſame impreſs; and are alike, and exactly agree, as two pence do; and are given to the miniſters of the Goſpel to handle, and make uſe of for the good of ſouls: unleſs the two ordinances of baptiſm, and the Lord's ſupper, ſhould rather be thought to be intended: theſe bear the ſame ſtamp and authority, and are both jointly neceſſary to communion, and church order; and are given by Chriſt to his miniſters, to be adminiſtered by them, for the good of his church; and are ſimilar, as two breaſts are, they being both breaſts of conſolation, and agree in ſetting forth the ſufferings and death of Chriſt: or rather, the gifts and graces of the Spirit of God, to qualify men for the work of the miniſtry; which both come from the ſelf-ſame Spirit of God, and are jointly neceſſary to fit a man for ſuch ſervice; and are given for the benefit and advantage of the Lord's people, and in an eminent manner by Chriſt, on his departure from hence, when he aſcended on high, and received gifts for men, and gave them to them: and gave them to the hoſt; or the keeper and maſter of the inn; by whom are meant, the miniſters of the Goſpel; who are governours in the church, the maſters of that ſpiritual inn; who have the proviſions of God's houſe under their care, and whoſe buſineſs it is to invite travellers in, and to dreſs their food for them, and ſet it before them, and bid them welcome: and ſaid unto him, take care of him; which is the work of Chriſt's miniſters to do, by feeding ſouls with the words of faith and ſound doctrine; by miniſtring the Goſpel to them in a faithful manner; and by a conſtant adminiſtration of the ordinances of it; and by keeping a diligent watch over them, both with reſpect to principles and practice; and by ſpeaking a word in ſeaſon to them: and whatſoever thou ſpendeſt more: faithful miniſters ſpend much, and are at great expence in taking care of the ſouls of men; in fervent and frequent prayer to God; in diligent ſearching the ſcriptures; in the laborious miniſtry of the word and ordinances; and in the conſtant exerciſe and improvement of their ſpiritual gifts; and in the loſs of reputation and credit, and of health, and ſometimes of life itſelf: when I come again, I will repay thee: Chriſt will certainly come again a ſecond time, to judge both quick and dead; and then he'll recompenſe his miniſters, for all their toil and labour, care and expence; he'll then bid them, as good and faithful ſervants, enter into the joy of their Lord; and when they ſhall every one receive the reward of his own work, in a way of grace, and ſhall ſhine as the ſtars in the firmament, for ever and ever.

Ver. 36. Which now of theſe three, &c.] The prieſt, the Levite, and the Samaritan, thinkeſt thou, was neighbour to him that fell among the thieves? the prieſt and Levite that paſſed by, and took no notice of him, and gave him no relief, neither by words nor actions; or the Samaritan, that did all the above kind and generous things to him?

Ver. 37. And he ſaid, he that ſhewed mercy to him, &c.] Meaning the Samaritan; which he was obliged to declare, though of another country and religion, and accounted as an enemy; yet the caſe was ſo plain, as put by Chriſt, that he could not with any honour or conſcience, ſay otherwiſe: then ſaid Jeſus unto him, go and do thou likewiſe; ſuch like acts of beneficence and kindneſs, though to a perſon of a different nation and religion, and though even an enemy; and by ſo doing, thou wilt not only appear to be a good neighbour thyſelf, but to love thy neighbour as thyſelf.

Ver. 38. Now it came to paſs as they went, &c.] As Chriſt and his diſciples went from Jeruſalem, having been at the feaſt of tabernacles, John vii. 2, 10. or at the feaſt of dedication, John x. 22. to ſome other parts of Judea: that he entered into a certain village; called Bethany, which was about fifteen furlongs, or two miles from Jeruſalem, John xi. 1, 18. and a certain woman named Martha. This is a common name with the Jews; hence we read of Samuel bar Martha [y], and of Abba bar Martha [z], and of Iſaac bar Martha [a]; and of Martha, the daughter of Baithus [b], who is ſaid to be a rich widow; and this Martha here, is thought by Grotius to be a widow alſo, with whom her brother Lazarus, and ſiſter Mary lived: though ſometimes, this name was given to men; ſo we read of [c] Martha, the uncle of Rab, who had five brethren; and the ſame writer obſerves [d], that it is not known whether Martha is a man or a woman, but this is determined here: received him into her houſe; in a very kind and courteous manner ſhe being miſtreſs of it; and having known Chriſt before, or at leaſt had heard much of him, and believed in him, as the true Meſſiah.

Ver. 39. And ſhe had a ſiſter called Mary, &c.] Which alſo was a common name with the Jews, and is the ſame with Miriam; ſo we read of Mary, the daughter of Nicodemon, the ſame perhaps with Nicodemus; and the ſame perſon that is before called Martha, the daughter of Baithus, is ſometimes called Mary, the daughter of Baithus [e], though theſe two names are certainly diſtinct: which alſo ſat at Jeſus feet; was a diſciple of his, as well as Martha; for it was uſual for diſciples, or the ſcholars of the wiſe men, to ſit at the feet of their maſters, to which the alluſion is in Deut. xxxiii. 3. ſee the note on Acts xxii. 3. The Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Coptic verſions, read at the Lord's feet; ſo Beza's ancient copy, and one of Stephens's; and the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read, at our Lord's feet. The phraſe is expreſſive of her great affection for Chriſt, her humble deportment, and cloſe attention: and heard his word; or diſcourſe; for as ſoon as he entered into the houſe, he began to preach to thoſe that were in it, and that came along with him, improving every opportunity for the good of ſouls; and Mary heard him with great eagerneſs and diligence, affection, pleaſure, and profit.

Ver. 40. But Martha was cumbred about much ſerving, &c.] Or was drawn off, from hearing the word; from attending on Chriſt; being taken up in providing for him, and thoſe that came with him; in dreſſing the food, or in ordering her ſervants, how ſhe would have every thing done, and in over-looking them, that every thing was done in proper order; ſo that ſhe had a great deal of buſineſs upon her head and hands, which diſtracted her thoughts, or took them off of divine things, and put her in great hurry and concern. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, Martha laboured in preparing many things for him; making a large and ſumptuous entertainment: and the Perſic verſion, which is rather a comment than a tranſlation, renders it, Martha was buſied in preparing food, and making a feaſt; ſparing no coſt nor pains, thinking nothing too good, nor too grand, for ſuch a gueſt ſhe had in her houſe: and ſhe came to him and ſaid, Lord, doſt thou not care that my ſiſter hath left me to ſerve alone? ſhe came to him; that is, to Jeſus, as the Perſic verſion expreſſes it: ſhe came out of the room where ſhe was getting ready the entertainment, into the room where Chriſt was preaching; and, as the Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read, ſhe ſtood and ſaid: ſhe did not ſit down at his feet, as Mary did, to hear his word, but ſtood as about to go away again, after ſhe had ſaid what ſhe came about: ſhe did not think fit to ſpeak to Mary herſelf, tho' perhaps ſhe might do that firſt; who, ſhewing an unwillingneſs to go with her, ſhe therefore applies to Chriſt, as believing that he would, with her, look upon it as a very reaſonable thing, that ſhe ſhould take her part with her; and that a word from him would go a great way with her ſiſter. And ſhe ſeems to ſpeak, not only by way of complaint of Mary, who had left her to prepare and ſerve up this entertainment alone; but even of Chriſt himſelf, in ſome ſort, as if he had not ſhewed that care and concern in this matter, which ſhe thought was neceſſary. However, ſhe was willing to have his ſenſe of her ſiſter's conduct, and hoped, and even doubted not, but that he would be of the ſame mind with herſelf: bid her therefore that ſhe help me; that ſhe join, aſſiſt, and put an helping hand in this ſervice; ſpeak but a word to her, give her orders, and ſhe'll obſerve and obey.

Ver. 41. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto her, &c.] Calling her by her name, and repeating it, Martha, Martha, which expreſſes great intimacy and friendſhip, and much earneſtneſs, and, as it were, pitying her preſent ſituation and circumſtances: thou art careful and troubled about many things; intimating, that ſhe was over anxious, and too ſolicitous, and more thoughtful and careful than ſhe need be: he did not require ſuch preparations for him, and ſo much attendance; ſhe gave herſelf an unneceſſary trouble in providing ſo many things for his entertainment, when leſs would have ſufficed; ſo that inſtead of joining with her in her requeſt, he reproves her for her over-anxious care and ſolicitude, to have a nice and plentiful feaſt. The Perſic verſion gives a ſenſe quite contrary to the deſign of the text, rendering the words thus, thou art adorned in all things, and haſt the preference above many women.

Ver. 42. But one thing is needful, &c.] Meaning not that one diſh of meat was ſufficient, and there was no need of any more, in oppoſition to Martha's carefulneſs in preparing many; for this is too low a ſenſe of the words; which yet ſome ancient writers have given into: but rather the hearing of the word, the Goſpel of Chriſt, which Mary was engaged in; and which, ordinarily ſpeaking, is neceſſary to the knowledge of Chriſt, and ſalvation by him, and to faith in him, Rom. x. 14, 17. not that this is the only needful thing; nor does Chriſt ſay there is but one thing needful, but that there is one thing needful; for there are other things that are alſo needful, and uſeful, as meditation and prayer, and attendance on, and ſubmiſſion to the ordinances of baptiſm, and the Lord's ſupper, and all the duties of religion: but Chriſt's meaning ſeems plainly to be, that Mary hearing the word from his mouth, and at his feet, was one neceſſary thing, in oppoſition to Martha's many unneceſſary ones, about which ſhe was cumbred: and Mary hath choſen that good part; or the good part, or portion; Chriſt, the ſum and ſubſtance of the word ſhe heard, and eternal life and ſalvation by him. God himſelf is ſaid to be the portion of his people, and a good one he is, and a portion that laſts for ever; and ſo is Chriſt; ſee Pſ. lxxiii. 26. Lam. iii. 24. where the Septuagint uſe the ſame word as here. The heavenly inheritance alſo, eternal glory and happineſs is the ſaints portion: it is called in Col. i. 12. the part, or portion of the inheritance with the ſaints in light. The word anſwers to the Hebrew word, חלק; as in that ſaying of the Miſnic doctors [f], "all Iſrael have, חלק, a part, or portion in the world to come." All the Oriental verſions add, for herſelf; and this choice ſhe made, not from the natural power of her own free-will, but as directed, influenced, and aſſiſted by the Spirit and grace of God, and in conſequence of God's eternal choice of her unto ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt: and the part ſhe choſe is, that which ſhall not be taken away from her; by men or devils: faith which comes by hearing of the word, and ſo every other grace of the Spirit is what can never be loſt; nor an intereſt in God, as a covenant God, or in Chriſt as a Saviour, nor a right and title to, nor meetneſs for eternal life, nor that itſelf, can be taken away, or the believer ever be deprived thereof.

CHAP. XI.

Ver. 1. AND it came to paſs that as he was praying, &c.] The following directions concerning prayer, tho' they agree with thoſe in Matt. vi. 9, &c. yet were delivered at another time, and in another place, and upon another occaſion: Chriſt was then in Galilee, now in Judea; he gave the former directions unaſked for, theſe at the requeſt of one of his diſciples; the other were given as he was preaching, theſe immediately after he had been praying; as ſoon as he had done a work he was often employed in, as man and mediator, on account of himſelf, his diſciples, cauſe, and intereſt: and this was done in a certain place; perhaps in the mount of Olives, which was not far from Bethany, where we hear of him laſt, ſince this was a place where he uſed to abide in the night, and pray, Luke xxi. 37. The Arabic verſion reads, in a deſart place; and after he had been at Bethany, he did go to a country near the wilderneſs, to a city called Ephraim, John xi. 54. when he ceaſed; from praying; when he had concluded his prayer, and finiſhed all his petitions, and was off of his knees: one of his diſciples; perhaps one of the ſeventy diſciples who had not heard the ſummary of prayer, and the directions about it before given on the mount, Matt. vi. 9. The Perſic verſion ſion reads, his diſciples; as if they all united in the requeſt: and ſaid unto him, Lord, teach us to pray, as John taught his diſciples; who, as Tertullian ſays[g], brought in a new order and method of praying, and gave his diſciples ſome inſtructions and directions concerning it, much better than what the Jews in common had: and this diſciple looking upon his Lord and maſter as much better qualified to give directions in this important affair than even John himſelf was, requeſts of him that he would; and what might put him upon it at this time ſeems to be, his obſerving that Chriſt had now been at prayer.

Ver. 2. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] That is, Jeſus, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions expreſs, who directed his ſpeech to all the diſciples; for tho' but one of them addreſſed him, it was in the name of the reſt: and beſides, the inſtructions Chriſt was about to give concerned them all, even thoſe that heard them before, and thoſe that had not: when ye pray, ſay, our father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name, thy kingdom come, thy will be done, as in heaven, ſo in earth; the laſt petition is left out in the Vulgate Latin; ſee the notes on Matt. vi. 9, 10.

Ver. 3. Give us day by day our daily bread.] Or for the day; or every day, as the Syriac verſion renders it; ſee the note on Matt. vi. 11.

Ver. 4. And forgive us our ſins, &c.] Beza's moſt ancient copy reads debts, as in Matt. vi. 12. ſee the note there; and which beſt agrees with the phraſe indebted, after mentioned: for we alſo forgive every one that is indebted to us; and lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil; ſee the notes on Matt. vi. 12, 13. The doxology there uſed, and the word Amen, are here omitted. Some of the petitions in this prayer are not delivered in the very ſame words as they are in Matthew. The three firſt petitions are word for word the ſame; for tho' the third petition is different in our tranſlation, it is the ſame in the original. The fourth and fifth vary: in Matthew the fourth is, give us this day our daily bread; here in Luke, give us day by day our daily bread. The fifth in Matthew is, and forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors; here, and forgive us our ſins, for we alſo forgive every one that is indebted to us. And theſe verbal variations, tho' the ſenſe is the ſame, together with the omiſſion of the doxology, and the word Amen, ſhew, that this prayer was not deſigned to be an exact form, and to be ſo uſed, but as a directory of prayer. I have, in my notes on Matt. vi. 9, &c. ſhewn the agreement there is between the petitions in this prayer, and ſome that were made uſe of among the Jews; and have ſuppoſed that our Lord took notice of ſuch petitions, which the good people among the Jews frequently uſed; and which he approved of, and ſingled out, and put them into the order and method in which they ſtand, with ſome alterations for the better, to be a directory to his diſciples and followers. Which to ſuppoſe, I apprehend, does not at all countenance the making and uſing ſtinted forms of prayer; ſince the petitions uſed by good men among the Jews, were not uſed as forms of prayer, but what they were led unto by the Spirit of God from common and conſtant experience to make uſe of; juſt as we may obſerve now, that good people in different parts, who uſe no form of prayer, nor have ever heard one another pray, and yet make uſe of the ſame petitions, and almoſt, if not altogether, in the ſelfſame words, their wants, neceſſities, caſes, and circumſtances being the ſame; and theſe frequently returning, oblige to a repeated uſe of them, in the ſame words, or near unto them. And tho' forms of prayer might not be in uſe among the Jews in the times of Chriſt, yet it is eaſy to account for it, how Chriſt came to be acquainted with the petitions in general uſe with good men; ſince not only he is God omniſcient, and knows all the prayers of his people, both in public and private; but, as man, muſt know what were uſed, by his attendance on public worſhip, and by the private communion he had with the ſaints and children of God. It muſt indeed be owned, that forms of prayer very early obtained among the Jews; and if not in Chriſt's time, yet in the times of his Apoſtles. There is frequent mention[h] of the eighteen prayers in the times of Gamaliel, the maſter of the Apoſtle Paul; and of a nineteenth compoſed by one of his diſciples[i], Samuel the little, who is thought, by ſome, to be Saul himſelf, whilſt he was a ſcholar of his; and which is directed againſt the hereticks, or chriſtians, as they were called by the Jews; and this eaſily accounts for, how the petitions of the ancient good men among the Jews came to be put with others into their forms of prayer, where we now find them. For that they ſhould take theſe petitions from this directory of Chriſt's, is not reaſonable to ſuppoſe, conſidering their implacable enmity againſt him. Moreover, ſuppoſing, but not granting, that theſe petitions which our Lord took, and put into this order, for the uſe and inſtruction of his diſciples, had been uſed by good men as forms of prayer, it will not juſtify the uſe of forms by any authority of Chriſt, or as being agreeable to his will; ſince it is certain, that however theſe petitions were uſed by good men before, our Lord never deſigned they ſhould be uſed as an exact, preciſe form of prayer by his diſciples; ſeeing there are ſeveral variations in them as here delivered, from what they are as they ſtand in Matthew; whereas, had they been intended as a ſtinted form, they would have been expreſſed in the ſelfſame words: and moreover, to approve of here and there a petition, which for their matter are excellently good, and to approve of them all together, as a form are two different things: to which may be added, that tho' there is an agreement between the petitions, as uſed by the Jews, and thoſe our Lord directs to; yet there are ſome variations and alterations much for the better, which deſtroy the form of them.

Ver. 5. And he ſaid unto them, which of you ſhall have a friend, &c.] A neighbour, or acquaintance: and ſhall go unto him at midnight; which may ſeem a very unſeaſonable time, and which nothing but real diſtreſs, not knowing what otherwiſe to do, would put a man upon: and ſay unto him, friend, lend me three loaves: it was uſual with the Jews to borrow bread of one another, and certain rules are laid down, when, and on what condition, this is to be done; as for inſtance, on a ſabbath-day[k], “a man “may aſk of his friend veſſels of wine, and veſ“ſels of oil, only he muſt not ſay, lend me; and ſo “a woman, מחבירתה ככרות, bread of her friend.” Again[l], “ſo ſaid Hillell, let not a woman lend, “ככר לחברתה, bread to her friend, till ſhe has "fixed the price; leſt wheat ſhould be dearer, and "they ſhould be found coming into the practice "of uſury." For what was lent, could not be demanded again under thirty days[m].

Ver. 6. For a friend of mine in his journey, &c.] Or out of the way; having loſt his way, being benighted; and has rambled about for ſome time, and at length, is come to me; for lodging and entertainment: and I have nothing to ſet before him; to refreſh him with, after ſuch a fatigue, before he goes to bed, which was very requiſite and proper.

Ver. 7. And he from within ſhall anſwer and ſay, &c.] The friend within doors, ſhall reply to him that is without at his door, in the ſtreet: trouble me not; by knocking at the door, and importuning to riſe and lend loaves; whereby his reſt would be diſturbed, and trouble given him: the door is now ſhut; being very late at night, and which could not be opened without noiſe and inconvenience: and my children are with me in bed; ſleeping, as the Perſic verſion adds; there were none, children, or ſervants up, to let him in: I cannot riſe; without diſturbing them: and give thee; the loaves deſired.

Ver. 8. I ſay unto you, &c.] This is the accommodation of the parable; to theſe words are premiſed, in the Vulgate Latin verſion, the following, if he continue knocking: though he will not riſe and give him, becauſe he is a friend; though mere friendſhip will not influence and engage him to riſe from his bed, at ſuch an unſeaſonable time, and fulfil the requeſt of his friend; yet becauſe of his importunity, he will riſe and give him as many as he needeth: as he aſks for, or more, if neceſſary: the deſign of this parable, is the ſame with that of the widow and the unjuſt judge, in ch. xviii. which is to ſhew the force of importunity, where friendſhip, as here, and the fear of God, and regard of men, which were wanting there, have no influence; and ſo to encourage to conſtancy and perſeverance in prayer, with earneſtneſs; taking no denial at the hand of God, but ſtill continuing to make preſſing inſtances.

Ver. 9. And I ſay unto you, aſk, and it ſhall be given you, &c.] This is ſaid by Chriſt, to encourage to prayer, and importunity in it; that if any one aſks of God, in the name of Chriſt, and in faith, whether it be bread for the body, or food for the ſoul; or any bleſſing whatever, whether temporal or ſpiritual, it ſhall be given; not according to their deſerts, but according to the riches of the grace of God; who is rich unto all that call upon him, in ſincerity and truth: ſeek, and ye ſhall find; whether it be Chriſt, the pearl of great price, or God in Chriſt; or particularly, pardoning grace and mercy through Chriſt, or the knowledge of divine things; and both grace here, and glory hereafter, as men ſeek for hidden treaſure; ſuch ſhall not loſe their labour, but ſhall enjoy all theſe valuable things, and whatever they are by prayer, and in the uſe of other means, ſeeking after: knock, and it ſhall be opened to you; the door of mercy with God; the door of fellowſhip with Chriſt; the door of the Goſpel, and the myſteries of it, and of the Goſpel diſpenſation and church-ſtate, into which is admiſſion, to all that ſeek; and the door of heaven, into which there is entrance by the blood of Jeſus: the ſeveral phraſes denote prayer, the continuance of it, and importunity in it; ſee the note on Matt. vii. 7.

Ver. 10. For every one that aſketh receiveth, &c.] Some indeed aſk and receive not, becauſe they aſk amiſs, Jam. iv. 3. who either apply to a wrong perſon, or aſk in a wrong manner, or from wrong principles, or with wrong ends in view: but when a man is right in the object of prayer, and in the matter and manner of prayer, and in the end he propoſes to himſelf, let him be what he will, of whatſoever nation, or ever ſo mean a perſon, he has the petitions which he aſks, either immediately, or, at leaſt, he may be aſſured he ſhall have them in God's due time: and he that ſeeketh findeth; whoever not only prays, but makes uſe of means, as attendance on other ordinances, and is diligent in the uſe of them, ſooner or later finds his account herein, and what his ſoul ſeeks for: and to him that knocketh it ſhall be opened; not only who prays heartily, and ſeeks diligently, but who is importunate, and will have no denial; continues knocking; tho' there may be ſome time a ſeeming delay, yet the door will not always be ſhut to him; after much knocking it will be opened; ſee the note on Matt. vii. 8.

Ver. 11. If a ſon ſhall aſk bread of any of you that is a father, &c.] Our Lord illuſtrates and confirms what he had ſaid before by an inſtance common among men: the relation between a father and a ſon is natural, and it is very near; and it is uſual for a ſon, when hungry, and at the proper times of meals, to aſk bread of his father: and when he does, will he give him a ſtone? ſhould he do ſo, he would ſhow that his heart was as hard, or harder than the ſtone he gives: or if he aſk a fiſh, will he, for a fiſh, give him a ſerpent? And endeavour to deceive him by the likeneſs of the one to the other, eſpecially ſome ſort of fiſh, which would poiſon, or ſting him, but not refreſh and nouriſh him: ſuch inhuman, brutiſh parents are not ſurely to be found; ſee the notes on Matt. vii. 9, 10.

Ver. 12. Or if he ſhall aſk an egg, will he offer him a ſcorpion?] Of which there are three ſorts; ſome are terreſtrial, or land ſcorpions, ſcorpions of the earth, a kind of ſerpents, very venemous and miſchievous, to whom the wicked Jews are compared, Ezek. ii. 6. and the locuſts in Rev. ix. 3, 5: others are airy, or flying ſcorpions, a ſort of fowl; and others are ſea ſcorpions, of the fiſh kind: it is not eaſy to ſay which of them is here meant. There is an herb which is called, עקרבנין[n], the ſcorpion: its leaves are like unto a ſcorpion, as the Jewiſh commentators ſay[o]. This is obſerved with the ſame view as the former. By it may be meant here, either the fiſh that is ſo called, ſince a fiſh is mentioned before; or rather, the land ſcorpion, which is of the ſerpent kind; this brings forth little worms, in the form of eggs, as [q] Pliny ſays: and it is ſaid, that a ſcorpion put into an empty egg-ſhell, has been uſed to be given to perſons, whoſe death has been deſired; which it burſting from, at once ſtrikes and kills: but what father would do ſo to a child!

Ver. 13. If ye then being evil know how to give good gifts unto your children, &c.] See the note on Matt. vii. 11. How much more ſhall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that aſk him? inſtead of the Holy Spirit here, the Vulgate Latin verſion reads, good Spirit, and ſo two copies of Beza's; and the Ethiopic verſion, the good gift of the Holy Spirit; and doubtleſs intends the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit, in diſtinction from, and as preferable to the good things given by earthly parents, to their children.

Ver. 14. And he was caſting out a devil, &c.] At a certain time, either the ſame that is recorded in Matt. ix. 32. or in Matt. xii. 22. for both of them were attended with the ſame effect upon the people, and with the ſame calumny of the Phariſees, mentioned here; and it was dumb. The Ethiopic verſion reads, deaf and dumb; that is, the devil, which poſſeſſed the man, made him both deaf and dumb; if the ſame as in Matt. xii. 22. he was blind, as well as dumb: and it came to paſs, when the devil was gone out; of the man poſſeſſed by him, by the command of Chriſt: the dumb ſpake; as other men did, and as he had done before; the cauſe being removed, the effect ceaſed: and the people wondered; at the power of Chriſt, and concluded that he muſt be the Meſſiah, the ſon of David.

Ver. 17. But he knowing their thoughts, &c.] Being God omniſcient, ſaid unto them; the following parables, as they are called in Mark iii. 23. or proverbial expreſſions, very pertinent to the purpoſe, and ſufficient to ſet aſide the baſe calumnies of the Phariſees: every kingdom divided againſt itſelf, is brought to deſolation; in proceſs of time, diviſion will end in deſtruction; and as it does in the kingdoms of the world, of which there have been fatal inſtances, ſo it would in the kingdom of ſatan, was there in it a diviſion, which the calumny of the Phariſees ſuppoſes: and an houſe divided againſt an houſe, falleth. The Perſic verſion renders it, an houſe divided from the foundation, falls; the ſenſe is, a family, in which one part is oppoſed to the other, iſſues in the ruin of both; ſee the notes on Matt. xii. 25. and on Mark iii. 24, 25.

Ver. 18. And if ſatan alſo be divided againſt himſelf, how ſhall his kingdom ſtand? &c.] This is the accommodation of the above parables, or proverbial ſentences; ſuggeſting, that ſatan muſt be againſt himſelf, if what the Phariſees ſaid was true; and conſequently, his kingdom and government, could not long ſubſiſt: becauſe ye ſay that I caſt out devils through Beelzebub; which is all one as to ſay, that ſatan is divided againſt himſelf, which is not reaſonable to ſuppoſe; ſee the notes on Matt. xii. 26. and on Mark iii. 26.

Ver. 19. And if I by Beelzebub caſt out devils, &c.] Which is what the Phariſees charged him with; in the Greek copies, and ſo in the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions it is read, by Beelzebul, and ſo in the preceding verſes; ſee the note on Matt. x. 25. By whom do your ſons caſt them out? by whoſe help? or in whoſe name? for the Jews pretended to caſt out devils, and to heal thoſe that were poſſeſſed with them; which they did ſometimes, by making uſe of the names of the patriarchs Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and ſometimes of the name of Solomon: Joſephus [q] ſpeaks of many in his time, who had this power of healing; and he himſelf ſaw one Eleazar, in the preſence of Veſpaſian, his children, officers, and ſoldiers, cure many that were poſſeſſed of devils: and his method was, by putting a ring to the noſe of the poſſeſſed, under the ſeal of which, was a root directed to by Solomon, and thereby brought out the unclean ſpirit; and as ſoon as the man was healed, he adjured the devil never to return more; at which time he made mention of the name of Solomon, and rehearſed the inchantments written by him: the ſaid Eleazar, to give a ſpecimen of the efficacy of his art, ſet a cup full of water upon the ground, and commanded the devil when he went out of the man, to turn it over, as a ſign that he had left the man, and the devil immediately obeyed his order: now if theſe ſons of theirs caſt out devils, which they would not ſay were done by the help of the devil, or in his name, why ſhould they aſcribe the ejection of devils by Chriſt, to a diabolical aſſiſtance? therefore ſhall they be your judges; or judges againſt you, as the Arabic verſion; or ſhall reprove you, as the Ethiopic; convict and condemn you; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 27.

Ver. 20. But if I with the finger of God, &c.] The power of God, referring to Exod. viii. 19. and ſo the Cabaliſtic Jews [r] explain it, "the finger is one "of the five in the hand, and is that finger which "works by the power of Elohim;" it is the ſame with the Spirit of God; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 28. which is often called the hand of the Lord, Ezek. i. 3. and iii. 22. and xxxvii. 1. and xl. 1.

Ver. 21. When a ſtrong man armed, &c.] By the ſtrong man, is meant the devil; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 29. and who may be ſaid to be armed, both with his own temptations, which are as fiery darts, and which are thrown by him thick and faſt, ſuddenly and ſwiftly, privily, and with great art and cunning, and with great ſtrength, and are very injurious; and alſo with the ſins and luſts of men, which are armour of unrighteouſneſs, and which ſatan turns upon them, and makes uſe of againſt them, to their great detriment; and who keepeth his palace: which is the corrupt heart of an unregenerate man, where he dwells as a king, has his throne, keeps his court, and has his courtiers and attendants, the luſts of the fleſh, and the deſires of the will, and the carnal affections; and which, as filthy a palace as it is, is perfectly agreeable to his nature; and this is kept by a guard of devils, and worldly luſts, till its ſtrong holds are demoliſhed by the Goſpel, and Chriſt the king of glory enters in; till ſuch time, his goods are in peace: there is no concern in ſuch an heart about ſin, no uneaſineſs on that account, no ſenſe of danger, nor enquiry after ſalvation; no dread upon the mind at the curſes of the law, nor fears of hell and damnation; but ſuch a man lives in entire ſecurity, crying peace, peace, to himſelf.

Ver. 22. But when a ſtronger than he, &c.] By whom is meant Chriſt, who is the mighty God, the Almighty; and appears to be ſo, in the creation of all things, in upholding them by the word of his power, in the government of the world, and the works of providence, in the redemption of his people from ſin, ſatan, and the law, and in the converſion of them, by the efficacy of his grace, and in the preſervation of them by his power; and who is manifeſtly ſtronger than ſatan, not only by theſe inſtances, but by what follows: ſhall come upon him; as he did in perſon, when he diſpoſſeſſed him from the bodies of men; and does by his Spirit in converſion, when he enters into his palace, the heart of man, binds him, and looſes men from him, and turns them from the power of ſatan, to God, and ſets up a throne of grace, where he himſelf dwells and reigns: ſo he comes upon him as an adverſary, and often at an unawares; and always with great power and ſtrength, and ſucceeds: ſatan came upon Chriſt in the wilderneſs, in the garden, and on the croſs, and attacked him, but without ſucceſs; whence it is clear, that he is ſtronger than he: and overcame him; he overcame him in the wilderneſs, and obliged him to retreat; and on the croſs, when he obtained a compleat victory over him, deſtroyed him, his principalities and powers, and all his works, and led him captive; and in converſion, ſo as to deliver his people from him, that were led captive by him, as that he can never re-gain his dominion over them more; and though he's ſuffered to tempt them, he cannot deſtroy them; and the ſaints ſhall overcome him at laſt, and have him bruiſed under their feet: and at the ſame time, he taketh from him all his armour, wherein he truſted; as his temptations, which he himſelf repelled in the wilderneſs, and wrenched out of his hands, and made them uſeleſs, and he gives power to his people to reſiſt them, and ſuccours them under them, and delivers them out of them; and alſo the ſins of men, which he took away on the croſs, when he bore them, and the puniſhment of them there: and in converſion, he greatly weakens the power of ſin, and takes away the dominion of it; and though the being of it is not removed, hence ſatan has ſomething to work upon, yet its power is ſo far gone, that neither that nor ſatan, can deſtroy ſuch who are truly called by the grace of God: and divideth his ſpoils; he ſpoils his houſe, the heart of man, from being any longer a palace for him, and his goods, his mind and conſcience, which are enlightened and awakened, and purged: or by his ſpoils are meant, the ſouls of men; which are taken as a prey out of his hands, and become trophies of victorious grace.

Ver. 23. He that is not with me, is againſt me, &c.] Our Lord does not mean one, that was not perſonally with him; for there might be ſome, and doubtleſs were many, who were not in perſon with him, and yet were not againſt him, but friends to him, and to his intereſt; nor one that was not a profeſſed diſciple of his, or not a follower of him, and his apoſtles; for there were ſome who called themſelves John's diſciples, and did not attend on Chriſt, and yet were not againſt him, but caſt out devils in his name; and ſuch an one perhaps was he, that is made mention of, in Mark ix. 38, 39, 40. on occaſion of whom, Chriſt there ſays ſome words, which may ſeem at firſt view, not ſo well to accord with theſe: but ſuch are intended, who acted a neutral part between him and the Phariſees; who could bear to hear them accuſe him of caſting out devils by the prince of devils, and be eaſy at it; and ſuch perſons are condemned, who can hear all manner of blaſphemy againſt the deity, ſonſhip, blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice of Chriſt, and expreſs no indignation at it; theſe, as they can't be ſaid to be with Chriſt, may be truly ranked among thoſe that are againſt him: and he that gathereth not with me, ſcattereth; whoever did not encourage perſons to attend on the miniſtry of Chriſt, which was confirmed by ſuch miracles the Phariſees ſpoke ſo reproachfully and contemptuouſly of, were reckoned by Chriſt as ſuch, who were the means of hindering perſons gathering unto him; as well as thoſe who menaced and excommunicated them for ſo doing: the alluſion is either to the gathering of the ſheep into the fold, and the ſcattering of them by the wolf; or to the gathering of the wheat, and binding it in ſheaves, and bringing it home in harveſt; and to the ſcattering of the wheat looſe in the field, whereby it is loſt, and comes to nothing; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 30.

Ver. 24. When the unclean ſpirit is gone out of a man, &c.] That is, the devil, who is in, and works in the children of diſobedience, whether under a profeſſion of religion or not; whoſe hearts are unclean like himſelf, wherefore there he delights to dwell; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, the evil dæmon; who may be ſaid to go out of a man in appearance, when he outwardly reforms and takes up a profeſſion of religion. He walketh thro' dry places; or a deſert, as the Ethiopic verſion; to which the Gentile world is ſometimes compared in the Old Teſtament, Iſ. xxxv. 1. and xli. 18, 19. and xlii. 11. whither ſatan might go, being diſturbed in Judea, thro' the many diſpoſſeſſions by Chriſt; or rather leaving for a while the Scribes and Phariſees, who outwardly appeared righteous before men, he went to the Gentiles; ſeeking reſt, and finding none; being alſo made uneaſy among them, thro' the preaching of the Goſpel, which was ſent unto them after Chriſt's reſurrection; and not being able to keep his place in the hearts of men, nor do the miſchief he was deſirous of. He ſaith, I will return unto my houſe whence I came out; to the Jews again, who were blinded and filled with rage and enmity to the Goſpel by him, and whom he inſtigated to perſecute the Apoſtles of Chriſt, and preachers of the word, where-ever they came; ſee the notes on Matt. xii. 43, 44.

Ver. 25. And when he cometh, he findeth it ſwept and garniſhed.] In Matthew it is alſo ſaid to be empty; and ſo it is read here in the Arabic verſion; and in the Ethiopic verſion, empty of men: but rather the ſenſe is, that he found it empty of all goodneſs, notwithſtanding all the ſweeping and garniſh of an outward reformation. The Perſic verſion renders it, heated and prepared; heated with wrath and fury againſt Chriſt, and his Goſpel, and ſo was prepared and fitted to be a proper habitation for ſatan; and in ſuch a caſe as this was the Jewiſh nation from the time of Chriſt's death to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 44.

Ver. 26. Then goeth he and taketh to him ſeven other ſpirits, &c.] Or dæmons, as the Ethiopic verſion, whom he took to him as his conſorts and companions, as the ſame verſion calls them. More wicked than himſelf; for it ſeems there are degrees of wickedneſs among the devils, as well as among men: and they enter in and dwell there; the unclean ſpirit, and the other ſeven: ſo ſeven devils were in Mary Magdalene, and a legion in another man; and indeed the evil heart of man is an habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul ſpirit: here it may chiefly deſign the place and power which the devil had among the Jews before their deſtruction: and the laſt ſtate of that man is worſe than the firſt; the Perſic verſion adds, and more miſerable; as was the caſe of the Jews, to which this parable refers; as appears by what is ſubjoined in Matthew, which manifeſtly applies it to them, even ſo ſhall it be alſo unto this wicked generation; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 45.

Ver. 27. And it came to paſs as he ſpake theſe things, &c.] That is, as Chriſt ſpake, or had finiſhed theſe ſayings, as the Perſic verſion expreſſes it, before related, in vindication of himſelf and his miracles, from the blaſphemy of the Scribes and Phariſees to their entire confuſion, and had delivered the above parable concerning the unclean ſpirit, which had a particular regard to them: a certain woman of the company; obſerving the miracle he had wrought, in caſting out a devil, and being affected with his diſcourſe, in which he ſo fully cleared himſelf, and ſo ſtrongly confuted his enemies, and ſet them forth in ſo juſt a light: lift up her voice, and ſaid unto him; aloud, in the hearing of all the people, and with great earneſtneſs and fervour: bleſſed is the womb that bare thee, and the paps which thou haſt ſucked: whether this woman perſonally knew Mary, the mother of Chriſt, is not certain; it may be that ſhe was now preſent, or at leaſt not far off; and this woman hearing that ſhe, with the brethren of Chriſt, were without, and deſired to ſpeak with him, might be the occaſion of her uttering theſe words; ſee Matt. xii. 46. though they are ſaid not ſo much in praiſe, and to the honour of Mary, as in commendation of Chriſt, from whom, and for the ſake of bearing and ſuckling ſo great a perſon, ſhe was denominated bleſſed as before, both by the Angel and Elizabeth, Luke i. 28, 42. This was a form of bleſſing among the Jews: ſo it is ſaid [s] of R. Joſhuah ben Chananiah, a diſciple of R. Jochanan ben Zaccai, who lived about theſe times, אשרי יולדתו, bleſſed is ſhe that bore him: and they had alſo a form of curſing among them, much after the ſame manner, as ליט ביזא דכן איינק, curſed be the paps that ſuckled him [t]. The Jews, in their blaſphemous rage againſt Chriſt, and all that belong to him, ſay of Mary, the daughter of Eli, by whom they ſeem to deſign the mother of our Lord, that ſhe hangs in the ſhades by the fibres of her paps [u]; but this woman had a different opinion of her.

Ver. 28. But he ſaid, &c.] Chriſt ſaid to the woman, as the Perſic verſion reads, as correcting her, tho' not denying it, nor reproving her for it, but improving upon it: yea rather, bleſſed are they that hear the word of God and keep it; intimating, that tho' his mother was happy in bearing and ſuckling ſuch a ſon, yet it was a far greater happineſs to hear the word of God; meaning either himſelf, the eternal Logos, ſo as to embrace him, believe on him, and have him formed in the heart; or the Goſpel preached by him, ſo as to underſtand it, receive it as the ingrafted word, and bring forth fruit, and act in obedience to it, obſerve it, and abide by it, and never relinquiſh it. This is a greater happineſs than to be related to Chriſt in the fleſh, tho' ever ſo nearly. The Ethiopic verſion reads, that hear the word of God, and believe, and keep it; for faith comes by hearing, and ſhews itſelf in doing. Barely to hear the word, and even give an aſſent to it, will be of little avail, unleſs what is heard and believed is put in practice.

Ver. 29. And when the people were gathered thick together, &c.] Upon this woman's lifting up her voice, and ſaying the things ſhe did; or rather to ſee what ſign he would give, which ſome had deſired, ver. 16. he began to ſay, this is an evil generation. The Alexandrian copy, two copies of Beza's, and the Vulgate Latin, and Arabic verſions read, this generation is an evil generation; and alſo it was an adulterous one, as is added in Matt. xii. 39. they ſeek a ſign; for they had aſked one of him, ver. 16. and there ſhall no ſign be given it, but the ſign of Jonas the prophet; one like unto it; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 39.

Ver. 30. For as Jonas was a ſign to the Ninevites, &c.] As he was by lying three days and three nights in the whale's belly, and then caſt on ſhore alive; which ſign, or miracle was wrought to confirm his miſſion and meſſage, and to engage the Ninevites to give credit to him, and repent, or they might aſſure themſelves they would be utterly deſtroyed: ſo ſhall alſo the Son of man be to this generation; by lying three days and three nights in the heart of the earth, and then riſing again from the dead the third day; and which ſhould be done to confirm the truth of his Meſſiahſhip, and to declare him to be the Son of God with power, and to engage perſons to believe in him; and to aſſure that wicked generation, that in caſe they remained, after ſuch a ſign, impenitent and unbelieving, wrath would come upon them to the uttermoſt; ſee Matt. xii. 40.

Ver. 31. The queen of the ſouth, &c.] That is, the queen of Sheba, which was a country of Arabia, which lay ſouth of Judea; of whom it is ſaid, that ſhe ſhall riſe up in the judgment with the men of this generation, and condemn them: the ſenſe is, that at the laſt day, when all ſhall riſe from the dead, both Jews and Gentiles, this heathen queen ſhall riſe together with the men of that preſent generation among the Jews, ſtand in judgment with them, and againſt them; and that her conduct would be brought as an evidence againſt them, and be improved as an aggravation of their condemnation: for ſhe came from the uttermoſt parts of the earth to hear the wiſdom of Solomon, and behold a greater than Solomon is here: the difference between them, and what aggravates the caſe is, that ſhe was a Gentile that knew not God, they were Jews, his profeſſing people; ſhe came from afar, they were near, upon the ſpot, where Chriſt was, he was preaching in their ſtreets, temple, and ſynagogues, ſhe came to hear only natural or moral wiſdom, but they might have heard ſpiritual and heavenly wiſdom, with which eternal happineſs is connected; ſhe came to hear only a mere man, but they might have heard him who is the wiſdom of God, and the only wiſe God, and our Saviour; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 42.

Ver. 32. The men of Nineveh ſhall riſe up in the judgment with this generation, and ſhall condemn it, &c.] Luke changes the order of theſe inſtances; Matthew mentions this before the inſtance of the queen of Sheba; but Luke puts it laſt: this circumſtance is not material, and the deſign of it is the ſame with the former: for they repented at the preaching of Jonas, and behold a greater than Jonas is here: what in this caſe will aggravate the condemnation of the Jews in the day of judgment is, that theſe men were heathens, aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael, and ſtrangers to the covenants of promiſe, and were not uſed to have prophets ſent to them; and yet as ſoon as Jonas, a mere man, came to them, and preached but one ſermon among them, they repented of their ſins, and turned from them; whereas the Jews, who had a better notion of religion, and who, tho' they had the Son of God himſelf among them, and preached to them, and that many ſermons, and whoſe miniſtry was confirmed by miracles, and afterwards his Apoſtles for a courſe of years, had yet remained impenitent and unbelieving; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 41.

Ver. 33. No man when he hath lighted a candle, &c.] Theſe words are often repeated by Chriſt on different occaſions, ſee Matt. v. 15. Luke viii. 16. and the notes there; and here ſeem to deſign the free, open, and clear miniſtry of Chriſt, who excelled Solomon in wiſdom, and Jonas in powerful preaching. It being as a candle, which, when lighted, no man putteth in a ſecret place; as under a bed, Mark iv. 21. where it can't be ſeen, and its light be of any uſe: neither under a buſhel, but on a candleſtick, that they which come in may ſee the light; intimating, that Chriſt and his diſciples did not preach in corners, or in private houſes, and ſecret places, but in the ſtreets of the city, and in the temples and ſynagogues, the public places of worſhip: and therefore the Jews were the more inexcuſable, that they did not attend to the miniſtry of the word; and this would be their condemnation, that light was come among them, and they preferred darkneſs to it, John iii. 19.

[u] T. Hieroſ. Chagiga, fol. 77. 4. & Sanhedrin, fol. 23. 3.

Ver. 34. The light of the body is the eye, &c.] The Vulgate Latin, and all the Eaſtern verſions read, the light of thy body is thine eye. The ſenſe is, that as the eye gives light to the body, and the ſeveral members of it, by which they are guided and directed; ſo the underſtanding is the light of the ſoul, and the guide to all the powers and faculties of it: therefore when thine eye is ſingle, thy whole body alſo is full of light: as when the eye is free from vicious humours, and its ſight is clear, the whole body reaps the advantage of it, and is perfectly illuminated by it; ſo, when the eye of the underſtanding is opened and enlightened by the Spirit of God, into the truths of the Goſpel, and a ſingle regard is had unto them, and to the glory of Chriſt in them, the whole ſoul is filled with light, joy, and comfort: but when thine eye is evil, thy body alſo is full of darkneſs: as when the eye of the body is attended with any bad humours that hinder the ſight, all the members of it are in darkneſs; ſo, when the underſtanding is darkened thro' the blindneſs and ignorance there is in men, with reſpect to Goſpel-truths, all the powers and faculties of the ſoul are in a very miſerable and uncomfortable condition. The 35th and 36th verſes are not in Beza's moſt ancient copy.

Ver. 35. Take heed therefore, &c.] By attending to the light of the Goſpel, ſhining in the miniſtration of it, and don't neglect and deſpiſe it: that the light which is in thee be not darkneſs; leſt being given up to a judicial blindneſs and hardneſs of heart, not only the light of nature, which the Jews had in common with the Gentiles, but even that notional light and knowledge of divine things, which they had by being favoured with an external revelation, the writings of the Old Teſtament, ſhould be loſt.

Ver. 36. If thy whole body therefore be full of light, &c.] That is, if the whole ſoul, as the Ethiopic verſion reads, be full of Goſpel-light, thro' the illuminating influences of the bleſſed Spirit accompanying the word: having no part dark; every power and faculty of the ſoul being affected with it, and influenced by it, though, as yet, the light and knowledge of evangelical things is not perfect in any: the whole ſhall be full of light, as when the bright ſhining of a candle doth give thee light; the whole ſoul ſhall be as full of light and joy, which the Goſpel always brings with it, as a room is full of light, when a candle is lighted, and ſhines brightly, and burns clearly in it.

Ver. 37. And as he ſpake, &c.] Either the above words, or others at another time: a certain Phariſee beſought him to dine with him; as one of the ſame ſect had before, in ch. vii. 36. and who either was better affected to Chriſt than the generality of them were; or had a deſign upon him to get him into company with others, in private, and enſnare him if they could, and overcome him, who was an over-match for them before the people; among whom they feared, ſhould they go on thus publickly to attack him, their credit and reputation would ſink, and be loſt. And he went in and ſat down to meat: whatever were the intentions of the Phariſee, Chriſt, who was always affable and free with all ſorts of men, readily accepted of the invitation, and at once went along with him to his houſe; and dinner being ready, and on the table, he immediately ſat down without any ceremony.

Ver. 38. And when the Phariſee ſaw it, &c.] That Chriſt laid himſelf down on one of the couches and began to eat: he marvelled; that ſo great a prophet as he was, and a man of ſo much religion and holineſs, ſhould ſhow no regard to a common cuſtom with them, and which was one of the traditions of their elders, and which they put upon a level with the commands of God. The Vulgate Latin verſion, and ſo Beza's moſt ancient copy, and another Exemplar, read, he began to ſay, thinking (or judging) within himſelf: he was moved at it, as the Perſic verſion renders it; he was filled with aſtoniſhment and indignation, that he had not firſt waſhed before dinner; eſpecially ſince he had been in a croud of people, ver. 29. for the Phariſees not only waſhed their hands, by immerſing them up to the elbow before eating; but when they had been at market, or among any large number of people, or had reaſon to think they had, or feared they had touched any unclean perſon or thing, they immerſed themſelves all over in water; and which is the ſenſe of the word βαπτιζομαι here uſed; ſee the notes on Mark vii. 2, 3, 4.

Ver. 39. And the Lord ſaid unto him, &c.] Jeſus, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions read; the Lord Jeſus, as the Ethiopic. Now do ye Phariſees make clean the outſide of the cup, and the platter; being very tenacious of the traditions of the elders, concerning the waſhing of cups and pots, which had been of late years brought in among them, and therefore the word now is uſed; ſee the notes on Matt. xxiii. 25. and Mark vii. 4. but your inward part is full of ravening and wickedneſs: meaning, either their ſouls, which were full of all manner of ſin, the cleanſing and purity of which they had no concern about, whilſt they were very ſtrict and curious in waſhing their bodies, their cups and platters; or rather the veſſels which were filled with meat and drink got by extortion, rapine, and oppreſſion; ſee Matt. xxiii. 25.

Ver. 40. Ye fools, did not he that made that which is without, &c.] That is, made clean that which is without, or the outſide of the cup and platter; make that which is within alſo? does not he make the inſide clean likewiſe? whoever waſhes a cup or platter, but waſhes and makes clean the inſide, as well as the outſide? and ſo ye, who are ſo very careful to have your cups and platters clean, ſhould be as careful what you put in them, that they are clean alſo; not only that they are clean according to the law, in a ceremonial ſenſe, but in a moral ſenſe, that they are honeſtly and lawfully got. The word, ποιεω, rendered, made and make, anſwers to the Hebrew word, עשה, which ſometimes ſignifies to beautify and adorn, and to cleanſe, and remove away filth, as by paring nails, and waſhing the feet; ſo in Deut. xxi. 12. it is ſaid of a captive-woman that a man takes into his houſe for his wife, among other things, ועשתה, ſhe ſhall make her nails; that is, pare them, as we render it, and remove the filth from them. Again, in 2 Sam. xix. 24. it is ſaid of Mephiboſheth, that from the day king David departed, he had not, עשה, made his feet; that is, as the Targum renders it, לא שטף, he had not waſhed his feet; and ſo other Jewiſh interpreters underſtand it, either of his having not waſhed his feet, much leſs his whole body [w], or of not having pared his nails [x]; and ſo the Vulgate Latin renders it, that he came to meet the king with unwaſhen feet; which may ſerve to illuſtrate and confirm the ſenſe before given: tho' interpreters generally underſtand this of God, as the maker of the ſoul, as well as of the body; and therefore the purity of the former ſhould be regarded, as well as that of the latter.

Ver. 41. But rather give alms of ſuch things as ye have, &c.] The phraſe τα ενοντα, is variouſly rendered, and ſo furniſhes out various ſenſes: the Syriac verſion renders it, give that which is, which is yours; or which is given to you, as the Perſic verſion, and agrees with ours, ſuch things as ye have; and which carries in it but a very odd ſenſe; for none can give of that which they have not. The Vulgate Latin verſion reads, that which is over and above; ſuperfluous ſubſtance, and which may be eaſily ſpared without hurting a man, or his family: others, as much as you can; according to a man's ability, and as God has proſpered him in the world. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, that which is neceſſary; which the neceſſities of the poor call for, and is right and proper to give them: and the Arabic verſion, very foreign from the ſenſe of the phraſe, reads, before every thing; above all things give alms. But the true ſenſe of it is contained in the literal verſion of it, things that are within; that is, that are within the cup and the platter; give meat and drink to the poor, your platters and cups are full of, gotten by injuſtice and oppreſſion. Some read it not imperatively, give, but indicatively, ye do give; you oppreſs and defraud men, devour widows houſes, and fill your own with the ſpoils of others; and then give out of your cups and platters drink to the thirſty, and meat to the hungry, to make atonement for your avarice and extortion: and behold all things are clean unto you; that is, according to their own opinion, who fancied that almſdeeds juſtified them in the ſight of God, cleanſed them from their ſins, delivered them from hell, and gave them a title to eternal life; ſee the note on Matt. vi. 1. for it can never be thought to be our Lord's meaning in earneſt, that either their perſons, or what they had, ſhould be pure and clean unto them, by giving a part of their ill-gotten goods to the poor; but he ſpeaks their ſenſe, in an ironical way. From this opinion of theirs it is, that the Hebrew word, זכה, which ſignifies to be clean, is uſed by them for giving alms: ſo it is ſaid [y], that "R. Jonathan and Reſh Lekiſh went "down to bathe themſelves in the baths of Tiberias; "and a certain poor man met them, and ſaid unto "them, זכיין בי, give me alms; they ſaid unto "him, when we come back we will, זכיין בך, give "thee alms:" and ſo the Mahometans call alms by the ſame name, becauſe they imagine that they cleanſe their other ſubſtance from pollution, and their ſouls from avarice.

Ver. 42. But wo unto you Phariſees, &c.] Tho' theſe words, with ſeveral other paſſages in this chapter, are much alike with thoſe in Matt. xxiii. yet 'tis clear that they were ſpoken at different times theſe in the houſe of a Phariſee, and they in the temple at Jeruſalem: for ye tithe mint and rue; ſee the note on Matt. xxiii. 23. the Perſic verſion here reads, mint and aniſe, as there; and the Ethiopic verſion only hyſſop: and all manner of herbs; or every herb; that is, all ſorts of herbs that grow in the garden, and were not common to all; and paſs over judgment, and the love of God: by judgment may be meant juſtice, or doing that which is right between man and man, both publickly and privately, which was greatly neglected by theſe extortioners and unjuſt men: and by the love of God may be intended, both love to God, which ſhows itſelf in the obſervance of the firſt table of the law, and love to the neighbour, which God requires, and regards the ſecond table: theſe ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone; ſee the note on Matt. xxiii. 23.

Ver. 43. Wo unto you Phariſees, for ye love the uppermoſt ſeats in the ſynagogues, &c.] And alſo the uppermoſt rooms at feaſts, Matt. xxiii. 6. and greetings in the market; ſee the note on Matt. xxiii. 6, 7.

Ver. 44. Wo unto you Scribes and Phariſees, hypocrites, &c.] As they are all along called by Matthew; tho' only here by Luke. The Vulgate Latin only reads, wo unto you, leaving out all the reſt: but the whole is retained in all the Oriental verſions: for ye are as graves which appear not; being covered with graſs; or which were not marked, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; that is, were not whited or covered with lime, as ſome were, that they might be ſeen at a diſtance, and be known what they were; that ſo men might avoid going near them, and prevent their being defiled with them; ſee the note on Matt. xxiii. 27. and the men that walk over them are not aware of them; and ſo are defiled by them. Chriſt compares the Phariſees, becauſe of their hypocriſy, and ſecret iniquity, both to whited ſepulchres, and to thoſe that were not: to thoſe that were, becauſe, like them, they looked beautiful without, and righteous in the ſight of men, and yet were inwardly full of all manner of pollution and ſin; and to thoſe that were not, becauſe they did not appear to be what they were, and men were deceived by them; and under ſpecious pretences to religion and holineſs, were by their corrupt doctrines and practices unawares drawn into the commiſſion of ſin. Regard may not only be had to graves covered with graſs, or not marked with lime, by which they might be known; but alſo to what the Jews call, קבר התהום, the grave of the abyſs [z]; a grave that is not known no more than if it was in the bottomleſs pit: ſo uncleanneſs by touching a dead body, which a man is not conſcious of, is called the uncleanneſs of the abyſs, or an unknown one [a].

Ver. 45. Then anſwered one of the lawyers, &c.] Or Scribes, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions read; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion calls him, a Scribe of the city: the Scribes and lawyers were the ſame ſort of perſons who were interpreters of the law, and equally tenacious of the traditions of the elders Chriſt had referred to, as the Phariſees, and in general were Phariſees; tho' ſome of them might be of the ſect of the Sadducees. This man obſerving that Chriſt, in his laſt words, joined the Scribes and Phariſees together, and charged them both with hypocriſy, and pronounced a wo upon them, was very uneaſy at it: and ſaid unto him, maſter, thus ſaying, ſaying, thou reproacheſt us alſo; us lawyers, or Scribes alſo; both by mentioning their names, and accuſing the Phariſees of the ſame things, which they muſt be conſcious to themſelves they were equally guilty of; ſo that if the one were criminal, the others were alſo. The Ethiopic verſion reads by way of interrogation, what thou ſayeſt, does it not injure us?

Ver. 46. And he ſaid, wo unto you alſo, ye lawyers, &c.] Chriſt was ſo far from calling back what he had ſaid or ſuggeſted, that he repeats and confirms it, and more particularly names them, and enlarges on their evil practices: for ye lade men with burthens grievous to be born, and ye yourſelves touch not the burthens with one of your fingers; ſee the note on Matt. xxiii. 4.

Ver. 47. Wo unto you, &c.] Meaning particularly the lawyers or Scribes, together with the Phariſees, and even the whole body of the people, who in general were of the caſt and complexion here deſcribed: for ye build the ſepulchres of the prophets; ſee the note on Matt. xxiii. 29. and your fathers killed them; the prophets; or whom your fathers killed, as read the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions; the one put them to death, and the other erected ſtately monuments over them, or adorned them; and yet both had the ſame malignant ſpirit againſt the faithful ſervants and meſſengers of God; and which ſhewed their great hypocriſy.

Ver. 48. Truly ye bear witneſs, that ye allow the deeds of your fathers, &c.] Or ye bear witneſs, and ye allow; that is, they both witneſſed that their fathers killed the prophets, and they conſented to what they did, and approved of their actions: for they indeed killed them; it muſt be owned, and not their ſons: and ye build their ſepulchres; which was a bearing and keeping up a teſtimony againſt them, and a continuing a remembrance of their crimes; and which looked as tho' they approved of them, or otherwiſe they ſhould have been content to have the prophets lie buried in ſilence, and not erected ſtately monuments over them, which ſeemed to be raiſed more for the honour of thoſe that put them to death, than of the prophets themſelves. Or, whereas they did this under ſpecious pretences of diſliking their fathers ſins, which yet ſecretly they loved, and were of the ſame wicked diſpoſition againſt the miniſters of the word, and which they would quickly ſhow; this diſcovered their hypocriſy, and confirmed the character Chriſt had before given of them; for it follows,

Ver. 49. Therefore alſo ſaid the wiſdom of God, &c.] The Syriac verſion only reads wiſdom; by which ſeems to be meant not the perfection of God's wiſdom; tho' it is uſual with the Jews to repreſent the divine perfections as ſpeaking, as the juſtice and mercy of God. They ſay [b], that "when the holy "bleſſed God ſought to make Hezekiah the Meſſiah, and Sennacherib, Gog, and Magog, מידת הדין, "the property of judgment, or juſtice, ſaid before "the holy, bleſſed God, Lord of the world, &c." and ſo the ſenſe may be here, that the infinite wiſdom of God ſaid within himſelf, determined in his own breaſt, to do what follows. But I rather think that Chriſt is intended, who, as God, is the eſſential wiſdom of God; and, as man and mediator, has the ſpirit of wiſdom reſting on him, and the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge hid in him; ſince this is ſaid by Chriſt, Matt. xxiii. 34. tho' the words here ſeem to be the words of the Evangeliſt relating what Chriſt had ſaid. Some have thought, that ſome book, under the name of the wiſdom of God, is here cited, which had in it the following words, I will ſend them prophets and apoſtles; which, in Matthew, are called prophets, wiſe men, and Scribes; and by whom are meant the apoſtles of Chriſt, and the miniſters of the Goſpel. The Perſic verſion reads, lo, I ſend to you, as in Matt. xxiii. 34. and ſome of them they ſhall ſlay and perſecute; ſome of them they ſhall put to death, and others they ſhall perſecute from one place to another; ſee the note on Matt. xxiii. 34.

Ver. 50. That the blood of all the prophets, &c.] The ſame with all the righteous blood, or the blood of all the righteous men, in Matt. xxiii. 35. which was ſhed from the foundation of the world; for there were prophets from the beginning, which propheſied of Chriſt, Luke i. 70. and whoſe blood was ſhed very early: for Abel, the ſon of the firſt man, and who was the firſt whoſe blood was ſhed, was not only a righteous man, but a prophet; for by the ſacrifice which he offered up, he gave a prophetical hint of the ſacrifice of Chriſt, in that he ſpoke before-hand of it, as being dead he yet ſpeaks: and now the Lord was about to ſend apoſtolical prophets, whom the Jews would ſlay, and he would ſuffer them to ſlay, that ſo the blood of all the former ones, may be required of this generation; and they be puniſhed for it: juſt as in Babylon will be found, when God makes inquiſition for blood, as he ſooner or later always does, the blood of the prophets and ſaints, and of all that are ſlain upon earth, every ſince Rome papal has been in power, Rev. 18. 24.

Ver. 51. From the blood of Abel, &c.] Righteous Abel, as in Matt. xxiii. 35. and ſo read the Arabic verſion here, and two manuſcripts in the Bodleian library, and three of Stephens's copies; the Perſic verſion renders it, innocent Abel: he is mentioned becauſe he was the firſt man that was ſlain, and he was ſlain becauſe of his righteouſneſs. Unto the blood of Zacharias; in the Cambridge copy of Beza's, it is added, the ſon of Barachias, as in Matt. xxiii. 35. and ſo the Arabic verſion, the ſon of Baraſciah; who he was, ſee the note on Matt. xxiii. 35. which periſhed between the altar and the temple; or the houſe, that is, the holy place: and the Ethiopic verſion renders it, the holy houſe; here he died, being ſlain by the Jews; ſee the note, as before. Verily I ſay unto you, it ſhall be required of this generation; as it was at the time of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem.

Ver. 52. Wo unto you lawyers, &c.] Who are particularly addreſſed again in diſtinction from the Phariſees, tho' much the ſame things are ſaid to them both in Matt. xxiii. 13. for ye have taken away the key of knowledge; of the ſcriptures, of the law, and the prophets, and the true interpretation of them, and eſpecially of ſuch places as refer to the Meſſiah, and the Goſpel-diſpenſation, called the kingdom of heaven, Matt. xxiii. 13. they had not only arrogated the knowledge of theſe to themſelves, ſetting up for the only interpreters of the ſacred writings; but they had took away from the people the true knowledge and ſenſe of them, by their falſe gloſſes upon them, ſo that they were deſtroyed for lack of knowledge: and hence came tha famine of hearing the word, which they ſay [c] ſhoul be before the coming of the king Meſſiah, and no was. The Syriac and Arabic verſions read, the key of knowledge; and the Ethiopic verſion, the key o righteouſneſs. The Jews ſometimes ſpeak of th keys of the law, and repreſent the oral law as th root and key of the written law [d]: but, alas! it was by the oral law, or the traditions of the elders, that they took away the key, or obſcured the true ſenſe of the written law. Some think, that here is an alluſion to the cuſtom of delivering a key to any one, when he was ordained or promoted to the dignity of a doctor: it is ſaid of R. Samuel [e], that “when he died they put, מפתחו, his key, and his writing book into his coffin, becauſe he was not worthy of a ſon” to ſucceed him: ye entered not in yourſelves; into the kingdom of heaven, the Goſpel-diſpenſation, neither receiving its doctrines, nor ſubmitting to its ordinances: and them that were entering in ye hindered; by reproaching the miracles and miniſtry of Chriſt; by threatenings and excommunications; ſee the note on Matt. xxiii. 13.

Ver. 53. And as he ſaid theſe things unto them, &c.] Denounced the above woes upon them, charging them with the above crimes, and threatening them with divine vengeance: the Scribes and Phariſees began to urge him vehemently; to fall upon him with their tongues, and expreſs great rage, wrath, and virulence againſt him: and to provoke him to ſpeak of many things; they put queſtions to him, and urged him to anſwer them, and did all they could to irritate him to ſay things that they could improve againſt him, to draw words out of his mouth, and then wreſt and pervert them.

Ver. 54. Laying wait for him, &c.] To enſnare and entangle him, watching his words, obſerving what he ſaid, and laying hold thereon: and ſeeking to catch ſomething out of his mouth; like beaſts of prey, or hunters, that were watching for their prey; or lay in ambuſh, diligently looking out, and greedily catching at every thing they thought for their purpoſe: that they might accuſe him; either of hereſy or ſedition, to the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, or the Roman governour.

CHAP. XII.

Ver. 1. I*N the mean time*, &c.] While Chriſt was diſcourſing with the Phariſees, and they were uſing him in the vileſt manner, throwing out their invectives againſt him, in order to draw off the people from him: when there were gathered together an innumerable multitude of people. There were myriads of them, as in the original text, and a myriad is ten thouſand; the meaning is, that there were ſeveral thouſands of them: inſomuch that they trod one upon another; ſtriving to get near to Chriſt, either to ſee his perſon, or to hear his diſcourſes; and particularly, what he would ſay to the Phariſees, who had fallen upon him in ſo violent a manner: he began to ſay unto his diſciples firſt of all; he directed his diſcourſe not to the Phariſees, nor to the multitude, but to his diſciples in the firſt place; at leaſt, chiefly to them; for whom he had a ſpecial regard, who were his dear friends, and were to be the preachers of his Goſpel every where; and therefore it was proper that they ſhould be aware of the diſſembling arts of the Scribes and Phariſees, and have their minds fortified againſt approaching dangers, perſecutions, and death itſelf: the laſt phraſe, firſt of all, is omitted in the Vulgate Latin verſion; and by all the Oriental verſions, it is joined to the next clauſe, and read thus, eſpecially, or before all things, beware ye of the leaven of the Phariſees, which is hypocriſy; expreſſed both in their doctrines, and in their lives; which carried a great ſhow of piety and holineſs, but was in appearance only: very aptly is hypocriſy in doctrine and manners, compared to leaven; which at firſt is ſmall and little, but gradually increaſes and ſpreads itſelf, and lies hid and covered, and is not eaſily diſcerned, nor its influence and effects obſerved; but in time, it infects and corrupts the whole of mens principles and practices, and puffs and ſwells them up with a vain opinion of themſelves: and when our Lord bids his diſciples beware of it, his meaning not only is, that they take heed that they were not infected with it themſelves, but that they were not impoſed upon by the ſpecious pretences of theſe artful and deſigning men.

Ver. 2. For there is nothing covered that ſhall not be revealed, &c.] No ſin, be it ever ſo ſecret or privately done, as nothing is more covered than hypocriſy, but what ſhall be detected ſooner or later; if not in this world, which is often the caſe, yet at the laſt judgment, and in the world to come: neither hid, that ſhall not be known; for how careful ſoever men may be to hide their vices from others, they are known to God; who will bring every thing into judgment, and make manifeſt the ſecrets of all hearts. Theſe were general ſentences, which were uſed by Chriſt at different times, upon different occaſions, and applied to particular caſes; ſee the note on Matt. x. 26.

Ver. 3. Therefore whatſoever ye have ſpoken in darkneſs, &c.] In the moſt private manner, to one another: ſhall be heard in the light; which makes all things manifeſt, the day ſhall declare it: and that which ye have ſpoken in the ear in cloſets; whiſpered to perſons in their bed-chambers, and places of the moſt ſecret retirement: ſhall be proclaimed upon the houſe-tops; declared in the moſt publick manner: in Matt. x. 27. theſe words are ſo expreſſed, as to carry in them ſuch a ſenſe as this; that what was told the diſciples by Chriſt, in the moſt private place and way, ſhould be publiſhed by them, in the moſt free and open manner; ſee the note there.

Ver. 4. And I ſay unto you my friends, &c.] Whom he dearly loved, and had taken into the greateſt intimacy and familiarity; making known to them whatever he had heard from his Father; giving them the beſt inſtructions, the moſt faithful and friendly advice, and proper precautions; all which, and more, ſhewed them to be his friends, and for whom he after laid down his life: be not afraid of them that kill the body; though he would have them beware of the Phariſees, he would not have them be afraid of them; he would have them know them, and avoid their hypocriſy, and guard againſt it; but not fear them, or the worſt they could do unto them, which was to kill the body; and that they had no need to be afraid of, ſince at death, their ſouls would be immediately happy, in the enjoyment and viſion of God; and their bodies would ſleep in Jeſus, and be raiſed in the reſurrection morn, and be united to their ſouls, and be both for ever bleſſed: and after that have no more that they can do; they have nothing more to kill, or which they can put to pain or miſery; the ſoul is out of their reach, is an immortal ſpirit, and can't be hurt or deſtroyed by them.

[d] Zohar in Exod. fol. 46. 1.

[e] Vid. Cameron. in loc.

Ver. 5. But I will forewarn you whom ye ſhall fear, &c.] I will be your monitor, and direct you to the proper object of fear and reverence, and whom you ſhould be careful to diſpleaſe and offend: fear him, which after he hath killed; your body, as the Perſic verſion adds; hath taken away the life of it, by ſeparating ſoul and body aſunder, by ſending one diſeaſe or another, or death in one ſhape or another: hath power to caſt into hell; your ſoul, as the above verſion alſo adds; yea, to deſtroy both body and ſoul in hell, as in Matt. x. 28. ſee the note there: yea, I ſay unto you, fear him; and none elſe, not with a ſervile, but with a filial fear.

Ver. 6. Are not five ſparrows ſold for two farthings, &c.] As two were ſold for one farthing, Matt. x. 29. ſee the note there; ſo in buying and ſelling, where more money is laid out, things are bought cheaper; the Perſic verſion reads, for two barley corns: and not one of them is forgotten before God; a ſingle ſparrow, a bird of little value and worth, is taken notice and care of by him; it has its life from him, and is provided for with food by him, and is under his protection; nor does he ever forget it, nor can any thing be done to it, without his permiſſion; it can't be ſtruck, ſo as to cauſe it to fall on the ground, or be taken in a ſnare, or be killed in any ſhape, without the knowledge of God: his providence reaches to the minuteſt creatures and things, and much more then to rational creatures, to men; and ſtill more to his dear children, miniſters, and apoſtles.

Ver. 7. But even the very hairs of your head are all numbered, &c.] Not only their perſons had paſſed under the hands of him that telleth them, who is the Palmoni, or wonderful numberer, as in the margin of Dan. viii. 13. and not only the ſeveral members of their bodies, or the more ſubſtantial parts of them, were written in the book of his purpoſes, according to which they were faſhioned in time, but the more minute parts, and leſs to be regarded, were all told over, and kept in account; even the very hairs of their head, and not one of them could fall to the ground, any more than a ſparrow; or be plucked off by men, without the knowledge and will of God; ſo careful is the providence of God, of all his people: fear not therefore, ye are of more value than many ſparrows; for if the hairs of their heads are as much regarded as ſparrows, their perſons and their lives muſt be of more account, than an infinite number of them, nor are they to be mentioned with them.

Ver. 8. Alſo I ſay unto you, &c.] The ſame as in Matt. x. 32. whoſoever ſhall confeſs me before men, him ſhall the Son of man alſo confeſs before the angels of God; only inſtead of I, he here calls himſelf the Son of man; and inſtead of before my Father which is in heaven, here it is, before the angels of God; who will accompany Chriſt when he comes to judgment, and will be preſent, when he ſhall acknowledge his true followers as the bleſſed of his Father, the choſen of God, his redeemed and ſanctified ones; and reject others before his Father, and the whole univerſe of rational beings: 'tis ſaid in the Targum on Cant. i. 15. "when the children "of Iſrael do the will of their king, he by his "word (the Logos) praiſes them in the family of "the holy angels." This Chriſt, the eternal word, will do at the great day.

Ver. 9. But he that denieth me before men, &c.] That is, that continues to deny Chriſt, and lives and dies a denier of him; for otherwiſe it is poſſible, for a perſon to deny Jeſus to be the Son of God, or the Meſſiah, and afterwards confeſs him, as a Pagan or Jew; and through temptation, a real chriſtian may be left for a while, in one ſhape or another, to deny him and his truths, and afterwards truly repent, and at laſt be ſaved, as Peter; but they that deny Chriſt publickly, and perſiſt in it, ſhall be denied before the angels of God; they will be denied by Chriſt as belonging to him; they will be denied admiſſion into heaven; they will be covered with ſhame and confuſion publickly; they'll be ſent into everlaſting burnings, and be for ever tormented with fire and brimſtone, in the preſence of the holy angels.

Ver. 10. And whoſoever ſhall ſpeak a word againſt the Son of man, it ſhall be forgiven him, &c.] Theſe words, though introduced by Luke among the ſayings of Chriſt, recorded in Matt. x. yet were ſaid by Chriſt, on occaſion of the Phariſees aſcribing his works to diabolical influence and aſſiſtance, in Matt. xii. 32. ſee the note there: but unto him that blaſphemeth againſt the Holy Ghoſt; as the Phariſees did, by charging the miracles of Chriſt with being done by the help of the devil, when they were wrought by the finger of the Spirit: it ſhall not be forgiven. The Ethiopic verſion adds at the cloſe of this verſe, as in Matthew, neither in this world, nor in that which is to come.

Ver. 11. And when they bring you unto the ſynagogues, &c.] Of the Jews, to be examined and ſcourged by the rulers of them: and unto magiſtrates and powers; heathen ones; the Perſic verſion reads, princes and kings; and the Ethiopic verſion, princes, kings, and judges; ſee Matt. x. 18. Take ye no thought how, or what thing ye ſhall anſwer, or what ye ſhall ſay; be not anxiouſly concerned, neither about the manner, nor the matter of your anſwer, apology, and defence: in the firſt part of this clauſe, the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, only read, how; and the Arabic verſion only, what; ſee the note on Matt. x. 19.

Ver. 12. For the Holy Ghoſt ſhall teach you, &c.] Shall give both words and matter: in the ſame hour; inſtantly, immediately: what ye ought to ſay; what will be proper to be ſaid, for the honour of Chriſt, the defence of the Goſpel, and the confuſion of enemies; ſee the note on Matt. x. 20.

Ver. 13. And one of the company ſaid unto him, &c.] Not one of the diſciples of Chriſt, but one of the multitude, or crowd, about him, ver. 1. Maſter, ſpeak to my brother, that he divide the inheritance with me: the firſt-born, according to the law, in Deut. xxi. 17. had a double portion; but the elder brother here, it ſeems, was for keeping all, and not divide any part to his younger brother; wherefore he applies to Chriſt, to interpoſe his authority, which he imagined would have great weight with his brother, who might be a hearer of Chriſt, and a favourer of him: or however, ſuch was the fame of Chriſt, and ſuch credit he obtained by his miniſtry and miracles, that he concluded a word from him, would go a great way with his brother, to engage him to make a right and proper diviſion, as he ought; and eſpecially, if he looked upon him, as the king Meſſiah the Jews expected, he might take this to be part of his work and office, to ſettle ſuch civil affairs as theſe: we often read in the Jewiſh writings, of brethren dividing their ſubſtance, left by their parents; ſo it is ſaid [f], "האחין שחלקו, brethren that divide, (a field,) give two corners (to the poor;) if "they return and become partners, they give but "one." Where there were but two brethren, as here, the one was called, בכור, the firſt born; and the other, פשוט, ſimple, having no title or character: and concerning dividing inheritances, there are the following rules[g]: “the firſt-born takes a double portion of his father's goods, as is ſaid, Deut. xxi. 17. how? a man leaves five children, and one of them is the firſt-born; the firſt-born takes the third part of the ſubſtance, and every one of the four ſimple ones, takes a ſixth part: if he leaves nine children, and one of them is the firſt-born, he takes the fifth part, and every one of the eight ſimple ones, takes a tenth part; and ſo according to this diviſion, they divided for ever——he that has two ſons, a firſt-born and a ſimple one, and they both die in his lifetime, the firſt-born leaves a daughter, and the ſimple one leaves a ſon; lo, the ſon of the ſimple one inherits the third part of the old man's goods, which is his father's part; and the daughter of the firſt-born, inherits the two-thirds, which is the part of her father.” And again[h], “two brethren that divide, and a brother comes to them from the province of the ſea; and ſo three brethren that divide, and a creditor comes and takes the part of one of them, though the one takes land, and the other money, the diviſion is void, and they return and divide the reſt equally: if any one orders at the time of his death, that there ſhould be given to ſuch an one a palm-tree, or a field out of his ſubſtance, and the brethren divide, and do not give ſuch an one any thing, lo, the diviſion is void; and how do they do? they give what he ordered the heirs, and after that they return and divide as at the beginning: brethren that divide, value what is upon them; but what is upon their ſons and their daughters, which they have in poſſeſſion, they do not value——he that leaves fatherleſs children, ſome that are grown up, and others little ones, and they are willing to divide their father's goods, ſo that thoſe that are grown up may take their part, the Sanhedrim appoint a guardian for the little ones, and he chooſes a good part for them; and when they are grown up, they can't make it void, for lo, by the decree of the Sanhedrim, they divided for them; but if the Sanhedrim err in computation, and give them leſs, they may make it void, and make another diviſion when they are grown up.” But it would be tedious to tranſcribe all the rules, relating to ſuch caſes.

[f] Miſn. Peah, c. 3. §. 5.

Ver. 14. And he ſaid unto him, man, &c.] Or friend, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; that is, Jeſus ſaid to him, as the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions expreſs it: who made me a judge, or a divider over you? referring to the words of one of the Hebrews to Moſes, when he interpoſed in a difference, Exod. ii. 14. ſuggeſting, that the ſame might be retorted on him, ſhould he engage in ſuch an affair: the reaſon why Chriſt avoided meddling with it, was not becauſe it is unlawful for chriſtians, to concern themſelves in arbitrations about civil affairs, and in making up family differences, which is very commendable; but leſt by ſuch a ſtep, he ſhould give occaſion to them, to conclude he was a temporal king: whereas his kingdom was not of this world, and his buſineſs lay not in civil affairs, and the management of them; but in ſpiritual concerns, in preaching the Goſpel, and doing good to the ſouls of men; wherefore this was out of his province: and beſides, it was a matter of covetouſneſs, either in this perſon, or his brother, or both; which Chriſt takes an occaſion from hence to expoſe, agreeable to his office; to which may be added, that this man ſeems to have diſturbed Chriſt in his publick work, and was of ſuch a worldly ſpirit, as to prefer the care of his ſecular affairs, to the hearing of the word, and the welfare of his immortal ſoul.

Ver. 15. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] Either to the two brethren, or to his diſciples, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions read, or to the whole company: take heed, and beware of covetouſneſs; of all covetouſneſs, as read the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, and ſome copies; that is, of all ſorts of covetouſneſs, and every degree of it, which of all vices is to be avoided and guarded againſt, being the root of all evil; and as the Perſic verſion renders it, is worſe than all evil, and leads into it: for a man's life conſiſteth not in the abundance of the things which he poſſeſſeth; of flocks and beaſts, as the Perſic verſion renders it: a man's natural life cannot be prolonged by all the good things of the world, he is poſſeſſed of; they cannot prevent diſeaſes nor death; nor do the comfort and happineſs of life, lie in theſe things; which are either not enjoyed by them, but kept for the hurt of the owners of them, or are intemperately uſed, or ſome way or other imbittered to them, ſo that they have no peace nor pleaſure in them: and a man's ſpiritual life is neither had nor advantaged hereby, and much leſs is eternal life to be acquired by any of theſe things; which a man may have, and be loſt for ever, as the following parable ſhews.

Ver. 16. And he ſpake a parable unto them, ſaying, &c.] He ſuppoſed the following caſe, and made uſe of it by way of illuſtration of what he had ſaid: the ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully; who notwithſtanding his riches, was but a fool, as the ſequel ſhows: rich men are not always wiſe in things natural and civil; and very few of them are ſpiritually wiſe, or wiſe in ſpiritual things, in things which relate to the welfare of their ſouls; but however, this man was very proſperous in his worldly affairs, as a man of a ſmall ſhare of common ſenſe may be, and wicked men often are: the word tranſlated ground, ſignifies a region, or country, which expreſſes the more, the riches of this man, that he had not a common and ordinary farm, but a whole country as it were; at leaſt a very large part of one, and all this fruitful.

Ver. 17. And he thought within himſelf, &c.] And fooliſh thoughts they were; he did not think of God, or that there was one, and much leſs that he was the author of all his outward proſperity and plenty; and was ſtill further off of thinking of returning thanks to God for it; or of aſking counſel of him, what he ſhould do with it; but he conſults himſelf only, and thought only within, and for himſelf; and not at all of his poor neighbours, or for the good of others; nor did he think even of his own ſoul, but altogether about his worldly ſubſtance: ſaying, what ſhall I do? he does not ſay what ſhall I do for God? for his intereſt, ſervice, and glory? for the poor, the hungry, and thirſty, and naked? or for my own ſoul, that that may be eternally ſaved? but what ſhall I do with my goods? becauſe I have no room where to beſtow my fruits; he had gathered in his harveſt, and filled his barns as full as they could hold, ſo that they had no room for more; and yet had ſtill an abundance to lay up, and about which he was anxiouſly concerned; not thinking of the empty bellies, barns, and houſes, of the poor, where he might have ſtowed much.

[g] Maimon. Hilchot Nechalot, c. 2. §. 1, 7.

[h] Ib. c. 10. §. 1, 2, 3, 4.

Ver. 18. And he ſaid, this will I do, &c.] This was the reſolution he came to, and which he took up, without conſulting God, or aſking leave of him: I will pull down my barns, and build greater; which was not a very wiſe one; for he might have let his preſent barns have ſtood, and have added new ones to them: and there will I beſtow all my fruits and my goods; he aſcribes the increaſe of his ſubſtance to himſelf, and reckons them his own acquiſitions, and entirely owing to his diligence and induſtry; and therefore calls them my fruits, and my goods; and accounts them his good things, his only good things; as worldly men place all good and happineſs in outward enjoyments, having no notion of ſpiritual and eternal good things: he determines to lay up all in his barns, for his own uſe and ſervice, and nothing for God and his intereſt, nor any thing for the poor and their relief.

Ver. 19. And I will ſay to my ſoul, &c.] Himſelf, ſee Pſal. xlix. 18. or to his ſenſual appetite, which he ſought to indulge and gratify, for he was wholly a ſenſual and carnal man: ſoul, thou haſt much goods laid up for many years: he fooliſhly promiſes himſelf a long life, when no man can boaſt of to morrow, or knows what a day will bring forth; or can aſſure himſelf he ſhall live a day, an hour, or moment longer: and he alſo depended upon the ſafety of his goods, thus laid up; whereas his barns might be conſumed by fire at once, or his goods be devoured by vermin, or plundered by thieves, and by various ways taken out of his hands; for riches are uncertain things, and often make themſelves wings and fly away: take thine eaſe, eat, drink, and be merry; ſpend thy life in eaſe, luxury, and mirth; put away the evil day far from thee; never trouble thyſelf about a future ſtate, to morrow ſhall be as this day, and much more abundantly; and thou haſt enough to make thyſelf happy, and let nothing diſturb thee, and give a looſe to all ſenſual pleaſures, and carnal joys. This is the language of an epicure among the Jews, and is forbidden to be uſed, eſpecially on faſt-days; for ſo it is ſaid[l], "let not a man ſay I will go to my "houſe, and I will eat and drink, (and ſay) "שלום עליך נפשי, peace to thee, O my ſoul; if "he does ſo, of him the ſcripture ſays, Iſa. xxii. "13, 14. Behold joy and gladneſs, ſlaying oxen, and "killing ſheep, eating fleſh, and drinking wine, let "us eat and drink, for to morrow we ſhall die—— "ſurely this iniquity ſhall not be purged from you, till "ye die, &c."

Ver. 20. But God ſaid unto him, &c.] He determined within himſelf he ſhould die that night; for the time of a man's death, as well as of his birth, is fixed by God; or he ſent the meſſenger of death, ſome diſeaſe or another, the language of which was, immediate death, or death in a very ſhort time; or he ſpoke to his conſcience, and impreſſed it on his mind, that he ſhould die that night, and not live: thou fool; as he appeared to be, throughout the whole of his conduct: this night thy ſoul ſhall be required of thee; which is of God's immediate formation, is immortal, of more worth than a world, and its loſs is irreparable; and for which a man is accountable to God, the father of ſpirits; and which he requires at a man's hands at death, which is here deſigned; and ſhows, that a man has no power over it to retain it, but muſt give it up when it is called for, even that very inſtant, this night; which may refer to the time when covetous perſons are employing their thoughts about their worldly goods, or when epicures and ſenſual perſons, are indulging themſelves in luxury and intemperance; and to the condition the ſoul is in, being in the night and in darkneſs, and knows not whither it is going; and denotes its immediate remove, and the ſuddenneſs of divine wrath and vengeance: the Vulgate Latin, and Syriac verſions, agreeable to the Greek text, read the words, this night do they require thy ſoul of thee; or out of thy body, as the Perſic verſion reads: the Ethiopic verſion renders it, they ſhall take thy ſoul from thee; that is, the evil angels, the devils having a commiſſion from God, ſhall demand thy ſoul; and as ſoon as ever it is ſeparated from the body, ſhall ſeize upon it, and carry it to hell; juſt as the good angels carry the ſouls of the ſaints to heaven, Luke xvi. 22. Then whoſe ſhall thoſe things be, which thou haſt provided? not his own, for he can carry nothing with him; nor does he know whoſe they will be, whether the perſons he deſigned them for, or ſome others whom he abhorred, and would, if poſſible, have prevented their enjoyment of them; and ſhould he have them for whom he intended them, he does not know how he will turn out, whether a wiſe man or a fool, or what uſe he'll make of them.

Ver. 21. So is he that layeth up treaſure for himſelf, &c.] This is the accommodation of the parable. Juſt ſuch a fool is he, and this will be the end of him, who employs all his thoughts, and ſpends all his time, in amaſſing to himſelf worldly riches and wealth, in laying up treaſures on earth for himſelf, for futurity; and makes no uſe of his earthly ſubſtance for the good of others; nor ſhews any concern for ſpiritual and eternal riches; but places all his hope, truſt, and confidence, in uncertain riches: and is not rich towards God; or in God, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions read; in things pertaining to God, in ſpiritual things, in faith, and in good works; and is not concerned to lay up a treaſure in heaven, to have an intereſt in durable riches and righteouſneſs; whereas one that is rich towards God, acknowledges that he receives all his riches from God, as the Ethiopic verſion reads; he gives up all into the hands of God, depends upon his providence for the increaſe, ſecurity, and continuance of it; and uſes it to his honour and glory, and for the good of his intereſt; and is chiefly concerned for the riches of grace and glory; and enjoys much of God, and places all his riches in him: ſuch a man is a wiſe man, but the reverſe of this is the fool in the parable.

Ver. 22. And he ſaid unto his diſciples, &c.] Having finiſhed the parable which he ſpake to the whole audience in common, he directed himſelf to his diſciples, who were poor, and apt to be over anxious about their living in the world: therefore I ſay unto you, take no thought for your life, what ye ſhall eat. The Ethiopic verſion adds, and what ye ſhall drink; and ſo a manuſcript in Gonvill and Caius college in Cambridge, which ſeems to be tranſcribed from Matt. vi. 25. life is very near and dear to man; all that a man has, he'll give for it; and it is his duty to be careful to preſerve it, and to make uſe of means for the ſupport of it; but then, as he ſhould not be dainty about the food he eats, and ſhould refuſe no good creature of God, but receive it with thankſgiving, ſo he ſhould not diſtreſs himſelf for fear of wanting bread, nor diſtruſt the promiſes of God, and a ſupply from him; but ſhould caſt all his care upon the Lord, who daily cares for him: neither for the body, what ye ſhall put on: it is highly proper and neceſſary that the body ſhould be clothed, partly for decency, and partly to ſecure it from the inclemency of the weather; but then perſons ſhould not be difficult and over-nice about what they wear, nor be diſtreſſed, fearing they ſhould be clothed with rags; but ſhould truſt in the Lord, who gives food and raiment, and all things richly to enjoy.

Ver. 23. The life is more than meat, &c.] What in Matthew is put by way of queſtion, is here ſtrongly affirmed; and theſe words contain a reaſon or argument to diſſuade from an anxious, diſtreſſing thought and care about the neceſſaries, conveniencies, and comforts of life: and all the Oriental verſions read, for, or ſeeing the life is more than meat; that is, it is more excellent and valuable in its own nature, being that for the ſupport of which meat is provided; and ſeeing God is the author and giver of life, it need not be doubted but he will give meat for the maintenance and continuance of it, ſo long as it is his pleaſure it ſhould ſubſiſt. And the body is more than raiment; it is of more worth than the richeſt clothing that can be had; the fineſt piece of embroidery is not comparable to the curious workmanſhip of the body, Pſ. cxxxix. 15. and he that has ſo curiouſly wrought that, will not fail to provide ſuitable and proper clothing for it; and therefore there ought to be no anxiety on this account; ſee the note on Matt. vi. 25.

Ver. 24. Conſider the ravens, &c.] According to the Jews[k] there are three ſorts of ravens, the black raven, the raven of the valley, which is ſaid to be white, and the raven whoſe head is like a dove. In Matthew, the fowls of the air in general are mentioned, as they are here in the Cambridge copy of Beza's; but in others, the ravens in particular, they being fowls of very little worth, and diſregarded by men, and odious to them, as well as unclean by the law; and yet theſe are taken care of by God. The Arabic verſion reads, the young ravens; and theſe are they which are ſaid to cry unto God, who provides food for them, and gives it to them, Job xxxviii. 41. Pſ. cxlvii. 9. for they neither ſow nor reap, which neither have ſtorehouſe nor barn; and yet they are provided for, and therefore, why ſhould men, and eſpecially God's own people, diſtruſt his providence over them, when they both ſow and reap, have the ſeeds time, and harveſt in the appointed ſeaſons: they caſt their ſeed into the earth, and it ſprings up and brings forth much fruit, which they reap when ripe, and gather into their barns and ſtorehouſes, from whence they are ſupplied till another ſeaſon returns; wherefore they have no reaſon to diſtreſs themſelves, ſeeing, tho' this is not the caſe of ravens, yet God feedeth them; their young ones, as the above places ſhew. Jerom ſays[l], that it is affirmed by ſome philoſophers, that they live upon dew. The Jews[m] have a notion, that the old ravens being cruel to their young, and hating them, the Lord has pity on them, and prepares flies, or worms for them, which ariſe out of their dung, and enter into their mouths, and they eat them. One of their commentators ſay[n], when the young ones are hatched they are white, and the old ones leave them, not taking them for their own, and therefore bring them no food, and then they cry to God; and this is mentioned by ſome Chriſtian writers, but not ſufficiently confirmed: and another of them obſerves[o], that the philoſophers of the Gentiles ſay, that the ravens leave their young as ſoon as they are hatched; but what Ariſtotle[p], Pliny[q], and Ælianus[r] affirm of theſe creatures is, that as ſoon as they are able to fly they turn them out of their neſts, and even drive them out of the country where they are; when, as it is ſaid in Job, they wander for lack of meat, and cry unto God, who gives it to them: and ſince this is the caſe, and the providence of God is ſo much concerned for ſuch worthleſs creatures, the people of God, and diſciples of Chriſt, ought by no means to diſtruſt it: for as it follows, how much more are ye better than the fowls; or than theſe, as the Vulgate Latin verſion reads; that is, than theſe ravens, or any other fowls whatever; ſee the note on Matt. vi. 26.

Ver. 25. And which of you with taking thought, &c.] In an anxious and diſtreſſing manner, for food and raiment, in order to preſerve and continue life, can add to his ſtature one cubit? The Perſic verſion reads, to his ſtature and heighth, as if this referred to the heighth of ſtature; whereas it ſeems rather to regard the age of a man, and the continuance of his life; ſee the note on Matt. vi. 27.

Ver. 26. If ye then be not able to do that which is leaſt, &c.] As to make the ſmalleſt addition to a man's ſtature, or rather to add one moment to his days: why take ye thought for the reſt? which are much greater, as to preſerve the body in its whole bulk, and all its parts, or for the feeding and clothing of it, or rather for the continuation and preſervation of life to any length of time; for if it can't be by all a man's care and ſolicitude lengthened out one moment longer than is the pleaſure of God, how ſhould it be by ſuch anxiety continued for months and years?

Ver. 27. Conſider the lilies how they grow, &c.] Some copies read, the lilies of the field, as in Matt. vi. 28. The Perſic verſion renders the word, the roſes and lilies of the field; and the Arabic verſion, the flowers; any flowers of the field; for what is afterwards ſaid, is true of any of them, but particularly of the lilies: now, as the former inſtance of God's feeding the ravens is deſigned to remove all anxious and diſtreſſing thoughts about food for the body; this is mentioned to take off every thing of that kind with reſpect to cloathing for it; wherefore, in Matthew, theſe words are premiſed to it, and why take ye thought for raiment? there will be no need of it, when it is conſidered how the lilies, or tulips, or any other flowers grow up out of the earth, and in what a fine beautiful dreſs they appear, without any care or labour of their own, and even without the care and management of a gardener; for flowers of the field are here meant: they toil not, they ſpin not; they neither labour as men do, in ſowing of flax, and dreſſing it, or in combing of wool, or in ſpinning of either: and yet I ſay unto you, that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of theſe. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, in the whole time of his glory; throughout his glorious reign, at any time; whenever upon any extraordinary occaſion he was dreſſed out in the fineſt manner, yet even then a lily out-did him; its glory being natural to it, whereas his, at beſt, was but artificial, and an imitation of nature; ſee the note on Matt. vi. 29.

Ver. 28. If then God ſo clothe the graſs, &c.] As lilies and tulips; for they are no other than graſs, weak, frail, fading, ſhort-lived flowers, which have all their gaiety and beauty from the great creator of them: which is to-day in the field, and to-morrow is caſt into the oven: the graſs is one day in the field, in all its verdure, glory, and beauty; and being cut down before evening, the next day it is withered, and dried, and made fit to put into an oven, or under a furnace to heat them with: how much more will he clothe you, O ye of little faith? The Perſic verſion renders the words, how much more excellent are ye than that, O ye of little faith? they are more excellent in their nature, and of a longer duration, and are deſigned for greater ends and purpoſes; and therefore if God clothes the one in ſuch a manner as he does, how much more will he not clothe the other? and ſuch who are diſtruſtful and diffident in this matter, may well be called men of little faith; ſee the note on Matt. vi. 30.

Ver. 29. And ſeek not what ye ſhall eat, or what ye ſhall drink, &c.] That is, in an anxious and diſtreſſing manner, with a tormenting and vexatious care; otherwiſe food is to be both aſked of God every day, and to be ſought for and after in the uſe of proper means: neither be ye of doubtful minds; queſtioning and diſtruſting that ye ſhall have any thing to eat or drink: be not fickle, unſtable, and inconſtant, and wandering in your thoughts about theſe things, like the meteors in the air, which are carried about here and there; let not your minds be diſturbed and diſtracted about them, or be anxiouſly ſolicitous for them; ſee the note on Matt. vi. 31.

Ver. 30. For all theſe things do the nations of the world ſeek after, &c.] That is, the Gentiles, as in Matt. vi. 32. who are frequently, in the Jewiſh writings,[*] called, in diſtinction, from the Jews, אומות העולם, the nations of the world. This is an argument uſed to diſſuade from an immoderate and anxious concern for food and raiment, becauſe it is heatheniſh, and therefore very unbecoming the diſciples and followers of Chriſt: it need not be wondered at in thoſe that know not God, and do not acknowledge his providence, and are ſtrangers to his covenant and promiſes; but muſt be very unſuitable to the characters of ſuch who know that godlineſs has the promiſe of this life, and of that which is to come: and your father knoweth that ye have need of theſe things; and therefore it is needleſs to be ſo anxious about them: the Perſic verſion reads, all theſe things, and ſo ſome copies; that is, meat, drink, and clothing, all the neceſſaries of life; ſee the note on Matt. vi. 32.

Ver. 31. But rather ſeek ye the kingdom of God, &c.] The Vulgate Latin verſion adds, firſt, as alſo, and his righteouſneſs, as in Matt. vi. 33. and the Ethiopic verſion reads, ſeek his kingdom and righteouſneſs; meaning either the grace of God, which is not meat and drink, but righteouſneſs, peace and joy in the Holy Ghoſt, Rom. xiv. 17. or the heavenly glory; unleſs the Goſpel, and the diſpenſation of it, which is the Meſſiah's kingdom, and which was then juſt uſhering in, ſhould rather be intended. And all theſe things ſhall be added unto you; food and raiment, which are as much as can be enjoyed; and godlineſs with theſe, and contentment with them, is great gain; ſee the note on Matt. vi. 33.

Ver. 32. Fear not little flock, &c.] Theſe words are particularly directed to the immediate apoſtles and diſciples of Chriſt; but are true of all the ſaints in all ages of time, who are compared to a flock of ſheep, being ſeparated from the reſt of the world in election, redemption, and effectual vocation, and being folded together in a Goſpel church-ſtate; and alſo for their patience, meekneſs, humility, and harmleſſneſs: theſe are a little flock; few in number, when compared with the wicked of the world; and mean and deſpicable in the account of men; and little in their own eyes: theſe are ſubject to many fears; ſome relate to their outward ſtate and condition, as that they ſhall want food and raiment, and not have the neceſſaries of life; which ſeems to be in the firſt place here intended, as appears from the context: and ſome regard their ſpiritual and eternal eſtate, as leſt they ſhould have no intereſt in the love of God, and in the covenant, in the bleſſings and promiſes of his grace; leſt they ſhould not belong to Chriſt; or the good work of grace ſhould not be begun in them; or that they ſhould not perſevere to the end, and ſhould at laſt miſcarry of eternal life and happineſs: and theſe fears ariſe from a body of ſin, from the temptations of ſatan, the hidings of God's face, and the prevalence of unbelief; for they have no true reaſon for them: God is on their ſide, and will not leave, nor forſake them, nor ſhall they want any good thing; Chriſt is their ſhepherd, and he has bought them with his own blood, and will loſe none of them; and therefore they need not fear being taken care of both in ſoul and body, for time and eternity: and eſpecially when what follows is conſidered, for it is your father's good pleaſure to give you the kingdom; not only the Goſpel, and the knowledge of the myſteries of it; nor the Goſpel church-ſtate, and a right to all its ordinances; nor only the kingdom of grace, which cannot be moved; but the kingdom of glory: and which is a gift unto them, not obtained by any deſerts or works of theirs; nor is their right unto, and enjoyment of it depending upon any ſuch thing: and it is their father's gift, who is ſo by adopting grace, and thro' Chriſt Jeſus their Lord; and which he gives according to his ſovereign will and pleaſure, and with a good will, delighting in them, and rejoicing over them to do them good, both here and hereafter: ſo that they may depend upon every good thing needful for them both in this world, and in the world to come; nor ſhould they indulge anxious cares, or ſlaviſh fears.

Ver. 33. Sell that ye have, and give alms, &c.] Since they had a kingdom bequeathed them by their heavenly father, they ſhould be ſo far from indulging an anxious care about food and raiment, that when there was a call in providence for it, and rather than the poor ſhould go without a ſupply, it became them to ſell their houſes and lands, and whatever poſſeſſions they had, and relieve them; and ſo they did not long after; for ſome of thoſe who ſold their eſtates, and brought the money to the apoſtles, Acts iv. 34, 35. might be now preſent; and the more readily and chearfully do what they did, remembering theſe words of Chriſt: provide yourſelves bags which wax not old; as do the bags of miſers: their bag is, צרור נקוב, a bag pierced through, or that has a hole in it, which lets the money out as it is put in, Hag. i. 6. and which the Targum renders by, למארתא, for a curſe; as money hoarded up in bags by covetous perſons generally is: Chriſt would have his followers put their money up in other bags; not in ſuch which rot through age, or are worn out, and are full of holes thro' uſe; but into the hands and bellies of the poor, the fruit and reward of which will always abide; a treaſure in the heavens that faileth not: whereas treaſure on earth does, being either taken away from the poſſeſſors of it by various ways, or they from that: where no thief approacheth; can come near to ſteal it away, which is often the caſe here on earth: neither moth corrupteth; as it does the beſt of garments, wore by men: but the robes of glory and immortality can never be corrupted; ſee the note on Matt. vi. 20.

[*] Vid. T. Bab. Gittin, fol. 28. 2. & 29. 1.

Ver. 34. For where your treaſure is, &c.] Whether in heaven, or in earth, there will your heart be alſo: the heart is always ſet upon the treaſure, and as is a man's treaſure, ſuch is his heart, that is, ſet upon it; if his treaſure is only here, and he has not the true riches, his heart is only earthly and carnal; but if his treaſure is heavenly, his heart and converſation will be in heaven; ſee the note on Matt. vi. 21.

Ver. 35. Let your loins be girded about, &c.] With the girdle of truth, Eph. vi. 14. keeping cloſe to the doctrines of the Goſpel, abiding faithfully by them, even unto death: the alluſion is either to the eating of the firſt paſſover, Exod. xii. 11. or rather to ſervants, who, in theſe eaſtern countries, wore long garments; and therefore, when in buſineſs, uſed to gather them up, and gird them about them, that they might perform their ſervice with greater ſtrength, more eaſe, quicker diſpatch, and leſs hinderance: the phraſe denotes readineſs for buſineſs: and your lights burning. The Vulgate Latin verſion adds, in your hands; meaning torches that were held in the hand: and may deſign either the ſcriptures of truth, which were to be a light or lamp unto them, guiding and directing them in the miniſtration of the Goſpel; or the lamps of profeſſion, which ſhould be kept clear and bright, and good works, becoming them, that ſhould ſo ſhine before men, that all may ſee them, and glorify God. The alluſion is to perſons waiting at a wedding in the night, with torches and flambleaus in their hands.

Ver. 36. And ye yourſelves like unto men that wait for their Lord, &c.] Who either was at a wedding, or was the bridegroom himſelf; ſo be ye in a readineſs, waiting for the coming of Chriſt, the bridegroom of the church: when he will return from the wedding. The Syriac verſion renders it, from the houſe of feaſting; from any entertainment, or from the marriage-feaſt, or rather the marriage itſelf, to the bride-chamber: ſo when Chriſt has, by the preaching of the Goſpel, and the power of his grace, eſpouſed all his elect, he'll deſcend from heaven, and take them to himſelf; they ſhall then be called to the marriage-ſupper of the lamb, and enter with him into the nuptial-chamber, and be for ever with him: that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open to him immediately; and let him in without any delay, as ſoon as ever he comes to the door; and at the firſt knock, open it to him at once, having light, and being in a poſture of readineſs, and in conſtant expectation of him: ſo ſuch who have believed in Chriſt, and have been faithful to his cauſe and intereſt, and have held faſt the profeſſion of their faith without wavering, when Chriſt ſhall either come and knock at their doors by death, or ſhall come to judgment, and ſound the alarm of it, they ſhall be ready to obey the ſummons with the greateſt chearfulneſs, and meet him with the utmoſt pleaſure.

Ver. 37. Bleſſed are thoſe ſervants whom the Lord, &c.] The Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read, their Lord; the maſter of them, or the Lord Jeſus Chriſt: when he cometh ſhall find watching; for him, and not aſleep. The Ethiopic verſion reads, ſo doing, and watching; girding up their loins, trimming their lamps, and waiting for their Lord's coming: ſuch ſervants are happy, they will appear to be in the favour of their maſter, who will take notice of them, and ſhow ſome marks of reſpect to them; as Chriſt will to all his good and faithful ſervants, whenever he comes, whether at death, or at judgment; and who will be happy then, being found ſo doing, and found in him: verily I ſay unto you, that he ſhall gird himſelf; not that Chriſt ſhall really do this, or appear in the form of a ſervant; but that he ſhall readily, chearfully, and at once introduce his ſervants into his joy, and make them partakers of all the glories of the other world: and make them to ſit down to meat; at his table in his kingdom; ſee Matt. viii. 11. Luke xxii. 30. and will come forth and ſerve them; with food, yea, will feed them himſelf, and lead them to fountains of living water, Rev. vii. 17. The Arabic verſion renders it, he ſhall ſtand to miniſter unto them: the phraſe is expreſſive of the poſture of a ſervant; who, as Dr. Lightfoot obſerves, is הולך, walking, and who goes round about the table, whilſt others ſit [t]: ſome think there is an alluſion in the words to a cuſtom uſed at ſome feaſts, particularly at the feaſts in honour of Saturn, in which ſervants changed clothes with their maſters, and ſat at their tables, and their maſters ſerved them [u].

Ver. 38. And if he ſhall come in the ſecond watch, &c.] Of the night, that is, after nine o'clock, or any time between nine and twelve; for the ſecond watch was from nine o'clock till twelve; and this was coming early from an entertainment, or a wedding, which were commonly kept in the night, and late: or come in the third watch; or after twelve o'clock, or any time between twelve and three; for the third watch was from twelve o'clock to three, which was late; ſee the note on Matt. xiv. 25. The Perſic verſion reads, in the ſecond, or third part of the night; and the Ethiopic verſion, in the ſecond or third hour of the night: and find them ſo. The Arabic verſion adds, doing; as above deſcribed, with their loins girt, lights burning, and they watching for their Lord's coming: bleſſed are thoſe ſervants; ſince they ſhall be uſed and treated as before related.

Ver. 39. And this know, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion reads, this only know; only take notice of this one thing, and it may be of ſome uſe to direct you in your conduct how to behave during the abſence of your Lord, until the time he ſhall come again: that if the good man of the houſe had known what hour the thief would come; that is, if the owner, or maſter of the houſe, whoſe the goods in the houſe are, could by any means know what time of the night the thief would come to break into his houſe, in order to plunder it, and carry off his goods: he would have watched; either he himſelf in perſon, or he would have ſet a watch about his houſe, or in it: and not have ſuffered his houſe to be broken thro'; either the door to be broken up, or the wall to be dug thro', but by a guard about it, or within it, would have prevented ſuch a deſign. And ſo in like manner, could it be known in what time Chriſt would come, either to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, or at death, or to judgment, every thoughtful, prudent man that ſhould know it, would be upon his guard, that he might not be ſurprized with it; and tho' the preciſe time could not be known, yet inaſmuch as the thing itſelf is certain, it became all the ſervants of Chriſt to be watching for it; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 43.

[u] Vid. Lipſii Saturnal. l. 1. c. 2. p. 6.

Ver. 40. Be ye therefore ready alſo, &c.] Not only habitually, but actually, in the exerciſe of grace, and the diſcharge of duty, with loins girt, and lights burning. This may be underſtood either of a readineſs to meet the Lord in the way of his judgments, and particularly the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, which was to be a in few years; or of a preparation for death, and the laſt judgment, which lies in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed, and his grace imparted: and to have a comfortable view of the one, and a gracious experience of the other, as they will engage to the performance of good works, to which ſuch are ready; ſo they make meet for the coming of Chriſt, be it in what way, and whenſoever it will: and the rather, a concern ſhould be had for ſuch a preparation, becauſe of the following reaſon, for the ſon of man cometh at an hour when ye think not; in either of the above ways; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 44.

Ver. 41. Then Peter ſaid unto him, Lord, &c.] The Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read, our Lord: ſpeakeſt thou this parable; of the maſter at the wedding, and his ſervants waiting for him, or of the houſekeeper watching that his houſe be not broken up, or both: unto us, or unto all? Peter was in doubt whether the above diſcourſe was peculiarly directed to them, the Apoſtles, as containing ſpecial inſtructions to them in the diſcharge of the miniſterial work; or whether it was deſigned for all his diſciples and followers, both in the preſent age, and in time to come, to the end of the world.

Ver. 42. And the Lord ſaid, who then is that faithful and wiſe ſteward, &c.] Chriſt does not directly, and in expreſs words, anſwer to Peter's queſtion, but ſuggeſts, that tho' he intended it as a caution to all his people, and in it ſpake to them all to be upon their watch and guard, Mark xiii. 37. yet that he had a ſpecial regard to them, his Apoſtles, and ſucceeding miniſters of the Goſpel, whoſe characters, office, work, dignity, and honour, are here deſcribed. Such are ſtewards in Chriſt's family; they are entruſted with the ſtores and proviſions of his houſe; and faithfulneſs and wiſdom are requiſite in them; the one, that they do not corrupt and adulterate the word of God, and mix it with human doctrines, but that they deliver it out pure and ſincere as it is; and the other, that they may rightly divide it, and wiſely diſtribute it: whom his Lord ſhall make ruler over his houſhold: Chriſt's houſhold, or family, is his church, over which the miniſters of the Goſpel are appointed rulers, to govern the houſe according to the laws of Chriſt, and keep every thing in good decorum and order; and particularly their work, and which agrees to their character as ſtewards is, to give them their portion of meat in due ſeaſon; in doing which they anſwer the characters of faithful and wiſe ſtewards: they are faithful who give out the whole portion allotted, without adulterating it, or keeping back any part of it; and they are wiſe, who deliver it to them in proper time and ſeaſon. The word tranſlated, portion of meat, is only uſed in this place, and is rendered in the Vulgate Latin verſion, a meaſure of wheat; but it may be applied to any food in general, and an allotment of it; and ſignifies ſuch a portion as was given to ſervants for one month, or rather every day; and may ſignify that portion of the word of God, and the interpretation of it, which is to be given forth every Lord's day to his people, ſuitable to their condition, caſes, and circumſtances. The Septuagint tranſlators uſe the verb in Gen. xlvii. 12. who render the text thus, and Joſeph, εσιτομετρει, meaſured out to his father, and to his brethren, and to all the houſe of his father, wheat, or bread, according to their perſons, i. e. the number of them: to which paſſage there may be ſome reference here; at leaſt it ſerves to illuſtrate this; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 45.

Ver. 43. Bleſſed is that ſervant, &c.] Who is faithful and wiſe, rules well, and diſcharges his truſt with integrity, and diſpoſes of the proviſions of the houſe, in his hands, with great diſcretion and prudence: whom his Lord, when he cometh; to take vengeance on the wicked Jews, or by death, or at judgment: ſhall find ſo doing; behaving as a good ruler, and as a wiſe and faithful ſteward.

Ver. 44. Of a truth I ſay unto you, &c.] This, with Chriſt, was a ſtrong way of aſſerting the truth of any thing; and the ſenſe is, you may aſſure yourſelves of it, this will certainly be the happy caſe of ſuch a ſervant: that he will make him ruler over all that he hath; as Joſeph was made by Pharoah. Such an one ſhall reign with Chriſt on earth a thouſand years, and then in heaven with him to all eternity, where he ſhall enjoy all things; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 47.

Ver. 45. But and if that ſervant ſay in his heart, &c.] Not the ſame ſervant before ſpoken of as a wiſe and faithful ſteward, that gives to all in the family the portion of meat in due ſeaſon, and ſhall be found ſo doing, and be made ruler over his maſter's goods; but another, who alſo, as he, is made by his Lord ruler over his houſhold, and is in a like poſt, and in the ſame office, but is an evil ſervant, as Matthew calls him, to diſtinguiſh him from the other; and ſo the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions read here: my Lord delayeth his coming; tho' a wicked ſervant, he calls Chriſt his Lord; but it is not ſaying Lord, Lord, that will be of any avail, but doing the will of God, by believing in Chriſt, and obeying his commands: he had a notion of the coming of Chriſt, tho' he did not deſire it; and becauſe he tarried longer than was expected, ſuppoſed him to be ſlack concerning his promiſe, and began to think, and hope, and at length to believe, that he would not come at all, and therefore gave himſelf up to a wicked and licentious way of living: and ſhall begin to beat the men-ſervants and maidens; to perſecute the miniſters of the Goſpel, and the true diſciples of Chriſt, the undefiled virgins, that follow the lamb whitherſoever he goes: and to eat, and drink, and to be drunken; to live a voluptuous and ſenſual life, to give himſelf up to intemperance and debauchery: and, generally ſpeaking, as profeſſors of religion, when they turn apoſtates, are the moſt violent perſecutors of the ſaints; ſo ſuch perſecutors of Chriſt's faithful followers are commonly drunkards and debauchees; ſee the notes on Matt. xxiv. 48, 49.

Ver. 46. The Lord of that ſervant will come in a day when he looketh not for him, &c.] For, not coming as was expected, he gives over looking, and concludes he'll not come at all; in which he'll find himſelf miſtaken, for he'll come in the very day which is appointed, tho' men know not of it, and don't look for it: and at an hour when he is not aware; for as neither the day, nor hour of Chriſt's coming are known to any man, it becomes men to look for it every day and hour, leſt it come upon them unawares; as it will, on ſuch evil ſervants before deſcribed, with whom it will go ill, as follows: and will cut him in ſunder, and appoint him his portion with unbelievers; whoſe portion is the lake which burns with fire and brimſtone, which is the ſecond death, Rev. xxi. 8. and by theſe are meant, not only the heathens, who never heard of Chriſt; nor the Jews only, who diſbelieved the Meſſiah, and rejected him when he came; but all deiſts and atheiſts, who deny revelation; even all unbelievers of, and ſcoffers at the coming of Chriſt, and who put away the evil day far from them; compare with this Job xx. 29. ſee the notes on Matt. xxiv. 50, 51.

Ver. 47. And that ſervant which knew his Lord's will, &c.] Not his ſecret, but his revealed will; the will of God, which lies in the declarations of his grace and mercy in the Goſpel, and in the commands and ordinances expreſſed in his word; and which are the good, perfect, and acceptable will of God; the knowledge of which is neceſſary, in order to practice: and where there is a ſpiritual and ſaving knowledge, there will be practice; but there may be knowledge, where there is no practice, and which was the caſe here: Chriſt here diſtinguiſhes between wicked ſervants, ſome being knowing, and others ignorant; and accordingly the aggravations of their guilt are more or leſs: and prepared not himſelf; ſo the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions ſupply, but the Syriac verſion, for him, that is, for his Lord: but it may as well be read as in the Vulgate Latin, without any ſupplement, and prepared not; he took no thought nor care, about doing it: there is no preparation, readineſs, nor diſpoſition, in a natural man, to the will of God: no man is prepared, or ready to do it, but he that is regenerated, or is made a new creature; who has the laws of God written on his heart, and who has the Spirit of God put within him, to cauſe him to keep them; and who has faith in Chriſt, and ſtrength from him to obſerve them: but there may be knowledge, where ſuch a preparation is wanting; perſons may know much, and profeſs to know more, and in works deny all, and be to every good, unfit, diſobedient, and reprobate: this clauſe is left out in the Perſic verſion: neither did according to his will; the will of God is done aright, when what is done, is done according to the command of God, in the ſtrength of Chriſt, from love to him, in the exerciſe of faith on him, and with a view to his glory, and without any dependance on what is done; but there may be knowledge, without any thing of this: the words, neither did, are wanting in the Syriac verſion: and ſuch a man that has knowledge without practice, ſhall be beaten with many ſtripes; alluding to the law of the Jews, by which a wicked man was to be puniſhed, by beating him with ſtripes, not exceeding forty, according to the nature of his fault, Deut. xxv. 2, 3. and here it ſignifies, that perſons who have light and knowledge, and the means thereof, and act not according to them, ſhall be puniſhed with the greateſt ſeverity, and endure the greateſt degree of torments in hell; ſee Matt. xi. 21, 22, 23, 24.

Ver. 48. But he that knew not, &c.] His Lord's will; either not having the means of knowing it, as the heathens; or through neglect of them, not attending to them, and making uſe of them, which is the caſe of many, where the Goſpel revelation is: and did committ things worthy of ſtripes; or puniſhment; as the Gentiles, by ſinning againſt the law, and light of nature; and thoſe who might have the advantage of a divine revelation, but neglect it: the Septuagint in Deut. xxv. 2. have the ſame phraſe as here, αξιος πληγων, worthy of ſtripes: ſhall be beaten with few ſtripes; their puniſhment ſhall be leſs, and it ſhall be more tolerable for them in the day of judgment, than for knowing profeſſors. The Jews did not always inflict forty ſtripes, or forty ſave one, upon delinquents; but according to their crimes, and as they were able to bear them, more or fewer: ſo it is ſaid [w], "when they judge a ſinner, how many (ſtripes) he can bear, they don't reckon, but by ſtripes that are fit to be trebled: if they judge he is able to bear twenty, they don't order that he be beaten with twenty-one, that ſo they may be trebled, but that he be beaten with eighteen: if they adjudge him to receive forty, and after he is begun to be beaten, they obſerve him to be weak, and they ſay he can't bear any more than theſe nine, or twelve, with which he has been beaten, lo, he is free: if they adjudge him to receive twelve, and after that he is beaten, they ſee that he is ſtrong and able to bear more, lo, he is free, and he is not to be beaten any more, upon that eſtimation: if they adjudge him to day, that he is to be beaten with twelve (ſtripes,) and they don't beat him till to morrow, and lo, to morrow he is able to bear eighteen, they don't beat him but with twelve." And elſewhere the rule is [x], "he that commits a ſin, in which there are two negative (commands broken) if they pronounce but one ſentence, he is beaten and is free; but if not (i. e. if more than one) he is beaten, and when he is healed, he is beaten again." For unto whomſoever much is given, of him ſhall much be required: the more knowledge a man has, the more practice is expected from him; and the greater his gifts are, the more uſeful he ought to be, and diligent in the improvement of them: and to whom men have committed much, or to whom much is committed, of him they will aſk the more; not more than what was committed to him, but more than from him, who has leſs committed to him; in proportion to what a man is entruſted with, the greater increaſe and improvement 'tis expected he ſhould make.

Ver. 49. I am come to ſend fire on the earth, &c.] Meaning either the Goſpel, which is as fire, that gives both light and heat, warms the hearts of God's people, and cauſes them to burn within them; though very diſtreſſing and torturing to wicked men; ſo the word of God is compared to fire, in Jer. xx. 9. and xxiii. 29. Or elſe zeal for it, and which would be oppoſed with ſharp contentions by others; or rather perſecution for the ſake of the Goſpel, called ſometimes the fiery trial; which tries men, as gold is tried in the fire, what they are, and what their principles and profeſſion be; unleſs the Holy Ghoſt, and baptizing with him, and with fire, ſhould be meant; ſince Chriſt in the next verſe, ſpeaks of the baptiſm of his ſufferings, which that was to follow: and what will I? what ſhall I ſay concerning this fire? what ſhall I wiſh and pray for? what would be pleaſing and agreeable to me? even this, if it be already kindled; or that it were already kindled, or O that it were already kindled; meaning either that the Goſpel was warmly preached by his diſciples, and zealouſly defended by them, as it was after his death and reſurrection; or that hot perſecution was raiſed againſt it, which was now beginning, ſince the advantage of it, would be far greater than the evil in it; or that the Holy Ghoſt was come down in cloven tongues, like as of fire.

Ver. 50. But I have a baptiſm to be baptized with, &c.] Not water baptiſm, for he had been baptized with that already; nor the baptiſm of the Spirit, which he had alſo received without meaſure; though the Ethiopic verſion reads it actively, with which I ſhall baptize, referring doubtleſs to that; but the baptiſm of his ſufferings is meant, which are compared to a baptiſm, becauſe of the largeneſs and abundance of them; he was at it were immerſed, or plunged into them; and which almoſt all interpreters obſerve on the text, and by which they confeſs the true import and primary ſignification of the word uſed: as in baptiſm, performed by immerſion, the perſon is plunged into water, is covered with it, and continues a while under it, and then is raiſed out of it, and which being once done, is done no more; ſo the ſufferings of Chriſt were ſo many and large, that he was as it were covered with them, and he continued under them for a time, and under the power of death and the grave, when being raiſed from thence, he dies no more, death hath no more dominion over him. This baptiſm he had, there was a neceſſity of his being baptized with it, on his Father's account; it was his will, his decree, and the command he enjoined him as Mediator; it was the portion he allotted him, and the cup he gave unto him: and on his own part, he obliged himſelf unto it, in the counſel and covenant of peace; for this purpoſe he came into this world, and had ſubſtituted himſelf in the room and ſtead of his people; and it was neceſſary on their part, for their ſins could not be atoned for without ſufferings, nor without the ſufferings of Chriſt; moreover, the promiſes and prophecies of the Old Teſtament concerning them, made them neceſſary: and how am I ſtraitned until it be accompliſhed: theſe words expreſs both the trouble and diſtreſs Chriſt was in, at the apprehenſion of his ſufferings as man; which were like to the diſtreſs of perſons, cloſely beſieged by an enemy; or rather of a woman, whoſe time of travail draws nigh, when ſhe dreads it, and yet longs to have it over: and likewiſe they ſignify, his reſtleſs deſire to have them accompliſhed; not that he deſired that Judas ſhould betray him, or the Jews crucify him, as theſe were ſins of theirs; nor merely his ſufferings as ſuch; but that thereby the juſtice of God might be ſatisfied, the law might be fulfilled, and the ſalvation of his people be obtained: and this eager deſire of his, he had ſhown in various inſtances, and did ſhow afterwards; as in his ready compliance with his Father's propoſal in eternity; in his frequent appearances in human nature before his incarnation; in ſending one meſſage after another, to give notice of his coming; in his willingneſs to be about his Father's buſineſs, as ſoon as poſſible; in rebuking Peter, when he would have diſſuaded him from all thoughts of ſuffering; in going to Jeruſalem on his own accord, in order to ſuffer there; in his earneſt wiſh, to eat the laſt paſſover with his diſciples; in the joy that poſſeſſed him, when Judas was gone out, in order to betray him; in ſtopping in the midſt of his ſermon, leſt he ſhould over-run, or outſlip the time, of meeting him in the garden, John xiv. 30, 31. in his going thither, and willingly ſurrendering himſelf up into the hands of his enemies; and in chearfully laying down his life: all which aroſe, from the entire love he had for the perſons he died for; and becauſe it was his Father's will, and his glory was concerned herein, and his own glory alſo was advanced thereby; moreover, his death was the life of others, and the work required haſte.

[w] Maimon. Hilchot Sanhedrin, c. 17. §. 2, 3.

[x] Miſn. Maccot, c. 3. §. 11.

Ver. 51. Suppoſe ye that I am come to give peace on earth? &c.] To ſet up a temporal kingdom, in great pomp, and outward peace and tranquillity? Chriſt came to make peace with God for men, and to give the Goſpel of peace, and ſpiritual and eternal peace to men; but not external peace, eſpecially that, which is not conſiſtent with the preſervation of truth: I tell you, nay; whatever ſuppoſitions you have made, or whatever notions you have entertained, I ſolemnly affirm, and you may depend upon it, I am not come into the world on any ſuch account, as to eſtabliſh outward peace among men: but rather diviſion; ſo he calls the Goſpel, which in Matthew is ſtiled a ſword; and the Ethiopic verſion ſeems to have read both here, ſince it renders it, but a ſword that I may divide: the Goſpel is the ſword of the Spirit, which divides aſunder ſoul and ſpirit, and ſeparates a man from his former principles and practices; and ſets men apart from one another, even the neareſt relations, at the greateſt diſtance; and is, through the ſin of man, the occaſion of great contention, diſcord, and diviſion.

Ver. 52. For from henceforth there ſhall be five in one houſe, &c.] Which are the five following, mentioned in the next verſe; the father and the ſon, the mother and the daughter, and her daughter-in-law, or ſon's wife; for the mother and mother-in-law, are one and the ſame perſon, only ſtanding in different relations; as a mother to her own daughter, and a mother-in-law to her ſon's wife, or to her huſband's daughter by his firſt wife; though the former beſt anſwers to the word uſed: now from the time of Chriſt's ſaying theſe words, or quickly after this, immediately upon his baptiſm of ſufferings, or ſoon after his death, when the Goſpel ſhould be preached more publickly and extenſively, this ſhould be the effect of it; that ſuppoſing a family conſiſting of the above number, they ſhould be divided from one another, in the following manner: three againſt two, and two againſt three; three that did not believe in Chriſt, againſt two that did believe in him; or two that did not believe, againſt three that did; or three that did, againſt two that did not; or two that did, againſt three that did not. The Ethiopic verſion reads, two ſhall be ſeparated from three, and one ſhall be ſeparated from two.

Ver. 53. The father ſhall be divided againſt the ſon, &c.] Shall oppoſe him, differ with him, and be alienated from him, and ſo the other relations as follow; ſee the notes on Matt. x. 35, 36.

Ver. 54. And he ſaid alſo to the people, &c.] For what Chriſt had before ſaid, were chiefly, if not ſolely, directed to his diſciples; but now he turned himſelf to the innumerable multitude that were about him, and particularly addreſſed himſelf to the Scribes and Phariſees that were among them: when ye ſee a cloud riſe out of the weſt; the watry vapours being attracted by the heat of the ſun, out of the Mediterranean ſea, which lies weſt of the land of Judea, and formed into a cloud, and drove by the wind: ſtraightway ye ſay there comes a ſhower; as ſoon as it is ſeen, it is preſently concluded and affirmed, that a very heavy ſhower will ſoon fall, it having been frequently obſerved ſo to do, when this has been the caſe: and ſo it is; for the moſt part, there commonly follows a large ſhower on ſuch an appearance, and they were ſeldom miſtaken in their concluſions.

Ver. 55. And when ye ſee the ſouth wind blow, &c.] From the hot countries of Egypt, Ethiopia, and Arabia, which lay ſouth of Judea: ye ſay there will be heat; or hot ſultry weather, ſcorching heat, which ſuch a wind brings with it: and it cometh to paſs; generally ſpeaking, as is aſſerted.

Ver. 56. Ye hypocrites, &c.] A word often uſed of the Scribes and Phariſees, and which ſuggeſts, that there were ſuch in company, to whom Chriſt more eſpecially directs his diſcourſe; and this may be the rather thought, ſince much the like things are ſaid by him to the Phariſees, with the Sadducees, in Matt. xvi. 1, 2, 3. and the ſame appellation is given them there, as here: ye can diſcern the face of the ſky, and of the earth; from the appearance of the ſky, they could tell how it would be with the earth, and the inhabitants of it, whether they ſhould have dry or wet weather, heat or cold: but how is it that ye do not diſcern this time? that this is the time of the Meſſiah's coming, and that it is the accepted time, and day of ſalvation, if ye receive him, and believe in him; and a time of vengeance, if ye reject him: this might have been diſcerned by the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, which fix the characters of the Meſſiah, and the time of his coming; and deſcribe the manners of the men of that generation, in which he ſhould come; and point out both their happineſs and their ruin; as alſo by the doctrines they heard Chriſt preach, and eſpecially by the miracles which were wrought by him, it might have been known he was come.

Ver. 57. Yea, and why even of yourſelves, &c.] From their own obſervation, as in diſcerning the ſigns of the weather; in a rational way, by the light of reaſon, and according to the dictates of their own conſciences; by what they themſelves ſaw and heard; by the ſigns and wonders which were done, they might have concluded, that now was the time of the Meſſiah's coming; and that he was come, and that Jeſus of Nazareth was he: this was as eaſy, by obſervation, to be diſcerned, as the face of the ſky was; even of themſelves, without any hints or directions from others: judge ye not what is right? or truth, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions render it; concerning the preſent time, the coming of the Meſſiah, and the accompliſhment of the promiſes and prophecies of the Old Teſtament in him: or why do ye not of yourſelves judge, what is fit and right to be done between man and man, without going to law? and that in caſes which are plain and clear, the conſequences of which may be as eaſily diſcerned, as what weather it will be by the ſigns in the heavens; to which ſenſe the following words incline.

Ver. 58. When thou goeſt with thine adverſary, &c.] The creditor, as the Perſic verſion, and who is the proſecutor, that has commenced a ſuit of law againſt another, in order to obtain his right: for Chriſt is here ſpeaking of a bad man, that will not pay his juſt debts, ſo that his creditor is obliged to proſecute him, and have him to the magiſtrate; ruler, or prince; the Naſi, or prince of the Sanhedrim, who ſat as judge there: as thou art in the way; going along with the creditor, or proſecutor, to the court of judicature; give diligence that thou mayſt be delivered from him. The Perſic verſion renders it, give him the money; and the Arabic verſion, give what thou oweſt; and the Syriac verſion, give the gain; or pay the intereſt, about which the diſpute is, and ſo eſcape out of his hands; leſt when the matter is brought into court, ſentence ſhould be given, to pay both intereſt and principal, with all coſts and charges; or however, make up matters with him, ſatisfy him in ſome way or other, before things are brought to an extremity: leſt he hale thee to the judge; the ſame that is called the magiſtrate, or prince before, that ſits chief upon the bench, hears and tries cauſes, and paſſes ſentence: and the judge deliver thee to the officer; who upon hearing the matter in difference, and giving the cauſe againſt the defendant, and for the proſecutor, delivers the debtor into the hands of a proper officer, in order to commit him to priſon: the word rendered officer, ſignifies an exactor of debts, or fines, and was one that obliged ſuch as were caſt, to do what the judge appointed to be done: in the Septuagint on Iſa. iii. 12. it anſwers to an oppreſſor; and ſuch men were wont to uſe rigour, to bring perſons to the payment of their debts, or fines: and the officer caſt thee into priſon; which he had power to do, when committed into his hands by the judge, in caſe the ſentence pronounced was not immediately complied with; ſee the note on Matt. v. 25.

Ver. 59. I tell thee, &c.] The Syriac verſion before theſe words, prefixes an Amen, or verily, for the ſake of the ſtronger affirmation, which ſeems to be taken from Matt. v. 26. thou ſhalt not depart thence; get out of priſon: till thou haſt paid the very laſt mite; of the ſum in debate, which was what the Jews call a prutah, and that was the eighth part of an Italian farthing, and half a common farthing; ſee Mark xii. 42. and the note there: with this agrees what Maimonides ſays [y], that "when he that lends, requires what he has lent, though he is rich, and the borrower is diſtreſſed, and ſtraitened for food, there's no mercy ſhewed him in judgment, but his debt is demanded of him, עד פרוטה אחרונה, unto the laſt prutah, or mite."

CHAP. XIII.

Ver. 1. T*HERE were preſent at that ſeaſon,* &c.] Among the innumerable multitude of people, ch. xii. 1. that were then hearing the above diſcourſes and ſayings of Chriſt; ſome that told him of the Galileans, whoſe blood Pilate had mingled with their ſacrifices. Theſe Galileans, were very likely ſome of the followers of Judas Gaulonitis, or Judas of Galilee; ſee Acts v. 37. who endeavoured to draw off the Jews from the Roman government, and affirmed it was not lawful to give tribute to Cæſar; at which Pilate being enraged, ſent a band of ſoldiers, and ſlew theſe his followers; who were come up to the feaſt of the paſſover, as they were offering their ſacrifices in the temple, and ſo mixed their blood with the blood of the paſſover lambs: this being lately done, ſome of the company ſpoke of it to Chriſt; very likely ſome of the Scribes and Phariſees, whom he had juſt now taxed as hypocrites; either to know his ſenſe of Pilate's conduct, that ſhould he condemn it as brutiſh and barbarous, they might accuſe him to him; or ſhould he approve of it, might traduce him, and bring him into contempt among the people; or to know his ſentiments concerning the perſons ſlain, whether or no they were not very wicked perſons; and whether this was not a judgment upon them, to be put to death in ſuch a manner, and at ſuch a time and place; and which ſenſe ſeems to be confirmed by Chriſt's anſwer. Joſephus [z] relating a ſlaughter of the Samaritans by Pilate, which bears ſome likeneſs to this, has led ſome, though without any juſt reaſon, to conclude, that theſe were Samaritans, who are here called Galileans. This hiſtory is neither related nor hinted at, by any other writer but Luke. The phraſe of mingling blood with blood, is Jewiſh; it is ſaid of one Trogianus the wicked (perhaps the Emperor Trajan) that he ſlaughtered the Jews, ועורב דמן בדמן, and mingled their blood with their blood; and their blood ran into the ſea, unto Cyprus [a]. The Jews [b] have a notion, that "in the age in which the ſon of David comes, "Galilee ſhall be deſtroyed." Here was a great ſlaughter of the Galileans now; ſee Acts v. 37. but there was a greater afterwards by the Romans: it may be that the Phariſees made mention of this caſe to Chriſt, to reproach him and his followers, who were called Galileans, as his diſciples chiefly were.

[y] Hilchot Milvah, c. 1. §. 4.

Ver. 2. And Jeſus anſwering, ſaid unto them, &c.] Neither approving, nor condemning Pilate's action; and though he allowed the Galileans to be ſinners, which could not be denied, he does not bear hard upon them, but improves the inſtance for the conviction of his hearers, and in order to ſhow them the neceſſity of repentance, and to bring them to it: ſuppoſe ye that theſe Galileans were ſinners above all the Galileans, becauſe they ſuffered ſuch things? ſuch a ſuppoſition they ſeem to have made, by their ſpeaking to Chriſt concerning this matter; and concluded from their violent and untimely deaths, that they had been notorious and uncommon ſinners, and guilty of the moſt enormous crimes, which had brought upon them the juſt judgments of God: whereas this is not a rule of judging; oftentimes the beſt of men, ſuffer exceedingly in this life; God's judgments are a great deep, and not to be fathomed by us, nor is it to be eaſily known, when any thing befalls perſons in a way of judgment; there's nothing comes by chance, but every thing by the wiſe diſpoſal of divine providence, to anſwer ſome end or another; nor are perſons that are puniſhed, either immediately by the hand of God, or by the civil magiſtrate, to be inſulted, but rather to be pitied; beſides, love and hatred, the characters and ſtates of men, are not to be known by theſe effects in providence.

Ver. 3. I tell you, nay, &c.] They were not greater ſinners than others of their neighbours, nor is it to be concluded from the bloody ſlaughter that was made of them; others might be much more deſerving of ſuch an end than they, who yet eſcaped it: but except ye repent; of ſin, and particularly of the diſbelief of the Meſſiah: ye ſhall likewiſe periſh; or periſh in like manner, as theſe Galileans did: and ſo it came to paſs in the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, that great numbers of the unbelieving Jews, even three hundred thouſand men were deſtroyed at the feaſt of paſſover [c]; and that for ſedition, as theſe men very likely were.

Ver. 4. Or thoſe eighteen, &c.] Men; the Perſic verſion reads, thoſe twelve; but all copies, and other verſions, agree in the number: upon whom the tower in Siloam fell, and ſlew them; there was a pool near Jeruſalem, called the pool of Siloam, John ix. 7. near, or over which, was a tower built, which fell down and killed eighteen men; very likely as they were purifying themſelves in the pool, and ſo was a caſe very much like the other, and might be a very late one; and this Chriſt the rather obſerves, and puts them in mind of, that they might ſee that not Galileans only, whom they had in great contempt, but even inhabitants of Jeruſalem, died violent deaths, and came to untimely ends; and yet, as not in the former caſe, ſo neither in this was it to be concluded from hence, that they were ſinners of a greater ſize, or their ſtate worſe than that of other men: think ye that they were ſinners; or debtors; for as ſins are called debts, Matt. vi. 12. ſo ſinners are called debtors: above all men that dwelt in Jeruſalem? there might be, and doubtleſs there were, as great, or greater ſinners, in that holy city, and among ſuch that made great pretenſions to religion and holineſs, as they were.

Ver. 5. I tell you, nay, &c.] I affirm it, and you may depend upon it, they were not greater ſinners than others; though ſuch a melancholy accident befel them, not without the providence of God: but except ye repent, ye ſhall all likewiſe periſh; or periſh in the ſame manner; that is, ſhall be buried under the ruins of the city and temple of Jeruſalem, when one ſtone ſhould not be left upon another; juſt as theſe eighteen men were buried under the ruins of the tower of Siloam, of which it was a pledge and emblem; and accordingly great numbers of them did periſh in the temple, and were buried under the ruins of it [d].

Ver. 6. He ſpake alſo this parable, &c.] That is, Jeſus ſpake, as the Perſic verſion expreſſes it, that which follows; and at the ſame time, and upon the above occaſion; ſetting forth the patience of God towards the Jewiſh nation, their unfruitfulneſs, and the danger of their being deſtroyed, in caſe of non-amendment: a certain man had a fig-tree planted in his vineyard. This was not at all contrary to the law in Deut. xxii. 9. thou ſhalt not ſow thy vineyard with divers ſeeds; for according to the Jewiſh canons [e], "the prohibition on account of divers "ſeeds in a vineyard, concerned divers ſorts of "corn, (as wheat, barley, &c.) and divers ſorts of "herbs only: but it was lawful to ſow other ſorts "of ſeeds in a vineyard, and there is no need to "ſay other trees." And there are caſes put, and inſtances given, which expreſs, or ſuppoſe fig-trees, particularly, to have been planted in vineyards: for it is ſaid [f], "if a man carries a vine over part of "a tree for meat, he may ſow ſeed under the other "part of it——it happened that R. Joſhuah went "to R. Iſhmael to Cephar Aziz, and he ſhewed him "a vine, carried over, מקצת תאנה, part of a fig-"tree." Again, more than once it is ſaid in a parabolical way [g], "this is like unto a king "that has a paradiſe, or orchard planted, "שורה של תאנים ושל גפנים, a row of fig-trees "and of vines, and of pomegranates, and of ap-"ples, &c." By the certain man may be meant, either God the Father, who is ſometimes called an huſbandman; or rather the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is truly man, as well as properly God; and by his vineyard may be meant, the Jewiſh nation; ſee Iſa. v. 1, 2, 7. which were his own nation and people, from whence he ſprung, and to whom he was particularly ſent, and among whom he had a ſpecial property; and may alſo be applied to the church of God in any age or nation, which is often compared to a vineyard, conſiſting of perſons ſeparated from the world, and planted with various plants, ſome fruitful, pleaſant, profitable, and valuable, and are Chriſt's by his father's gift, and his own purchaſe. And by the fig-tree planted in it, may be principally meant the Scribes and Phariſees, and the generality of the Jewiſh people; who were plants, but not of Chriſt's father's planting, and therefore to be cut down, or rooted up: and may be accommodated to profeſſors of religion; ſome of which are true and real, and may be compared to the fig-tree, becauſe of its large and green leaves, expreſſive of their profeſſion; and become fruitful, as they are, being filled with the fruits of the ſpirit, of righteouſneſs, and of grace; and becauſe it puts forth its fruit before its leaves, as there ſhould be the fruit of grace before a profeſſion of faith is made. Others are only nominal profeſſors; and are like a fig-tree, of which ſort was this in the parable, that has large leaves, but no fruit; make a large profeſſion, but bring forth no fruit to the glory of God; and tho' they are planted in the houſe of God, yet not by God the Father, nor by Chriſt, only at beſt by miniſters and churches hoping well of them, but miſtaken in them: and he came and ſought fruit thereon, and found none. This, if underſtood of God the Father, deſigns his coming to the Jewiſh people by his ſervants and prophets, time after time, and at laſt by John the Baptiſt, and Jeſus Chriſt, and his apoſtles, ſeeking and requiring fruits of holineſs, righteouſneſs, and judgment, but found inſtead thereof the wild grapes of wickedneſs, oppreſſion, and violence: but if of Chriſt, which ſenſe is rather to be choſen, it denotes his incarnation, or his coming into the world in human nature, and ſeeking, by his miniſtry, the fruits of faith in himſelf, and repentance towards God among the people of the Jews, but found none; at leaſt inſtances of faith in Iſrael were very rare, and few repented of their evil works; and hence he upbraided many with their impenitence and unbelief; ſee Matt. xi. 20.

Ver. 7. Then ſaid he unto the dreſſer of the vineyard, &c.] If by the owner of the vineyard is meant God the Father, then by the dreſſer of the vineyard Jeſus Chriſt is intended; but as he ſeems rather deſigned by the owner, the vine-dreſſer, or the gardeners, as the Perſic verſion reads, in the plural number, may ſignify the miniſters of the word, to whom Chriſt, who is Solomon's antitype, lets out his vineyard to dreſs and cultivate it, and to keep the fruit of it; ſee Cant. viii. 11, 12. behold, theſe three years I come ſeeking fruit on this fig-tree, and find none; or behold, there are three years ſince I came; ſo read the Vulgate Latin and Perſic verſions, and Beza's moſt ancient copy. Some think Chriſt here refers to the three years of his public miniſtry, which he had now gone thro' among the Jews with little ſucceſs; but he ſeems rather to allude to the nature of fig-trees, which, if fruitful, bear in three years time; for even, בנות שוח, a ſort of white figs, which are the longeſt before they bring forth fruit to perfection, yet their fruit is ripe in three years time. Theſe trees bear fruit once in three years; they bear fruit indeed every year, but their fruit does not come to maturity till after three years [i]; and this may be the reaſon why this number is fixed upon; for if ſuch fig-trees do not bring forth ripe fruit in three years time, there's little reaſon to expect any from them: and thus it was time after time with the Jewiſh nation; and ſo it is with carnal profeſſors: hence it follows, cut it down, why cumbereth it the ground? or that it may not cumber; or render the ground uſeleſs, as read the Arabic verſion, and one of Beza's copies; for unfruitful trees ſuck up the juices of the earth, and draw away nouriſhment from other trees that are near them, and ſo make the earth barren, and not only hurt other trees, but ſtand in the way and place of fruitful ones; and therefore 'tis beſt to cut them down. So barren profeſſors, as were the Jews, are not only uſeleſs and unprofitable themſelves, being fruitleſs, but make churches barren, and ſtand in the way of others, who are ſtumbled by them; they are grieving to God, to Chriſt, and to the bleſſed Spirit, and are troubleſome and burdenſome to churches, miniſters, and true believers: and the cutting them down may regard the judgment of God upon the nation of the Jews, which Chriſt would not have his apoſtles and miniſters interpoſe for the averting of; or the excommunication of ſuch worthleſs and hurtful profeſſors out of the churches by them.

Ver. 8. And he anſwering ſaid unto him, Lord, &c.] Which, if underſtood of God the Father, may intend the interceſſion of Chriſt with him, who not only intercedes for his elect, for thoſe that are unconverted, that they may be converted; and for converted ones, for the carrying on of the work of ſanctification; for freſh diſcoveries of pardoning grace; for conſolation and ſupport under trouble; for their final perſeverance, and eternal glorification: but alſo for his enemies, for prophane ſinners, and for formal profeſſors; for the ſake of his own people among them, and for their preſervation, and for the averting of divine judgments from them, at leaſt as yet: and ſo the Jewiſh nation was ſpared for ſome time after this, though now deſerving of immediate deſtruction. But rather, the interceſſion of the miniſters of Chriſt, and other good men, may be here meant; who, as Abraham interceded for Sodom, and Moſes and Aaron for Iſrael, ſo do they for a ſinful nation, a barren and unfruitful church and people, and particular perſons, that they may be ſpared, at leaſt a little longer, as here: let it alone this year alſo; have patience one year more, or a little while longer. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, until the winter, that being a time for digging about, and dunging of trees, as follows: till I ſhall dig about it, and dung it; theſe ſame phraſes are uſed in the Miſna [k], “מזבלין ומעדרין, “ they dung and dig in gardens of cucumbers, and “ gourds, until the beginning of the year:” upon which their commentators ſay [l], that they carry dung into their gardens to moiſten the earth, and dig about the roots of the trees, and lay them bare, and cover them again, and prune them, and ſmoke them to kill the worms. And by theſe phraſes may be ſignified the various means Chriſt made uſe of by his own miniſtry, and by the miniſtry of his Apoſtles, to make the Jews a fruitful people; and rather the means Chriſt's miniſters make uſe of, as did the Apoſtles with the Jews, to reach the caſes of barren profeſſors; as by digging, ſtriking at, and expoſing ſome ſecret ſin or ſins, which are the root and ſource of their barrenneſs; ſhewing them, that they have no root in Chriſt, nor the root of the matter in them; and declaring to them the inſufficiency of a mere profeſſion of religion to ſave them: and dunging, which as it ſuppoſes want of heat, or coldneſs, which is the cauſe of barrenneſs, and ſignifies, that ſuch profeſſors are without ſpiritual life, and without ſpiritual heat, or real warmth of love to Chriſt, his truths, ordinances, and people, and diſcharge their duty in a cold and lifeleſs manner; ſo it may deſign the means they make uſe of to warm and fire them with zeal for God, and true religion; by preaching the ſoul-quickening doctrines of the Goſpel, and by laying before them the agreeableneſs of a becoming zeal, and the diſagreeableneſs of a lukewarm ſpirit and diſpoſition, an indolence and unconcern for the glory of God, and intereſt of Chriſt.

Ver. 9. And if it bear fruit, well, &c.] If hereby barren profeſſors, as the Jews, become fruitful, 'tis well, a good thing is done; 'tis well for themſelves, they ſhall eat the fruit of their doings; 'tis well for the churches, where they are, for good works are profitable to men; and it is well for the owner of the vineyard, and the dreſſer of it too, for when Chriſt has his fruit from his churches, his miniſters have theirs alſo: and if not, then after that; for the time to come, as the Vulgate Latin; or year following, as the Perſic verſion renders it: thou ſhall cut it down; do with it as thou pleaſeſt, nothing more will be ſaid or pleaded in its behalf; full conſent ſhall be given, and no more interceſſion uſed: any trees might not be cut down, only barren ones; there's a law in Deut. xx. 19, 20. about cutting down trees, and which the Jews explain thus[m]; “ they may not cut down trees for meat “ without the city, nor with-hold from them the “ courſe of water, that ſo they may become dry; “ as it is ſaid, thou ſhalt not deſtroy the trees; and “ whoever cuts any down is to be beaten, and not “ in a ſiege only, but in any place: whoever cuts “ down a tree for meat, by way of deſtroying it, “ is to be beaten; but they may cut it down if it “ hurts others trees, or becauſe it hurts in the field “ others, or becauſe its price is dear; the law does “ not forbid, but by way of deſtroying. Every “ barren tree it is lawful to cut down, even tho' a “ man hath no need of it; and ſo a tree for meat, “ which does hurt, and does not produce but little “ fruit, and it is not worth while to labour about “ it, it is lawful to cut it down: and how much “ may an olive-tree produce, and it may not be “ cut down? the fourth part of a Kab of olives; “ and a palm-tree which yields a Kab of dates may “ not be cut down.” Much ſuch a parable as this is formed by the Jews upon Moſes's interceſſion for the people of Iſrael[n]. “ Says R. Abin, in the “ name of R. Simeon ben Joſedech, a parable, to “ what is it like? to a king that hath an uncul- “ tivated field; he ſays to his gardener, go and “ manure it, and make it a vineyard: the gardener “ went and manured that field, and planted it a “ vineyard; the vineyard grew, and produced “ wine, and it turned to vinegar; when the king “ ſaw that the wine turned to vinegar, he ſaid to “ the gardener, go, וקוץ אותה, and cut it down, “ why ſhould I ſeek after a vineyard that brings “ forth that which is ſour? the gardener replied, “ my lord, the king, what expence haſt thou been “ at with this vineyard before it was raiſed? and “ now thou ſeekeſt to cut it down; and ſhouldſt “ thou ſay becauſe its wine turns ſour; the reaſon is, “ becauſe it is young, therefore its wine turns ſour, “ and it does not produce good wine: ſo when Iſrael “ did that work (of the golden calf) the holy, “ bleſſed God ſought to conſume them; ſaid Moſes, “ Lord of the world, haſt thou not brought them “ out of Egypt from a place of idolatry, and now “ they are young, or children, as it is ſaid, Hoſ. “ xi. 1. wait a little for them, and go with them, “ and they will do good works in thy preſence.”

Ver. 10. And he was teaching in one of the ſynagogues, &c.] That is, Jeſus, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions expreſs it; which was his work, he being a teacher ſent from God, and who took all opportunities of inſtructing men in the truths of the Goſpel; this was done either in Galilee, or in Judea, in one of the ſynagogues of ſome city there, for in their larger cities there were more ſynagogues than one. In Jeruſalem, we are told[o], there were three hundred and ninety-four ſynagogues; and other writers[p] increaſe their number, and ſay, there were four hundred and eighty: and it was on the ſabbath; which was now in force, and was religiouſly obſerved by Chriſt.

Ver. 11. And behold there was a woman, &c.] In the ſynagogue, who, as infirm as ſhe is hereafter deſcribed, got out to the place of worſhip; and which may be a rebuke to ſuch, who, upon every trifling indiſpoſition, keep at home, and excuſe themſelves from an attendance in the houſe of God: which had a ſpirit of infirmity eighteen years; or a weakneſs that was brought upon her by an evil ſpirit, by ſatan, as appears from ver. 16. who, by divine permiſſion, had a power of inflicting diſeaſes on mankind, as is evident from the caſe of Job; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, whom a dæmon had made infirm: and this diſorder had been of a long ſtanding; ſhe had laboured under it for the ſpace of eighteen years, ſo that it was a known caſe, and had been given up as incurable, which made the following miracle the more illuſtrious and remarkable. And was bowed together, and could in no wiſe lift up herſelf; or lift up her head, look up, or ſtand upright; it was a thing utterly impoſſible, which ſhe could by no means do; her body was convulſed, and every part ſo contracted, that, as the Perſic verſion renders it, ſhe could not ſtretch out a hand or foot.

Ver. 12. And when Jeſus ſaw her, &c.] In the ſynagogue among the people, either whilſt, or after he had done teaching: he called her to him, to come nearer him, and ſaid unto her; of his own accord, without being aſked by the woman, or any other for her, out of great compaſſion to her, ſeeing her in this miſerable condition, and knowing full well the nature, cauſe, and long continuance of her diſorder: woman, thou art looſed from thine infirmity; which had not only bowed her, but it had bound her, as if ſhe had been bound with cords; but Chriſt by ſaying theſe words, with his hands laid upon her, burſt her bonds aſunder, diſpoſſeſſed the evil ſpirit, and delivered her from her long affliction.

Ver. 13. And he laid his hands on her, &c.] As he ſpoke the above words, which he ſometimes did when he healed diſeaſes. And immediately ſhe was made ſtraight; ſhe lift up herſelf, ſtood upright, and her body, and all the parts of it were as ſtraight as ever they had been, or as any were in the ſynagogue. And glorified God; that is, the woman glorified God, as the Perſic verſion expreſſes it; ſhe was filled with thankfulneſs for the mercy, and gave God the glory of it. This woman was an emblem of a poor ſinner held in the bonds of iniquity by ſatan, and led captive by him at his will, who can by no means raiſe himſelf; nor is he able to lift up his head to heaven, or look upwards to Chriſt for deliverance; and yet attends upon the outward miniſtry, when Chriſt, in his own time, meets with him under it, and manifeſts his power and grace, breaks his bonds aſunder, delivers him out of ſatan's hands, and from the bondage of his own corruptions, ſets him ſtraight, and cauſes him to lift up his head, and look to him for life and ſalvation; and ſo puts a new ſong into his mouth, even praiſe to God, to whoſe free grace and favour he readily aſcribes his deliverance.

[p] Peſikta in Jarchi in Iſ. i. 21. Shirhaſhirim Rabba, fol. 20. 3. Ecka Rabbati, fol. 37. 4.

Ver. 14. And the ruler of the ſynagogue, &c.] For there never was but one in a ſynagogue, whatever ſome writers have obſerved to the contrary; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 18. the Ethiopic verſion reads, the chief-prieſts, but wrongly; theſe dwelt at Jeruſalem, and not in Galilee: anſwered with indignation, becauſe that Jeſus had healed on the ſabbath-day; his indignation was at Chriſt, and the miracle he had wrought, being filled with envy at the honour it would bring unto him; tho' he covered it under pretence of its being a violation of the ſabbath, and that it ought not to have been done on ſuch a day, and in ſuch a place, which were appropriated not to ſervile works, but to religious worſhip; and ſaid unto the people; over whom he had an authority, and who ſtood in awe of him, becauſe of his office and dignity; and not daring to attack Chriſt himſelf, at leaſt not directly, tho' he ſtruck at him thro' the people, whoſe doctrine and miracles were ſo extraordinary. There are ſix days in which men ought to work, in them therefore come and be healed, and not on the ſabbath-day; referring to the fourth command: but this obſervation and reproof were impertinent and needleſs, for the people did not come to be healed; for ought appears, the cure was unthought of and unexpected; nor was healing, eſpecially as performed by Chriſt, by a word and a touch, a ſervile work, and therefore could not be any breach of the law referred to. The Ethiopic verſion reads, is there not a ſixth day?——come on that day; the day before the ſabbath.

Ver. 15. The Lord then anſwered him and ſaid, &c.] Tho' he did not direct his ſpeech to him, he knew that he ſtruck at him, and ſuggeſted that he was a violater of the ſabbath, as well as the people: and therefore in defence of himſelf, and of what he had done, and to expoſe the hypocriſy of this man, made anſwer as follows, thou hypocrite; the Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read in the plural, hypocrites; as do the Complutenſian edition, and four ancient copies of Beza's, and the Alexandrian copy; but the Syriac and Perſic verſions read in the ſingular, hypocrite; as this man was, who covered his malice and envy at Chriſt, with a ſhew of zeal for the ſabbath-day; and yet did that upon it, which muſt be allowed by themſelves, and others, to be a much greater violation of the ſabbath, than this cure could ever be thought to be: doth not each one of you, on the ſabbath-day, looſe his ox, or his aſs, from the ſtall; or rack, where he is faſtened with a rope; and lead him away to watering? to ſome place of water, where he may drink, after having filled himſelf at the rack: and that this was agreeable to their own canons and practice, that beaſts might be led out on a ſabbath-day, is certain; for they deliver various rules concerning leading them out, with what they might, and with what they might not be brought out; and particularly, among others, mention aſſes and heifers [q]; and they ſpeak [r] of leading them to water, not only to drink of it, but to waſh their chains in it, which, it ſeems, received pollution, and needed waſhing, and might be done on a ſabbath-day; yea, they allow, that not only a beaſt may be led out to watering, but a man might fill a veſſel of water, and pour it out into a trough for it, provided he did not directly ſet it before it: the rule is this [s], "a man may not fill water (a veſſel of it) and put it on a ſabbath-day before his beaſt, but he may fill it, and pour it out, and it may drink of it." And particularly on a feaſt-day, their rule is [t], that "they don't water nor ſlay beaſts of the deſert, but they water and ſlay domeſtic ones. Domeſtic ones are ſuch as lie in the city (i. e. as Maimonides ſays [u], within the ſabbatical border, 2000 cubits from the city) and thoſe of the deſert are ſuch as lie in paſtures." And therefore very juſtly does our Lord obſerve to the ruler of the ſynagogue their own practices towards a beaſt, in defence of his works of mercy to men.

Ver. 16. And ought not this woman, being a daughter of Abraham, &c.] Not only a woman, a rational creature, and much preferable, as ſuch, to an irrational one; but a deſcendant of Abraham, of whom the Jews gloried, and in deſcent from him prided themſelves, and truſted; and choſe to call their women by this name [w], which gave them a character above others: and who, beſides all this, was doubtleſs a good woman, a ſpiritual worſhipper of the God of Iſrael; who, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, was a daughter of Abraham, that walked in the ſteps of his faith, and was now a believer in Chriſt, and appeared to be a choſen veſſel of ſalvation: whom ſatan hath bound, lo theſe eighteen years; with a bodily diſtemper that none could looſe her from in ſo long a time. The Perſic verſion, very wrongly, reads, twelve years; tho' in ver. 11. it obſerves the right number. Should not ſuch an one be looſed from this bond on the ſabbath-day? the force of Chriſt's reaſoning is this, that if it was lawful, on a ſabbath-day, to lead out a beaſt to watering, to quench its thirſt, that ſo it may not ſuffer ſo much as one day for want of water, how much more reaſonable muſt it be, that a rational creature, one of Abraham's poſterity, and a religious perſon, who had been for eighteen years under a ſore affliction, thro' the power of ſatan over her, by divine permiſſion, ſhould be freed from ſo long and ſore an affliction on the ſabbath-day? if mercy is to be ſhown to beaſts, much more to men and women.

Ver. 17. And when he had ſaid theſe things, &c.] Had argued with them from their own practices, and in a way ſo ſtrong and rational, that carried ſuch evidence and conviction with it: all his adverſaries were aſhamed; not only the ruler of the ſynagogue, but the Scribes and Phariſees, that were preſent, who followed him where-ever he went, and were his implacable enemies; theſe were confounded and ſilenced; ſhame appeared in their countenances; they could not lift up their heads, and look him in the face. And all the people rejoiced for all the glorious things that were done by him; for the doctrines he taught, and the miracles he wrought, and his wiſe and cloſe reaſonings at this time, to the ſhame and confuſion of all that oppoſed him: for his audience conſiſted of different ſorts, and what he ſaid, and did, had different effects upon them. Some were filled with joy, and others with wrath, malice, and envy. And this is true with reſpect to ſpiritual and eternal things. Glorious things have been done by Chriſt in eternity, by becoming the ſurety of his people, by entering into a covenant with his Father on their account, and by taking the care and charge of their perſons, and of all grace, bleſſings, and promiſes for them; and in time, by aſſuming their nature, fulfilling the law, bringing in an everlaſting righteouſneſs, making peace and reconciliation, procuring pardon, and finiſhing the work of redemption and ſalvation; and now in heaven, by entering as the fore-runner for them, appearing in the preſence of God on their account, preſenting their prayers, and making interceſſion for them: and theſe are glorious things; they make for the glory of all the divine perfections; they iſſue in the glory of Chriſt himſelf; and in conſequence of them, the ſaints enjoy eternal glory and happineſs: theſe are things of the greateſt importance, are wonderful and amazing, and for which ſaints and angels will glorify God both here and hereafter; and theſe occaſion joy, and gladneſs in the Lord's people now. For not carnal and prophane perſons, or hypocrites, and formal profeſſors, or Phariſees, and ſelf-righteous perſons rejoice at theſe things; but ſuch as are the Lord's own people, who are openly his; who have paſſed under a work of the Spirit of God, who have ſeen their need of theſe things, and are ſenſible of the value of them; who know Chriſt, and love him, and believe in him.

Ver. 18. Then ſaid he, unto what is the kingdom of God like? &c.] The ſame with the kingdom of heaven, in Matt. xiii. 31. and ſo the Ethiopic verſion reads it here, and whereunto ſhall I reſemble it? of this way of ſpeaking, ſee the note on Mark iv. 30.

Ver. 19. It is like a grain of muſtard-ſeed, &c.] Both for its ſmallneſs at firſt, and its after increaſe; wherefore both the Evangeliſts Matthew and Mark obſerve, that it is the leaſt of all ſeed; which is true of the miniſtry of the Goſpel, of the Goſpel church-ſtate, and of the grace of God in the hearts of his people: which a man took and caſt into his garden; the Ethiopic verſion renders it, and ſowed in his field, as in Matt. xiii. 31. tho' muſtard uſed to be ſowed in gardens as well as in fields. [x] Says R. Simeon ben Chelphetha, I have one ſtalk of muſtard-ſeed, בתוך שלי, in my garden; ſo [y] Buxtorf tranſlates it. And by the place in the text, where this ſeed is caſt, may be meant, either the field of the world, where the Goſpel is preached, and churches are raiſed; or the garden of the church, where the word and ordinances are adminiſtred, and in the hearts of the members of it, the grace of God is implanted and increaſed; ſee Cant. iv. 12, 13. and it grew and waxed a great tree; which may deſign the ſpread of the Goſpel in the world, the flouriſhing ſtate of the church of Chriſt, and the growth of grace in the hearts of believers. And the fowls of the air lodged in the branches of it; the Syriac verſion reads in the ſingular number, the fowl of the air; not ſatan, and his principalities and powers, which devour the ſeed ſown by the way-ſide; nor the angels of heaven; but rather gracious men on earth, who ſit under the ſhadow of a Goſpel miniſtry with great delight; and make their neſts, as the Perſic verſion here renders the words, and take up their reſidence in Goſpel churches; ſee the notes on Matt. xiii. 31, 32. and on Mark iv. 31, 32.

Ver. 20. And again he ſaid, &c.] That is, Jeſus, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions expreſs it; beſides the parable of the grain of muſtard-ſeed, that alſo of the leaven hid in three meaſures of meal: whereunto ſhall I liken the kingdom of God; either the Goſpel of the kingdom, and the myſteries of it; or the church, which is Chriſt's kingdom; or the grace of God in the heart, which makes meet for the kingdom of glory; the firſt ſeems rather to be intended; ſee the note on Matt. xiii. 33.

Ver. 21. It is like leaven, &c.] Which is ſmall in quantity, but is of a ſwelling, ſpreading quality; and fitly expreſſes the ſmall beginnings of the Goſpel miniſtry, and its increaſe, alſo the ſtate and caſe of Goſpel churches, and the nature of the grace of God; unleſs falſe doctrine ſhould rather be meant, which privately, ſecretly, and by little and little, got into the churches of Chriſt, the kingdom of God, and ſpread itſelf all over them, as in the times of the papacy: which a woman took; Chriſt, and his miniſters, wiſdom, and her maidens, underſtanding it of the Goſpel; but if the leaven of error is intended, that woman, Jezabel, is meant, who calls herſelf a propheteſs, and teaches, and ſeduces the ſervants of God, Rev. ii. 20. and hid in three meaſures of meal; among a few of God's people at firſt, both among Jews and Gentiles, till the whole was leavened; until all the elect of God are gathered in, and evangelized by it; even the the whole fulneſs of the Gentiles, and all the people of the Jews, which ſhall be ſaved in the latter day: but if the parable is to be underſtood of the falſe doctrine and diſcipline of the anti-chriſtian and apoſtate church of Rome, it may denote the ſmall beginnings of the myſtery of iniquity, which began to work in the Apoſtle's time by the errors and hereſies then propagated, and the manner in which the man of ſin was privately introduced; whoſe coming is after the working of ſatan, with ſigns and lying wonders, and with all deceiveableneſs of unrighteouſneſs, firſt among a few, and then more, until at length the whole world wondered after the beaſt, 2 Theſſ. ii. 7, 9, 10. Rev. xiii. 3.

Ver. 22. And he went thro' the cities and villages, &c.] Either of Galilee, or of Judea, or both; ſince he was upon his journey from Galilee, thro' Judea, to Jeruſalem, as it follows: teaching and journeying toward Jeruſalem; as he was journeying he taught in every place he came, where he could have an opportunity; his delight was to do good both to the bodies and ſouls of men; and he was conſtant and aſſiduous in it.

Ver. 23. Then ſaid one unto him, &c.] Not one of his diſciples, but one of the company, in ſome one of the cities or villages he paſſed through, or as he was in the road to Jeruſalem: are there few that be ſaved? It is a received opinion among the Jews [z], that all Iſrael ſhall have a part in the world to come; and this man might put the queſtion to know whether Chriſt was of this ſentimen or no. And by ſome things he had obſerved drop from him, and it may be the foregoing parables which expreſs the ſmall beginnings of his kingdom, and ſeem to ſignify, that at firſt his Goſpe ſhould be received but by a few, tho' it ſhould afterwards ſpread, he might collect, that his ſenſ was, there would be but a few ſaved; or thi might be a queſtion of mere curioſity and ſpeculation, as it ſeems to be, by Chriſt's treatment of it who does not give a direct anſwer to it, but pu him and others upon ſhewing a concern for the own ſalvation. And he ſaid unto them; not to th man only that put the queſtiion, but to the whol company; tho' the Perſic and Ethiopic verſions rea he ſaid unto him, as follows.

Ver. 24. Strive to enter in at the ſtraight gate, &c.] What is meant by the ſtraight gate, and by entering in at it, ſee the note on Matt. vii. 13. To ſtrive, is to be diligent in the uſe of means; to ſearch the ſcriptures with care; to attend on the preaching of the word with conſtancy, neglecting no opportunity; to pray earneſtly for ſpiritual light, knowledge, and grace; to contend with every enemy that oppoſe the ſalvation of the ſoul, as ſin, ſatan, and the world; to bear all reproaches and perſecutions, and preſs through all difficulties, for the prize of the incorruptible crown: the metaphor ſeems to be taken from the ſtriving, wreſtling, and combat in the Olympic games, for a corruptible crown: for many I ſay unto you, will ſeek to enter in, and ſhall not be able; either when it is too late, when the door is ſhut; or elſe before, very faintly, in a ſuperficial manner, from a mere natural affection, from a principle of ſelf-love, which leads every one to deſire happineſs; and by very indirect and improper methods, by their own civility, morality, and righteouſneſs; by works of the law, moral, or ceremonial; or by a profeſſion of religion, and an outward compliance with the ordinances of the Goſpel, and not by Chriſt, and faith in him.

Ver. 25. When once the maſter of the houſe is riſen up, &c.] From table, or off of his couch, the entertainment being over: and ſo here, the Goſpel feaſt, or diſpenſation, being at an end, and all the gueſts come in, who were effectually called, and long patience and forbearance being uſed towards others; or has entered in, as the Vulgate Latin verſion reads, and ſo Beza's ancient copy, and one of Stephens's; is came from the wedding; ſee ch. xii. 36. Chriſt having eſpouſed all his elect to himſelf, by the miniſtry of the word: for by the maſter of the houſe is meant, the bridegroom of the church, the head of the body, the king of ſaints, who is ſon over his own houſe, and high-prieſt there; of whom the whole family in heaven and earth, is named: and hath ſhut to the door; the door of mercy and of hope; the door of faith; the preaching of the word, and the adminiſtration of ordinances, when theſe ſhall be no more: and ye begin to ſtand without; or do ſtand without; without the holy city, where dogs are; having no admittance to the nuptial chamber, to the marriage-ſupper of the lamb, and the joys of heaven: and to knock at the door; which ſhows how near ſome perſons may come to heaven, and yet not enter there, even to the very door; and what an expectation, yea, an aſſurance they may have, of admiſſion into it, not at all doubting of it; and therefore knock as if they were ſome of the family, and had a right to enter; but not finding the door opened to them, ſo ſoon as they imagined, they begin to call as well as knock: ſaying, Lord, Lord, open unto us; they acknowledge Chriſt to be Lord, as all will at the laſt day, to the glory of God the Father, even profeſſors and profane; they repeat the word, to ſhew the vehemency and earneſtneſs of their intreaty; and according to the Syriac and Perſic verſions, they claim an intereſt in Chriſt, which read, our Lord, our Lord; and on account of which they doubted not, but the door would be opened: but alas! he was only their Lord in a profeſſional way; they had only called him Lord, Lord, but had never truly and heartily yielded obedience to him; their hearts had never been opened to him, and he had never had a place there, nor his Goſpel; wherefore though they knock, he'll not open; and he ſhall anſwer and ſay unto you. The Perſic verſion adds, nay, but be ye gone hence, for the following reaſon, I know you not, whence you are: not but that Chriſt being the omniſcient God, will know who they are, from whence they come, of what country and place they be, and to whom they belong; but the ſenſe is, that he wont own them, and expreſs any approbation of them, as his; but will treat them as ſtrangers, that come, it is not known, from whence; he'll reject them, as not being born from above, as not being the ſheep of his fold, or members of his true church: they did not come from heaven, they were not heaven-born ſouls, or partakers of the heavenly calling, and therefore ſhall not be received there; they belonged to the men of the world, and were of their father the devil, and ſhall be ſent to him: ſo the fooliſh virgins, or formal profeſſors of religion, and ſuch as have been preachers of the Goſpel, will intreat Chriſt at the laſt day, and ſhall have ſuch an anſwer as this returned to them, which will be very awful and ſtartling; ſee the notes on Matt. vii. 23. and xxv. 12.

Ver. 26. Then ſhall ye begin to ſay, &c.] Or ye ſhall ſay; in favour of themſelves, and in order to be admitted within, the following pleas will be made by them: we have eaten and drank in thy preſence; which may be underſtood both literally of many, who were miraculouſly fed by Chriſt, or at whoſe tables he had eat and drank, and they with him; as did not only publicans and ſinners, but ſome of the Phariſees, who invited him to their houſes; and in a religious ſenſe, of many who eat of the legal ſacrifices; and of others, who eat the bread, and drink the wine at the Lord's table; all which will be inſufficient, to introduce men into the kingdom and glory of Chriſt: natural relation to Chriſt, which the Jews may claim, being born of them, and perſonal acquaintance with him, and a bare profeſſion of him, will be of no avail another day: and thou haſt taught in our ſtreets; in the ſtreets of many cities in Galilee and Judea: it was cuſtomary with the Jewiſh doctors to teach in the ſtreets: "ſays Rabba, behold I am as Ben Azzai, "in the ſtreets of Tiberias [a];" the Gloſs upon it is, "who was דורש בשוקי, expounding in the ſtreets "of Tiberias." And it is ſaid [b] of Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai, "that he was ſitting in the "ſhade of the temple, and expounding all the "whole day;" the Gloſs on the place is, "the "temple being an hundred cubits high, its ſhade "went very far in the ſtreet, which is before the "mountain of the houſe; and becauſe the ſtreet was "large, and held abundance of men, he was ex-"pounding there by reaſon of the heat, for no "ſchool could hold them:" and it is alſo ſaid of R. Chija [c], that "he went out and taught his bro-"ther's two ſons, בשוק, in the ſtreet." So that what our Lord did, was no other than what was uſual with their doctors; nor is this contrary to what is ſaid in Matt. xii. 19. ſee the note there: this is alſo a fruitleſs plea, and which will be of no ſervice; it will ſignify nothing, to have heard Chriſt preached, or Chriſt himſelf preach, unleſs there is faith in him, which works by love; for not hearers of the word only, but doers of it are regarded.

Ver. 27. But he ſhall ſay, &c.] The Perſic verſion adds, be gone from my ſight, and be far from my door; expreſſing indignation at them, an abhorrence of them, as not being able to bear them in his ſight, or near unto him: I tell you, I know you not whence you are; this is repeated, and with a ſtrong aſſeveration, to denote the certainty of the truth expreſſed, and to caſt off all hope in them, of ever ſucceeding by their intreaties and importunity: depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity; or of a lie, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions render it: for they were deceitful workers, they profeſſed what they did not from the heart believe; they ſaid they were chriſtians, but were not, and now are found liars; they only attended on the word and ordinances in an hypocritical way, and truſted in, and depended upon, their outward profeſſion of religion, and ſubjection to ordinances; and by ſo doing, inſtead of working righteouſneſs, wrought iniquity; and ſo as they did not ſubmit to Chriſt and his righteouſneſs, they are bid to depart from him, as wicked and unrighteous men, as they were: the word all is here uſed, which is not in Matt. vii. 23. which agrees with Pſal. vi. 8. to which there ſeems to be a reference, though it is omitted here, in the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions; ſee the note on Matt. vii. 23.

Ver. 28. There ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth, &c.] See the note on Matt. viii. 12. This will be upon hearing the above ſentence and character, depart from me, &c. and will be increaſed, when ye ſhall ſee Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob: whoſe offspring they were, and to whom they ſtood related according to the fleſh; and of deſcent, from whom they boaſted, and even truſted in it, thinking themſelves the favourites of heaven, and expecting to be admitted into the kingdom of God on account of it: ſad will be the diſappointment of ſuch perſons; a being born of religious parents, will neither give right unto, nor meetneſs for eternal glory; regeneration is not of blood: and all the prophets in the kingdom of God; whoſe prophecies were tranſmitted to them, and whoſe books they had in their hands, and read; and who deſired to ſee and hear what they did, and which they now plead, and yet they did not enjoy, but were nevertheleſs happy: and you yourſelves thruſt out; with indignation and contempt, with ſhame and ignominy, as the Perſic verſion adds; not ſuffered to go in with them, though their ſons and ſucceſſors; but bid to depart, and ordered to be for ever ſeparated from them, as only fit company for devils and damned ſpirits.

Ver. 29. And they ſhall come, &c.] From all parts of the world, from every nation under the heavens; meaning the Gentiles, and which will be a greater aggravation of the puniſhment of the Jews, and cauſe ſtill more rage and madneſs: theſe ſhall come from the eaſt and from the weſt; from the riſing of the ſun, to the going down of the ſame, Iſa. xlv. 6. Mal. i. 11. and from the north, and from the ſouth; from the moſt diſtant parts of the world inhabited by men; ſee Iſa. xliii. 5, 6. God has his choſen ones, and Chriſt has a people in all parts of the world; and therefore his Goſpel muſt be preached to all nations, for the gathering of them in, which will be done in the latter day; and in the reſurrection morn, as theſe will be raiſed in the ſeveral places where they will have been buried, they will come from thence, and make one body, and will be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, and will be for ever with him: and ſhall ſit down in the kingdom of God; in Chriſt's kingdom, in the new heavens, and new earth, as perſons that ſit down at a table, to partake of a feaſt; ſee Luke xxii. 30. and in the ultimate glory, where they ſhall have reſt, peace, and joy, for evermore. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, they ſhall rejoice in the kingdom of God; they ſhall partake of the joys of heaven; everlaſting joy ſhall be upon their heads, and ſorrow and ſighing ſhall flee away; and the Perſic verſion, and they ſhall take a repoſe, and ſit and reſt; they ſhall reſt from all their labour, and be in perfect eaſe and peace; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 11.

Ver. 30. And behold, there are laſt which ſhall be firſt, &c.] The Gentiles, the moſt mean and abject, afar from God, aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael, called laſt of all; theſe ſhall be firſt, and ſit down among patriarchs and prophets, men of the firſt rank here on earth, in the kingdom of heaven, and enjoy the ſame glory and happineſs with them: and there are firſt which ſhall be laſt; the Jews, who were firſt the viſible profeſſing people of God, to whom the oracles of God, and outward privileges and ordinances were given; who had the Meſſiah firſt ſent to them, and the Goſpel firſt preached among them; theſe ſhall be laſt, be rejected and deſpiſed, and ſhut out of the kingdom of heaven, they thought themſelves heirs of, and expected to enjoy; ſee Matt. xix. 30. and xx. 16.

Ver. 31. The ſame day there came certain of the Phariſees, &c.] Who dwelt in Galilee, for they were in all parts of the country: theſe being nettled and filled with indignation at Chriſt, becauſe of the parables he had that day delivered, the miracles he had wrought, and the ſeveral awful and ſtriking things which dropped from him, and which they knew reſpected them; contrived to get rid of him, by frighting him with a deſign of Herod's, to take away his life, ſhould he continue there: for this ſeems to be rather a ſtratagem of theirs, than of Herod's; though it may be, that Herod might take this method, and make uſe of theſe men in this way, to terrify him; fearing to lay hold on him, and put him to death; partly becauſe of the people, and partly becauſe of the remaining uneaſineſs and terror of his mind, for taking off the head of John the Baptiſt: ſaying, get thee out and depart hence; in all haſte, as ſoon as poſſible: for Herod will kill thee; he is reſolved upon it, he has formed a deſign, and will quickly take methods to execute it. This was Herod the Tetrarch, of Galilee; from whence we learn, that Chriſt was as yet in Galilee, though he was journeying towards Jeruſalem, ver. 22. for Herod's juriſdiction reached no farther than Galilee: this was either a device of Herod's, or of the Phariſees, or of both, to get rid of Chriſt in the eaſieſt manner.

Ver. 32. And he ſaid unto them, go ye and tell that fox, &c.] Herod, who it may be ſent them, of which Chriſt was not ignorant, nor of his deſign in it; and who, as Nero, for his cruelty is compared to a lion, ſo he for his ſubtlety in this inſtance, as well as in the whole of his conduct, to a fox; though ſome think Chriſt has a regard to the Phariſees, and their craftineſs, in forming this ſtory, pretending good-will to him, by acquainting him of Herod's malicious deſigns, when their view was only to ſcare him out of their country; ſo the falſe prophets and teachers, are for their cunning, ſubtlety, and flattery, compared to foxes, Cant. ii. 15. Ezek. xiii. 4. as well as for their greedineſs and voraciouſneſs: the word is uſed with the Jews, for a vain and empty man, in oppoſition to a good man; as in that ſaying [d] of R. Jannai, "be thou "the tail of lions, and not the head of foxes;" or vain men, as the Gloſs explains it: behold, I caſt out devils; or I will caſt out devils, as the Ethiopic verſion reads, in ſpight of him, let him do his worſt: and I do cures to day and to morrow; and ſo for ſome time to come; and which was doing good, and was what Herod and the Phariſees, had they any humanity in them, would have rejoiced at, and have choſe, that he ſhould have continued with them, and not have threatened him with his life, or have took any methods to ſend him from them: and the third day I ſhall be perfected; that is, in a little time after, I ſhall be made perfect by ſufferings, my courſe will be finiſhed, and I ſhall have done all the work compleatly, I came about; and till that time comes, it is not in his power, nor yours, nor all the men on earth, or devils in hell, to take away my life, or hinder me doing what I am about.

[d] Pirke Abot, c. 4. §. 15. & Jarchi in ib.

Ver. 33. Nevertheleſs, I muſt walk, &c.] The Syriac verſion reads, I muſt work, and ſo the Arabic; as going about doing good, caſting out devils, and healing diſeaſes: to day and to morrow, and the day following; a few days more in Galilee, and towards Jeruſalem: all the Oriental verſions read, the day following I ſhall depart; either out of this world; or out of Galilee, and go to Jeruſalem, and there ſuffer and die: for it cannot be that a prophet periſh out of Jeruſalem; becauſe the great Sanhedrim only ſat at Jeruſalem, to whom it belonged to try and judge a prophet; and if found falſe, to condemn him, and put him to death: the rule is this [e]; "they "don't judge, neither a tribe, nor a falſe prophet, "nor an high-prieſt, but by the Sanhedrim of "ſeventy and one." Not but that prophets ſometimes periſhed elſewhere, as John the Baptiſt in Galilee; but not according to a judicial proceſs, in which way Chriſt the prophet was to be cut off, nor was it common; inſtances of this kind were rare, and always in a violent way: and even ſuch as were ſentenced to death by the leſſer Sanhedrim, were brought to Jeruſalem, and publickly executed there, whoſe crimes were of another ſort; for ſo runs the canon [f]; "they don't put any one to death by "the Sanhedrim, which is in his city, nor by the "Sanhedrim in Jabneh; but they bring him to the "great Sanhedrim in Jeruſalem, and keep him till "the feaſt, and put him to death on a feaſt-day, "as it is ſaid Deut. xvii. 13. and all the people ſhall "hear and fear." And ſince Jeruſalem was the place where the prophets were uſually put to death, it follows,

Ver. 34. O Jeruſalem, Jeruſalem, which killeſt the prophets, &c.] Theſe words, with what follow, as they ſtand in Matt. xxiii. 37, 38, 39. were delivered by Chriſt, when he was in the temple at Jeruſalem; but here they were ſpoken by him when in Galilee, in Herod's juriſdiction; ſo that it appears, that the ſame words were ſpoken by Chriſt at different times, in different places, and to different perſons: unleſs it can be thought, that Luke tranſcribed them from Matthew, and inſerts them here, on occaſion of Chriſt's having mentioned the periſhing of a prophet in Jeruſalem; where many had been killed and put to death, in one way or another, and particularly in the following: and ſtoneſt them that are ſent unto thee; as Zechariah, 2 Chron. xxiv. 20, 21, 22. and others: how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not? and therefore ought not to have been condemned as a falſe prophet by their Sanhedrim, as he ſuggeſts he ſhould be, and as he afterwards was; ſee the note on Matt. xxiii. 37.

Ver. 35. Behold, your houſe is left unto you deſolate, &c.] That is, would be in a little time, both city and temple; ſee the note on Matt. xxiii. 38. and verily I ſay unto you; affirm in the ſtrongeſt manner: ye ſhall not ſee me; the Arabic verſion adds, from henceforth, and ſo ſome copies, as in Matt. xxiii. 39. and ſo the Ethiopic verſion, from this time; that he ſpoke theſe words, whether in Galilee, or in the temple: until the time come; or until he ſhall come, meaning himſelf, and his ſecond coming: when ye ſhall ſay, bleſſed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord; not they themſelves in perſon, but their poſterity, who will be converted in the latter day; and ſhall acknowledge the Meſſiah, the bleſſed of the Lord, who will come in his name, to judge the world in righteouſneſs: or elſe the meaning is, that when Chriſt ſhall come a ſecond time, and every eye ſhall ſee him, theſe Jews, among the reſt, ſhall behold him, whom they have pierced, and mourn; and wiſh themſelves among thoſe, that ſhall receive him with joyful acclamations; and however, will be obliged to own him as the Meſſiah, and to confeſs that he comes in the name, and with the authority of the Lord, and that he is bleſſed for evermore.

CHAP. XIV.

Ver. 1. AND it came to paſs, &c.] The Perſic verſion adds, on a certain day; and it is afterwards ſaid to be the ſabbath-day. This ſeems to have been ſome where or other in Galilee; ſee ch. xvii. 11. As he went into the houſe of one of the chief Phariſees; or rather, one of the rulers, and of the ſect of the Phariſees: and he might be either a ruler of a ſynagogue, or a member of one of the leſſer or greater Sanhedrim; ſuch another as Nicodemus, who was of the Phariſees, and a ruler of the Jews, John iii. 1. for that there was any diſtinction among the Phariſees as a ſect, does not appear: to this man's houſe Chriſt went, after he came out of the ſynagogue, being invited by him; to eat bread on the ſabbath-day. The ſabbath-day was a feaſting day with the Jews, in which they made very large and magnificent entertainments, for the honour of the ſabbath; and he was reckoned the moſt praiſe-worthy, that exceeded this way; and no doubt, ſince this man was a Phariſee, one that was tenacious of the traditions of the elders, and was alſo a ruler, his table was well ſpread: the rules concerning this part of keeping the ſabbath, are theſe [g]; "what is this "delight? the wiſe men ſay, a man ought to "prepare abundance of food and ſpiced liquids, "for the ſabbath, all according to a man's ſubſtance; and whoever multiplies in the expences "of the ſabbath, and in preparing food, much "and good, lo, he is praiſe-worthy; and if he "is not able, though he only prepares boiled food, "and ſuch like, on account of the glory of the "ſabbath, lo, this is the delight of the ſabbath: "and he is not obliged to ſtraiten himſelf, nor to "aſk of others, to increaſe the food of the ſabbath: the ancient wiſe men ſaid, make thy ſabbath a common day, and don't make thyſelf neceſſitous to men; he who is delicate and rich, "and lo, all his days are as a ſabbath-day, ought "to have food on a ſabbath-day, different from [g] Maimon. Hilchot Sabbat, c. 30. §. 7, 8, 9.

"that on a week-day; and if it is not poſſible to "change, let him alter the time of eating; if he "had been uſed to have it ſoon, let him have it "late; and if late, let him have it ſooner: a man "is obliged to eat three meals, or feaſts, on a ſabbath-day; one in the evening, and one in the "morning, and one at the time of the meat-offering; and he ought to take heed to thoſe three "feaſts, that he does not diminiſh them at all; "and even a poor man that is maintained by alms, "muſt keep the three feaſts." And this laſt canon, or rule, is of the utmoſt importance with them; for they [h] ſay, "whoever keeps the three feaſts on "the ſabbath-day, ſhall be delivered from three "puniſhments, from the ſorrows of the Meſſiah, "from the judgment of hell, and from the war "of Gog and Magog." That they watched him; that is, thoſe that ſat down to meat with him, the lawyers and Phariſees: and it is very probable, that it was not out of pure reſpect to him, that he was aſked to eat meat at this ruler's houſe; but with a deſign to obſerve whatever might be ſaid, or done by him, they could take any advantage from, againſt him.

Ver. 2. And behold, there was a certain man before him, &c.] Who ſat juſt before him, as he was at table; who either came there of himſelf, in order to receive a cure; or rather, ſince it was in a private houſe, and he at table too, was brought and ſet there on purpoſe by the Phariſees, to try whether Chriſt would heal him on the ſabbath-day, that they might have ſomewhat againſt him; which they doubted not but he would do, knowing his compaſſionate and beneficent diſpoſition to do good to creatures in diſtreſs, whenever he had an opportunity: which had the dropſy; or gathered waters, as the Syriac verſion renders it; was filled with water, which is the nature of that diſeaſe, and diſtinguiſhes it from what is called the dry dropſy: this diſeaſe is a preternatural collection of ſerum, or water in ſome part of the body; or a too great proportion thereof in the blood. The dropſy acquires different names, from the different parts it afflicts, or the different parts the waters are collected in; that of the abdomen, or lower belly, called ſimply and abſolutely dropſy, is particularly denominated aſcites; that of the whole habit of the body, anaſarca, or leucophlegmatia; that of the head, hydrocephalus; that of the ſcrotum, hydrocele.——There is alſo a ſpecies of this diſeaſe, ſuppoſed to be cauſed inſtead of water, by a collection of wind, called tympanites; and by Hippocrates, the dry dropſy: we alſo meet with dropſies of the breaſt, pericardium, uterus, ovaries, &c. The cauſes of dropſies in general, are whatever may obſtruct the ſerous part of the blood, ſo as to make it ſtagnate in the veſſels; or burſt the veſſels themſelves, ſo as to let the blood out among the membranes; or weaken and relax the tone of the veſſels; or thin the blood, and make it watry; or leſſen perſpiration. Theſe cauſes are various, viz. ſometimes acute diſeaſes, ſcirrhous tumours of any of the more noble viſcera, exceſſive evacuations, particularly hæmorrhages, hard drinking, &c. The aſtites, or water-dropſy of the abdomen, is the moſt uſual caſe, and what we particularly call the dropſy: its ſymptoms are tumours, firſt of the feet and legs, and afterwards of the abdomen, which keep continually growing; and if the belly be ſtruck or ſhook, there is heard a quaſhing of water: add to this, three other attendants, viz. a dyſpnoea, intenſe thirſt, and ſparing urine; with which may be numbered heavineſs, liſtleſſneſs, coſtiveneſs, a light fever, and an emaciation of the body [i]. Such we muſt ſuppoſe to be the caſe of this man, and that he was now in ſuch a condition, as to be thought incurable.

Ver. 3. And Jeſus anſwering, ſpake unto the lawyers and Phariſees, &c.] All the Oriental verſions for lawyers, read Scribes: theſe with the Phariſees, were got together in a body, in their brother Phariſees houſe, to watch the motions of Chriſt; who knew their deſigns upon him, and the thoughts of their hearts, and made anſwer to them, by putting the following queſtion; ſaying, is it lawful to heal on the ſabbath-day? The occaſion of the queſtion, was the object before him, whom Chriſt had a compaſſionate regard to, and determined to cure; but knowing that theſe men were catching at every thing, to traduce him, was deſirous of having their ſentiments firſt; not but that he knew full well, what was agreeable to the law of God, and what was not; and what alſo were the traditions of their elders, which they held, and which allowed of healing on the ſabbath-day, where life was in danger.

Ver. 4. And they held their peace, &c.] Or were ſilent, chuſing to ſay nothing, which might countenance ſuch an action; and yet knew not how to condemn it: and he took him, and healed him, and let him go; he took him by the hand, or laid his hands on him; he touched him, and it may be ſtroaked the part affected, and in an inſtant, the prodigious ſwelling of his body came down: for he who at his rebuke could dry up the ſea, could by a touch dry up ſuch a quantity of water, as was in this man's body; and then he diſmiſſed him from the table and company, and he went home perfectly cured.

Ver. 5. And anſwered them, ſaying, &c.] Murmuring ſecretly at what he had done: which of you ſhall have an aſs, or an ox fallen into a pit, and will not ſtraightway pull him out on the ſabbath-day? being juſt ready to be drowned there; and therefore it muſt be much more right and neceſſary to cure a man, a reaſonable creature, juſt drowning with a dropſy, as this man was. The Syriac and Perſic verſions, inſtead of an aſs, read a ſon, very wrongly: a like kind of reaſoning is uſed by Chriſt, in Matt. xii. 11. Luke xiii. 15. ſee the notes there.

Ver. 6. And they could not anſwer him again to theſe things.] The juſtice, equity, mercy, and humanity that appeared in our Lord's reaſonings, and the caſes he inſtanced in, being agreeable to their own tenets and practices, their mouths were ſhut up, and they could not return an anſwer to them, without being expoſed.

Ver. 7. And he put forth a parable to thoſe which were bidden, &c.] To the dinner at the Phariſees houſe, particularly the lawyers, or Scribes and Phariſees: when he marked how they choſe out the chief rooms; the uppermoſt places at the table, which theſe men loved, coveted, and ſought after; ſee the note on Matt. xxiii. 6. ſaying unto them; as follows,

Ver. 8. When thou art bidden of any man to a wedding, &c.] To a wedding-dinner, or to any other; ſuch an one as the preſent entertainment was, which was not a marriage-feaſt, for they might not marry on the ſabbath-day; ſee the note on John ii. 1. but a common ſabbath-meal: ſit not down in the higheſt room; in the chief place at table, as ſoon as come in; leſt a more honourable man; for age, office, dignity, wiſdom, learning, or riches: than thou be bidden of him; the maſter of the feaſt; and who may not yet be come, and for whom the chief place may be deſigned, and will better ſuit him.

[h] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 118. 1. Kimchi in Iſa. lviii. 13.

[i] Chambers's Cyclopædia on the word dropſy.

Ver. 9. And he that bad thee and him, &c.] To the feaſt, and who is the maſter of it, and has a right to diſpoſe of, and order his gueſts at his table, as he thinks fit: come and ſay to thee, give this man place; pray riſe up, and give this honourable man this ſeat, which is more ſuitable for a perſon of his rank and figure, and take another: and thou begin with ſhame to take the loweſt room; or place, which muſt unavoidably fill a man with ſhame and confuſion; becauſe hereby his pride and vanity, in affecting the uppermoſt room, will be publickly expoſed; and he who before ſat in the chief place, will have the mortification, before all the gueſts, to be ſeated in the loweſt.

Ver. 10. But when thou art bidden, &c.] To an entertainment, and the time is come, go and ſit down in the loweſt room; place thyſelf at the lower end of the table, or in the moſt inferior ſeat; which will ſhow humility and lowlineſs of mind, and prevent ſhame and mortification; ſince there can be no putting into a lower place, and there may be an advance to an higher: that when he that bad thee cometh; into the dining-room, and obſerve in what place thou art: he may ſay unto thee, friend, go up higher; to a more honourable ſeat at table, pointing to it, and ſaying, there's ſuch a ſeat empty, go up and take it, it beſt becomes thee: then ſhalt thou have worſhip; or glory, as the word ſignifies; honour and eſteem, inſtead of ſhame and bluſhing; not only from the maſter of the feaſt, but in the preſence of them that ſit at meat with thee; and from them, who will take notice of the honour done thee, and will entertain an high opinion of thee, and commend thee for thine humility and modeſty. Advice, like to this, is given by Solomon in Prov. xxv. 6, 7. and which is explained by the Jews in like manner as here[k]: "Ben Azzai uſed to ſay, "deſcend from thy place two or three degrees, and "ſit; it is better that it ſhould be ſaid to thee, "עלה, go up, than that it ſhould be ſaid to thee, "deſcend, as it is ſaid in Prov. xxv. 7." Which is elſewhere[l] thus expreſſed: "R. Akiba taught it "(or expounded, Prov. xxv. 7.) in the name of "R. Simeon ben Azzai, remove from thy place "two or three ſeats, and ſit until it is ſaid to thee, "עלה, go up; but do not go up, (i. e. firſt) for it "will be ſaid to thee deſcend; it is better that it "ſhould be ſaid to thee go up, go up, than that "it ſhould be ſaid to thee go down, go down: "and Ben Hillell uſed to ſay, my humiliation is "my exaltation, and my exaltation is my humiliation."

Ver. 11. For whoſoever exalteth himſelf, &c.] Either in the above way, or any other, ſhall be abaſed, humbled and mortified; and he that humbleth himſelf; behaves in an humble and modeſt manner, ſhall be exalted; ſee the note on Matt. xxiii. 12.

Ver. 12. Then ſaid he alſo to him that bad him, &c.] As he had given advice and inſtructions to the gueſts, ſo he likewiſe thought fit to give ſome to the maſter of the houſe, that had given both him and them an invitation to the preſent meal; obſerving, very likely, that his gueſts conſiſted of ſuch perſons as are hereafter deſcribed. When thou makeſt a dinner, or a ſupper; any entertainment for other perſons, at what time of the day ſoever, whether ſooner or later, at noon, or at night, on ſabbath-days, or others: call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinſmen, nor thy rich neighbours; that is, do not invite thy rich friends, rich brethren, and rich kinſmen, as well as not rich neighbours: not that our Lord's meaning is, that ſuch ſhould not be invited at all; which would be to deſtroy friendſhip and ſociable converſation among perſons in ſuch a relation, and of ſuch rank and fortune: but his ſenſe is, that not theſe only ſhould be invited, to the neglect of poor friends, poor brethren, poor kinſmen, and poor neighbours; and who, comparatively ſpeaking, ſhould rather be invited than the former, as being what would be more ſerviceable to them, and of a greater advantage in the iſſue to the maſter of the feaſt himſelf. Leſt they alſo bid thee again; and thee only, and not the poor, to as grand an entertainment, which is commonly done: and a recompence be made thee; one feaſting bout for another, ſo that there will be no obligation on either ſide; and this will be all the advantage that will be gained; the return is made here, and there will be no reward hereafter.

Ver. 13. But when thou maketh a feaſt, &c.] An entertainment for others, a dinner, or a ſupper: call the poor, the maimed, the lame, and the blind; that is, the poor maimed, the poor lame, and the poor blind; otherwiſe 'tis poſſible that rich men may be maimed, lame, and blind; whereas theſe are not intended, but ſuch who are in indigent circumſtances, that ſtand in need of a meal, and to whom it is welcome.

Ver. 14. And thou ſhalt be bleſſed, &c.] By God, with an increaſe of worldly ſubſtance, or with ſpiritual bleſſings, and with eternal glory and happineſs; and by theſe poor objects, who will pray to God for a bleſſing upon ſuch a kind benefactor: for they cannot recompenſe thee; by inviting again to a like entertainment, as rich gueſts can do, and when they have done that there's nothing elſe to be expected; but ſuch that entertain the poor can have no return from them, and yet a retaliation will be made: for thou ſhall be recompenſed at the reſurrection of the juſt; when the juſt ſhall riſe again, which will be the firſt reſurrection; and happy is he that has part in it: for the righteous, or dead in Chriſt will riſe firſt; and notice will be taken of the good works of the ſaints, particularly of their acts of beneficence to the poor members of Chriſt; and which they have done in faith, from a principle of love to Chriſt, and with a view to the glory of God, and the good of their fellow-creatures and chriſtians.

Ver. 15. And when one of them that ſat at meat with him, &c.] One of the Scribes, lawyers, or Phariſees, that were gueſts at this feaſt: heard theſe things; which were ſpoken by Chriſt, and was pleaſed and affected with them, tho' he was ignorant: he ſaid unto him, bleſſed is he that ſhall eat bread in the kingdom of God; in the world to come, in the kingdom of the Meſſiah; concerning feaſting in which, the Jews had entertained very groſs notions; and which this man was reminded of by Chriſt's making mention of the reſurrection of the juſt, and of recompence at that time, which the Jews expected at the Meſſiah's coming. They ſuppoſe, that God will make a ſplendid feaſt, a ſumptuous entertainment; in which, beſides bread, which they call, לחמה של מלכות, the bread of the kingdom, and the bread of the world to come[m], there will be great variety of fleſh, fiſh, and fowl, plenty of generous wine, and all ſorts of delicious fruit: particularly they ſpeak of a large ox, which they ſuppoſe to be the Behemoth in Job, that will then be prepared; and of Leviathan and his mate, which will then be dreſſed; and of a large fowl, called Ziz, of a monſtrous bigneſs; and of old wine kept in the grape from the creation of the world, which will then be drank; and of the rich fruits of the garden of Eden, that will then be ſerved up[n]: ſuch groſs and carnal notions have they entertained of the world to come; and which this man ſeemed to have imbibed, and placed happineſs in.

Ver. 16. Then ſaid he unto him, &c.] That is, Jeſus, as the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions expreſs it; he ſaid to the man that was ſo affected with the happineſs of ſuch that ſhall ſhare in the proviſions of the Meſſiah's kingdom; a certain man made a great ſupper: by which is meant not the Lord's ſupper, which was not as yet inſtituted; nor the ſupper of the Lamb, which will be at the end of the world; but the Goſpel-diſpenſation, which was now taking place, and the proviſions of it in the word and ordinances: and which is called a ſupper; becauſe made in the end of the world, in the laſt days; and a great one, becauſe of the maker of it, the king of kings, and lord of lords; and the matter of it, a variety of rich proviſions, a feaſt of fat things, an entertainment conſiſting of the greateſt dainties, and moſt delightful food; and on account of the number of the gueſts invited, all people, every creature, to whom the outward miniſtration of the Goſpel comes; and thoſe who are properly gueſts that come, are a great number which no man can number; as well as becauſe of the coſt and charges of it to the maker, tho' it is all free to the gueſts; and likewiſe becauſe of the circumſtances of exceeding great joy and pleaſure that attend it; to which may be added, the long duration of it, even from the firſt to the ſecond coming of Chriſt. And bade many. This firſt bidding more eſpecially reſpects the Jews, who are ſaid to be many, in reference to the promiſe made to Abraham, that his ſeed ſhould be as the ſtars of the heavens, and as the ſand of the ſea; and to ſet off the magnificence of the feaſt; and in diſtinction from all the world, and every creature, which were afterwards put into the Goſpel-commiſſion: a foundation was laid for this ſupper in eternity, in the purpoſes, counſel, and covenant of God; and many prophecies concerning it were given out from the beginning; and ſacrifices and ordinances were inſtituted, as emblematical of it, and to lead on to it, and give notice of it.

Ver. 17. And ſent his ſervant at ſupper-time, &c.] Either John the Baptiſt, the harbinger and forerunner of Chriſt, who declared that the kingdom of heaven, or the Goſpel-diſpenſation, was at hand; and exhorted the people to believe in Chriſt that ſhould come after him; or Chriſt himſelf, who is God's ſervant as man, of his chuſing and appointing, and whom he ſent in the fulneſs of time in the form of a ſervant, as the miniſter of the circumciſion, to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael, and to call ſinners to repentance; or ſervant may be put for ſervants, ſince in Matt. xxii. 3, 4. mention is made of more; and ſo the Perſic verſion here; which parable bears ſome likeneſs to this, if it is not the ſame; and may deſign the Apoſtles of Chriſt, who were the ſervants of the moſt high God, and the miniſters of Chriſt, who were firſt ſent by him to preach the Goſpel to the Jews, and to them only for a while; to ſay to them that were bidden come: this call, or invitation, was not the internal call, which is a fruit of love, and by grace, and of mighty power; to ſpecial bleſſings, grace, and glory; and is irreſiſtible, effectual, and unchangeable: but external, to outward ordinances; and is often ſlighted and neglected; and is ſometimes of perſons who are neither choſen, nor ſanctified, nor ſaved: for all things are now ready; the Syriac verſion adds, for you: righteouſneſs, pardon of ſin, peace, and reconciliation, ſin put away by the ſacrifice of Chriſt, redemption obtained, and life and ſalvation ſecured; which ſhows the perfection of the preſent diſpenſation, and the large proviſions of the Goſpel, to which nothing is, or can be brought to be added to them, or qualify for them.

Ver. 18. And they all with one conſent began to make excuſe, &c.] Or, they all together, as the Vulgate Latin verſion, באחת, in one, or at once, in Jer. x. 8. is rendered altogether; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion, which adds, with one voice: but their words and language were not the ſame; their excuſes are differently expreſſed. Some render απο μιας, from one hour, or the ſelf-ſame hour; immediately, directly, as ſoon as ever they were bidden, they began to frame excuſes; they at once agreed, as by common conſent, to excuſe themſelves from coming. The firſt ſaid unto him, I have bought a piece of ground, or a field, and I muſt needs go and ſee it: he ought to have ſeen it before he bought it; and however it was a very improper time at evening, at ſupper-time, as this was, to go and ſee a piece of ground; and at leaſt it might have been put off till next morning; ſo that it was a mere excuſe indeed. I pray thee have me excuſed; coming to the ſupper: theſe were the principal men among the Jews, the Phariſees and rulers among the people; who were rich and covetous, worldly men, ſeeking their own worldly advantage more than their ſpiritual and eternal welfare, or the intereſt of God and religion.

Ver. 19. And another ſaid I have bought five yoke of oxen, &c.] To plough the field with, and I go to prove them: this alſo being at, or near evening, was an unſuitable time to go into the field with yokes of oxen to try them, how they would draw the plough, and work in the field; the morning would have been a much more proper time: I pray thee have me excuſed; to the maſter of the feaſt: this man repreſents alſo the carnal and worldly Jews, who preferr'd temporal things before ſpiritual.

Ver. 20. And another ſaid I have married a wife, &c.] And his pretence might be, that he had his own marriage-feaſt, and friends to attend, nor could he leave his wife directly; but his circumſtances were ſuch as made an invitation to a feaſt the more agreeable, and he might have brought his wife and friends along with him, who would have been as welcome as himſelf: and therefore I cannot come. The Arabic verſion renders it, therefore I will not go: this man is more ruſtic and rude than the former; he does not ſo much as deſire to be excuſed; and repreſents ſuch who are fond of their ſenſual luſts and pleaſures, and are reſolved to indulge them, and will not be taken off from them by any means whatever.

Ver. 21. So that ſervant came and ſhewed his Lord theſe things, &c.] The ſeveral excuſes which thoſe that were bidden to the ſupper made. So the miniſters of the Goſpel come to God and Chriſt, and give an account of the ſucceſs of their miniſtry, which is often with grief, and not with joy: then the maſter of the houſe being angry; as well he might, at their ingratitude to him, their ſlighting of his kindneſs, and the contempt they poured upon his entertainment. Chriſt reſented the impenitence and unbelief of the Jews, who were favoured with his miniſtry and miracles; and looked upon them with anger, and was grieved becauſe of the hardneſs of their hearts; and threatened them with a ſorer puniſhment, a more aggravated condemnation, and more intolerable torments, than other men. And ſaid to his ſervants; the apoſtles, when their commiſſion was enlarged to preach to all nations, beginning at Jeruſalem: go out quickly into the ſtreets and lanes of the city; to the Jews, who lived under a civil government, under the law of Moſes; tho' the meaner ſort of them, the poor, and ſuch as knew not the law in ſuch ſort as the Scribes and Phariſees did, who rejected the counſel of God againſt themſelves; and ſo are comparable to perſons that lie about the ſtreets, and live in lanes and alleys: and it may alſo regard the Jews that were ſcattered abroad in other places, and the proſelytes to their religion among the Gentiles; to whom the Goſpel was firſt preached, after it was rejected by the Jews at Jeruſalem and in Judea: and bring in hither the poor; not in a literal, but in a myſtical and ſpiritual ſenſe; ſuch as have no ſpiritual food to eat, but aſhes, gravel, wind, and huſks of carnal luſts and ſins; nor any ſpiritual clothing, no righteouſneſs, but what may be juſtly called filthy rags; nor money to buy either, but are in debt, owe ten thouſand talents, and have nothing to pay; of which ſpiritual poverty ſome are ſenſible, and others are not. And the maimed; who are debilitated and enfeebled by ſin; and ſo weak and ſtrengthleſs, that they are not able to keep the law of God; to atone for ſin; to redeem themſelves, or others, from the bondage of ſin, ſatan, and the law; to begin and carry on a work of grace and holineſs in them; or to do any thing that is ſpiritually good: and the halt; which is ſometimes a character of perſons that are in ſuſpenſe about matters in religion, and know not which ſide to take; or who halt in religion, and faulter and fail in the exerciſe of it: but here, of ſuch who are in an incapacity of going or walking in a ſpiritual ſenſe; as unto Chriſt, for life and ſalvation, without the drawings and influences of the father's grace: and the blind; who are ſo, as to any ſaving knowledge of God in Chriſt; of Chriſt, and the way of righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation by him; of the plague of their own hearts, the exceeding ſinfulneſs of ſin, and the need of a Saviour; of the work of the Spirit of God upon their ſouls, and the neceſſity of it; and of the truths of the Goſpel, in a ſpiritual and experimental way. In ſhort, under theſe characters are repreſented natural and unconverted men, and the moſt vile, profligate, and abandoned of them; which are ſometimes under the power of divine grace accompanying the miniſtration of the Goſpel brought to Chriſt, and into his church. So the blind and the lame, in 2 Sam. v. 6, 8. are by the Targum on the place, explained of, חטאיא וחיביא, ſinners and wicked perſons.

[n] See my notes on the Targum in Cant. viii. 2.

Ver. 22. And the ſervant ſaid, &c.] After he had been and brought in a large number of ſuch as are before deſcribed, and he was directed to, and ſucceeded to the gathering of them in: Lord, it is done as thou haſt commanded; the apoſtles exactly obſerved the orders of their Lord and maſter; they began to preach the Goſpel at Jeruſalem; and being drove from thence, they went and preached to the Jews of the diſperſion, and to the proſelytes among the Gentiles: and yet there is room; that is, for the Gentiles, after God's elect, among the Jews, for that time were gathered in: there was room provided for them in the heart and love of God from everlaſting, and in electing grace; in the ſuretyſhip-engagements of Chriſt, and in the covenant of his grace; and they had a place in the redeeming grace of Chriſt, in time; and in the laſt commiſſion he gave to his diſciples; and there was now room for them in the church of God; and will be in the new Jeruſalem, and in the heavenly glory.

Ver. 23. And the Lord ſaid unto the ſervant, &c.] A ſecond time; that ſince the Jews put away the word of eternal life from them, and judged themſelves unworthy of it by their contradicting and blaſpheming it, he commanded his apoſtles to turn from them to the Gentiles; ſee Acts xiii. 45, 46, 47. go out into the high-ways and hedges: the Perſic verſion adds, of the vineyards; ſee 1 Chron. iv. 23. and may in general deſign the mean, baſe, vile, and ſinful ſtate of the Gentiles; who might be ſaid to be in the high-ways, becauſe they were without the commonwealth and church of the Jews; were not admitted to civil converſation, nor to religious worſhip with them; and were left to walk on in their own ways, of their own deviſing and chuſing, in which they delighted: they were not in God's high-way, which is a way of holineſs, Iſ. xxxv. 8. but in their own high-ways; either following the various ſects of the philoſophers, which were vain and fooliſh; or going into different practices of idolatry, and walking in very ſinful and vicious courſes; and ſo were in the broad road and high-way to deſtruction: and their being in, and under the hedges, may denote their ſtate of ſeparation from God; being without him, alienated from the life of him, and afar off from him; being aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael, and ſtrangers from the covenants of promiſe, Eph. ii. 12. they were not in the gardens and incloſures, but under the hedges: and compel them to come in; to the houſe of God, and church of Chriſt; to come and hear the word, and quit their former courſe of living, and attend the word and worſhip of God; and upon an evidence of the truth of grace upon their ſouls, to come into a Goſpel church-ſtate, and partake of all privileges and ordinances in it; to which they are to be compelled, not by outward force, but by forcible words, by powerful arguments, and by the ſtrength of perſuaſion; which expreſſes the nature of the Goſpel miniſtry, which is to perſuade Japhet to dwell in the tents of Shem; and the power that attends it by the divine Spirit; the caſe and condition of ſouls, who are generally baſhful and backward, judging themſelves unworthy; as alſo the earneſt deſire, and great liberality of Chriſt, the maſter of the feaſt, whoſe end in it is as follows: that my houſe may be filled; with men, like a flock, and theſe with gifts and grace; with ſuch as ſhall be ſaved, as with elect Jews, ſo with the fulneſs of the Gentiles.

Ver. 24. For I ſay unto you, &c.] Moſt ſolemnly affirm it, and even ſwear to it, nothing is more certain, or will be found more true; that none of thoſe men that were bidden: the impenitent and unbelieving Jews, the Scribes, and Phariſees, and the greater part of the nation; who firſt had the Goſpel publiſhed to them, who are the many that were called, tho' few were choſen, and therefore came not; nor did, nor ſhall taſte of my ſupper: nor had they ſo much as a ſuperficial knowledge of the Goſpel, of the truths, bleſſings, promiſes, and ordinances of it; being given up to judicial blindneſs and hardneſs of heart; and from whom, in a little while, the Goſpel was wholly taken; and is not yet afforded to them as a body; nor will till the latter day, when the veil ſhall be taken away, and they ſhall turn to the Lord, and all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved; but as for the firſt diſbelievers and rejecters of Chriſt among the Jews, they died in their ſins, and periſhed eternally.

Ver. 25. And there went great multitudes with him, &c.] From Galilee, as he journeyed from thence to Jeruſalem; ſome for one thing, and ſome another, and all perhaps were in expectation of his ſetting up a temporal kingdom when he came there; and hoped they ſhould ſhare, more or leſs, the worldly advantages of it; for the whole nation was big with ſuch carnal notions of the Meſſiah. Jeſus therefore to draw off their minds from ſuch views, and that they might not be diſappointed, acquaints them, that if they would be his diſciples, they muſt part with all that was near and dear to them; and prepare to ſuffer great hardſhips and difficulties for his name ſake: for it follows, and he turned; himſelf to the company that was behind: and ſaid unto them; with a grave and ſtern countenance, looking wiſhly at them, and in the moſt ſolemn manner delivered what is hereafter related.

Ver. 26. If any man come to me, &c.] Not in a corporal, but in a ſpiritual way; nor barely to hear him preach; but ſo come, as that he believes in him, applies to him for grace, pardon, righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation; profeſſes to be his, ſubmits to his ordinances, and deſires to be a diſciple of his; and hate not his father and mother, and wife and children, and brethren and ſiſters, yea, and his own life alſo, he cannot be my diſciple: not that proper hatred of any, or all of theſe, is enjoined by Chriſt; for this would be contrary to the laws of God, to the firſt principles of nature, to all humanity, to the light of nature, to reaſon and divine revelation: but that theſe are not to be preferred to Chriſt, or loved more than he, as it is explained in Matt. x. 37. yea, theſe are to be neglected and forſaken, and turned from with indignation and reſentment, when they ſtand in the way of the honour and intereſt of Chriſt, and diſſuade from his ſervice: ſuch who would be accounted the diſciples of Chriſt, ſhould be ready to part with their deareſt relations and friends, with the greateſt enjoyment of life, and with life itſelf, when Chriſt calls for it; or otherwiſe they are not worthy to be called his diſciples. The Ethiopic verſion inſerts, his houſe, into the account.

Ver. 27. Whoſoever doth not bear his croſs, &c.] All reproach, afflictions, perſecutions, and death itſelf, chearfully and patiently; the Ethiopic verſion renders it, of his death the croſs; it ſignifies whatever is trying and diſagreeable to fleſh and blood: and come after me; bearing his croſs; as Chriſt himſelf was about to do, and which doubtleſs he had in view; cannot be my diſciple; he is not ſo in reality, nor does he deſerve the name.

Ver. 28. For which of you intending to build a tower, &c.] Taking up a profeſſion of Chriſt and his Goſpel, is like building a tower; which as a tower, muſt be laid on a good foundation; not on carnal deſcent and parentage; nor on a ſober and religious education; nor on a civil, moral life and converſation; nor on a bare knowledge of Goſpel truths, and a flaſh of affection for them, and the people of God; but upon Chriſt the ſure foundation; and on principles of grace formed by his Spirit, in their hearts: and this, like a tower, is carried very high; not by profeſſing high things, but by living on high amidſt a profeſſion; by having the affections ſet on things above; and by looking down with contempt on things below; and by looking to, and preſſing after, the prize of the high calling of God in Chriſt: the profeſſion of ſome perſons is very low; it ariſes from low principles, and proceeds on low views, aims, and ends; but where it is right, and well founded, it is like a tower, firm and ſteady, and is a fortreſs and bulwark againſt apoſtacy. Now what perſon acting deliberately in ſuch a caſe as this, and proceeding with intention and deſign, ſitteth not down firſt, and counteth the coſt, whether he have ſufficient to finiſh it? as every wiſe man would, who has any thoughts of building a tower, or any other edifice: and ſo ſuch that have an intention to take up a profeſſion of religion, ſhould ſit down and well conſider of it; which does not imply, that perſons ſhould delay making a profeſſion, on whom it is incumbent; but that this ſhould be done with thoughtfulneſs, care, and prudence: it ſhould be conſidered on what foundation a man is going to build; whether the work of grace is truly wrought upon his ſoul; what be the nature and uſe of Goſpel ordinances; with what views he takes up a profeſſion, and ſubmits to ordinances; what the church and miniſter are, he intends to walk with; and what the charge and coſt of a profeſſion; for ſuch a work is chargeable and coſtly, and ſhould be thought of and conſidered, whether he is able to bear it: for he will be called to ſelf-denial; and muſt expect to ſuffer the loſs of the favour of carnal relations and friends; and to be expoſed to the ſcorn and rage of the world; a croſs muſt be took up and bore; and great grace and ſtrength are requiſite to all this.

Ver. 29. Leſt haply after he hath laid the foundation, &c.] Has begun to build, has taken up a profeſſion, has ſubmitted to ordinances, and got into a church-ſtate: and is not able to finiſh it; a foundation may be laid, and the building may never be finiſhed, becauſe the foundation is not laid right; was it, it would continue, and the building go on, and at laſt be finiſhed; though no man is able to finiſh it of himſelf, yet thoſe hands which have laid the foundation, will raiſe up the ſuperſtructure, and compleat the whole building, through the power and efficacy of divine grace: but where there is a beginning, and which at firſt looks well, and there is no progreſs, but the work is dropped and left unfiniſhed, all that behold it, begin to mock; as follows;

Ver. 30. Saying, this man began to build, &c.] He ſet out well, he promiſed great things, and made a conſiderable bluſter and ſtir, as if he would carry things at once to a very high pitch: and was not able to finiſh; it was all noiſe and talk, and nothing elſe: falling off from a profeſſion of religion, expoſes men to contempt and ſcorn; ſuch are not only caſt out of churches with diſgrace, but are deſpiſed by men, by wicked men; and are a reproach, a proverb, and a taunt in all places; and even are mocked by devils too.

Ver. 31. Or what king going to make war againſt another king, &c.] Our Lord illuſtrates the ſame thing, the buſineſs of a profeſſion, by another ſimilitude, or parable; taking up a profeſſion of religion, is like to two kings engaging in a war. The king on the one ſide, is the chriſtian profeſſor; true believers are kings, they have the apparel of kings, the royal robe of Chriſt's righteouſneſs; they liv like kings, at the table of the king of kings; hav the attendance of kings, angels miniſtring unto them; have crowns and thrones as kings have, an greater than theirs; and have a kingdom of grac now, and are heirs of the kingdom of glory. Th king on the other ſide, is the devil; who is th king and prince of the reſt of the devils, and ov the men of the world; a kingdom is aſcribed to him, which is a kingdom of darkneſs; and he is ſaid to be a great king, and is repreſented as proud, cruel, and tyrannical: now the chriſtian profeſſor's life is a warfare; he is engaged with many enemies; the corruptions of his own heart within, and the world without; and eſpecially ſatan, who is to be reſiſted, and by no means to be yielded to, though there is a great inequality between them: and therefore what man that engages in ſuch a warfare, ſitteth not down firſt, and conſulteth whether he be able with ten thouſand, to meet him that cometh againſt him with twenty thouſand? and ſuch a difference there is between the chriſtian profeſſor and the devil; the one is fleſh and blood, the other a ſpirit; the one is raw and undiſciplined, the other a veteran ſoldier; the one a ſtripling, and the other the ſtrong man armed: their numbers are unequal; the people of Chriſt are few, and their force and ſtrength in themſelves ſmall; and they have a large number of devils, and of the men of the world, and of the luſts of their own hearts, to grapple with; wherefore it is neceſſary to ſit down and conſult, not with fleſh and blood, but with other chriſtians; and chiefly, and above all, with God himſelf; what will be the charges of this warfare; the hardſhips to be endured; in whoſe name and ſtrength they are to engage; what weapons to take, and how to uſe them; and how to get knowledge of the deſigns, methods, and ſtrength of the enemy, and take every advantage of him.

Ver. 32. Or elſe, while the other is a great way off, &c.] Upon his march, with reſolution to come up and give battle, though as yet at a diſtance: he ſendeth an ambaſſage; or men, with an embaſſy to him: and deſireth conditions of peace; greatly to his diſadvantage and reproach: ſo to give out, and leave off fighting with ſin, ſatan, and the world, and make peace with them, is ſhameful and ſcandalous; but on the other hand, ſuch who have engaged in this war, ſhould purſue it with vigour and courage; conſidering that God is on their ſide; that Chriſt is the captain of their ſalvation; that the Spirit of God that is in them, is greater than he that is in the world; that angels encamp around them; that it is a good cauſe they are engaged in; that they have good weapons, the whole armour of God provided for them; are ſure of victory, and ſhall at laſt enjoy the crown of life, righteouſneſs and glory.

Ver. 33. So likewiſe whoſever he be of you, &c.] Let him be ever ſo forward to follow me, to make a profeſſion of me and of my Goſpel, and to become a diſciple of mine: that forſaketh not all that he hath; when called to it, relations, friends, poſſeſſions, eſtates, and what not, which is an explanation of ver. 26. he cannot be my diſciple; he is not in fact one, and is not worthy to be called one.

Ver. 34. Salt is good, &c.] See the notes on Matt. v. 13. and Mark x. 50.

Ver. 35. It is neither fit for the land, &c.] For the manuring of it, when it has loſt its ſavour and ſpirit; otherwiſe it makes land fruitful, if too much is not uſed, and eſpecially fixt ſalts have this uſe; though Pliny ſays [*], "every place in which "ſalt is found, it is barren and brings forth no"thing." Nor yet for the dunghill; to mix with dung, and help it, that it may be the more ſerviceable for the earth and juſt ſuch uſeleſs things, are a mere external profeſſion of religion, and profeſſors of it, and miniſters of the word, without the grace of God; they are of no uſe, but hurtful to the church, and to the world; theſe phraſes are left out in the Perſic and Ethiopic verſions: but men caſt it out; into the ſtreets, as entirely uſeleſs: and ſo ſuch graceleſs profeſſors and miniſters, are to be caſt out of the churches of Chriſt now, and will be excluded the kingdom of heaven hereafter: he that hath ears to hear, let him hear; this being a point of great importance and conſequence; ſee the note on Matt. xi. 15.

CHAP. XV.

Ver. 1. THEN drew near to him, &c.] To Jeſus, as the Perſic and Ethiopic verſions expreſs it: this was on the ſabbath-day, and either when he was in the Phariſees houſe, where he was invited to dinner, ch. xiv. 1. or rather when he came out of it, when the multitude, who could not come near him whilſt there, took the opportunity of gathering about him; even all the publicans and ſinners; whom the Phariſee would not admit into his houſe, it being contrary to their traditions to eat, and drink, and converſe with perſons of ſuch an infamous character; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 10, 11. The word all is omitted in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions; but the Arabic verſion has it, and the Greek copies; and ſignifies that there were a very large number of them, even all that were in that place, and in the adjacent cities and towns, that got together for to hear him; or from him, as the Arabic verſion; or doctrine from him, as the Perſic verſion adds: theſe having heard much of him; and it may be, might be under ſome remorſe of conſcience on account of their vicious lives, came to hear him preach.

Ver. 2. And the Phariſees and Scribes murmured, &c.] When they ſaw the eaſy acceſs theſe wicked men had to Chriſt; and that he ſtopped and ſtaid with them, and very freely imparted inſtructions to them: ſaying, this man receiveth ſinners. The Perſic verſion reads, publicans and ſinners, as in the preceding verſe: the word man is not in the original text, 'tis only this; which is to be underſtood not by way of eminence, as this great perſon, this prophet, this maſter in Iſrael; but by way of diminution and reproach, this fellow; as it is ſometimes ſupplied: the word man may be very rightly inſerted, for they took him to be a mere man; tho' it is certain he was more than a man, even the true and mighty God; and therefore was able to ſave thoſe ſinners that came to him: and great condeſcenſion and grace did he ſhow in receiving them who were ſinners, not only by nature, but by practice; and not merely guilty of common infirmities, but were notorious ſinners, covetous, extortioners, oppreſſors of the poor, and very debauched perſons; and ſuch as theſe Chriſt receives: hence no man ſhould be diſcouraged from coming to Chriſt, on account of ſin; all that do come to him, ſhould come as ſinners, for he receives them as ſuch; nor does he receive any for any worthineſs there is in them: theſe perſons he received firſt at his Father's hand, as he did all the elect, as his portion, and to be preſerved and ſaved by him; with all gifts, grace, bleſſings, and promiſes for them; and in conſequence of this, he receives them upon their coming to him as ſinners, into his open love and affection, into his arms; which denotes communion and protection; into his houſe and family, and not only to hear him preach, or preached, but to converſe and eat with him at his table, and even to live by faith upon him; and when he has freed them from all their ſins, he'll receive them to himſelf in glory. And there is the greateſt reaſon imaginable to believe, that Chriſt ſtill does, and will receive ſinners; ſince he came to ſave the chief of ſinners; and has bore their ſins, and died for them; and now makes interceſſion for tranſgreſſors; and by the miniſters of the word calls ſinners to repentance. And eateth with them; as he did in the houſes of Matthew the publican, and of Zaccheus; ſee Matt. ix. 10. Luke xix. 7. each of which occaſioned great murmurings among the Phariſees; and who therefore traduced him as a friend of publicans and ſinners; and he is indeed ſo in the beſt ſenſe: and not only did he eat with them corporally, but in a ſpiritual ſenſe, as he ſtill does; admitting them into his houſe to eat of the proviſions of it, to live on him the bread of life, to ſup with him, and he with them; and feeding and delighting himſelf in the exerciſe of thoſe graces, which he himſelf is the donor and author of, in them.

Ver. 3. And he ſpake this parable unto them, &c.] To the Phariſees, for their conviction and confutation; and to the publicans and ſinners for their encouragement; and in vindication of himſelf; and not only this, but the other two, concerning the loſt piece of money, and the prodigal ſon, which were ſaid at this time, and on the ſame occaſion; ſaying, as follows,

Ver. 4. What man of you having an hundred ſheep, &c.] A flock of ſheep, conſiſting of ſuch a number; ſee the note on Matt. xviii. 12. if he loſe one of them, by ſtraying from the flock, doth not leave the ninety and nine in the wilderneſs, upon the common where they were feeding, and go after that which is loſt until he find it? by which parable Chriſt vindicates his conduct in converſing with ſinners, and neglecting the Scribes and Phariſees; for if it was right for an owner of an hundred ſheep, when he had loſt one of them, to leave all the reſt, and go in ſearch after that one till he had found it; then it was right in Chriſt to do what he did. The Jewiſh nation ſeems to be deſigned by the hundred ſheep, who are frequently repreſented as a flock of ſheep, Pſ. lxxvii. 20. and xcv. 7. and c. 3. Ezek. xxxiv. 2, 3, 30, 31. which are divided into ninety-nine, and one: for by the ninety-nine left in the wilderneſs, cannot be meant angels, as ſome have thought; for angels are never called ſheep; and beſides, the one loſt ſheep is of the ſame kind with the ninety and nine; and, according to this ſenſe, muſt deſign an angel, or angels likewiſe; whereas none of the fallen angels are ſought up, recovered, and ſaved. Moreover, when Chriſt became incarnate, he did not leave the angels; they accompanied and attended him in his ſtate of humiliation; and much leſs in a wilderneſs, and ſtill leſs can heaven be ſo called; to which may be added, that the angels in heaven are diſtinguiſhed from the ninety-nine, as well as from the one loſt ſheep in ver. 7, 10. nor can elect men be deſigned by them, who are already called by grace, whether they be in heaven or on earth; for tho' they in heaven are the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect, and are in a ſtate that need no repentance, yet it can't be ſaid of them, that they went not aſtray, as in Matt. xviii. 13. for all God's people have been like ſheep going aſtray, and were as ſuch conſidered when Chriſt was here on earth, and bore their ſins; and eſpecially thoſe could never be ſaid to be left in a wilderneſs: nor the ſaints on earth; for tho' they are juſt perſons, being juſtified by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, yet they daily need repentance; nor can it be ſaid of them that they went not aſtray; nor are they left by Chriſt in the wilderneſs of this world; nor can there be more joy in heaven over one repenting ſinner, than over theſe; but the ſelf-righteous Scribes and Phariſees, that murmured at our Lord's receiving ſinners, are meant. Theſe were ſheep, at leaſt were in ſheeps cloathing; they were nominal profeſſors, and belonged to the Jewiſh fold, or national church-ſtate; their number was ninety-nine, to one; which is not be taken ſtrictly, as though only one in a hundred of them were ſaved; but it ſhows, that the greater part of the Jews were of this ſort. The dividing of an hundred after this manner, into ninety-nine and one, was uſual with the Jews; ſo in their traditions [p], concerning diſtributing filberts to the poor, "R. "Simeon ſays, if ninety-nine ſay divide, and one ſays "ſpoil, or ſcatter, they hearken to him, becauſe "he ſpeaks according to the conſtitution; but of "a vine and date, it is not ſo: if ninety and nine "ſay ſpoil, and one ſays divide, they hearken to "him, for he ſpeaks according to the conſtitution." And elſewhere [q] they ſay, "ninety and nine die by "an (evil) eye, and one by the hand of heaven; "R. Chanina and Samuel, both of them ſay, ninety and nine die by cold, and one by the hand of "heaven——R. Samuel bar Nachman, in the name "of R. Jonathan ſays, ninety and nine die by heat, "and one by the hand of heaven; and the Rabbans ſay, ninety and nine die by tranſgreſſion, and "one by the hand of heaven——Says R. Eleazar, "ninety and nine die by bitterneſs, and one by the "hand of heaven." And in another place [r] it is ſaid, "ninety and nine die by an evil eye, and one "by the way of the earth;" in the common way: once more it is ſaid [s], "of the hundred cries which "a woman cries, when ſhe ſits upon the ſtool (in "travail,) ninety and nine are for death, and one "for life." And this way of ſpeaking alſo prevailed in other eaſtern nations, as in Arabia; in the Alcoran of Mahomet [t] there is ſuch an expreſſion as this; "this my brother had ninety nine ſheep, and "I had only one ewe." The one loſt ſheep in this parable, though it may include all the elect of God, and be accommodated to a ſingle elect ſinner, yet chiefly reſpects the choſen of God among the Jews; which were very few, a remnant according to the election of grace; and which lay among the profane part of them, the publicans and ſinners, who are particularly pointed out here, as appears from the context: theſe are called ſheep, even before converſion; not becauſe they had the agreeable properties of ſheep, for they were all the reverſe; nor could ſome things be ſaid of them before as after, as, that they heard the voice of Chriſt, and followed him; nor becauſe they were unprejudiced againſt, and prediſpoſed to receive the Goſpel: but they are ſo called by anticipation, becauſe they would be ſo; or rather in virtue of electing grace, by which they were choſen, and ſeparated from others, and made the care and charge of Chriſt the great ſhepherd, and were the ſheep of his hand: theſe are repreſented as going aſtray from the ſhepherd, and from the fold, and out of the right way; and who being like ſheep, ſtupid and inſenſible of their danger, wander about, and never return of themſelves till they are returned to, and by the great ſhepherd and biſhop of ſouls. And in their unregenerate eſtate they are loſt ſheep, not irretrievably and eternally loſt, as the world's goats; for tho' they are loſt in Adam, yet not in Chriſt; and tho' loſt in themſelves, ſo as there is no poſſibility of ever recovering and ſaving themſelves; yet as they were preſerved in Chriſt, they are recovered and ſaved by him; who is the owner and proprietor of the whole flock, of all the hundred ſheep, of the whole body of the Jewiſh nation; who were his by creation, and by being choſen from, and above all other people; and were diſtinguiſhed by peculiar favours, had the Shekinah, and preſence of God among them, and his worſhip, word, and ordinances. Chriſt was peculiarly promiſed to them, and were born of them; and was a miniſter of the circumciſion, being ſent only to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael: though the ninety and nine were not his ſheep in the moſt peculiar ſenſe, or in ſuch ſenſe as the one loſt ſheep, which were his by his Father's gift, as all the elect are; hence he knows them, calls them, and receives them, and keeps them, and highly values them: he had them, they were put into his hands, he took the care and charge of them, he undertook to bring them in, to feed them, to die for them, and ſave them; and they are his by purchaſe, and he aſſerts his right to them, by calling them by his grace, and will diſtinguiſh them as his own, at the laſt day: and now, becauſe of the different intereſt Chriſt has in the ninety and nine, and the one, different regards are had to them; the ninety and nine, the ſelf-righteous Scribes and Phariſees, he leaves in the wilderneſs, in a ſtate of unregeneracy; ſo called, becauſe in thoſe that are in ſuch a ſtate, nothing is ſown or planted, what grows there is natural; there's no ſeed of grace, no plants of pleaſure, no engrafted word, no fruits of righteouſneſs, nothing but thorns and briars, of ſins and corruptions: and alſo becauſe of the want of proviſions; no bread of life, nor water of life; no ſincere milk of the word, no breaſts of conſolation; nothing but huſks, and bread of deceit: and it is like a wilderneſs, becauſe of ſolitarineſs; ſuch as are in this ſtate, are alone, without God, and Chriſt, and the bleſſed Spirit; they are aliens from the people of God, and converſe with none but wicked men, comparable to ſavage beaſts of the deſart: moreover, it may be ſo called, becauſe of the various perplexing croſs ways in it; the ways of ſin are many, and crooked and dark; and indeed, ſuch are the religious ways of unregenerate men: to which may be added, that it bears this name, becauſe of the danger of it; for ſuch as are in it, are expoſed to beaſts of prey; particularly to ſatan, the red dragon, and roaring lion; and to pits, gins, and ſnares, to hell-fire, deſtruction, and miſery. Chriſt's leaving perſons in ſuch a ſtate, ſuppoſes they were in it, antecedent to their being left: man was originally placed in a garden, ſinning againſt God, he forfeited his happy ſituation, and was drove out from it; and wandering from God, he fell into this wilderneſs ſtate. Chriſt does not lead any into it, but leaves them in it; which is done in conſequence of his father's act of preterition, or paſſing them by when he choſe others; and this he does, when he does not call them by his grace, as he does others; does not manure, till, and cultivate them as he does his own huſbandry and vines; makes no proviſion of food and paſture for them; leaves them to themſelves, and without the enjoyment of himſelf; to follow their own ways, without a guide, and to beaſts of prey without a guard. Now the perſons he thus leaves are ſuch whom the father has left out in his choice and covenant; and who left Chriſt, rejected and deſpiſed him; and were perſons that made great pretenſions to religion, were righteous in their own eyes; and in their own account never went aſtray, nor needed repentance. On the other hand, the one loſt ſheep, the choſen of God among publicans and ſinners, a ſpecial regard is had to them: Chriſt goes after that which is loſt until he find it; not after all mankind; for tho' they are all loſt, yet they are not all redeemed by Chriſt; nor are they made ſenſible of their loſt condition; nor effectually called by grace; nor brought home: nor does he go after the ninety-nine, for Chriſt came not to call the righteous; tho' theſe were loſt, and irretrievably too, yet they were not ſenſible of their condition: but God's elect among the Jews are the perſons here ſaid to be loſt; to ſhew their common condition with the reſt of mankind; to expreſs the love of Chriſt towards them the more; and to magnify the riches of his grace in their ſalvation: theſe he went after in redemption, he came forth from his father, and came down from heaven for their ſakes; he died to gather them together, and repreſented them all in his ſufferings and death; he bore all their ſins, and made reconciliation for them, and procured the full pardon of them; he ſatisfied the law and juſtice of God, wrought out an everlaſting righteouſneſs, and obtained eternal redemption, and a complete ſalvation for them: and he went after them in effectual vocation; before converſion an elect ſinner is without Chriſt, and goes aſtray from him; nor does he ever come to Chriſt till Chriſt comes after him, and lays hold upon him; he ſends his miniſters after ſuch, and his Spirit into them, and comes himſelf, and takes poſſeſſion of them. To find his loſt ſheep by redeeming grace he came into this world, a world of wickedneſs, ſorrow, and trouble, of cruelty, and barbarity; and the reaſon of his coming here was, becauſe his ſheep were here; he came after them, and on their account: and to find them by effectual calling, he ſtill comes into the world by his word and Spirit; God's elect are in the world, Chriſt ſends his Goſpel into it, and by his Spirit and grace comes and ſeparates them from the men of it. In Matt. xviii. 12. he is ſaid to go into the mountains after his loſt ſheep; which, with reſpect to redemption, may denote the difficulties that lay in the way of it; ſuch as his incarnation, obedience, ſufferings, and death, and the many enemies he had to grapple with and ſubdue; and with reſpect to calling-grace, may expreſs the ſtate and condition God's elect are in by nature, being on the mountains of ſin, of Sinai, of the law, and of their own righteouſneſs. Now Chriſt goes after them till he finds them; which denotes continuance, his indefatigable induſtry and diligence, his reſolution and courage, and his ſucceſs. The reaſons why he thus goes after them are not their number, for they are the feweſt of all; nor their nature, which is no better than others; nor any previous diſpoſitions, or good characters, for thoſe deſigned here were publicans and ſinners; nor any future improvements and ſervice by them, for they were the baſe and fooliſh things of this world; nor becauſe near at hand, and ſo eaſily looked up, for they were afar off; but becauſe of his love to them, and the relation between them as ſhepherd and ſheep; and becauſe of his father's will, and his own obligation by covenant; and becauſe of his own intereſt and glory.

[t] C. 38.

Ver. 5. And when he hath found it, &c.] In a ſad plight and condition; ſo Chriſt finds his ſheep in a moſt deſolate one, in a pit, in the mire and clay of nature; in the paw of the roaring lion, ſatan; helpleſs, hopeleſs, wretched, miſerable, and naked; and not only ſtarving, famiſhing, and dying, but even dead in treſpaſſes and ſins: and finding them with reſpect to redemption, deſigns his procuring eternal ſalvation for them; and with regard to vocation, his laying hold upon them by his Spirit and grace, and bringing them to a ſenſe of themſelves, and to the knowledge of himſelf. There are ſeveral things which Chriſt does to his ſheep when he has found them, which are not here expreſſed, but underſtood: finding them dead in ſin he ſpeaks life into them; he calls them by name, and aſſerts his property in them; he takes them out of the pit of nature; he reſcues them out of the hands of ſatan; he waſhes them from their filthineſs, and heals all their diſeaſes; he feeds and refreſhes them; he covers them with his robe of righteouſneſs; he beautifies and adorns them, and brings them home in the manner after deſcribed: he layeth it on his ſhoulders; he does not put them on their own legs to go alone; nor does he lead them, and much leſs drive them before him; but he takes them up in his arms, and lays them on his ſhoulders: which ſhows the paſſiveneſs of men in converſion, and their weakneſs and impotency to any thing that is ſpiritually good of themſelves; they can't think a good thought, nor do a good action, and ſtill leſs begin and carry on the work of grace in their hearts; as alſo the ſtrength of Chriſt in bearing and carrying them, as he does, thro' all afflictions, temptations, and difficulties, ſafe to glory; and likewiſe his great love and affection for them; he loved them before the world began, and he ſhewed it in dying for them, and manifeſts it to them, when he calls them by his grace: and this alſo expreſſes the ſafety of his ſheep; for being on him, they are in no danger from the law and juſtice of God; nor from ſatan, or any other enemy; nor of a final and total falling away: and moreover this ſignifies the ſpiritual eaſe and reſt which ſuch have in Chriſt: the manner in which Chriſt the ſhepherd carries them, having found them, and laid them on his ſhoulders, is rejoicing; not upbraiding them with going aſtray; nor complaining of, or groaning under the burden; but rejoicing in a kind of triumph, and carrying them as a trophy of victory, and a ſpoil obtained.

Ver. 6. And when he cometh home, &c.] The houſe, or home, to which Chriſt comes and brings thither his loſt ſheep on his ſhoulders when found, is either the church of God, which is Chriſt's houſe and home, and into which he himſelf comes; it is his by gift and purchaſe, and which he has built, and here comes and dwells as a ſon over it, as king in it, and as prieſt and prophet there, and as the maſter of it; and hither he brings his people when he has called them by his grace, where they have a good fold and green paſtures, and where they delight to be; or elſe heaven is this home, which is an houſe of God's building, not made with hands, eternal in the heavens; and which is Chriſt's Father's houſe, and his own houſe and home, and alſo the ſaints houſe and home, whither they are all brought by Chriſt; for they can't go there alone, and of themſelves: they are brought by the power of divine grace as trophies of it, as to their own home; and ſuch that Chriſt takes into his arms, and on his ſhoulders, he never drops them till he has brought them ſafe to heaven: he calleth together his friends and neighbours: the friends of Chriſt are the ſaints, ſo called, becauſe of their ſhare in his friendſhip to them; ſhown by his becoming a ſurety for them; by his aſſuming their nature, and dying in their room and ſtead; by his paying their debts, and redeeming their perſons; by his interceſſion for them, and preparing a place for them in his Father's houſe; by ſupplying all their wants, and by his kind and comfortable viſits to them; by his free and familiar converſes with them, and by unfolding his ſecrets, and giving wholeſome advice and counſel to them: as alſo on account of their bearing and ſhewing friendſhip to him; as by their great affection to his perſon; by their attachment to his cauſe and intereſt; by their ſtrict regard to his Goſpel, and the truths of it; and by their diligent obſervance of his commands and ordinances; and by their regard to his people, and diſregard to his enemies: and theſe are alſo Chriſt's neighbours, they dwell near to each other; he dwells in them, and they in him; they love each other as themſelves, and perform every office chearfully in love to one another: moreover, the angels may be meant by the friends and neighbours of Chriſt, as may be collected from ver. 10. theſe are his friends whom he has ſhown himſelf friendly to, in the confirmation of them in the ſtate in which they were created; in the choice of them to eternal happineſs; and in being an head of protection to them, as well as of eminence over them: and theſe are friendly to him; as they were at his incarnation, and when tempted in the wilderneſs, and when in an agony in the garden, and at his reſurrection and aſcenſion; and will attend him at his ſecond coming: and they are friendly to his; are miniſtring ſpirits to them, rejoice at their converſion, encamp about them in life, and at death carry their departed ſouls to heaven: and theſe are likewiſe his neighbours; their habitation is in heaven where he is, and they always behold the face of his father there, and will come along with him when he appears a ſecond time. Now ſaints are called together to hear what great things Chriſt has done for poor ſinners when he brings them to Zion; and angels are alſo made acquainted with their converſion; and both ſaints and angels will be called together, when the ſheep of Chriſt ſhall be brought home to glory. Saying unto them, rejoice with me, for I have found my ſheep which was loſt: the joy of Chriſt, and his friends, is mutual on this occaſion; Chriſt rejoices himſelf, and his friends with him: he rejoiced in his people from everlaſting; they were the objects of his Father's love, and of his own; and he took delight in them, as he ſaw them in the glaſs of his Father's purpoſes, as they were choſen in him, and given to him; and this joy in them ſtill continued, notwithſtanding their fall in Adam, and their own actual ſins and tranſgreſſions; but whereas they were loſt in the fall, and by their own ſins, there were ſome new expreſſions of joy upon Chriſt's finding them in redemption: it was with the utmoſt pleaſure he engaged in that work; and with the greateſt readineſs did he come into the world to do it; and he went thro' it with great delight; he was, as it were, ſtraitned until it was accompliſhed; the conſideration of it made him eaſy under the apprehenſions of what he was to endure, and ſupported him under his moſt dolorous ſufferings; his riſing again from the dead as the repreſentative of his people, filled him with gladneſs, and he aſcended to heaven in a triumph: but yet ſtill theſe perſons, tho' redeemed, are in a loſt eſtate with reſpect to themſelves; wherefore in converſion there are freſh breakings forth of joy in Chriſt; for that is the day of his open eſpouſals to them, and ſo the day of the gladneſs of his heart; when he ſees of the travail of his ſoul with ſatisfaction; and large expreſſions of love are made to him; and his people are brought to ſome conformity to him: and communion with him, but ſtill they are not yet at home; wherefore with joy he brings them into his church, which is his houſe, and their home, where he rejoices over them to do them good; and will expreſs ſtill more joy in the new Jeruſalem church-ſtate, and ſtill more when he ſhall have brought them to glory, and have preſented them to himſelf, and to his Father, which will be done with exceeding joy. Chriſt's friends and neighbours, his ſaints and people, alſo rejoice at the converſion of a ſinner; becauſe the glory of the Father, Son, and Spirit, is diſplayed therein; and becauſe ſatan has loſt his prey, and Chriſt has got a new ſubject; and becauſe of the grace of God beſtowed upon the ſinner, and the addition that is made to their number; particularly this is matter of joy to the miniſters of the Goſpel; and angels alſo rejoice at it, becauſe of the glory of God that is advanced thereby.

Ver. 7. I ſay unto you, that likewiſe joy ſhall be in heaven, &c.] In the church below, and among the members of it; which is ſometimes called heaven, eſpecially in the book of the Revelations; or in heaven above, and among the angels there; ſee ver. 10. Over one ſinner that repenteth; for the joy in heaven, is not over ſinners as ſuch; for as ſuch, they are not grateful to God, nor to Chriſt, nor to the angels, nor to ſaints; only ſinners delight in each other, as ſuch; but as repenting ſinners, who are truly ſo: and theſe are not ſuch, who only legally and outwardly repent; nor all that declare a ſenſe of ſin; or that are externally ſorry for it; or are terrified about it, and ſhed tears on account of it; or that ceaſe from groſſer ſins of life, and outwardly reform: but ſuch who repent in an evangelical way; who are turned to God, and are inſtructed by his Spirit; who believe in Chriſt, and have views, at leaſt hopes, of pardon through his blood; and have the love of God and Chriſt, ſhed abroad in their hearts; from whence ariſe a true ſight and ſenſe of ſin, a godly ſorrow for it, an hearty loathing of it, ſhame on account of it, an ingenuous confeſſion, and a real forſaking of it. Now the reaſon why there is joy in heaven over ſuch perſons is, becauſe without ſuch a repentance, they muſt periſh; and by this they appear to be openly in a ſtate of grace; and become proper ſubjects of the ordinances of Chriſt; and this repentance is unto life and ſalvation; or theſe are inſeparably connected with it: and this joy is abundantly more, than over ninety and nine juſt perſons, which need no repentance; by whom are meant, either ſuch who are really righteous perſons; not naturally and of themſelves, nor legally by the deeds of the law, but by the imputation of Chriſt's righteouſneſs to them: and who need no repentance to be added to their righteouſneſs, it being perfect of itſelf; nor the grace and principle of repentance, becauſe they have it, and it can't be loſt; or change of life and manners, which is not to be ſeen in ſuch: and the more joy over repenting ſinners, than over theſe is, becauſe the ſalvation of the one is before certain to them, and the other is unexpected: but to this ſenſe it may be objected, that ſaints, even righteous perſons, need frequent converſions, and the continual exerciſe of the grace of repentance; nor does it ſeem feaſible, that there ſhould be more joy over a repenting ſinner, than over one, whoſe life, through grace, is a ſeries of righteouſneſs: rather therefore, ſuch who ſeem to be juſt, or are ſo in their own opinion, are here meant; for only ſuch ſort of righteous perſons and repenting ſinners, are oppoſed to each other, as in Matt. ix. 13. moreover, the occaſion and ſcope of the parable, determines this to be the ſenſe; the Scribes and Phariſees, that murmured at Chriſt's receiving ſinners, are the ninety and nine juſt perſons, who were only outwardly righteous before men, and truſted in themſelves that they were righteous, perfectly righteous, and without ſin, and ſo ſtood in no need of repentance for it; now there is more joy in heaven over one repenting ſinner, than over all theſe: hence learn, that a ſelf-righteous perſon, is an impenitent one; that a repenting ſinner, is more regarded in heaven, than a ſelf-righteous man: our Lord here ſeems to have regard to a conceit of the Jews, who diſtinguiſh between penitents that were allowed to be righteous, and ſuch who never were guilty of any notorious crime, and ſo were perfectly righteous, and needed no repentance, and were preferred to penitent ſinners: ſome of them ſay[u], that "the prophets did not propheſy (good things and comforts,) but, לבעלי תשובה, to penitents; but as for, צדיקים גמורים, the perfect righteous, to them belongs that, eye hath not ſeen, O God, beſides thee.——But R. Abbu ſays, "the place in which penitents ſtand, the perfect righteous do not ſtand." Though Maimonides ſeems[w] to underſtand this, as if it gave the preference to penitents, his words are theſe; "let not a penitent man imagine that he is afar off from the excellency, or degree of the righteous, becauſe of the ſins and iniquities he has committed, the thing is not ſo; but he is beloved and deſired before the Creator, as if he had never ſinned; for his reward is great; for lo, he hath taſted the taſte of ſin, and hath ſeparated from it, and hath ſubdued his evil imagination: the wiſe men ſay, the place where penitents ſtand, the perfect righteous cannot ſtand; which is as if it was ſaid, their degree or excellency is greater, than thoſe who never ſinned, becauſe they have ſubdued their imagination more than they." However, theſe inſtances, with others that might be produced ſhew, that the Jews had a notion of ſome men, being perfectly righteous and without ſin; which they oppoſe to penitent ſinners, and which our Lord here deſigns, and ſeems to deſcribe in their own language, and ſerves to confirm the ſenſe given; ſee the note on Heb. xii. 23.

Ver. 8. Either what woman, having ten pieces of ſilver, &c.] Or drachma's; a drachma was the fourth part of a ſhekel, and of the ſame value with a Roman penny; and was worth of our money, ſeven-pence halfpenny; ſo that the ten pieces amounted to ſix ſhillings, and three-pence; the Ethiopic verſion renders it, ten rings: this parable is delivered, with the ſame view as the former; the ſcope and deſign of them are alike, being occaſioned by the ſame circumſtance, only the paſſiveneſs of a ſinner in converſion, is here more fully ſignified; who can contribute no more to the firſt act of converſion, which is purely God's work, than a loſt piece of ſilver to its being found: by the ten pieces of ſilver are deſigned, all the Jews, or the whole body of that people; as they were before ſignified, by the hundred ſheep; they having been God's peculiar treaſure, though they were now in general become reprobate ſilver: and by the woman the proprietor of them, is meant Chriſt; and in what ſenſe he was the owner of them, has been ſhown on ver. 4. The nine pieces deſign the Scribes and Phariſees; and the one loſt piece, expreſſed in the next clauſe, if ſhe loſe one piece, intends the elect among the Jews, and who chiefly conſiſted of publicans and ſinners; and the regard had to theſe, is ſignified by the following expreſſions, doth not light a candle: by which is meant, not the light of nature or reaſon in man; for though this is called a candle, and is of Chriſt's lighting, yet not that by which he looks up his loſt people, for this is become very dim: and though by it men may know there is a God, and the difference between moral good and evil, by it they can't come at the knowledge of things ſpiritual; as of God in Chriſt, of the ſin of nature, and of the plague of the heart; nor of the way of ſalvation by Chriſt, nor of the work of the Spirit, and the nature and need of it; nor of the ſcriptures of truth, and of the doctrines of the Goſpel, nor of the things of another world: neither is the law of Moſes intended; for though there was light by it into the knowledge of ſin, yet not clear; and though the ceremonial law was a ſhadow of Chriſt, and did give ſome inſtructions about him, and the doctrines of the Goſpel, and bleſſings of grace, yet but very obſcure hints: but by this candle is meant, the Goſpel itſelf; which, like a candle, is lighted up in the evening of the world; and may be removed, as it ſometimes is, from place to place; and where it is ſet, and bleſſed, it gives light, and is uſeful both to work and walk by; it does not always burn alike clear, or is always held forth in the ſame purity; and it will give the greateſt light at laſt, as a candle does, even at the end of the world: now Chriſt is the lighter of this, and from him it has all its light, who is the maker of it; he keeps it light, and by it he looks up and finds out his elect ones; though this is not a direction to him, who perfectly knows who they are, and where they be, but is rather a light to them, that they may know and find him: and ſweep the houſe; which phraſe ſometimes deſigns outward reformation, as in Matt. xii. 44. and ſometimes God's judgments upon a people, as in Iſa. xiv. 23. but here the preaching of the Goſpel, and the power that goes along with it, to the effectual vocation of the elect: the houſe in which Chriſt's loſt piece of ſilver, or his choſen ones were, may deſign the nation of the Jews, who are often called the houſe of Iſrael; this was a houſe of God's building and chuſing, and where he dwelt; and among theſe people for a long time, God's elect lay, though all of them were not ſo; and about this time the Lord was about to break up houſe-keeping with them; yet as there were ſome few among them, that were to be looked up and called, therefore this houſe muſt be ſwept, as it was by the miniſtry of John the Baptiſt, by Chriſt himſelf, and by his apoſtles: and this ſuggeſts, what muſt be the ſtate and condition of God's elect, being in this houſe, before it was ſwept, and they found out; they were out of ſight, in great obſcurity and darkneſs, with a deal of rubbiſh and dirt upon them, and pollution in them; and impotent to that which is good, and to their own recovery, and yet capable of being recovered: and this phraſe hints at the power and efficacy of divine grace, that goes along with the word, in looking up and finding loſt ſinners; in enlightning their dark minds, quickening them, being dead in ſin, taking away their ſtony hearts, regenerating them, enſtamping the divine image upon them, removing every thing from them they truſted in, and working faith in them, to look to, and believe in Chriſt: and as in ſweeping of an houſe, a great ſtir is made, a duſt raiſed, and things are moved out of their place; ſo by the preaching of the Goſpel, an uproar is made in the ſinner himſelf; in his conſcience, which is filled with a horrible ſight of ſin; which is very loathſome, and cauſes uneaſy reflections, fills with ſhame and confuſion, and greatly burdens and diſtreſſes, and with the terrors of the law, and with dreadful apprehenſions of hell and damnation; in his will there's a reluctancy to part with ſinful luſts and pleaſures, with ſinful companions, and with his own righteouſneſs, and to be ſaved by Chriſt alone, and to ſerve him, and bear his croſs; and in his underſtanding, things appear in a different light than they before did: and great ſtir and oppoſition is made by ſatan, to hinder the preaching of the Goſpel, as much as in him lies, and perſons from coming to hear it; and if they do, he endeavours to hinder, by catching it from them, or diverting them from that; by inſinuating, 'tis either too ſoon or too late, to mind religion; or that ſin is either ſo great that it can't be forgiven, or ſo trivial, that a few prayers, tears, alms-deeds, &c. will make amends for it; by diſtreſſing them about their election, or about the willingneſs of Chriſt to ſave them; or by ſtirring up others to diſſuade and diſcourage them. Moreover, when the Goſpel is preached in purity and with power, and ſouls are converted, there is a great ſtir and uproar in the world, and among the men of it; becauſe the doctrines of it are fooliſhneſs, and ſtrange things to them; and oppoſe their ſenſe of things, and ſtrip them of what is valuable; and men are hereby diſtinguiſhed from them, and taken from among them: and there is alſo a ſtir and an uproar made by it, among carnal profeſſors of religion, as there was at this time among the Scribes and Phariſees; and all this buſtle is made, for the ſake of a ſingle piece of money: and ſeek diligently till ſhe find it? not only a light is ſet up, an hand of power put forth in uſing the beſom, but a quick ſharp eye, looks out for the piece of ſilver: this diligent ſeeking and finding, are to be underſtood not of the grace of Chriſt in redemption; nor of his reſtoring backſliders; but of his converting ſinners, through the preaching of the Goſpel, both in his own perſon, and by his miniſters, his Spirit making their miniſtrations effectual: the diligence, care, and circumſpection of Chriſt, to find out loſt ſinners, while the Goſpel is preaching, are here ſignified: 'tis not the preacher that looks out for them, though he that is a faithful miniſter of the word, performs his office diligently and carefully, and he deſires nothing more earneſtly than the converſion of ſinners; but then he knows not who are, and who are not the elect of God, and is ignorant of what Chriſt is doing, whilſt he is preaching: Chriſt's eye is upon his loſt piece; he perfectly knows the perſons of the elect, as they are his Father's choice, and his gift to him; he knew them in the counſel of peace, and covenant of grace, in the fall of Adam, and their natural eſtate; he knows the places where they all are, and the time when they are to be converted; and diſtinguiſhes them amidſt all the filth that attends them, and the crowd among which they are; and he continues ſeeking, till he finds them; which ſhews the perpetuity of the Goſpel miniſtry, the indefatigableneſs of Chriſt, and his ſure and certain ſucceſs: the reaſons of all this care and diligence, are his love to them, his propriety in them, his Father's will, and his own engagement; and becauſe they muſt be for ever loſt, did he not ſeek after them.

Ver. 9. And when ſhe hath found it, ſhe calleth her friends, &c.] See the note on ver. 6. a parable ſomewhat like to this, the Jews[x] have on thoſe words in Prov. ii. 4. If thou ſeekeſt her as ſilver, &c. "it is like to a man that has loſt a ſhekel, (a piece of money) or beryll rings, within his houſe; he lights up many lamps and many candles, until he lights on them; and lo, theſe things much more: for if a man for the things of the temporary life of this world, lights many lamps and candles, until he lights upon them and finds them; the words of the law, ſince they are the life of this world, and the life of the world to come, ſhouldſt thou not ſearch after them as for hidden treaſure?"

Ver. 10. Likewiſe I ſay unto you, &c.] As before, in ver. 7. there is joy in the preſence of the angels of God; who are the friends and neighbours of Chriſt; ſee the note on ver. 6. over one ſinner that repenteth; which they have knowledge of, either by immediate revelation from God, or by obſervation in the church where they attend: the reaſon of this joy is, becauſe there is one reſcued out of the hands of ſatan and his angels, between whom and them, there is an implacable enmity; and becauſe another ſubject is added to Chriſt's kingdom, and by which it is enlarged, the proſperity of which they greatly deſire; and becauſe another heir is born in that family, to which they belong, and they have another ſocial worſhipper with them: and this joy is ſaid to be in the preſence of them; and ſo may deſign the joy of others, as of Father, Son, and Spirit, which is in their ſight and knowledge; and alſo the joy there is among themſelves;

Ver. 11. And he ſaid, &c.] The Syriac and Perſic verſions read, and Jeſus ſaid again; he added another parable to the two former, at the ſame time, of the ſame import, with the ſame view, and on the ſame occaſion; ſetting forth the different characters of the Scribes and Phariſees, and of the publicans and ſinners; and what little reaſon the one had to murmur, at his converſation with the other: a certain man had two ſons; by the certain man is meant, God the Father: God indeed is not a man, nor is he to be repreſented by any human image; but inaſmuch as man is the image of God, God is ſometimes compared to man, and is called a man of war, an huſbandman, &c. which no ways contradict his being a ſpirit; and true it is, that the ſecond perſon only aſſumed human nature; and therefore, whenever a divine perſon is ſpoken of as man, Chriſt is commonly intended: but though the Father never appeared in an human form, yet he ſeems here to be deſigned; becauſe the character of a father, and having ſons, more properly belong to him; and the reception of ſinners, and the forgiveneſs of them for Chriſt's ſake, agree with him: and beſides, Chriſt is diſtinguiſhed from the Father in this parable; and he and his bleſſings of grace, are ſignified by other things: by the two ſons are meant, not angels and men, as that angels are the elder, and men the younger ſon; for though angels are called the ſons of God, and may be ſaid to be elder than men, with reſpect to creation; and good angels may be ſaid to have been ever with God, and always ſerving him, and never ſinned againſt him; yet they are never called the brethren of men, nor men their brethren; and beſides, are never angry at the return and reception of repenting ſinners; for this would be to repreſent them juſt the reverſe of what they are ſaid to be, in the preceding verſe: nor are the Jews and Gentiles here intended, which is the more received and general ſenſe of the parable: thoſe who go this way, ſuppoſe the Jews to be the elder brother; and indeed they were ſo, with reſpect to external privileges; and were with God, being his houſhold and family; all he had were theirs, that was external; and the character of the elder brother throughout the parable, agrees with the far greater part of that nation; and it is certain, that they did reſent the calling of the Gentiles: and theſe ſuppoſe the Gentiles to be the younger brother, who indeed were brought into a church-ſtate, later than the Jews; and might be ſaid to be afar off, in a far country, and to have ſpent their ſubſtance in idolatry and wickedneſs; to have been in the utmoſt diſtreſs, and in the moſt deplorable condition: but to this ſenſe it may be objected, that the Goſpel was not as yet preached to the Gentiles; nor were they brought to repentance; nor were they openly received into the divine favour; nor as yet had the Jews murmured at, and reſented the kindneſs of God to them: rather ſtanding and fallen profeſſors, may be deſigned; ſince the former are very apt to carry it toward the latter, in like manner as the elder brother is repreſented in this parable, as carrying himſelf towards the younger: but the true ſenſe, and which the context and occaſion of the parable at once determine, is, that by the elder ſon are meant, the Scribes and Phariſees, and ſelf-righteous perſons, among the Jews; and by the younger, the publicans and ſinners among the ſame people; as it is eaſy to obſerve, the ſame are meant by the two ſons in the parable in Matt. xxi. 28—32. Now theſe are called the ſons of God, becauſe the Jews in general were ſo by national adoption; and the ſelf-righteous Phariſees looked upon themſelves as the children of God, and favourites of heaven, in a ſpecial ſenſe; and God's elect among them, even thoſe that lay among publicans and ſinners, were truly ſo, and that before converſion; for they were not only predeſtinated to the adoption of children, but were really taken into the relation of children, in the covenant of grace; and as ſuch were given to Chriſt, and conſidered by him, when he aſſumed their nature, and died for them; and are ſo antecedent to the ſpirit of adoption, who is ſent to witneſs their ſonſhip to them; and which is conſiſtent with their being children of wrath, as the deſcendants of Adam, and their being the children of God openly and manifeſtatively, by faith in Chriſt Jeſus.

Ver. 12. And the younger of them ſaid to his father, &c.] God's choſen ones among the publicans and ſinners, are fitly ſignified by the younger ſon, ſince man, as a ſinner, is younger than man as righteous; and ſince there are inſtances of God's choice of the younger, before the elder, as Jacob before Eſau, &c. and the characters and conduct of young men agree with God's elect, in a ſtate of nature; who are imprudent and ignorant, without any knowledge of divine and ſpiritual things, and of themſelves, their ſtate and condition, and of Chriſt, and ſalvation by him; and yet are conceited of themſelves, and fancy themſelves very wiſe and knowing, and capable of acting for themſelves, independent, and without any aſſiſtance or advice; don't care to be under reſtraints, withdraw from all yokes, and break all bands aſunder; and ſo become children of diſobedience, prone to every vice, and ſervants and ſlaves to every luſt; by which they are deceived, and in which they take a great deal of imaginary pleaſure; and are often envious and ſpiteful, and live in malice, hateful, and hating one another: the requeſt made by this younger ſon, is to his father; to God, who was his Father by creation, by providential care, and by national adoption, and by ſpecial grace; though as yet he knew it not, nor could he call him ſo in faith: many call God father, who ſhould not, and many that ſhould, do not: the requeſt follows; father, give me the portion of goods that falleth to me: this portion may be conſidered, either as internal or external; as internal, and ſuch who think the Gentiles are meant by the younger ſon, underſtand it of the light of nature, and of natural gifts and talents. The ancients generally interpret it, of man's free-will: it may intend natural knowledge in general, to which there is in man a natural deſire, and in which he is ſelf-ſufficient: or rather as external, ſuch as the outward bleſſings of life, food, raiment, health, &c. the honours, pleaſures, and riches of the world: the good things of this world belonged to men by right of creation, and according to the laws and dues of it, but have been all forfeited by the ſin of man; and yet this is a portion, which in the apprehenſions of men, of right belongs to them; and which ſuits their nature, which is carnal and worldly: and he divided unto them his living; natural gifts, external privileges, and worldly good things; which of all men in the earth, the Jewiſh nation ſhared; ſee Pſal. cxv. 16. and cvi. 15.

Ver. 13. And not many days after the younger ſon gathered all together, &c.] That his father had divided to him, all his goods and ſubſtance: as ſoon as a man has any internal ſubſtance, any conſiderable degree of natural knowledge, he immediately ſets out from God, and employs it againſt him, in reaſoning againſt him; againſt his being, his works, his providence, his purpoſes, his revelation, and will; as ſoon as a man has the exerciſe of his reaſon, as ſoon as he can think and ſpeak, nay, as ſoon as he is born, he goes aſtray from God, ſpeaking lies; and as ſoon as a wicked man has of this world, what his carnal heart deſires, he's for living independent of God, and his providence; he's for gathering together all for himſelf, in order to ſpend it on his luſts, and at a diſtance from his father, the father of his mercies, of whom he is not mindful; and to whom he ſays, depart from me, having no regard to his worſhip and ſervice, to his honour and glory, to his cauſe and intereſt: and took his journey into a far country; which ſets forth the ſtate of alienation a ſinner is in, while unconverted; he is afar off from God, from God the Father; from the preſence of God, and communion with him; from the knowledge of God, and deſire after it; from love to him, or fear of him; and from the life of God, or a living ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly; and from Chriſt, from the knowledge of him, from faith in him, love to him, fellowſhip with him, and ſubjection to his ordinances; and from the Spirit of God, and every thing that is ſpiritual; and from all that is good, from the law of God, and from the righteouſneſs of it, and from righteous men: and there waſted his ſubſtance in riotous living; his internal ſubſtance, his knowledge and underſtanding, even in natural things, and became brutiſh, and even like the beaſts that periſh; and his worldly ſubſtance in rioting and drunkenneſs, in chambering and wantonneſs, with harlots, as in ver. 30. whereby he was brought to a piece of bread, and to the want of it.

Ver. 14. And when he had ſpent all, &c.] Sin ſtrips a man of all that is good and valuable; of the image of God, of the knowledge of divine things, of natural holineſs, of moral righteouſneſs, and of ſtrength to perform moral good; hence man is in a wretched and miſerable condition, he's poor, and blind, and naked: and if man has ſpent all, and ſin has ſtript him of all, where's his free-will? there's no good thing in man, but what comes from the grace of God; nor has he any thing to recommend him to God, or to offer to his creditor, to compound his debts with; nor can he prepare himſelf for converſion, or any good work: there aroſe a mighty famine in that land; ſin brings men into a ſtarving and famiſhing condition; for in the far country, the land of ſin, there's a famine of the word: though the Goſpel is preached, it is only food to ſpiritual perſons; unregenerate men have no deſire to it, but neglect and deſpiſe it; and if they attend it, it has no place in them: they that are in this land, are aliens from the ordinances of God, the breaſts of conſolation, the goodneſs and fatneſs of his houſe; they are in a pit, wherein is no water; their taſte is vitiated to every thing that is ſpiritually good; they live on bread of deceit, and labour after that which ſatisfies not; wherefore they look like ſkeletons, and are as the dry bones in Ezekiel's viſion: and he began to be in want; or was in want: when the above is the caſe, the ſinner may be truly ſaid to be in want; an unregenerate man, is in want of every thing that is good; of wiſdom and knowledge, of grace and holineſs, of righteouſneſs or cloathing, of food, and of all the neceſſaries of life: and he may be ſaid to begin to be in want, becauſe man was not originally ſo, but was poſſeſſed of a natural fulneſs; and becauſe ſin is the beginning of want, as ſoon as one takes place, the other does: moreover, this man now began to ſee and feel himſelf to be in want, though as yet he was not rightly and truly ſenſible of his wants, at leaſt of the way to redreſs them.

Ver. 15. And he went and joined himſelf to a citizen of that country, &c.] Not to any one of the ſaints, for they are not citizens of the far country, but of the church of God below, and of heaven above; beſides, carnal men don't like the company of ſuch citizens: nor is the devil intended, for though he dwells in this country, he is more than a citizen, than an inhabitant; he's king and governour, the prince of the world, and the God of it; nor is it feaſible, that a man under conviction, and beginning to be ſenſible of his want, ſhould go and join himſelf to the devil: but an unregenerate, pharaſaical, legal preacher, is deſigned; a man may be a preacher, and yet in the far country of ſin and unregeneracy; there may be large gifts, where there is no grace; and a man may have a form of religion and godlineſs, and know nothing of the power of it; and a great ſtir and bluſter may be made about good works, as were by the Phariſees, when few or none are done: now 'tis common for perſons under legal convictions, to ſeek after ſuch a preacher, and ſuch a miniſtry, and to ſuch an one this man went; he went not out of the land of ſin, nor to his father's houſe, but to one in the ſame country, where the famine was, and he was ſtarving: he went; it was his own choice, he took his own way; he went and told him his caſe, how he had ſpent all he had, and in what manner, and what condition, he now was in; and he aſked his advice and aſſiſtance: and he joined himſelf to him; he ſat under his miniſtry, and became a member with him, and ſtuck cloſe to him, as the word ſignifies; and was a ſtickler for him, and his principles: and he ſent him into his field to feed ſwine; he did not give him the leaſt bit of bread to ſatisfy his hunger; nor did he ſay one word to him of Chriſt, the bread of life; nor did he adviſe him to go to his father's houſe, where there was bread enough, and to ſpare: but he ſent him into his fields; to work, to cleanſe his heart, to reform his life, to fulfil the law, to perform the conditions of the covenant, to make his peace with God, and get an intereſt in his love and favour; and go through a round of duties continually, and all would be well: he ſent him to feed ſwine there; to converſe with ſelf-righteous perſons, who may be compared to ſwine, becauſe of their ſelfiſhneſs; doing all they do for themſelves, and not for God and his glory; becauſe they prefer dung before pearls, their own righteouſneſs before Chriſt, the pearl of great price; and live upon the huſks of their own duties; and never look upwards to heaven, as this creature does not, but always downwards on the earth; and though they were outwardly reformed, yet inwardly filthy, and often return to wallowing in the mire again: he ſent him there alſo to gratify the ſelfiſh principles of nature; to pleaſe himſelf with his wiſdom, righteouſneſs, holineſs, and other excellencies he fancied he had attained unto. In ſhort, the expreſſion ſhows the baſe employment of a ſelf-juſtitiary amidſt all his pretenſions to religion and virtue: for feeding of ſwine was very diſagreeable to the Jews, and with them ſcandalous; to whom the eating of ſwine's fleſh was forbidden by the law of God, and the breeding of ſwine by their traditions; and this is ſaid to be done in a far country, out of Judea.

Ver. 16. And he would fain have filled his belly with the huſks, &c.] חרובא, the fruit of the Charub tree, as the Syriac verſion interprets it; and which the Jews [y] ſay is, מאכל בהמה, the food of beaſts: though, according to what is elſewhere ſaid of it, it ſhould be the food of men alſo. It is ſaid [z] of R. Simeon ben Jochai, and his ſon, that they hid themſelves in a cave for fear of the king, and a miracle was wrought for them, איברי להו חרובא, a Charub tree was created for them, and a fountain of water; the one, as the Gloſs obſerves, was to eat the fruit of, and the other to drink of: but be they what they will, by them are meant, not worldly riches and honours, and carnal luſts and pleaſures; tho' theſe are the principal things of the far country, of this world, or an unregenerate eſtate; and are greatly deſired by carnal minds, and are but ſwine's meat, very mean food, yea, pernicious, empty, unſatiſfying, and periſhing; but theſe were the things this man had been deſirous of, and lived upon before, and had ran thro' them, and had ſpent all his ſubſtance in the purſuit and enjoyment of them; and now he felt the gripes of a natural conſcience for them, and found himſelf in want of ſomething elſe: wherefore by theſe huſks are meant works of righteouſneſs done by men; which are like huſks, external things, done only before men; empty things that have nothing within them; mere traſh, and not food; and which can give no ſatiſfaction; mere ſordid food, fit only to be caſt to dogs or ſwine; of an ill ſavour, hard to eat, and difficult of digeſtion, and which affords no real nouriſhment; theſe this man greatly deſired to fill his belly with: he found himſelf empty, and in want; as yet he had no thought of, at leaſt not any deſire after the bread in his Father's houſe; but would fain have ſatisfied himſelf with his own doings, and have quieted his mind and conſcience with a few external performances, a negative holineſs, a legal repentance, and outward reformation: he laboured hard to make his own righteouſneſs do; which was but ſtriving to fill his belly with the eaſt-wind; and is what can never ſatisfy, becauſe it is not anſwerable to the law and juſtice of God; and was no other than that the ſwine did eat, ſelf-righteous perſons, like himſelf; for ſuch an one was now the publican and ſinner become, tho' he did not continue ſo. Chriſt's lambs and ſheep don't eat ſuch food, nor will, nor can they, only ſwiniſh, ſelfiſh perſons; this is ſuitable to their nature, they eat it, and live upon it; which ſhows them to be unrenewed, and that their taſte is not changed. And no man gave unto him; not the huſks, tho' this is the ſenſe of the Arabic verſion, which renders it, neither did he obtain them; and ſo it ſeems to be ours and others: but theſe were at hand, which he might have taken himſelf, and did; nor is it reaſonable to think he ſhould wait to have them given him by another; or that he ſhould be reſtrained from them; but it is to be underſtood of bread, or proper food, and that no man gave that unto him: and the words, as Calvin obſerves, may be read cauſally, for no man gave to him; and ſo are a reaſon why he craved huſks, becauſe no man gave him any bread: the citizen, or legal preacher, to whom he joined himſelf, gave him none; nor the ſwine, the ſelf-righteous perſons, to whom he was ſent, and with whom he converſed, gave him none; he had nothing under the miniſtry, nor in converſation, that was proper food to him; there were nothing but theſe huſks that preſented, and he tried to ſatisfy himſelf with them; and indeed none but Chriſt can give the true bread, the bread of life, to thoſe that are hungry, and in want.

Ver. 17. And when he came to himſelf, &c.] An unregenerate man, whether while a voluptuous man, or a ſelf-righteous man, is not himſelf; he's beſides himſelf, and is no other than a mad man. The man that purſues his worldly luſts and pleaſures, promiſes himſelf liberty, while he is a ſlave; he ruins himſelf, his ſoul, body, and eſtate, and chuſes to do it, rather than part with his luſts; he takes delight in doing miſchief himſelf, and in ſeeing it done by others; he proclaims his folly publickly, declares his ſin, and glories in it; all which a man in his right mind would never do. The ſelf-righteous perſon truſts in his own heart, which is the greateſt madneſs and folly in the world; he compaſſes himſelf about with ſparks of his own kindling, and ſacrifices to his own net; he dreſſes himſelf in his rags, and pleaſes and prides himſelf with them, when a robe of righteouſneſs, and garments of ſalvation, are provided; which no man in his ſenſes would ever do. But when the Spirit of God comes to work upon a ſinner's heart in converſion, he brings him to himſelf; which a man may be ſaid to be, when he is brought to true evangelical repentance for ſin; and that is, when he has a true ſenſe of it, as committed againſt God, and a godly ſorrow for it, and makes an hearty and ingenuous acknowledgment of it, and forſakes it; and when he is brought to a ſenſe of the inſufficiency of his own righteouſneſs, and is made willing to part with it, and deſires to be found in Chriſt, and in his righteouſneſs alone, which he is encouraged to lay hold on, and receive by faith, truſt to, and rejoice in; when he has his ſpiritual ſenſes exerciſed on Chriſt, and to diſcern between good and evil; and is brought to the feet of Jeſus, as to ſubmit to his righteouſneſs, ſo to ſerve him; when he is all this, then, like the man in the Goſpel, he is clothed, and in his right mind: he ſaid, how many hired ſervants of my father's; who, according to ſome, were the Scribes and Phariſees, men of a ſervile diſpoſition, and of mercenary views; and were, by profeſſion, the ſervants of God, and had plenty of bread, becauſe they had all the external means and ordinances: but theſe are deſigned by the elder brother in the parable; and beſides, this man had endeavoured to live as they did in this far country. It may be queried, whether the miniſters of the Goſpel are not intended, ſince theſe are the ſervants of the moſt high God; are labourers hired by him, and are worthy of their hire, and abound with Goſpel proviſions for the ſervice of others. But to this it may be objected, the deſire of this man to be made as one of them, ver. 19. which petition expreſſes his humility; whereas to be a ſervant, in this ſenſe, is to have the higheſt place and office in his father's houſe. Rather therefore the meaneſt of the ſaints, and houſhold of God, are here meant, who have the leaſt degree of evangelical light, whoſe faith is weak, and their conſolation ſmall; and who, tho' they are ſons, yet by reaſon of that legality and mercenarineſs that appear in their frames and ſervices, differ little from ſervants: and yet theſe, in compariſon of him, who was in a hungry and ſtarving condition, have bread enough, and to ſpare; as the doctrines, promiſes, and ordinances of the Goſpel, the fulneſs of grace that is in Chriſt, and Chriſt himſelf the bread of life; which are more than enough for them, and ſufficient for the whole family in heaven, and in earth: and even the meaneſt and weakeſt believer may be ſaid to have enough and to ſpare, becauſe he has an intereſt in all theſe; though by reaſon of the weakneſs of his faith, 'tis but now and then he has a full and comfortable meal; but this is infinitely better than to be ſtarving, as this man was: and I periſh with hunger. The Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions add, here; in this far country, in the citizens fields, among his ſwine, and their huſks: all mankind are in a loſt and periſhing condition; for having ſinned againſt God, they have expoſed themſelves to the curſes of the law, and are deſtitute of a juſtifying righteouſneſs, and are in the way to ruin and deſtruction; but all are not ſenſible of it, being ignorant of God, and his righteouſneſs, of the exceeding ſinfulneſs of ſin, and of the inſufficiency of their own righteouſneſs; but ſome are ſenſible of it, and in their own apprehenſions, are ready to periſh: theſe ſee ſin in its true light, without a view of pardon; an angry God without a ſmile; injured juſtice without a righteouſneſs; and a broken law without a ſatisfaction for the violation of it; and ſuch was this man's caſe. The Jewiſh writers[a] ſay, "a ſinner is like to a ſon that runs away "from his father, and turns his back upon him, "who yet afterwards repents, and has a mind to "return to his father's houſe:" ſo it was now with the publicans and ſinners, ſignified by this man.

Ver. 18. I will ariſe, &c.] This is the reſolution which at laſt, thro' divine grace, he came into: he determines to quit the country, and his companions; he had left his harlots, and his old courſe of living before, but was in the ſame country ſtill; for this a man may do, and yet remain unregenerate: but he is now for leaving the country itſelf, and his new acquaintance; he is now determined to drop his legal preacher, to be gone out of his fields, and from under his miniſtry, and to leave his ſwine and huſks; and go to my father: not to his old companions in debauchery and ſin; nor to his elder brother, the Phariſees; he had made trial of both theſe to his coſt already; nor to his father's ſervants, but to his father himſelf; to which he was moved and encouraged, from his being ready to periſh, from the fulneſs of bread in his fathers's houſe, and from the relation he ſtood in to him; notwithſtanding all that had paſſed, he was his father, and a kind and merciful one: this ſhows, that he knew him as his father, having now the ſpirit of adoption ſent down into him; and the way unto him, which lies thro' Chriſt the mediator: and will ſay unto him, father; or, my father, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions read: I have ſinned againſt heaven; by preferring earthly things to heavenly ones; and have ſinned openly in the face of the heavens, who were witneſſes againſt him; and againſt God, who dwells in heaven. It was uſual with the Jews to call God, שמים, heaven; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 25. They have this very phraſe; "there is a man, "ſay[b] they, who ſins againſt earth, and he does "not, חטא בשמים, ſin againſt heaven; againſt "heaven, and he does not ſin againſt earth: but "he that ſpeaks with an ill tongue ſins againſt "heaven and earth, as it is ſaid, Pſ. lxxiii. 9. they "ſet their mouth againſt the heavens, and their "tongue walketh through the earth." And ſo the ſenſe is, that he had ſinned againſt God himſelf, and not merely againſt men, and human laws. All ſin is a tranſgreſſion of the law of God; and the thought of ſin being committed againſt a God of infinite holineſs, juſtice, goodneſs, grace, and mercy, is cutting to a ſenſible ſinner: and this being the caſe, this man determined to go to God his Father, and him only, for the pardon of his ſin, againſt whom it was committed. 'Tis added, and before thee; for he was now convinced of his omniſcience. Sin may be committed againſt a man, and not before him, or he not know it; but whatever is committed againſt God, is before him, 'tis in his ſight, he knows it: he is God omniſcient, tho' ſinners take no notice of this perfection of his, but go on in ſin, as if it was not ſeen, known, and obſerved by God. But when God works powerfully and effectually upon the heart of a ſinner, he convinces him of his omniſcience, as this man was convinced: hence he determined to go to God, and acknowledge his ſin before him; and that it was committed before him, and was in his ſight; and that he could not be juſtified in his ſight by any righteouſneſs of his own; and therefore humbly deſires pardon at his hands. This man's ſenſe of ſin and ſorrow for it, and confeſſion of it, appear very right and genuine, which he determined to expreſs; they appear to be the convictions of the Spirit of God: it was not a ſenſe of ſin, and ſorrow for it, as done before men, but God; and the concern was not ſo much, for the miſchief that comes by ſin, as for the evil that was in it; and this did not drive him to deſpair, as in the caſes of Cain and Judas, but brought him home to his father; and his confeſſion appears to be hearty, ſincere, and without excuſe.

Ver. 19. And am no more worthy to be called thy ſon, &c.] As all the Jews were; not only by creation, and providential care, as all men are; but by national adoption: and however worthy this man might think himſelf to be called a ſon' of God before, and value himſelf upon it; he now ſees, and was ready to own his unworthineſs to be called ſo in any ſenſe; and much more to be called and accounted a ſon of God by ſpecial adoption: make me as one of thy hired ſervants; this is ſaid not from a ſervile ſpirit, but to expreſs the mean thoughts he had of himſelf, and the great deſire he had to be fed from his father's table, in the meaneſt way; and what an happineſs and honour it would be to him, could he be the meaneſt in his family, a door-keeper in his houſe; which was more eligible to him, than to dwell in the tents of ſin, or continue in this hungry and ſtarving condition.

[b] Midraſh Kohelet, in c. 9. 12. fol. 79. 4.

Ver. 20. And he aroſe, &c.] This ſhews that his reſolution to ariſe was not of nature, but of grace, by its being put into execution; for it was made and executed, not in his own ſtrength, but in another's: he did not confer with fleſh and blood; nor liſten to diſcouragements which might preſent; as the diſtance of the way, the danger in it, the cold reception, if not rejection, he might expect from his father: but he aroſe immediately; he aroſe and ſtood upon his feet, in obedience to the heavenly call, being aſſiſted by divine grace; he aroſe, and quitted the far country, the citizen, ſwine, and huſks, and denied both ſinful and righteous ſelf: and came to his father; his own father; the father of himſelf, as in the Greek text, who was ſo before he came to him; a ſenſe of which he had, and was what encouraged him the rather to go to him: and this coming to him denotes a progreſſion towards him; for as yet he was not come to him, but was at ſome diſtance, as the next clauſe expreſſes; and means not ſo much attendance on ordinances, as ſome inward ſecret deſires after God: but when he was yet a great way off. This is not to be underſtood of his ſtate of alienation from God, which is before ſignified by his being in a far country; but the diſtance he obſerved, as conſcious of his vileneſs, and unworthineſs; and the humility he expreſſed on a view of himſelf; and a ſenſe he had of his need of divine grace: and which is grateful to God; he looks to ſuch that are of an humble, and of a contrite ſpirit, and dwells among them, and gives more grace to them: his father ſaw him; he ſaw him when in the far country, ſpending his ſubſtance with harlots, and in riotous living; he ſaw him when among the ſwine and huſks; he ſaw him when he came to himſelf, and all the motions and determinations of his heart; he ſaw him in his progreſs towards his, and looked upon him with an eye of love, pity, and compaſſion, as it follows, and had compaſſion: God is full of compaſſion, and pities him, as a father does his children; yea, as a woman's bowels of compaſſion yearn after the ſon of her womb: he had compaſſion on him, and his bowels of pity moved towards him, he being as one grieved in ſpirit for his ſins, and wounded with a ſenſe of them, and wanting a view of pardon, as ſtarving and famiſhing, and as naked, and without clothing. And ran; to him, which ſhows the quick notice God takes of the firſt motions of his own grace in the hearts of ſenſible ſinners; the ſpeedy relief he gives to diſtreſſed ones; and this points out his preventing grace and goodneſs. And fell on his neck; expreſſive of the ſtrength of his affection to him, Gen. xlv. 14. and xlvi. 29. Acts xx. 37. and of his great condeſcenſion and grace to fall on that neck which had been like an iron ſinew, ſo ſtiff and rebellious; though now, thro' divine grace, was made flexible and pliable, and ſubject to him, and willing to bear the yoke, and to do whatever he would have him; and this was grateful to his father: and kiſſed him; as a token of love; and as owning the relation he ſtood in to him; as a ſign of reconciliation and friendſhip; and was an admiſſion of him to great nearneſs to his perſon; and an application and manifeſtation of great love indeed to him; and a ſtrong incentive of love in the ſon to him again; ſee 1 John iv. 19.

Ver. 21. And the ſon ſaid unto him, father, &c.] Or, my father, as the Syriac verſion reads; and the Perſic verſion adds, pardon me: ſin lay heavy on him, and he wanted a view and application of pardoning grace, tho' he ſeems to be prevented making this requeſt by the kiſs he received from his father: I have ſinned againſt heaven, and in thy ſight; this is what he determined to ſay, and was allowed to ſay, having a deep ſenſe of his ſin and vileneſs, and which was encreaſed by the love and kindneſs his father had ſhown him. The phraſe is Jewiſh; ſee the note on ver. 18. to which may be added, what is elſewhere ſaid [c], “what is the ſenſe of that “paſſage, Pſal. xii. 4. who have ſaid, with our “tongues we will prevail? &c. it deſigns all the “tranſgreſſions a man ſins againſt earth; and if, “חוטאין בשמים, they ſin againſt heaven, and “earth; what is the ſenſe of that in Pſ. lxxiii. 9?” and am no more worthy to be called thy ſon: ſo much he was ſuffered to ſay, which fully expreſſes his ſenſe of his vileneſs and unworthineſs: but he was not allowed to ſay, make me as one of thy hired ſervants; becauſe this could not granted; for a ſon is always a ſon, and cannot become a ſervant; ſee Gal. iv. 6, 7.

Ver. 22. But the father ſaid to his ſervants, &c.] The word but, with which thoſe words begin, is expreſſive of much grace, as it often is; ſee 1 Cor. vi. 11. Eph. ii. 4. 1 Tim. i. 13. Tit. iii. 4. and ſignifies, that tho' the ſon had behaved ſo badly, and was now ſo ſenſible of it himſelf, as that he deſired to be a hired ſervant, being unworthy to be called a ſon; but the father, againſt whom he had ſinned, would hear nothing of it: but ſaid to his ſervants; not the angels, but the miniſters of the Goſpel; who are the ſervants of the moſt high God; and whoſe buſineſs it is to ſet forth, in the miniſtry of the word, the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and the everlaſting love of God; and to direct ſouls to a life and converſation becoming the Goſpel of Chriſt; and to ſet before them the rich proviſions of the Goſpel for their nouriſhment, joy, and comfort. Theſe ſervants, the father of the ſon ordered, not to take him away from his preſence, as one whoſe perſon he could not endure in his ſight; nor to terrify and affright him with the curſe and condemnation of the law, and to fill his mind with wrath and terror; nor even to chaſtize and correct him for his former courſe of living, and to upbraid him with it; but to confer upon him all the honour, and high favours, and bleſſings that could be expreſſed in the following language: bring forth the beſt robe; out of the ward-robe, that it is in. The Vulgate Latin verſion adds, quickly; which increaſes the father's regard to him, and ſhows that he was in haſte to have his ſon appear in a better condition: the Arabic verſion adds it in the next clauſe, and put it on him quickly; which expreſſes the ſame thing: and the Ethiopic verſion renders it, haſten ye, bring, &c. By the beſt robe is meant, not water-baptiſm; nor an holy life and converſation; nor any particular grace, as faith, or hope, or charity; or the whole of ſanctification; nor Adam's robe of innocence; but the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which is often compared to a robe, or garment, Iſ. lxi. 10. Zech. iii. 4. Rev. xix. 8. becauſe it is not any thing in believers, but what is unto them, and upon them, and is put there by an act of God's grace in imputation; and is what covers their naked ſouls, and hides their ſins from the avenging eye of divine juſtice; protects them from all injuries, and ſaves them from wrath to come; as well as beautifies and adorns them, and renders them acceptable in the ſight of God; and keeps them warm and alive; and gives them a right and title to eternal life. This is as in the Greek text, the firſt robe; and ſo it is rendered by the Vulgate Latin, and Arabic verſions; becauſe it was firſt in God's deſignation and counſel, and in Chriſt the head of his people, in whom they are bleſſed with all ſpiritual bleſſings before the foundation of the world, and ſo with this bleſſing; and it was alſo provided and ſecured in the everlaſting covenant of grace, long before Adam's robe of innocence and righteouſneſs was made and wore by him: the reference is not to the firſt that ſhould be come at in the ward-robe; or to that which the ſon wore before he went into the far country; but to the טלית, Talith, which was the firſt and uppermoſt garment wore by the Jews, and anſwers to the Greek word ϛολη, the ſtole, here uſed: ſo the Babyloniſh garment is called, איצטלא דמילתא [d], which the Gloſs interprets a Talith, made of pure wool. The Ethiopic verſion renders the phraſe, fragrant garments; and ſuch are Chriſt's garments of ſalvation, and robe of righteouſneſs; ſee Pſ. xlv. 8. the Perſic verſion renders it, the ſplendid robe; and the Syriac, as ours, the chief, or beſt robe; and ſuch is Chriſt's righteouſneſs: it is a better righteouſneſs, not only than that of a ſelf-righteous Phariſee; but better than the outward converſation-garment of a real good man, which, at beſt, is imperfect; or than the inward ſanctification of the Spirit of God, which, though pure, is not yet perfect: it is better than the robe of innocence wore by Adam in his ſinleſs ſtate; for that was but a natural righteouſneſs, and the righteouſneſs of a creature, and was loſeable, as the event has ſhown; and had he kept it, would not have given him a title to eternal life: yea, it is better than the righteouſneſs of the angels in heaven; for what is ſaid of Adam's, may be ſaid of theirs, that it is natural, the righteouſneſs of a creature; and had it not been for confirming grace, a loſeable one: but Chriſt's righteouſneſs is pure and perfect; the righteouſneſs of God, and an everlaſting one: and when the ſervants of God, the miniſters of the Goſpel, are ordered to bring it out, and put it on him; this is done, not by the imputation of it to men, for that is the father's act; nor by application of it to them, that is, the Spirit's work; but by a declaration of it, ſetting it forth in a miniſterial way before them; declaring it to be a juſtifying one, and encouraging their faith to lay hold upon it as ſuch: and put a ring on his hand; on one of the fingers of his hand: by which is intended not the grace of faith; that is, rather the hand on which the ring is put; and tho' this grace is both precious and ornamental, as will be allowed, yet it does not unite to Chriſt, this muſt be denied; it being a grace which flows from union, as all grace does; and by which ſouls have communion with Chriſt: nor are good works deſigned; ſuch indeed who are called by grace, are to be ſet to work from a right principle, to a right end; and true grace does ſhew itſelf by works; and good works are the ſeal and token of grace to the world; but then, as before, theſe are rather meant by the hand; ſince that is the inſtrument of action: nor is the ſeal and earneſt of the Spirit meant by the ring. The Spirit of God is certainly the ſeal of grace, and the earneſt of glory; and to have this is a high favour, and a precious benefit indeed, and what will never be taken away; but as faith, ſo not the Spirit is the bond of union between God and his people, but the fruit of it: by the ring is meant the everlaſting love of God; and which, as a ring, is round, and has neither beginning nor end; it does not begin with the obedience of his people, nor with their love to him; nor with their converſion; nor with the miſſion, ſufferings, and death of Chriſt; but was from all eternity; nor will it have any end, nor can there be any ſeparation from it: this is the bond of union, that can never be diſſolved; and this being manifeſted to the ſoul, is a token of freedom; it ſets a man free from the bondage of corruption, and from the ſlavery of ſatan, and introduces into the liberty of the children of God: it is a mark of great honour, a ſign of riches, both of grace and glory; it is a declaration of ſonſhip, and heirſhip; and is a ſeal and pledge of everlaſting happineſs: now the putting on of this ring does not deſign the ſhedding abroad of this love in the heart by the Spirit of God; but the declaration of it by his ſervants in a miniſterial way; ſetting it forth in its nature and effects, to the great joy and comfort of ſouls; when believers receive it by the hand of faith, and which conſtrains them, and makes them active, and puts them upon doing good works to the glory of God. And ſhoes on his feet: by feet are meant the outward walk and converſation; which in perſons called by grace ſhould be different from what it was before, and from that of others: it ſhould not be looſe and naked, as thoſe that walk barefoot, but ſhould be upright, ſtrait, and regular; not carnal and earthly, but ſpiritual and heavenly; and ſhould be with prudence, care, and circumſpection, and worthy of their vocation, and as becomes the Goſpel of Chriſt: and by the ſhoes may be meant, the preparation of the Goſpel of peace, Eph. vi. 15. The Goſpel is as ſhoes to the feet; it beautifies and adorns, Cant. vii. 1. it keeps the feet tight and ſtrait, the converſation regular and upright; preſerves from ſlipping and falling; ſtrengthens and makes more fit for walking; directs, guides, and influences in walking, and protects from the ſtones, thorns, and ſcorpions of the world's reproaches; and the doctrines of it are ſhoes that will never wear out: and to walk according to the Goſpel of Chriſt, is what Goſpel-miniſters direct and exhort unto, and may be meant by their putting on thoſe ſhoes; they preſſing a good life and converſation from, and by the doctrines of grace. A perſon with all theſe things on him was reckoned, among the Jews, as one thoroughly dreſſed: a canon of theirs, relating to the defilement of leproſy, runs thus [e]; “a man of Iſrael that goes “into a houſe infected with the plague of leproſy, “לבוש בבגדיו וסנדליו ברגליו וטבעותיו בידיו, “clothed with his garments, and his ſandals on his “feet, and his rings on his hands, lo, that man is “immediately defiled.”

[e] Maimon. Hilch. Tumaot Tzaraath, c. 16. §. 6.

Ver. 23. And bring hither the fatted calf, and kill it, &c.] By which Chriſt is deſigned, in alluſion to the calves offered in ſacrifice, which were offered for ſin-offerings, and for peace-offerings, and for burnt-offerings; and were one of the ſacrifices on the day of atonement: ſo Chriſt has offered up himſelf in ſoul and body, freely and voluntarily, in the room and ſtead of his people, an offering and ſacrifice to God, of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour; which is well-pleaſing to him, and effectual to the purpoſes for which it was offered, and therefore will never be repeated; and has hereby ſatisfied law and juſtice, procured peace and reconciliation, and made full atonement and expiation for all their ſins and tranſgreſſions: or elſe in alluſion to the feaſts and liberal entertainments of friends, when the fatted calf made a conſiderable part, Gen. xviii. 7, 8. 1 Sam. xxviii. 24, 25. Amos vi. 4. Mal. iv. 2. Chriſt is the beſt proviſion that can be ſet before a believer, or he can feed upon; yea, the beſt that God can give, or ſaints deſire: he is true and real food, ſpiritual, ſavoury, ſatisfying, and durable; what both gives and preſerves life; nouriſhes, ſtrengthens, refreſhes, delights, and fattens. Now by bringing it hither, is meant preaching Chriſt; opening the ſcriptures concerning him; ſetting him before believers, as their only proper food, both in the miniſtry of the word, and in the Lord's ſupper: and killing him does not deſign either the ſlaying of him in purpoſe, promiſe, and type, from the foundation of the world; nor the actual crucifixion of him by the Jews; but the ſetting him forth in the Goſpel in a miniſterial way, as crucified and ſlain, for ſaints by faith to feed and live upon: and let us eat and be merry; for as the Jews[f] ſay, "there is no "mirth without eating and drinking:" this is a mutual invitation or encouragement to eat of the fatted calf: the parties called upon to eat of it are the father, the ſervants, and the returned ſon. The father, to whom the ſalvation of his people, by the death of Chriſt, is as a feaſt; his heart was ſet upon this from everlaſting; and he was infinitely well pleaſed with Chriſt, as the ſurety of his people from all eternity; his eye was upon him as ſuch throughout the ſeveral diſpenſations before his coming; he ſent him forth with great pleaſure in the fulneſs of time; and not only did not ſpare him, but it even pleaſed him to bruiſe him; and he accepted of his ſacrifice with delight; and takes pleaſure in ſeeing his people feed upon their crucified Saviour; and this is expreſſive of that communion which God admits his people to with himſelf, and which, as it is ſignified by walking and talking, and ſitting and dwelling, ſo by eating together; and is in conſequence of union to him; and is only enjoyed by true believers; and is the greateſt bleſſing on earth, and what is next to heaven. The ſervants, the miniſters of the Goſpel, they are among the us, who are to eat; and it is but reaſonable they ſhould, and it is even neceſſary that they do eat, and live upon a crucified Chriſt themſelves, whoſe buſineſs it is to ſet him forth as ſuch to others: and eſpecially the returned ſon makes a principal gueſt at this entertainment; for whom it is made, and for whoſe ſake chiefly the invitation to eat is given: by which is meant not corporal eating, but eating by faith; which ſuppoſes food to eat, of which there is plenty in the Goſpel-proviſion; a principle of life infuſed, for a dead man can't eat; and ſpiritual hunger and thirſt, otherwiſe there will be no appetite; and the grace of faith, which is the hand that takes, and the mouth that receives, and eats ſpiritual food: and believers have full and free liberty to eat of it; nor ſhould they object their own unworthineſs, but conſider the ſuitableneſs of the food unto them; that it is on purpoſe prepared for them; that they are in their father's houſe, and at his table; and the invitation to eat is hearty and cordial; and both the Father and Chriſt give this food, and bid welcome to it; and there is a neceſſity of eating it, for without this there can be no living in a ſpiritual ſenſe: 'tis hereby that life is ſupported and maintained; without this the ſaints muſt be ſtarving; 'tis this which preſerves from hunger, and ſatisfies it, and nouriſhes up unto eternal life. The manner of eating, or the circumſtance attending it, is mirth, both in father, ſon, and ſervants; and as corporal, ſo ſpiritual eating ſhould be with joy, and with a merry heart, Eccl. ix. 7. and indeed is the moſt proper means of ſtirring and increaſing ſpiritual joy and pleaſure; ſee the note on the latter part of the following verſe.

Ver. 24. For this my ſon was dead, &c.] Theſe words contain the reaſons of the above entertainment, and of all that ſpiritual joy and mirth; in which the father acknowledges the returning penitent as his ſon; though he had behaved ſo wickedly before, and though he judged himſelf unworthy of the relation; and this he did, by ſending the Spirit of adoption into his heart, to witneſs his ſonſhip to him; and takes notice of his paſt ſtate and condition, to ſhew the great reaſon there was for joy, at his preſent one: for before he was dead, dead in Adam, in whom all died; dead in law, being under a ſentence of condemnation and death; and dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, which is a ſpiritual or moral death: in which all mankind by nature are: and which lies in a ſeparation from God, Father, Son, and Spirit; in an alienation from the life of God; in a deformation of the image of God; in a loſs of original righteouſneſs; in the darkneſs of the underſtanding; in the inordinateneſs of the affections; in the pollution of the mind and conſcience; in the ſtubornneſs of the will; and in an impotency to that which is ſpiritually good; and in a privation of ſpiritual ſenſe and motion: this had been the caſe, but now it was otherwiſe: and is alive again; the ſpirit of life from Chriſt had entered into him, and Chriſt was formed in his heart; and a principle of life was infuſed into him; a divine image was enſtamped upon his ſoul; the underſtanding was enlightened in divine things; the affections were ſet upon them; the will was ſubjected to God, to his will and law, and to Chriſt and his righteouſneſs, and the way of ſalvation by him, and to his commands and ordinances; and principles of grace, and holineſs were wrought in him, to do as well as to will; a ſpiritual ſenſe of things were given him; a ſpiritual ſight, hearing, taſting, and feeling, and ſavouring; he lived a life of holineſs from Chriſt, of faith upon him, and of communion with him, and to his glory: and he came to be ſo, not of himſelf, nor by any creature; for no man can quicken himſelf, nor can any creature do it for him; it was entirely owing to the power and grace of God: and great reaſon here was for joy and mirth, as there is for every one, that is quickened by the Spirit of God; for ſuch ſhall never enter into condemnation, nor die again, but ſhall live and reign with Chriſt for ever: he was loſt; loſt in Adam, and in himſelf; ſo he was when in the far country, and when among the ſwine and huſks; ſo as that he knew not where he was, nor what a condition he was in; nor did he know how to get out of it, nor could he help himſelf, nor could any other creature; though not irretrievably and irrecoverably loſt; not to the love of God, his knowledge of him, care and proviſion for him in Chriſt, in his counſel and covenant: hence the following mercy, and is found; not only by Chriſt in redemption, but by the Spirit of Chriſt in effectual vocation; when he was brought and came to himſelf, and ſaw his loſt ſtate and condition by nature; and when he was directed and brought home to his father's houſe, and entertained with all the proviſions of it; and ſuch have reaſon to rejoice and be glad, for they ſhall be found in Chriſt at death and at judgment, and ſhall be with him to all eternity: and they began to be merry; all parties. The father expreſſed his joy, and the gladneſs of his heart, upon the return of his ſon to him; he exhorted to be merry on this account, ver. 23. and enforces it with reaſons in this verſe, taken from the relation he ſtood in to him, and the wonderful change that had paſſed upon him, and the finding of him; and he rejoices himſelf at his converſion, in the exerciſe of that grace which he himſelf implanted, and in the performance of duty by his aſſiſtance: not that any new joy ariſes in God's heart at ſuch a time; for he always rejoiced in the perſons of his elect, as they were the objects of his love, as choſen in Chriſt, and given to him, and as intereſted in the covenant of grace; and he rejoiced in the accompliſhment of their ſalvation, by his Son: but in converſion, there are new expreſſions of joy; he rejoices over them to do them good, and rejoices in the good he does them; and this is the open beginning of his joy, and but the beginning of it; for it will continue, it is not all over, nor all expreſſed, but will be in the fulleſt manner hereafter, to all eternity: the returned ſon began to be merry, as he had good reaſon for it; as that he was come back from the far country, where a mighty famine had been; and from the citizen of that country, his fields, and ſwine; that he was come to his father, and his father's houſe, where was bread enough and to ſpare; an houſe well furniſhed with all ſuitable proviſions; a family made up of ſaints, where miniſters of the Goſpel are ſtewards, and angels guards, and where Chriſt is ſon, prieſt, and maſter; and that he was received here, and owned as a ſon; not only was one ſecretly, but was owned as ſuch openly; and was not only called ſo by the ſervants, but by the father himſelf; and that after he had behaved ſo vilely, and in his own conſcience knew he was unworthy of the relation; and that he was received immediately, as ſoon as ever he came, and that in the moſt tender manner; and was entertained in the moſt free, generous, and ſumptuous way; though he went away from his father of himſelf, and had ſpent his ſubſtance in a ſcandalous manner; and was in a moſt filthy, ragged, and piteous condition; and that he ſhould be clothed with the beſt robe, the robe of Chriſt's righteouſneſs; and ſo had nothing to fear from law and juſtice; nor was he in any danger of wrath to come becauſe of his ſins; nor had he any reaſon to doubt of his right and admiſſion to the heavenly glory; and that he had the ring of love on the hand of faith, and could believe his intereſt in it, which is better than life, and will continue for ever; and that his feet were ſhod with the preparation of the Goſpel of peace; that he underſtood the Goſpel, and was brought to a ſubmiſſion to Goſpel ordinances, and had his converſation agreeable to it; and that the fatted calf was killed, and ſet before him to eat of, and feed upon: and now he began to live and fare ſumptuouſly, and to have ſpiritual joy and pleaſure, which he never knew before; and this was but the beginning of joy to him: ſpiritual joy is not all over at once, it continues and increaſes; nor is it full and perfect in this life, but in heaven it will be compleat, and without interruption: the ſervants alſo, the miniſters of the Goſpel, began to be merry on this occaſion; who expreſs their joy at the converſion of ſinners, becauſe of the glory of Father, Son, and Spirit, concerned in it; becauſe of the grace beſtowed then on ſinners themſelves; and becauſe the intereſt of Chriſt is ſtrengthened, and his churches increaſed, and ſatan's kingdom weakened; and becauſe their own miniſtry is bleſſed; and which ſtrengthens their hands and hearts, and encourages them to go on in their work: and this is but the beginning of their joy; for they continue to rejoice at the growth of grace in believers, and when they are in a thriving and flouriſhing condition; when they walk becoming the Goſpel of Chriſt, and live in peace among themſelves; and perſevere in faith and holineſs to the end; and theſe will be their joy and crown of rejoicing, at the coming of Chriſt Jeſus.

[f] T. Bab. Moed Katon, fol. 9. 1.

Ver. 25. Now his elder ſon was in the field, &c.] By the elder ſon is meant, not angels, as has been obſerved on ver. 11. nor truly converted perſons, of ſome ſtanding in the church; for though theſe may be ſaid to be elder than young converts, and are more ſolid and ſettled, yet they are not ignorant of ſpiritual mirth; nor of the Goſpel ſound; nor are they angry at the converſion of ſinners; nor will they ever ſpeak in ſuch commendation of themſelves; or ſay that they never had a kid, much leſs a fatted calf, as this elder brother does: nor the Jews in general, in diſtinction from the Gentiles, as has been remarked in the above place: the Scribes and Phariſees in particular are meant, in oppoſition to the publicans and ſinners: now theſe are ſaid to be in the field; in the world, which is comparable to an uncultivated field; being over-run with the briars and thorns of ſin, and ſinful men; where beaſts of prey inhabit, and who are fitly ſignified by lions, whoſe teeth are ſpears and arrows, and their tongue a ſharp ſword; and out of which the garden of the church is taken and ſeparated, and fenced by diſtinguiſhing grace: now this elder brother, the Scribe and Phariſee, notwithſtanding all his ſobriety and morality, was in a ſtate of nature and unregeneracy, in the ſame condition he came into the world; and was under the influence of the God of the world; and was taken up with the things of the world, the honours, riches, and profits of it: and though he was in the Jewiſh church-ſtate, yet was in the field of the world; the ceremonies of that ſtate, were the rudiments of the world; and the ſanctuary in it, was a worldly ſanctuary; and the chief men in it, were the princes of the world: and this elder ſon was in the field at work, working for life: to work is right, when men work from a principle of grace, in the name, faith, and ſtrength of Chriſt, to the glory of God and religion, and their own and others good; and aſcribe all they do to the grace of God, and acknowledge their own unworthineſs; but to work, in order to obtain righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation, proceeds from wretched ignorance, and is an inſtance of the pride and vanity of human nature; and is not only a vain and fruitleſs attempt, but a piece of wickedneſs, it being a denial of Chriſt, as God's ſalvation: now while the younger ſon, the publicans and ſinners, were received and entertained in the houſe and kingdom of God their father, the elder ſon, the Scribe and Phariſee, riſee, were without in the field, labouring to obtain life by doing; and as he came and drew nigh to the houſe. The Ethiopic verſion reads, to the border of the city: he came out of the field, the world; not that he was come out from the world, and had left the company of the men of it, or parted with the ſins and luſts of it; but he came from his labour, having done his day's work, and the taſk of duty he had ſet himſelf; and was now going for his hire, for what he imagined he had merited: and drew nigh to the houſe; for he did not go in, ver. 28. he only made ſome advances to it, and took ſome ſteps towards entrance into it; namely, into a viſible church; he came to hear the word, as the Scribes and Phariſees did; and to attend on ordinances, particularly at the adminiſtration of the ordinance of baptiſm, and ſeemed deſirous of ſubmitting to it in John's time; but never came to Chriſt in a ſpiritual way; nor entered into the kingdom of heaven, the Goſpel diſpenſation; and did all that could be, to hinder others, eſpecially publicans and ſinners; he heard muſic and dancing. The Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, leave out dancing; the former only reads, the voice of the ſinging of many; and the next, the voice of ſinging; and the laſt, pipes and ſongs: by muſic is meant, not the inſtrumental muſic uſed in the Old Teſtament church; nor vocal ſinging in the new; but the preaching of the Goſpel by the miniſters of it, the ſervants, in ver. 22, 23. ſetting forth the love of God, the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, peace, pardon, and ſalvation by him; in which, as in muſic, there is a diſtinction of ſounds: the voice of Chriſt in the Goſpel, and the ſeveral doctrines of it, are diſtinctly pronounced, diſcerned, and underſtood: and there is alſo, as in muſic, an harmony and agreement; the Goſpel does not give an uncertain ſound, nor contradict itſelf; it is not yea and nay: and, like muſic, 'tis delightful and charming; it is a ſound of love in all the three perſons, Father, Son, and Spirit; of free grace, and rich mercy; of liberty, reconciliation, forgiveneſs, righteouſneſs, and eternal life: and as muſic, has a powerful and attractive virtue in it; ſo the Goſpel is mighty and efficacious in the hand of the Spirit of God to quicken, even dead ſinners, to draw them to Chriſt, to allure, charm, and comfort them: dancing may deſign thoſe expreſſions of joy, which are delivered by young converts at hearing the Goſpel, as by the three thouſand, in Acts ii. 41. by the inhabitants of Samaria, Acts viii. 6, 8. and by the jailor and his houſhold, Acts xvi. 34. and by many others: now all this the elder brother, the Scribes and Phariſees, heard; not ſo as to know the true meaning of it, as appears from the following verſe; nor as to approve of it; or ſo as to feel the power, and enjoy the ſweetneſs of it; nor as to practiſe what was heard; only externally hearing, they heard, but underſtood not, their eyes were blinded, and their hearts were hardened.

Ver. 26. And he called one of the ſervants, &c.] One of the miniſters of the word, one of the diſciples of Chriſt, as the Scribes and Phariſees ſometimes did; chuſing rather to ſpeak to one of the diſciples, than to Chriſt himſelf, when they were offended; ſee Mark ii. 16. And aſked what theſe things meant; for ſelf-righteous perſons, as theſe Scribes and Phariſees were, are ignorant of the truths of the Goſpel; they don't underſtand them, nor conceive what is meant by them: they can't take in the doctrine of God's everlaſting love, that it ſhould be ſo early; be towards ſome, and not others; that it ſhould be independent of men's works, both in the riſe and continuance of it; that it ſhould be exerciſed towards ſinners, and yet be no licentious doctrine: and as much at a loſs are they about the doctrine of election; as that it ſhould be eternal, perſonal, diſcriminating, irreſpective of works, and yet give no liberty to ſin: they know nothing of the covenant of grace, nor have any other notion but of a covenant of works; and if of any other, yet a conditional one, made with them upon their converſion; or rather, one of their own making, and which depends on their good behaviour: they are ignorant of ſalvation by Chriſt; of juſtification by his righteouſneſs; of peace and pardon by his blood; of the doctrine of regeneration, and of living by faith on Chriſt; and of eternal life, as God's free-gift; and ſo likewiſe of ſpiritual joy, and mirth: they are ſtrangers to themſelves, their loſt ſtate and condition, and a deliverance out of it; to the kingdom of God, or an internal work of grace, the fruits of which are peace and joy in the Holy Ghoſt; and to the perſon, offices, and grace of Chriſt; to juſtification and atonement by him; to the promiſes of the Goſpel, and to that itſelf which is the joyful ſound; all which produce ſpiritual joy, delight, and pleaſure in ſenſible ſouls: the rejoicing of ſuch perſons is only in themſelves, and in their own works and duties; but as for true ſolid ſpiritual joy, they intermeddle not with it, nor know they what it means.

Ver. 27. And he ſaid unto him, &c.] The Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions, leave out the copulative and, and the latter reads, they ſaid unto him; the ſervants, one or other of them: thy brother is come; for in the relation of a brother, the younger ſon ſtood to him; being of the ſame nature and ſpecies, of the ſame nation, and both ſons by national adoption; who was come to his father, and to his father's houſe; not as a righteous and worthy perſon in himſelf, but as a ſinner, a ſenſible and penitent one; as hungry, naked, and ready to periſh; and as unworthy in his own opinion, of the leaſt mercy and favour, and eſpecially to be called a ſon: and thy father; who was ſo by creation, by national adoption, and by profeſſion: hath killed the fatted calf; by which Chriſt is meant; ſee the note on ver. 23. and deſigns either the concern the father had in the death of Chriſt; or rather, his orders to his miniſtring ſervants, to preach a crucified Chriſt, to the comfort of poor ſinners; and in general, expreſſes the large and rich entertainment God makes for ſouls, when they are brought home to him by repentance: and the Perſic verſion adds, and hath made a feaſt; the reaſon of which, is given in the next clauſe: becauſe he hath received him ſafe and ſound; or in good health. This is left out in the Perſic verſion, but rightly retained in all others: the word tranſlated received, ſignifies the recovery, or enjoyment of any thing before had, but ſince loſt, and the taking it at the hands of another: the elect of God, ſignified by the younger ſon, were his in a peculiar ſenſe, being choſen by him; but through the fall of Adam, and their own tranſgreſſions, were in ſome ſenſe loſt unto him; but in conſequence of redemption by Chriſt, and through efficacious grace in vocation, are found, received, and enjoyed again; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion reads it, becauſe he found him alive; and ſo took him again, as he did, at the hands of his Son: all the elect of God were put into the hands of Chriſt, as the ſurety of them; and being redeemed by his blood in effectual vocation, they are brought by him to the Father, and come to God by him; as they are alſo received by the Father from the hands of of his Spirit, who convinces them of ſin, cauſes them to believe in Chriſt, witneſſes their adoption to them; in a view of which, they come to God, and are received by him; and even from their own hands too, for under the power of divine grace, they are made willing to give up themſelves to the Lord, and do ſo; who kindly and graciouſly receives them into his arms; into his heart's love, and affection, into the open enjoyment of it; into his care and protection, into his family, and into communion with himſelf, and will afterwards receive them to glory: the caſe and condition in which he was received is, ſafe and ſound; there is but one word in the original; ſome tranſlate it ſafe, as the Arabic verſion; and others ſound, as the Syriac; and ours both: he was received ſafe, though he had been in a far country, and in a mighty famine, and almoſt ſtarved: God's elect fell in Adam, as others; their nature is corrupted by ſin, and they are guilty of actual tranſgreſſions, which deſerve death; yet they were preſerved in Chriſt, and being redeemed by him, are ſafe; ſo that the law cannot lay hold on them, nor ſin, nor any thing elſe condemn them, nor ſatan deſtroy them: and he was received ſound; in his right mind, being come to himſelf, and brought to true repentance for his ſin; and willing to part with his own righteouſneſs, and to be cloathed with the beſt robe; and having his ſpiritual ſenſes exerciſed, to diſcern between good and evil, and upon the perſon and grace of Chriſt; or he was received ſound, being in good health, and as oppoſed to being ſick or diſeaſed: ſins are diſeaſes, and as all men, ſo God's elect, are attended with them; but being made ſenſible of them, they come to Chriſt for healing; and they are perfectly cured by him; by his ſtripes and wounds, all their iniquities are forgiven; ſo that they have no reaſon to ſay any more, they are ſick: and hence the father receives them ſafe and ſound; and which is matter of joy, and was the occaſion of all this muſic, dancing, and feaſting.

Ver. 28. And he was angry, &c.] Particularly that the fatted calf was killed, ver. 27, 30. the preaching of a crucified Chriſt, and of free and full ſalvation by him, is highly diſpleaſing and provoking to ſelf-righteous perſons; they are angry at it, that it ſhould be free, that election to ſalvation ſhould be of grace, that juſtification ſhould be freely by the grace of God, and that pardon of ſin ſhould be according to the riches of God's grace, and ſalvation be by grace, and not by works; and that it ſhould be diſcriminating, that God ſhould appoint ſome, and not all unto ſalvation; that Chriſt ſhould redeem ſome, and not all; and that all men are not called unto it, by his Spirit and grace; and that it ſhould be full and compleat, ſo as nothing can be added to it; and that it ſhould be for ſinners, and alone by Chriſt, and by him as crucified: it would be agreeable, was it taught that ſalvation was by Chriſt in a doctrinal way, by giving laws and rules to men, whereby to ſave themſelves; or that Chriſt ſaves by example, and not by his ſacrifice, in a way of ſatiſfaction for ſin. Now, though no grievous words were uſed, nor any thing ſaid that might juſtly provoke, yet ſuch was the pride of his heart, that he could not bear that his brother ſhould be taken ſo much notice of, who had acted and lived ſo ſcandalouſly; and beſides, his own character as a righteous perſon, was neglected by this doctrine; and his own righteouſneſs laid aſide, in the buſineſs of juſtification and ſalvation, which was intolerable by him: and would not go in; into his father's houſe, nor to the feaſt, nor into the kingdom of heaven, or Goſpel diſpenſation; the Scribes and Phariſees ſhut it up to themſelves, and others; would neither go in themſelves, nor ſuffer others; they did not believe Jeſus to be the Meſſiah, nor did they receive, but reject him; nor did they give any credit to the doctrines, nor ſubmit to the ordinances of that diſpenſation: therefore came his father out; not in a way of wrath and judgment, but in the miniſtry of the word; for though the Jews rejected it, it was not at once taken away from them, but was continued time after time, and for ſome conſiderable time: the Jews of old had the miniſtry of the word, both by angels and men; God frequently went forth to them by his prophets, and at laſt by his ſon; and though they were angry with him, and rejected him, yet ſtill the miniſtry of the word, by the diſciples of Chriſt, were continued a good while to them; which ſhews the condeſcending goodneſs and grace of God, and his patience and long-ſuffering towards them: and intreated him; the Perſic verſion reads, and ſaid unto him, why doſt thou not go in? this regards the external call by the miniſtry of the word, to the outward duties of religion, to means of grace; to give credit to the doctrines, and to attend the ordinances of the Goſpel.

Ver. 29. And he anſwering, ſaid to his father, &c.] Commending himſelf, and reflecting on his father: lo, theſe many years do I ſerve thee; for though he was called a ſon, yet differed little from a ſervant; he was of a ſervile diſpoſition, and under a ſpirit of bondage; he ſerved his father, not in the Goſpel, but in the law, moral and ceremonial; in the letter of it, and not in the newneſs of the Spirit; externally, and not internally; from fear, and not from love; with mercenary views, and not freely; with truſt in, and dependance on his ſervice, ſeeking juſtification and eternal life by it, and not with a view to the glory of God; and this he had done many years; from his youth upwards, as the Phariſee in Matt. xix 20. whereas his younger brother had never ſerved him, but his own luſts; and yet as ſoon as ever he was come home, before he could enter upon ſervice, this entertainment was made for him, and which he therefore reſented: moreover, he does not ſay I have ſerved thee, but I do; denoting the continuance and conſtancy of his ſervice; and intimating that his life had been, and was one continued ſeries of obedience: neither tranſgreſſed I at any time thy commandment; which though true of the elect angels, can never be ſaid of any of the ſons of men; and which ſhows, that he had never been under a work of the Spirit of God, who convinces of ſin; and had never ſeen himſelf in a true light, in the glaſs of that law, he pretended to ſerve God in; that he was a ſtranger to the plague of his own heart, and was a ſelf-deceiver, and the truth of grace was not in him: he could not be a good man, for ſo to ſay, is contrary to the experience of all good men; to their groans, complaints, and confeſſions; to their prayers, for freſh application of pardoning grace; and to the obſervation of all wiſe and good men in all ages; and moſt fully proves him to be a Phariſee: and yet thou never gaveſt me a kid, that I might make merry with my friends; ſome by a kid, or goat, as Theophylact, underſtand a perſecutor, as Saul was of David, and Ahab of Elijah; and ſo means that God had not delivered up ſuch an one into his hands; or took him away by death, that he might have ſome peace and reſt, amidſt his labours and ſervice; and others underſtand this of the Jews, deſiring Barabbas, a goat, and not Jeſus, the Lamb of God; but his meaning ſeems to be, that he had never received any favour in proportion to the ſervices he had done; and ſo charges his father with ingratitude.

Ver. 30. But as ſoon as this thy ſon was come, &c.] He won't own him in the relation of a brother, tho' the father had owned him in that of a ſon; and the offence he took was, that the fatted calf ſhould be killed, or that a crucified Chriſt ſhould be preached; that he ſhould be preached at all, and much leſs that he ſhould be preached to ſinners; and ſtill leſs that he ſhould be preached ſo ſoon to them, as ſoon as ever they became ſenſible of their ſin, as it was the will of his father it ſhould be: for ſuch are not to be ſent away to cleanſe themſelves from ſin by any thing they do, and then apply to Chriſt; or to heal themſelves, and then come to him for a cure; or to get peace by doing ſo, and then come to him for reſt; or to do any thing to fit themſelves for him, for their caſe requires preſent help: now at this the ſelf-righteous man is diſpleaſed. The elder brother would have had another method taken with this younger ſon: he would have had him ſoundly whipped with the rod of the law, for his former ſins; and ſent into the fields along with him to work out his ſalvation; and not to have a rag put upon him, or a ſhoe on his foot, or a morſel of bread given him, till he had earned them; but inſtead of this, to be received and entertained in the manner he was, and ſo ſoon, highly provoked him: for he thought ſuch a conduct was unbecoming God, and his moral perfections; and what his brother was undeſerving of; and opened a door to licentiouſneſs; and highly reflected on his ſervices, as of no value and regard. Which hath devoured thy living; given to his ſon; that part of his goods he had divided to him, ver. 12, 13. with harlots; in rioting and drunkenneſs, in chambering and wantonneſs, in gluttony and debauchery: thou haſt killed for him the fatted calf; ſee the note on ver. 23.

Ver. 31. And he ſaid to him, ſon, &c.] For ſo he was, as before obſerved, by creation, national adoption, and profeſſion: thou art ever with me; not in ſuch a ſenſe as Chriſt the Son of God was: nor can it deſign the gracious preſence of God, or communion with him; for this man did not walk with God; and beſides, this is more frequently expreſſed by God's being with his people, than by their being with him; nor are good men always with God, or God with them, in this ſenſe: ſometimes the phraſe deſigns the ſaints being with God, or Chriſt, in heaven; but here it intends only attendance on publick worſhip, in the place where the ſymbol of God's preſence was, the temple; and the ever denotes the term of the legal diſpenſation, which in many branches of it, as circumciſion, the paſſover, and other ordinances and ſtatutes, is ſaid to be for ever. And all that I have is thine; which muſt be underſtood with a limitation; for it can't mean, that he had all the perfections of God, as Chriſt the Son of God has; nor all ſpiritual bleſſings, as the adopted ſons of God have; nor indeed any of them, but all the outward ordinances of the legal diſpenſation, which belonged to the Jews; particularly thoſe that are enumerated in Rom. ix. 4, 5. as the adoption, the glory, the covenants, the giving of the law, the ſervice of God, the promiſes, their deſcent from the Fathers, and the Meſſiah's deſcent from them; they had him in perſon among them, and his perſonal miniſtry, the word and ordinances of the Goſpel; and had as much as they could have, or deſire to have, in an external way.

Ver. 32. It was meet that we ſhould make merry, &c.] Both father, ſon, and ſervants; ſee the notes on ver. 23, 24. and this elder brother alſo, becauſe of the relation he ſtood in to him: and if he had had the ſame ſpiritual affection the Apoſtle had for his brethren and kinſmen, according the fleſh, Rom. ix. 3. and x. 1. he would have rejoiced at the converſion and return of ſinners by repentance: and be glad; as his Father was, and the Angels in heaven be; ſee ver. 10. for this thy brother, tho' he would not own him as ſuch, was dead, and is alive again, and was loſt, and is found; ſee the note on ver. 24. and ſo the parable is concluded, the elder brother being ſilenced, and having nothing to ſay againſt ſuch ſtrong reaſoning.

CHAP. XVI.

Ver. 1. AND he ſaid alſo to his diſciples, &c.] The Syriac verſion adds, a parable, as the following is; and which is directed to the diſciples, as thoſe in the preceding chapter are to the Phariſees; and who alſo are deſigned in this; tho' it is particularly ſpoken to the diſciples, becauſe it might be of ſome uſe to them, with reſpect to the ſtewardſhip they were in. The Perſic and Ethiopic verſions read, Jeſus, or the Lord Jeſus ſaid; and which is to be underſtood, tho' not expreſſed; for the parable was delivered by him, and is as follows: there was a certain rich man; by whom God is meant, who is rich in the perfections of his nature, in the works of his hands, in his government, and the adminiſtration of it, in providential goodneſs, and in the large revenues of glory due to him from his creatures; for all temporal riches are from him; and ſo are all the riches of mercy, grace, and glory: which had a ſteward; by whom is deſigned, not all mankind; for tho' all men are, in a ſenſe, ſtewards under God, and are entruſted with the good things of life, the gifts of nature, endowments of mind, health, ſtrength of body, time, &c. yet all can't be meant, becauſe ſome are diſtinguiſhed from this ſteward, ver. 5, 8. nor are the diſciples intended, tho' the parable is directed to them; and they were ſtewards of the myſteries and manifold grace of God; and one among them was an unfaithful one, and was turned out of his ſtewardſhip; but the character of an unjuſt man will not ſuit with them: and beſides, this ſteward was of the children of this world, ver. 8. but the Phariſees are meant; for theſe are taken notice of as gravelled at this parable, ver. 14, 15. and to them agrees the character of the men of this world, who were worldly wiſe men; as alſo that of a ſteward; theſe are the tutors and governours mentioned in Gal. iv. 2. who had the care of the houſe of Iſrael, the family of God, under the legal diſpenſation; and to whom were committed the oracles of God, the writings of Moſes, and the prophets; and whoſe buſineſs it was to open and explain them to the people. And the ſame was accuſed unto him, that he had waſted his goods; put falſe gloſſes upon the ſcriptures; fed the family with bad and unwholeſome food, the traditions of the elders, called the leaven of the Phariſees; made havock of the ſouls of men; and made the hearts of the righteous ſad; and hardened ſinners in their wicked ways; and fed themſelves, and not the flock; and plundered perſons of their temporal ſubſtance; of all which they were accuſed by Moſes, in whom they truſted; by his law which they violated; and by their own conſciences, which witneſſed againſt them; and by the cries of thoſe whom they abuſed, which came into the ears of the Lord of ſabaoth.

Ver. 2. And he called him, &c.] By the prophets, ſent one after another; by John the Baptiſt, by Chriſt himſelf, and by his Apoſtles: and ſaid unto him, how is it that I hear this of thee? of thy corrupting the word; of thy covetouſneſs, rapine, and theft; of thy adultery and idolatry, and ſad violation of the law; ſee Rom. ii. 21, 22, 23. give an account of thy ſtewardſhip: what improvement is made of thy gifts; what care has been taken of my vineyard, the Jewiſh church; and where are the fruits that might be expected to have been received at your hands: for thou mayſt be no longer ſteward. This was foretold by the prophets, that God would write a Loammi upon the people of the Jews; that he would cut off three ſhepherds in one month, and particularly lay aſide the idol-ſhepherd, by whom the Phariſees may be meant, Zech. xi. 8, 17. and by John the Baptiſt, who declared the ax was laid to the root of the tree, and it was juſt ready to be cut down, Matt. iii. 11, 12. and by Chriſt, that the kingdom of God ſhould be taken from them, Matt. xxi. 43. and by the Apoſtles, who turned from them to the Gentiles, Acts xiii. 46.

Ver. 3. Then the ſteward ſaid within himſelf, &c.] As the Scribes and Phariſees were wont to do, Matt. iii. 9. and ix. 2. Luke vii. 39, 49. what ſhall I do? he does not ſay, what will become of me? I am undone, and what ſhall I do to be ſaved? or what ſhall I do for my Lord and Maſter I have ſo much injured? or what ſhall I do to make up matters with him? or what account ſhall I give? but what ſhall I do for a maintenance? how ſhall I live? what ſhall I do to pleaſe men, and gain their opinion and good-will, and ſo be provided for by them? of this caſt were the Phariſees, men-pleaſers, and ſelf-ſeekers: for my Lord taketh away from me the ſtewardſhip: the prieſthood was changed, and there was a change alſo of the law; the ceremonial law was abrogated, and the ordinances of the former diſpenſation were ſhaken and removed; ſo that theſe men muſt of courſe turn out of their places and offices: I cannot dig; or plough, as the Arabic verſion renders it; or do any part of huſbandry, particularly that which lies in manuring and cultivating the earth; not but that he was able to do it; but he could not tell how to ſubmit to ſuch a mean, as well as laborious way of life; for nothing was meaner among the Jews than huſbandry: they have a ſaying, that אין לך אומנות פחותה מן הקרקע, you have no trade, or buſineſs, leſſer, or meaner than huſbandry[g]: and to beg I am aſhamed; for nothing could be more diſagreeable to one who had lived ſo well in his maſter's houſe, and in ſo much fulneſs and luxury, as the Scribes and Phariſees did. The Jews have a ſaying, that[h] "want of neceſſaries, טוב משאלתו, is better than begging; (and ſays one) I have taſted the bitterneſs of all things, and I have not found any thing more bitter than begging:" and which was literally true of the Jews, after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; when multitudes of them were condemned to work in the mines; and vaſt numbers were ſcattered about every where as vagabonds, begging their bread; both which were very irkſome to that people: tho' both theſe phraſes may be myſtically underſtood: and digging may intend a laborious ſearching into the ſcriptures, and a diligent performance of good works; neither of which the Phariſees much cared for, tho' they made large pretenſions to both; nor did they dig deep to lay a good foundation whereon to build eternal life and happineſs; nor could they attain to the law of righteouſneſs by all their toil and labour, they would be thought to have taken: and as for begging, they were above that; read the Phariſees's prayer in Luke xviii. 11, 12. and you wont find one petition in it. To aſk any thing at the throne of grace, in a way of mere grace and favour, and not merit; or to beg any thing at the hands of Chriſt, as life, righteouſneſs, pardon, cleanſing, healing, food, &c. they were aſhamed of, and cared not for.

Ver. 4. I am reſolved what to do, &c.] Or I know what to do; I have a ſcheme in my head, and I am determined to execute it, which will provide for me, and ſecure me a maintenance; that when I am put out of the ſtewardſhip; drove from Jeruſalem, and from the temple and the ſynagogues: they may receive me into their houſes; either Jews or Gentiles, after their diſperſion.

Ver. 5. So he called every one of his Lord's debtors, &c.] Either the Gentiles, who were greatly indebted to God, having ſinned againſt him, and the law, and light of nature, at a great rate; into whoſe affections, houſes, and palaces, the Jews found ways and means to introduce themſelves; and, in proceſs of time, got leave to have ſynagogues built, and their worſhip ſet up again: or elſe the Jews, their countrymen; ſince theſe were under thoſe ſtewards, tutors, and governours, and were debtors to do the whole law; and had, by breaking the law, contracted large debts; and againſt whom the ceremonial law ſtood as an hand-writing: theſe the ſteward called unto him, and ſaid unto the firſt, how much oweſt thou unto my Lord? and it is obſervable, that the debts of theſe men, of the firſt, lay in oil, and of the other, in wheat; things much uſed in the ceremonial law, in the obſervance of which they had been greatly deficient; ſee Exod. xxix. 40, 41. Numb. xv. 4—12. Ezek. xlv. 13, 14.

Ver. 6. And he ſaid an hundred meaſures of oil, &c.] Or baths of oil, the ſame quantity as in Ezra vii. 22. where Aben Ezra[i] calls them, מדות, meaſures, as we do here; and Jarchi[k] obſerves, that they were, לבלול מנחות, to mingle with the meat-offerings; which illuſtrates the above obſervation, that they were for the temple ſervice; and the bath was the meaſure of oil, as the ephah was of wheat[l]; and they were both of the ſame quantity, Ezek. xlv. 11. According to Godwin[m] it held four gallons and a half; ſo that a hundred of them contained four hundred and fifty gallons; tho' ſome make the meaſure much larger. Some ſay the bath held ſix gallons, one pottle, and half a pint; and others, ſeven gallons, two quarts, and half a pint; and others, nine gallons, and three quarts. Take thy bill, or writing; which ſhowed the bargain made for ſo many meaſures; and which acknowledged the receipt of them, and promiſed payment: and ſit down quickly; for his caſe required haſte; and write fifty; juſt half; that it might appear he had bought but fifty, and was accountable for no more.

Ver. 7. Then ſaid he to another, and how much oweſt thou? &c.] To my Lord, as before: and he ſaid, an hundred meaſures of wheat, or cors of wheat; the ſame with Homers, Ezek. xlv. 14. the ſame quantity as in Ezra vii. 22. where, as here, they are called an hundred meaſures of wheat; and were, as Jarchi on the place obſerves, למנחות, for the meat-offerings: according to the above writer [n], this meaſure held five buſhels, and five gallons; ſo that the whole was five hundred, ſixty buſhels, and a half: ſome make the meaſure to hold eight buſhels and a half; and others, fourteen buſhels and a pottle, which greatly increaſes the quantity. And he ſaid unto him, take thy bill and write fourſcore. The Perſic verſion reads ſeventy. Inaſmuch now as oil and wheat were things expended in the obſervance of the ceremonial law, and theſe mens debts lay in them, it may have regard to the deficiency of the Jews in thoſe things: wherefore by the bill may be meant the law; and which is ſometimes called by the ſame name as here, γϱαμμα, the writing, or letter, 2 Cor. iii. 6. Rom. ii. 29. and vii. 6. and is ſo called, not merely becauſe it was written in letters; but becauſe it is a mere letter, ſhewing only what is to be done and avoided, without giving ſtrength to perform, or pointing where it is to be had; and it is ſo as obeyed by an unregenerate man; and as abſtracted from the ſpirituality of it; and as weak, and without efficacy, to quicken, juſtify, or ſanctify: and whereas the ſteward, the Scribes and Phariſees, ordered the debtors to write a leſſer ſum; this may regard the leſſening, and even laying aſide of many things in the law, after the deſtruction of the temple; as particularly the daily ſacrifice, and other things; ſee Dan. ix. 27. Hoſ. iii. 4. and the doctrine of the Phariſees was always a curtailing of the law, and making leſs of it than it was; as appears from the gloſſes they put upon it, refuted by our Lord in Matt. v. They compounded the matter with the people, as ſome men do now, and taught them, that an imperfect righteouſneſs would do in the room of a perfect one; a doctrine very pleaſing to men, and which never fails of gaining an acceſs into the hearts and houſes of carnal men; tho' very injurious to God, and to his divine perfections, particularly his juſtice and holineſs; as the methods this ſteward took were unjuſt to his Lord, tho' very agreeable to his debtors, and were well calculated to anſwer the end he propoſed, an after proviſion for himſelf. I am much indebted to a learned writer [o], whoſe name is in the margin, for ſeveral thoughts and hints in the explanation of this parable; and alſo of that of the rich man and Lazarus, in the latter part of this chapter.

Ver. 8. And the Lord commended the unjuſt ſteward, &c.] Not the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who delivered this parable, as the Syriac verſion ſeems to ſuggeſt, rendering it, our Lord; but the Lord of the ſteward, or God, as the Ethiopic verſion reads: not that he commended him for the fact he did, or the injuſtice of it; for this is contrary to his nature and perfections; but for his craft and cunning in providing himſelf a maintenance for time to come: for he is on that account branded as an unjuſt ſteward, as he was, in waſting his Lord's goods; putting falſe gloſſes on the ſcriptures; doing damage both to the ſouls and worldly eſtates of men; and in neglecting and deſpiſing lawful and honeſt ways of living, by digging or begging, aſking favours at the hand of God; and doing good works; and in falſifying accounts; breaking the leaſt of the commandments, and teaching men ſo to do; and in corrupting others, making proſelytes two-fold more the children of hell than himſelf; and in being liberal with another's property, to wrong objects, and for a wrong end. It was not therefore becauſe he had done juſtly to his Lord, or right to others, that he is commended; but becauſe he had done wiſely for himſelf: the wit, and not the goodneſs of the man is commended; which, in the language and ſenſe of the Jews, may be thus expreſſed [p]: "becauſe a man, עושה טובה לעצמו, "does good for himſelf with mammon which is not "his own." For the children of this world are in their generation wiſer than the children of light: by the children of this world may be meant the Iſraelites, who belonged to the Jewiſh nation and church, called the world, and this world, 1 Cor. x. 11. and ii. 6, 8. eſpecially the princes of it, the eccleſiaſtical doctors and rulers: and who alſo were the men of this preſent world; in general they were ſuch who were, as they were born into the world; in their ſins, in the pollution, and under the guilt of them; were carnal, in the fleſh, or unregenerate, and in darkneſs and blindneſs: they were ſuch as were not only in the world, but of it; they belonged to it, having never been called out of it; and were under the influence of the God of it; and were taken with the things of it, its riches, honours, and pleaſures; and had their portion in it, and were of worldly ſpirits; all which agrees with the Scribes and Phariſees; ſee Pſ. xvii. 14. and Aben Ezra on it, who has the very phraſe here uſed: איניש דעלמא, a man of the world, is ſometimes [q] diſtinguiſhed from a ſcholar, or a wiſe man; but בני עלמא, the children of the world, as they frequently intend the inhabitants of the world [r], are ſometimes diſtinguiſhed from בן עלמא דאתי, a ſon of the world to come [s]; and from the children of faith [t], the ſame as the children of light here; by whom are meant the children of the Goſpel-diſpenſation; or perſons enlightened by the Spirit and grace of God, to ſee the ſinfulneſs of ſin, and their wretched ſtate by nature; the inſufficiency of their own righteouſneſs to juſtify them before God; the way of life, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation by Chriſt; who ſee that the ſeveral parts of ſalvation, and the whole, are of grace; have ſome light into the ſcriptures of truth, and doctrines of the Goſpel; and ſome glimpſe of heaven, and the unſeen glories of another world, tho' attended with much darkneſs in the preſent ſtate; and who ſhall enjoy the light of glory. Now, the men of the world, or carnal men, are, generally ſpeaking, wiſer than theſe; not in things ſpiritual, but in things natural, in the affairs of life, in worldly matters. The phraſe ſeems to anſwer to תולדות, generations, uſed in Gen. vi. 9. and xxxvii. 2. theſe are the generations of Noah, &c. and the generations of Jacob; by which are meant, not the genealogies of them, but their affairs; what befel them in life: and ſo the Jewiſh writers [u] explain the phraſe by הקורות, the things which happened unto them in this world, in the courſe of their pilgrimage: or they are wiſer, εις την γενεαν την εαυτων, for their own generation; for the temporal good of their poſterity, than ſaints are for the ſpiritual good of theirs: or they are wiſer for the time that is to come in this life, than good men are concerning themſelves for the time to come in the other world: or they are wiſer, and more prudent in diſpoſing of their worldly ſubſtance for their own ſecular good, and that of their offspring, than men of ſpiritual light and knowledge are, in diſpoſing of their worldly ſubſtance for the glory of God, the intereſt of Chriſt, the honour of religion, their own ſpiritual good, and that of their poſterity.

Ver. 9. And I ſay unto you, &c.] Theſe are the words of Chriſt, as are alſo the latter part of the preceding verſe, accommodating and applying the parable to his diſciples, and for their inſtruction: make to yourſelves friends of the mammon of unrighteouſneſs: by mammon are deſigned riches, wealth, and ſubſtance; ſee the note on Matt. vi. 24. and is called mammon of unrighteouſneſs, becauſe ſuch wealth is often unrighteouſly detained, and is not made uſe of to right and good purpoſes, by the owners of it; or becauſe, generally ſpeaking, it is poſſeſſed by unrighteous men; and, for the moſt part, uſed in an unrighteous manner, in luxury, pride, and intemperance, and is the root, inſtrument, and means of much unrighteouſneſs: or it may be rendered mammon of hurt, or hurtful mammon; as it often is to thoſe who are over-anxious and deſirous of it, or either diſuſe or miſuſe it: or, as beſt of all, mammon of falſhood, or deceitful mammon; ſo in the Targum [w] frequent mention is made of, ממון דשקר, mammon of falſity; and ſtands oppoſed to true riches, in ver. 11. for worldly riches are very empty and fallacious; wherefore deceitfulneſs is aſcribed to them; and they are called uncertain riches, which are not be depended upon, Matt. xiii. 22. 1 Tim. vi. 17. unleſs it ſhould be rather thought that it is ſo called, becauſe gotten in an unrighteous way; as it was by Zaccheus, and might be by Matthew, one of the diſciples, Chriſt now ſpeaks to, and the publicans and ſinners, who were lately become his followers, and whom he adviſes, as the higheſt piece of wiſdom and prudence, to diſpoſe of in ſuch a manner, as of it to make themſelves friends; not God, Father, Son, and Spirit. Theſe indeed are friends to the ſaints, but they are not made ſo by money; reconciliation and redemption are not procured this way; nor is the favour of the judge to be got by ſuch means; the only means of reconciliation, are the blood and death of Chriſt; tho' indeed acts of beneficence, rightly performed, are well pleaſing to God: nor are the angels meant, who are very friendly to all good men; nor rich men to whom riches are not to be given, Prov. xxii. 16. but rather riches themſelves, which, if not rightly uſed, and ſo made friends of, will cry, and be a witneſs againſt the owners of them, Jam. v. 1, 2, 3. tho' it may be the poor ſaints are intended; who by their prayers are capable of doing either a great deal of hurt, or a great deal of good; and it is the intereſt of rich men to make them their friends: that when ye fail; of money; or that fails, as the Ethiopic verſion reads; or rather, when ye leave that, that is, when ye die: ſo in Jer. xlii. 22. know certainly that ye ſhall die; the Septuagint renders it, εκλειψετε, ye ſhall fail by the ſword, &c. they may receive you into everlaſting habitations; the manſions of glory, which are many, and of an eternal duration: this to be underſtood of their being received thither, not by the poor, to whom they have been benefactors; for tho' theſe may now pray for their reception to glory when they die, and will hereafter rejoice at their reception thither; yet they themſelves will not be receivers of them, or their introducers into the everlaſting tents, or tabernacles: nor are the angels intended, who carry the ſouls of the righteous into Abraham's boſom, and will gather the elect together at the laſt day; for not they, but God and Chriſt receive the ſaints to glory: the words may be rendered imperſonally, you may be received; in a way of well doing, tho' not for it: mention is made of the everlaſting tabernacles, in 2 Eſdras ii. 11. and ſo the phraſe may be rendered here, as oppoſed to the earthly and periſhing tabernacles of the body, 2 Cor. v. 1. 2 Pet. i. 13, 14.

Ver. 10. He that is faithful in that which is leaſt, &c.] In quantity and quality, eſpecially the latter; in that which is of little value and worth, at leaſt when compared with other things: is faithful alſo in much; in matters of greater conſequence and importance: the ſenſe of the proverb is, that, generally ſpeaking, a man that acts a faithful part in a ſmall truſt committed to him, does ſo likewiſe in a much larger; and being tried, and found faithful in things of leſs moment, he is intruſted with things of greater importance; tho' this is not always the caſe: for ſometimes a man may behave with great integrity in leſſer matters, on purpoſe that he might gain greater confidence, which, when he has obtained, he abuſes in the vileſt manner; but becauſe it is uſually otherwiſe, our Lord uſes the common proverb; and of like ſenſe is the following; and he that is unjuſt in the leaſt, is unjuſt alſo in much: that man that acts the unfaithful part in a ſmall matter, and of little worth, generally does the ſame, if a greater truſt is committed to him.

Ver. 11. If therefore ye have not been faithful, &c.] This is the application of the above proverbial expreſſions, and ſeems to be directed to the diſciples of Chriſt, tho' not without a view to the covetous Scribes and Phariſees, who were in hearing of it, and were diſturbed at it, ver. 14. and the meaning is, that whereas ſome of them might have been unfaithful, and have acted the unjuſt part in gathering of riches, as Matthew, and other publicans, that were now become the followers of Chriſt; if therefore they ſhould be unfaithful in the unrighteous mammon; in the diſpoſing of it to improper uſes, which was either unrighteouſly gotten, and therefore called, as it ſometimes was, ממון דרשע, mammon of ungodlineſs, or ungodly mammon [x]; or, which was fallacious, deceitful, vain, and tranſitory: who will commit to your truſt the true riches; or mammon? that is, how ſhould you expect to be entruſted with the riches of grace, as the bleſſings and promiſes of the covenant of grace, the graces of the Spirit of God, which truly enrich perſons, and are ſolid and durable? or the riches of glory, the better and more enduring ſubſtance in heaven, ſignified by a kingdom, and an inheritance that fadeth not away? ſo the Jews call the good things of another world, and ſay [y], that "all the good "things of this world are not, טובות אמתיות, "true good things, in compariſon of the good things "of the world to come." And they uſe the ſame diſtinction with reſpect to mammon, as here: "the holy, bleſſed God, they ſay [z], gives him, "ממון של אמת, mammon of truth, or true mam"mon; and he makes it, שקר, falſe, or deceitful:" "or rather the rich treaſure of the Goſpel is meant, called a treaſure in earthen veſſels, and the unſearchable riches of Chriſt; and is comparable to, and of more worth than gold, ſilver, and precious ſtones. And ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, who will

Ver. 12. And if ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's, &c.] Which is not a man's own, but what is committed to him by another; בממון אחרים, with the mammon of others [a], to ſpeak in the language of the Jews; and of mammon, our Lord is ſpeaking, and here of another man's, of which they were only ſtewards, as he in the preceding parable was: hence we read [b] of שומרי ממון, keepers of mammon, who were entruſted with another's ſubſtance; and ſuch are here ſuppoſed, which, if unfaithful in, who ſhall give you that which is your own? that is, ſhould you unjuſtly detain, or make an ill uſe of another man's ſubſtance lodged in your hands, how can you expect but that you will be dealt with in like manner by others, who will not pay you yours, they have in their poſſeſſion, but convert it to their own uſe. A like diſtinction of another's, and a man's own, may be obſerved among the Jews: "there are, "ſay they [c], four ſorts of men in reſpect of giv"ing alms; he that would give, but would not "have others give, his eye is evil, בשל אחרים, "in that which is other mens (i. e. as the commen"tator obſerves [d], leſt the goods of others ſhould "be increaſed, and they get a good name); he "that would that others ſhould give, but he will "not give himſelf, his eye is evil, בשלו, in that "which is his own; he that gives, and would have "others give, he is a good man; he that neither "gives, nor would have others give, he is an un"godly man;" ſee Rom. v. 7, 8. Interpreters generally underſtand by that which is another man's, in the firſt clauſe, the things of this world, which men are poſſeſſed of, becauſe theſe are not of themſelves, but from another, from God; and they are but ſtewards, rather than proprietors of them; and they are for the good of others, and not for themſelves; and are not laſting, but in a little while will paſs from them to others: and by that which is your own, they underſtand the good things of grace and glory, which, when once beſtowed on a man, are his own property, and for his own uſe, and will never be alienated from him, but will always abide with him: but if he is unfaithful in the former, how ſhould he expect the latter to be given to him?

Ver. 13. No ſervant can ſerve two maſters, &c.] See the note on Matt. vi. 24.

Ver. 14. And the Phariſees alſo who were covetous, &c.] Or lovers of money, the love of which is the root of all evil; and that they were, is evident from their devouring widows houſes, under a pretence of making long prayers for them, Matt. xxiii. 14. heard all theſe things; as well as the diſciples, being in company with them, ch. xv. 2. even the parable concerning the unjuſt ſteward, and the application of it; and the directions given about uſing the things of this world, and the diſtributing of them to the poor, and ſhewing a greater concern for riches of an higher nature: and they derided him; lift up their noſe, or drew it out to him, as the word ſignifies, in a ſneering way; they rejected and deſpiſed what he ſaid about their injuſtice, in their ſtewardſhip; the calling of them to an account for it, and the turning of them out of it; and concerning the true uſe of worldly riches, and the contempt of them; they looked upon themſelves ſafe and ſecure in the good opinion of the people, and happy in the enjoyment of worldly things; and looked upon him as a weak man, to talk in the manner he did.

Ver. 15. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] That is, Jeſus ſaid unto them, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions expreſs it: ye are they which juſtify yourſelves before men; from the ſins of injuſtice, unfaithfulneſs, covetouſneſs, and all others; and would be thought, and appear to be righteous; but 'tis only in the ſight of men, who can only ſee the outſide of things, and judge thereby: but God knoweth your hearts; and what is in them, the deceitfulneſs, hypocriſy, covetouſneſs, and cruelty of them, which are hid from the eyes of men: for that which is highly eſteemed among men; or what is high in the account and eſteem of men, as the outward appearance of theſe men for morality, religion, and holineſs; their zeal for the ceremonies of the law, and the traditions of the elders: is abomination in the ſight of God; who knew full well from what principles, and with what views they acted, to gain popular applauſe, and amaſs riches to themſelves, without any concern for the glory of God, and the good of men; ſee Iſa. lxv. 5.

Ver. 16. The law and the prophets were until John, &c.] Till the time that John the Baptiſt began his miniſtry; for till then, the law and the prophets, with the Hagiographa, or holy writings, for into theſe three parts, the Jews divided the books of the Old Teſtament, were the only writings they had; and which contained the whole of the revelation granted to them; and which they wreſted, and put falſe gloſſes on; and therefore it was no wonder that they derided Chriſt, and deſpiſed his miniſtry: and whereas ſpiritual things were promiſed in theſe writings, under the notion of temporal ones; which they not underſtanding, might imagine the doctrine of Chriſt concerning the contempt of worldly riches, was contrary to: and ſince they valued themſelves on having the law and the prophets, Chriſt obſerves, that ſince that time, the kingdom of God is preached; the Goſpel, and the myſteries of it, relating to the kingdom of the Meſſiah, his perſon, office, and grace; and to the kingdom of grace, which lies not in outward, but in inward and ſpiritual things; and to the kingdom of heaven, or glory hereafter; and which is a ſuperior diſpenſation to that of the law and the prophets, and ſets things in a clearer, plainer, and better light: and every man preſſeth into it; the Goſpel diſpenſation, the kingdom of the Meſſiah; that he may enter into it, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions add; which the Scribes and Phariſees did all they could to hinder; ſee Matt. xxiii. 13. large multitudes crouded the miniſtry of John, of Chriſt, and of his apoſtles; the people flocked in great numbers to hear the word, and ſeemed diſpoſed to embrace the doctrines of the Goſpel, and the ordinances of it; they preſſed on one another to hear it, and through many difficulties, diſcouragements, and obſtacles, the Phariſees threw in their way; there was ſcarce a man but ſeemed very deſirous of attending upon the preaching of it, and preſſed hard for it; and with much force and violence, with great eagerneſs and endeavour broke his way to it; though a different ſenſe is given by others reading the words, and every one ſuffers violence to himſelf for it, as the Arabic verſion; or is oppreſſed for it, as the Ethiopic; that is, ſuffers reproach, contradiction, and perſecution, for the ſake of hearing it.

Ver. 17. And it is eaſier for heaven and earth to paſs, &c.] This is ſaid by Chriſt, leſt it ſhould be thought by his ſaying, that the law and the prophets were until John, that they were no longer, nor of any more uſe; but were now abrogated and laid aſide; whereas heaven and earth might ſooner paſs away, and the whole frame of nature be diſſolved: than one tittle of the law to fail; which, and the prophets, in all the precepts, promiſes, types, figures, prophecies, &c. thereof, had their full accompliſhment in the perſon, miracles, obedience, ſufferings, and death of Chriſt; ſee Matt. v. 18.

Ver. 18. Whoſoever putteth away his wife, &c.] For any other cauſe than for adultery, as the Jews uſed to do upon every trifling occaſion, and for every little diſguſt: by which inſtance our Lord ſhews, how the Jews abuſed and depraved the law, and as much as in them lay, cauſed it to fail; and how, he on the other hand, was ſo far from deſtroying and making it of none effect, that he maintained the purity and ſpirituality of it; putting them in mind of what he had formerly ſaid, and of many other things of the like kind along with it; how that if a man divorces his wife, for any thing elſe but the defiling his bed, and marrieth another, committeth adultery; with her that he marries; becauſe his marriage with the former ſtill continues, and cannot be made void by ſuch a divorce: and whoſoever marrieth her that is put away from her huſband; the phraſe from her huſband, is omitted in the Syriac and Perſic verſions: committeth adultery; with her that he marries, becauſe notwithſtanding her huſband's divorce of her, and his after marriage with her, ſhe ſtill remains his lawful and proper wife; ſee the note on Matt. v. 32. The Ethiopic verſion reads this laſt clauſe, quite different from all others thus, and whoſoever puts away her huſband, and joins to another, commits adultery, agreeable to Mark x. 12. ſee the note there.

Ver. 19. There was a certain rich man, &c.] In Beza's moſt ancient copy, and in another manuſcript of his 'tis read by way of preface, he ſaid alſo another parable; which ſhows, that this is not a hiſtory of matter of fact, or an hiſtorical account of two ſuch perſons, as the rich man and the beggar, who had lately lived at Jeruſalem; though the Papiſts pretend, to this day, to point out the very ſpot of ground in Jeruſalem, where this rich man's houſe ſtood: nor is it to be underſtood parabolically of any particular rich man, or prince; as Saul the firſt king of Iſrael; or Herod, who now was reigning, and was cloathed in purple, and lived in a ſumptuous manner: nor of rich men in general, though it greatly deſcribes the characters of ſuch, at leaſt of many of them; who only take care of their bodies, and neglect their ſouls; adorn and pamper them, live in pleaſure, and grow wanton, and have no regard to the poor ſaints; and when they die go to hell; for their riches will not profit them in a day of wrath, nor deliver from it, or be regarded by the judge, any more than hills and mountains will hide them from his face: but by the rich man are meant, the Jews in general; for that this man is repreſented, and to be conſidered as a Jew, is evident from Abraham being his father, and his calling him ſo, and Abraham again calling him his ſon, ver. 24, 25. of which relation the Jews much boaſted and gloried in; and from his brethren having Moſes and the prophets, ver. 29. which were peculiar to the Jewiſh people; and from that invincible and incurable infidelity in them, that they would not believe, though one roſe from the dead, ver. 31. as the Jews would not believe in Chriſt, though he himſelf roſe from the dead, which was the ſign he gave them of his being the Meſſiah: and the general deſign of the parable, is to expoſe the wickedneſs and unbelief of the Jews, and to ſhew their danger and miſery, for their contempt and rejection of the Meſſiah; and particularly the Phariſees are deſigned, who being covetous, had derided Chriſt for what he had before ſaid; and, who though high in the eſteem of men, were an abomination to God, ver. 14, 15. Theſe more eſpecially boaſted of Abraham being their father; and of their being the diſciples of Moſes, and truſted in him, and in his law; and thought they ſhould have eternal life through having and reading the books of Moſes and the prophets: theſe may be called a man, becauſe this was the name by which the Jews ſtile themſelves, in diſtinction from the Gentiles, whom they compare to beaſts; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 26. and this they ground on a paſſage in Ezek. xxxiv. 31. and ye my flock, the flock of my paſture, are men; upon which their note is [e], "ye "are called, אדם, men, but the nations of the "earth are not called men." And they may be called a certain man, a famous man, a man of note, as the Jews, and eſpecially the Phariſees, thought themſelves to be; and therefore coveted the chief places in the ſynagogues, and at feaſts, and loved ſalutations and greetings in market-places, and to be called of men Rabbi, and maſter: as alſo a rich man; for the Jews in general were a wealthy people, lived in a very fruitful country, and were greatly indulged with the riches of providential goodneſs; and particularly the Phariſees, many of whom were of the great Sanhedrim, and rulers of ſynagogues, and elders of the people; and who by various methods, amaſſed to themſelves great riches, and even devoured widows houſes; ſee Luke vi. 24. and xviii. 18, 23. and they were alſo rich in outward means and ordinances, having the oracles of God, his word, worſhip, and ſervice; and as to their ſpiritual and eternal eſtate, in their own eſteem; though they were not truly rich in grace, not in faith, nor in ſpiritual knowledge, nor even in good works, of which they ſo much boaſted; but in appearance, and in their own conceit, they were rich in the knowledge of the law, and in righteouſneſs, which they imagined was perfect, and ſo ſtood in need of nothing; no, not of repentance, and eſpecially of Chriſt, or of any thing from him: which was clothed in purple and fine linnen; or byſſus, which is ſaid to [f] grow on a tree, in height equal to a poplar, and in leaves like a willow, and was brought out of India into Egypt, and much uſed there, as it alſo was among the Jews: hence we often read [g] of, בוצא, or, לבושין דבוץ, garments of byſſus, or fine linnen: the Jews in general dreſſed well; their common apparel were fine linnen and ſilk; ſee Ezek. xvi. 10, 13. and ſo the Arabic verſion here renders it, ſilk and purple; and the Perſic verſion, ſilks and bombycines: and the prieſts particularly, were arrayed in ſuch a habit; the robe of the ephod, and alſo its curious girdle, were of blue, purple, ſcarlet, and fine linnen, and at the hem of it were pomegranates of blue, purple, and ſcarlet, Exod. xxviii. 6, 8, 33. And as for the Phariſees, they loved to go in long robes, and to make broad their phylacteries, and enlarge the borders of their garments, which were fringes of blue, joined unto them; and which may figuratively expreſs the fine outſide ſhow of holineſs and righteouſneſs, they made; and fared ſumptuouſly every day. The Jews in common lived well, being in a land that flowed with milk and honey; ſee Ezek. xvi. 13. and eſpecially the prieſts, who offered ſered up lambs every day, beſides other offerings, of which they had their part; as alſo the Phariſees, who were often at feaſts, where they loved the chief places: and this may ſignify the eaſy and jocund life they lived; knowing no ſorrow upon ſpiritual accounts, having no ſenſe of ſin, nor ſight of the ſpirituality of the law, nor view of danger; but at perfect eaſe, and not emptied from veſſel to veſſel.

[g] Targum in Gen. xli. 42. in 2 Chron. v. 12. & in Ezek. xliv. 17.

Ver. 20. And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus, &c.] By whom is deſigned, not any particular beggar in the times of Chriſt, that went by this name; though there were ſuch perſons in Iſrael, and in the times of our Lord; as blind Bartimeus, and others: nor David, in the times of Saul, who was poor and needy; and who ſometimes wanted bread, and at a certain time went to Abimelech for ſome: nor the godly poor in common, though the heirs of the heavenly kingdom, are generally ſpeaking, the poor of this world; theſe receive Chriſt and his Goſpel, and have their evil things here, and their good things hereafter; they are now ſlighted and neglected by men, but ſhall hereafter have a place in Abraham's boſom, and be for ever with the Lord: nor are the Gentiles intended; though they may be ſaid to be poor and helpleſs, as they were without Chriſt, aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael, and ſtrangers to the covenants of promiſe, and without hope and God in the world; and were deſpiſed and rejected by the Jews, and not ſuffered to come into their temple, and were called and treated as dogs; though, as the Syrophœnician woman pleaded, the dogs might eat of the crumbs which fall from their maſter's table; and who, upon the breaking down of the middle wall of partition, were called by grace, and drawn to Chriſt, and were bleſſed with faithful Abraham, and made to ſit down with him in the kingdom of heaven: but our Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf is here meant; as appears from the cauſe and occaſion of this parable, which was the deriſion of Chriſt by the covetous Phariſees, who, though high in the eſteem of men, were an abomination to God; and from the ſcope and deſign of it, which is to repreſent the mean and deſpicable condition of Chriſt in this world, whilſt the Phariſees, his enemies, lived in great pomp and ſplendor; and the exaltation of Chriſt hereafter, when they would be in the utmoſt diſtreſs; and alſo the infidelity of that people, who continued in their unbelief, notwithſtanding the reſurrection of Chriſt from the dead: the name Lazarus well agrees with him. The Syriac verſion calls him Loozar, as if it ſignified one that was helpleſs, that had no help, but wanted it, and ſo a fit name for a beggar; and well ſuits with Chriſt, who looked, and there was none to help, Iſa. lxiii. 5. nor did he receive any help from men; though rather, the word is the contraction of Eleazar, and ſo the Ethiopic verſion reads it here: and it is eaſy to obſerve, that he who is called R. Eleazar in the Babylonian Talmud, is in the Jeruſalem called, times without number, ר״לעזר, R. Lazar [h]; and R. Liezer, is put for R. Eliezer: it is a rule given by one of the Jewiſh writers [i], that "in the Jeruſalem Talmud, "wherever R. Eleazar is written without an aleph, "R. Lazar ben Azariah is intended." And Chriſt may very well be called by this name; ſince this was the name of one of his types, Eleazar the ſon of Aaron, and of one of his anceſtors, who is mentioned in his genealogy, Matt. i. 15. and eſpecially as the name ſignifies, that the Lord was his helper; ſee Exod. xviii. 4. Help was promiſed him by God, and he expected it, and firmly believed he ſhould have it, and accordingly he had it; God did help him in a day of ſalvation: and which was no indication of weakneſs in him, who is the mighty God, and mighty to ſave; but of the Father's regard to him as man, and mediator; and of the concern that each of the divine perſons had for, and in man's ſalvation: and on account of his circumſtances of life, he might be called πτωχος, a poor man, as he is in 2 Cor. viii. 9. and frequently in prophecy; ſee Pſal. xxxiv. 6. and xl. 17. and xli. 1. and lxix. 29. Eccl. ix. 14. Iſa. lxvi. 2. Zech. ix. 9. and though by aſſuming human nature, he did not ceaſe to be God, or to loſe the riches of his divine nature and perfections, yet his divine perfections, and the glory of them, were much hid and covered in his ſtate of humiliation; and he was much the reverſe of many of them in his human nature; in which he was expoſed to much outward poverty and meanneſs: he was born of poor parents; had no liberal education; was brought up to a trade; had not a foot of ground to call his own, nor where to lay his head; and lived upon the miniſtrations of others to him; and when he died, had nothing to bequeath his mother, but left her to the care of a diſciple: and he is further deſcribed, by his poſture and ſituation, which was laid at his gate; that is, at the rich man's, as is expreſſed in the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions: this was the place where beggars ſtood, or were laid, and aſked alms; hence is that rule with the Jews [k], and in many other places the following phraſe; "if a "man dies and leaves ſons and daughters——if he "leaves but a ſmall ſubſtance, the daughters ſhall "be taken care of, and the ſons, ישאלו על הפתחים, "ſhall beg at the gates." This denotes the rejection of Chriſt by the Jews; he came to them, and they received him not; he had no entrance into their hearts, and was admitted but into few of their houſes; they put thoſe that confeſſed him out of their ſynagogues; and cauſed him himſelf to depart out of ſome of their cities; they delivered him up into the Gentiles that were without; and at laſt led him without the gate of Jeruſalem, where he ſuffered: full of ſores; ſo Nahum Gamzu [l] is ſaid to have his whole body, מלא שחין, full of ulcers: ſometimes the Jewiſh phraſe, which anſwers to the word here uſed is, מוכת שחין, one ſtricken with ulcers [m]; and this by the commentators [n], is explained of a leprous perſon; ſo one of the names of the Meſſiah is with the Jews [o], חיורא, which ſignifies leprous; in proof of which, they produce Iſa. liii. 4. Surely he hath born our griefs, &c. By theſe ſores may be meant, ſins; ſee Pſal. xxxviii. 5, 7. Iſa. i. 6. Chriſt was holy and righteous in himſelf, in his nature, life, and converſation; he was without both original and actual ſin; yet he was in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, and was reproached and calumniated by men as a ſinner; and had really and actually, all the ſins of his people on him, by imputation; and was made even ſin itſelf, for them; ſo that in this ſenſe he might be ſaid to be full of them, though in himſelf he was free from them: they may alſo intend the temptations of ſatan, thoſe fiery darts which were flung at him, and by which he ſuffered; as alſo the reproaches and perſecutions of men, which attended him more or leſs, from the cradle to the croſs; together with all his other ſorrows and ſufferings, being ſcourged, buffeted, and beaten, and wounded for our ſins, and bruiſed for our tranſgreſſions; of which wounds and bruiſes he might be ſaid to be full.

Ver. 21. And deſiring to be fed with the crumbs, &c.] The offal food, broken bread, fragments of meat; that food which falls from the knife, or plate, in eating, and from thence on the ground; and literally underſtood, may expreſs the low condition Chriſt was in, in his human nature: he aſſumed a true body, like to ours, and partook of the ſame fleſh and blood with us, and was liable to the ſame infirmities as ours, which are ſinleſs; and among the reſt, was ſubject to hunger and thirſt, and was obliged to the miniſtration of others for a ſubſiſtence: and it may alſo expreſs his contentment in ſuch a condition; he never murmured at the providence of God, but was entirely reſigned to his will; he did not deſire to live in fulneſs and affluence, but avoided and ſhunned every ſtep that led unto it; nor did he envy the plenty of others, and was fully ſatiſfied with his meanneſs; nor did he ever work a miracle for the ſake of feeding himſelf. Moreover, the words being underſtood myſtically, may deſign the elect of God among the Jews, who, like crumbs, were few in number, a ſeed, a remnant, according to the election of grace: there were but few among them that were choſen of God, and effectually called by his grace; and but a little flock to whom he gave the kingdom; and a ſmall number, who entered in at the ſtrait gate, and were ſaved; and theſe few were very mean and deſpicable for their outward poverty; for the poor had the Goſpel preached to them, and they received it, when the rich, and the rulers of the people, rejected it: and they were like crumbs for their ſmall degree of worldly wiſdom and knowledge, being babes, ſimple and fooliſh, who followed Chriſt, while the learned, wiſe, and prudent deſpiſed him; and for their ſinfulneſs and vileneſs, being, generally ſpeaking, notorious ſinners, publicans and harlots; and of theſe it may be ſaid what follows, which fell from the rich man's table; being originally of the Jews, but ſeparated from them by the grace of God, and rejected by them with ſcorn and contempt. Theſe Chriſt deſired; ſee Cant. vii. 10. his deſire was towards them from everlaſting, when he aſked them of his father, and they were given to him; and it was not only after their perſons, but after their ſalvation, and that both in eternity and in time; and which he ſignified by various words and actions: and it is towards them, while in a ſtate of unregeneracy, that they may be converted, and believe in him; and when they are called, he delights in the grace he puts in them, and in the righteouſneſs he puts upon them; he takes pleaſure in their company; he deſires them for his habitation; he ſtands at the door and knocks for admiſſion to them; and nothing is he more earneſtly ſollicitous for, and eager after, than their being with him in glory to all eternity; and his end in all, is to be fed or ſatiſfied with them; ſee Iſ. liii. 11. he came into the world to gather theſe ſcattered crumbs and fragments together; it was his meat and drink, to work out their ſalvation; and it will be his higheſt joy and pleaſure to preſent them to his father, and himſelf, compleat and perfect, and introduce them into his kingdom and glory; he will be fully ſatiſfied in them, and they in him, when they ſhall awake in his likeneſs. Then will all Chriſt's deſires, prayers, and interceſſions, have their full accompliſhment. The Vulgate Latin adds, and no man gave to him; which ſeems to be tranſcribed from ch. xv. 16. and is not ſupported by any copy or verſion. Moreover, the dogs came and licked his ſores: by the dogs are meant not the Jews, though they are ſometimes ſo called, and eſpecially the Scribes and Phariſees, Pſ. xxii. 16, 20. Iſ. lvi. 10, 11. Phil. iii. 2. for theſe made his ſores and wounds, or were the authors of his ſorrows and ſufferings; but rather the Gentiles, who were ſo called by the Jews; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 26. becauſe theſe creatures were unclean by the law, and had in the greateſt contempt by the Jews; and for their barbarity, malice, and cruelty, Deut. xxiii. 18. 1 Sam. xxiv. 14. 2 Kings viii. 12, 13. as the Gentiles were by the Jews eſteemed unclean and unfit, either for civil or religious converſation; and were treated as aliens by them; and were indeed in their heatheniſh ſtate, barbarous and inhuman, and lived in malice, hateful, and hating one another: theſe, ſome of them came to Chriſt in perſon, as the Centurion, and Syrophœnician woman, many of the Samaritans, who, with the Jews, were all one as heathens, and ſeveral Grecians at the feaſt; and many of them alſo came to him by faith, through the miniſtry of his ſervants, under the influence of divine grace, and that according to various prophecies in the Old Teſtament, concerning the calling and gathering of the Gentiles to him: theſe embraced a crucified Chriſt; and fed upon the ſlain lamb of God; eat his fleſh, and drank his blood; ſtretched forth the hand of faith, and thruſt it into his bleeding wounds; and lived by faith on him, who was wounded and bruiſed for their ſins, and whoſe blood was ſhed for the remiſſion of them.

Ver. 22. And it came to paſs that the beggar died, &c.] The death of Chriſt was not a caſual thing, a fortuitous event; it was agreed unto, and ſettled in the covenant of grace; it was ſpoken of by the prophets of the Old Teſtament; it was typified by the ſacrifices of the law, and other things; it was foretold by Chriſt himſelf, and was the end of his coming into this world, wherein the great love, both of him and of his father, is expreſſed; and is the main article of the chriſtian faith; ſo that this came to paſs according to the decrees of God, the counſel, and covenant of peace, the will of Chriſt, and his predictions, and as the accompliſhment of the law, and prophets: it was not a natural, but violent death which Chriſt died; and yet it was both voluntary and neceſſary; it was but once, and is of an eternal efficacy, and is a ſacrifice acceptable to God; it was not for himſelf, or any ſin of his, who knew none, nor for the angels, and their redemption, whoſe nature he did not aſſume; but for men, and for their ſins. Chriſt died not merely as an example to them, or only to confirm his doctrines; but as a ſubſtitute, in the room and ſtead of his people; to atone for their ſins, and ſatisfy divine juſtice; to procure the pardon of them in a way of juſtice; to take them away, and utterly aboliſh them; to bring in an everlaſting righteouſneſs; to obtain eternal redemption, and bring ſuch nigh to God who were afar off, and that men might live through him now, and have eternal life by him hereafter: and was carried by the angels into Abraham's boſom: by Abraham's boſom is meant heaven, a phraſe well known to the Jews, by which they commonly expreſſed the happineſs of the future ſtate: of Abraham's happy ſtate they had no doubt; and when they ſpake of the happineſs of another's, they ſometimes ſignified it by going to Abraham; as when the mother of the ſeven ſons, ſlain by Cæſar, ſaw her youngeſt going to be ſacrificed[p], " ſhe fell " upon him, and embraced him, and kiſſed him, and " ſaid unto him, my ſon, לך אצל אברהם אביכם, " go to Abraham your father, and tell him, thus " ſaith my mother, &c." and ſometimes, as here, by being in his boſom. So it is ſaid[q], that Eliezer his ſervant, (Abraham's, the ſame name with Lazarus) מונח בחיקו, is laid in his boſom: and which may refer to the account in the Talmud[r], that when R. Benaah, the painter of caves, came to the cave of Abraham, he found Eliezer, the ſervant of Abraham, דקאי קמיה, ſtanding before him. And it is alſo ſaid[s] of Rabbi, when he died, היום יושב בחיקו של אברהם, this day he ſits in the boſom of Abraham; for as it was uſual with them to repreſent the joys of heaven by a feaſt, ſo the partaking of them, by ſitting down at a table with Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob; ſee Matt. viii. 12. and as their manner at meals was by lying along on couches at eating; he that lay next another might be ſaid to lie, or lean, in his boſom: hence Abraham's boſom came to ſignify the near and intimate enjoyment of happineſs with him in the other world. The aſcenſion of Chriſt is expreſſed by a being carried up into heaven, Luke xxiv. 51. and here he is entered, and has been received, and will be retained, until the time of the reſtitution of all things; here he is glorified in human nature, ſits at the right hand of God, and appears in his preſence, on the behalf of his people; and indeed, the ends of his going there, were to receive gifts for them, to be their advocate and interceſſor, to take poſſeſſion of heaven in their name, and prepare that for them, and them for that; and hither he was carried by angels: theſe were the chariots in which he rode; and theſe the guard that attended him, when he was ſeen, looked upon, and gazed at by them with adoration, faith, and wonder; which ſhows the miniſtration of angels to him, and ſeems to ſet forth the glory and magnificence in which he aſcended: and this agrees with the notions of the Jews, that when good men die, their ſouls are immediately received by angels, and taken under their care, and carried to heaven. So one of their paraphraſts[t], having mentioned the garden of Eden, which is but another name for heaven with them, adds, " into which no man can enter but " the righteous, whoſe ſouls are carried thither, " ביד מלאכיא, in the hand, or by the means of angels." And elſewhere they ſay[u], " with the Shekinah " come three miniſtring angels to receive the ſoul of " a righteous man." Particularly it is ſaid of Moſes, at the time of his death[w], that " the holy, bleſſed " God deſcended from the higheſt heavens, to take " the ſoul of Moſes, and three miniſtring angels " with him." And ſometimes they ſay[x], not only three angels, but three companies of angels attend at ſuch a time: their words are theſe; " when a " righteous man departs out of the world, three " companies of miniſtring angels meet him; one " ſays to him, come in peace; and another ſays, " walking in his uprightneſs; and the other ſays, " he ſhall enter into peace, &c." No mention is made in this parable of the burial of this man nor any words uſed expreſſive of it, or that in the leaſt hint it. The reaſon is, becauſe Chriſt lay ſo ſhort a time in the grave, and he was not left there, nor did he ſee corruption; but in a very little while was raiſed from the dead, and delivered from the power of the grave; when, after ſome ſtay on earth, he was attended by angels to the higheſt heavens: for this is to be underſtood, not of his ſoul being had to paradiſe immediately upon his ſeparation from the body; but of his aſcenſion to heaven after his reſurrection, when he was eſcorted by angels thither. The rich man alſo died. This may be underſtood both of the natural death of the Scribes and Phariſees; who, tho' they were dignified perſons, were as Gods, yet were mortal, and died like men; ſee Pſ. lxxxii. 6, 7. compared with John x. 34, 35. and they died in their ſins, in their unbelief of the Meſſiah, and ſo were damned; in their impenitence and hardneſs of heart, for as they thought they needed no repentance, they were not called unto it; and in the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, blaſpheming the miracles of Chriſt done by him, and which was a ſin unto death; and under the power and guilt of all their other ſins, and ſo were loſt and periſhed. And it may alſo be underſtood of the political and eccleſiaſtical death of the Jewiſh people; which lay in the deſtruction of the city of Jeruſalem, and of the temple, and in the abolition of the temple-worſhip, and of the whole ceremonial law; a lo-ammi was written upon their church-ſtate, and the covenant between God and them was broken; the Goſpel was removed from them, which was as death, as the return of it, and their call by it, will be as life from the dead; as well as their place and nation, their civil power and authority were taken away from them by the Romans; and a death of afflictions, by captivity and calamities, of every kind, have attended them ever ſince. And it is to be obſerved, that Lazarus died before the rich man, as Chriſt died before the deſtruction of the Jewiſh polity and church-ſtate: the city and ſanctuary were not deſtroyed, nor the daily ſacrifice made to ceaſe, nor the conſummation, and that determined, poured upon the deſolate, until ſome time after the Meſſiah was cut off, according to the prophecy in Dan.

~~vii~~. 26, 27. Moreover, no mention is made of the 9 rich man being carried by angels, as Lazarus was; and if he was, he was carried, not by the good, but by the evil angels, and not into Abraham's boſom, but to hell. So the Jews[y] ſay, " if a ſoul is " worthy, how many holy troops, or companies, " are ready to join it, and bring it up into paradiſe? but if not worthy, how many ſtrange " troops are ready to bring it in the way of hell? " theſe are the troops of the deſtroying angels." However, this is ſaid of him, as is not of Lazarus, and was buried; as wicked men are, when ſometimes the ſaints are not; ſee Eccl. viii. 10. Pſ. lxxix. 2, 3. The Scribes and Phariſees, who were ſo diligent to build and garniſh the ſepulchres of the prophets, among their other inſtances of pride and vanity, took care, no doubt, to provide and erect ſtately monuments for themſelves; and who were buried in great pomp and ſplendor. Tho' this may reſpect their church-ſtate, ſervice, and ceremonies, which received their death's blow at the crucifixion of Chriſt, but remained for ſome time unburied, it being with difficulty that theſe things were got under the feet of the church; and may alſo refer to the political ſtate of the Jews, who, as a nation, are repreſented as in their graves, where they are to this day, and will be until they ſhall be turned unto the Lord, when they ſhall be brought out of their graves, and ſhall live and return to their own land, Ezek. xxxvii. 12, 13, 14. The Vulgate Latin adds, in hell; but this belongs to the following verſe.

Ver. 23. And in hell he lift up his eyes, being in torments, &c.] Which may deſign the place of torment, and the miſerable ſtate the Scribes and Phariſees, as all wicked men, enter immediately into upon death, Pſal. ix. 17. who in their life-time were blind, and are called blind guides, blind watchmen, blind leaders of the blind, and who were given up to judicial blindneſs and hardneſs of heart; but in hell their eyes are opened, and they ſee their miſtakes about the Meſſiah, and find themſelves in torments, under dreadful knawings, and remorſe of conſcience; and having a terrible ſenſation of divine wrath, their worm dies not, and their fire is not quenched: or this may regard the vengeance of God on the Jews, at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; when a fire was kindled againſt their land, and burned to the loweſt hell; and conſumed the earth with her increaſe, and ſet on fire the foundations of the mountains; and the whole land became brimſtone, ſalt, and burning; and they were rooted out of it in anger, wrath, and great indignation; ſee Deut. xxix. 23, 27, 28. and xxxii. 22. or rather, the dreadful calamities which came upon them in the times of Adrian at Bither; when their falſe Meſſiah Bar Cochab was taken and ſlain, and ſuch multitudes of them were deſtroyed in the moſt miſerable manner [z]; when that people, who before had their eyes darkened, and a ſpirit of ſlumber and ſtupidity fallen upon them, in thoſe calamities began to be under ſome convictions: and ſeeth Abraham afar off; the covenant of circumciſion given to him, and to them his natural ſeed, now of no uſe to them; their deſcent from him, of which they boaſted, and in which they truſted, now of no avail; and him in the kingdom of heaven, and themſelves thruſt out; ſee Luke xiii. 28. And Lazarus in his boſom; they now found the Meſſiah was come, and was gone to heaven, whither they could not come, John vii. 33, 34. The Jews are convinced that the Meſſiah is born, though not revealed; and they ſometimes confeſs, that he was born the ſame day Jeruſalem was deſtroyed; and ſometimes they ſay, he ſits at the gates of Rome among the lepers, and at other times, that he is in the walks of paradiſe [a]. This is ſaid in agreement with the notions of the Jews, that wicked men will ſee the righteous in happineſs, and themſelves in torment; by which the latter will be aggravated, to which the alluſion is; for they ſay [b], "the gates of paradiſe are fixed over-againſt the "gates of hell, ſo that they can ſee the righteous "in reſt, and themſelves in diſtreſs."

Ver. 24. And he cried and ſaid, father Abraham, &c.] The Jews uſed to call Abraham their father, and were proud of their deſcent from him, Matt. iii. 9. John viii. 33, 39. and ſo perſons are after death repreſented by them, as ſpeaking to, and diſcourſing with him; as in the paſſage cited in the note on ver. 22. to which the following may be added [c]; "ſays R. Jonathan, from whence does "it appear that the dead diſcourſe with each "other? it is ſaid, Deut. xxxiv. 4. And the Lord "ſaid unto him, this is the land which I ſware unto "Abraham, unto Iſaac, and unto Jacob, ſaying, "&c. what is the meaning of the word ſaying? "the holy bleſſed God ſaid to Moſes, go ſay to "Abraham, &c." And here the Jews, in their diſtreſs, are repreſented as applying to him, ſaying, have mercy on me, and ſend Lazarus; which ſeems to have reſpect to the mercy promiſed to Abraham, the covenant made with him, and the oath ſwore unto him, to ſend the Meſſiah, Luke i. 72, 73. and which now too late, theſe wretched Jews plead, the Meſſiah being ſent already: that he may dip the tip of his finger in water; in alluſion to the waſhings and purifications among the Jews, and the ſprinkling of blood by the finger of the high-prieſt; which were typical of cleanſing, pardon, comfort, and refreſhment, by the grace and blood of Chriſt: and cool my tongue; which had ſpoken ſo many ſcurrilous and blaſphemous things of Chriſt; ſaying that he was a ſinner, a glutton, and a wine-bibber, a Samaritan, and had a devil; that he caſt out devils by Beelzebub, the prince of devils; and that he was a ſeditious perſon, and guilty of baſphemy: ſo the Jews repreſent perſons in hell, deſirous of cooling water, and as ſometimes favoured with it, and ſometimes not: they ſay [d], he that reads Keriat Shema, (i. e. hear, O Iſrael, &c.) and very accurately examines the letters of it, מצננין, they cool hell for him, as it is ſaid, Pſ. lxviii. 14. And elſewhere [e], they ſpeak of a diſciple, or good man, that was ſeen after death amidſt gardens, and orchards, and fountains of water; and of a publican, or wicked man, ſeen ſtanding by the bank of a river, ſeeking, ממטי מיא ולא מטי, to come to the water, but could not come at it. So Mahomet [f] has a paſſage, that is ſomewhat like to this text; "the inhabitants of hell-fire, ſhall call to the inhabitants "of paradiſe, ſaying, pour upon us ſome water, or "of thoſe refreſhments God hath beſtowed on you." This man could not ſo much as get a drop of water to cool his tongue, not the leaſt refreſhment, nor mitigation of the anguiſh of his conſcience, for the ſins of his tongue: for I am tormented in this flame; in the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and calamities at Bither, and other afflictions; together with the wrath of God poured into the conſcience, and the bitter remorſes of that for ſpeaking againſt the Meſſiah; and which are ſtill greater in hell, where the worm dies not, and the fire is not quenched.

Ver. 25. But Abraham ſaid, ſon, &c.] He calls him ſon, not in a ſpiritual ſenſe; he was not one of Abraham's ſpiritual ſeed, that trod in the ſteps of his faith; but becauſe he was ſo according to the fleſh; and in return to his calling him father: good men have not always good children, nor is any truſt to be put in birth and parentage: remember, that thou in thy life-time receivedſt thy good things; temporal good things; a land flowing with milk and honey; all the outward bleſſings of life that could be wiſhed for, the Jews had, whilſt they were in their own land; and alſo eccleſiaſtical good things, as the adoption, the glory, the covenants, the giving of the law, and the ſervice of God, and the promiſes, the fathers, and the Meſſiah according to the fleſh, even all external privileges and ordinances, Rom. ix. 4, 5. And likewiſe Lazarus evil things; Chriſt was ſurrounded with the infirmities of human nature, he aſſumed; was attended with much outward meanneſs and poverty; was loaded with calumnies and reproaches; and followed with the wrath, hatred, and perſecution of men; and ſuffered many evil things, as buffetings, ſcourging, ſpitting, and cruel mockings, and at laſt death itſelf: but now he is comforted; ſee Pſal. xvi. 9, 10, 11. compared compared with Acts ii. 25—28. Chriſt being raiſed from the dead, and ſet in human nature at the right hand of God, is comforted with the preſence of God, which for a while he was deprived of, when on the croſs; and is delighted with the glory that is put upon him as man; and with pleaſure ſees the travail of his ſoul continually, his elect and redeemed ones, called and gathered by the grace of God, who are his jewels, his portion, and goodly heritage: and thou art tormented; as were many of the Jews, his implacable enemies and perſecutors in hell, and others in captivity, bondage, and diſtreſs.

Ver. 26. And beſides all this, &c.] The different circumſtances of each, both paſt and preſent, which ſhould be obſerved and conſidered: between us and you there is a great gulf fixed; as this may regard the ſtate of the Phariſees after death, it intends not the natural diſtance between heaven and hell; though there may be an alluſion to the notions of the Jews concerning that, who on thoſe words in Eccl. vii. 14. God hath ſet the one over-againſt the other, ſay [f], "this is hell and paradiſe, what ſpace is there between them? an hand's breadth; R. Jochanan ſays a wall, but the Rabbans ſay, they are both of them even, ſo that they may look out of one into another." Which paſſage is cited a little differently [g], thus; "wherefore did the holy bleſſed God create hell and paradiſe? that they might be one againſt another; what ſpace is there between them? R. Jochanan ſays, a wall, and R. Acha ſays an hand's breadth; but the Rabbans ſay, two fingers." And elſewhere it [h] is ſaid, "know that hell and paradiſe are near to one another, and one houſe ſeparates between them; and paradiſe is on the north-eaſt ſide———and hell on the north-weſt." Mahomet ſeems to have borrowed this notion from them, who ſays [i], "between the bleſſed and the damned, there ſhall be a vail; and men ſhall ſtand on Al Araf, (the name of the wall or partition, that ſhall ſeparate paradiſe from hell) who ſhall know every one of them by their mouths." But not this natural ſpace, be it what it will, but the immutable decree of God is intended here, which has unalterably fixed the ſtate of the damned, and of the bleſſed: ſo that they which would paſs from hence to you cannot, neither can they paſs to us that would come from hence; not that thoſe in heaven, can deſire to go to thoſe in hell; though thoſe in hell, may wiſh to be in heaven; but the ſenſe is, that by this irrevocable decree of God, the ſaints in heaven are eternally happy, and the wicked in hell eternally miſerable: and this alſo agrees with the notions of the Jews [k], who repreſent it impoſſible for a man, after he has deſcended into hell, to come up from thence any more: but as this may regard the Jews ſtate of captivity and affliction, ſince the deſtruction of their city and temple, upon, and for their rejection of the Meſſiah; it may denote the impoſſibility of Chriſt's coming again upon the ſame errand, he came on before, to be a ſaviour of ſinners, and a ſacrifice for ſin; and of the Jews believing in him, ſo long as they lie under the ſpirit of ſlumber, and are given up to judicial blindneſs and hardneſs of heart.

Ver. 27. Then he ſaid, I pray thee therefore father, &c.] The Cambridge copy of Beza's, and the Ethiopic verſion read, father Abraham; finding he could have no redreſs of his miſery, nor any relief for himſelf, he applies for others: that thou wouldſt ſend him to my father's houſe; the houſe of Iſrael and Jacob, the ſurviving Jews: and this agrees alſo with a notion of theirs, that the dead ſeek for mercy for them [l]. The Perſic and Ethiopic verſions read, that thou wouldſt ſend Lazarus, &c. whom the one calls Gazarus, and the other Eleazar.

Ver. 28. For I have five brethren, &c.] Meaning his brethren and countrymen, according to the fleſh; who when he was alive, ſtood in ſuch a relation to him; ſaid to be five, in alluſion it may be to the children of Iſrael coming out of Egypt, חמשים, by fives, or five in a rank, Exod. xiii. 18. as a learned man [m] conjectures, to whom I am beholden for ſeveral hints, in the explanation of this parable; and certain it is, that theſe five brethren were Jews, ſince they had the writings of Moſes and the prophets with them, ver. 29. Wherefore I ſhall venture to propoſe another conjecture, though it may be liable to exception, as all conjectures uſually are: it is plain that there were ſix brethren in all; let it be obſerved then, that the Jewiſh nation were uſually divided into three parts, prieſts, Levites, and Iſraelites; of theſe three the great Sanhedrim uſually conſiſted [n]; and theſe read the law every ſabbath-day; firſt a prieſt, then a Levite, and then five Iſraelites [o], (let that number alſo be remarked;) now theſe were again divided into three ſects, Phariſees, Sadducees, and Eſſenes. The former of theſe, are repreſented in this parable; this I only propoſe, I lay no ſtreſs on it: it may be, that the twice five, or ten tribes of Iſrael, which were not known where they were, nor are they to this day, may be deſigned by a ſynechdoche, of a part for the whole; whoſe return the Jews are yet expecting, and for whoſe welfare they are greatly concerned. That he may teſtify unto them; that is, preach unto them, as the word is uſed in Acts ii. 40. and x. 42. and xx. 21, 24. Chriſt, when here on earth, did teſtify to that people of their ſins, ſhewed them the heinouſneſs of them, inveighed againſt them, and reproved for them; and of their righteouſneſs, and ſhewed the hypocriſy, deficiency, and inſufficiency of it to juſtify them; of himſelf as the Meſſiah; of truth in general; and of their ruin, temporal and eternal; but he had now finiſhed his teſtimony, and which, though faithful, was not heard nor received by them: the reaſon of this requeſt is, leſt they alſo come into this place of torment; as hell is, and which theſe brethren of his, he left behind, were deſerving of, and in danger of coming into: and his concern for them did not ariſe from any regard to Chriſt, and the enlargement of his intereſt; nor from any love to his teſtimony, the Goſpel; nor from any real notion or deſire of converting grace for his brethren; nor from true love to them; but from a ſelfiſh principle, leſt his own torments ſhould be aggravated by their coming: this, as it may regard the Jews in their affliction, and if the ten tribes ſhould be meant by the five brethren, may deſign the very paſſionate concern the Jews had, and ſtill have for them, who yet to this day, hope for the return of them; ſee Manaſſeh ben Iſrael's book, called, Spes Iſraelis.

Ver. 29. Abraham ſaid unto him, &c.] In reply to this his requeſt: they have Moſes and the prophets; that is, their writings; which ſhows, this man and his five brethren, to be Jews; for to them were the oracles of God committed; and theſe had the writings of Moſes and the prophets, read to them every ſabbath-day; and is true, whether the cotemporaries and immediate ſucceſſors of the Phariſees are meant, or the ten tribes: and alſo ſhows, that one view of the parable, is to eſtabliſh the authority of theſe writings; ſee ver. 16, 17. and that it is a peculiar privilege to have them; and that they ought to be attended to and regarded: let them hear them; for they teſtified concerning Chriſt, and concerning the ſins of the Jews, and the calamities, both temporal and eternal, that ſhould come upon them; and which teſtimony was ſufficient, to leave them without excuſe: and indeed, the word of God, read, explained, and heard, is the ordinary means of converſion, or of bringing men to faith and repentance.

Ver. 30. And he ſaid, nay, father Abraham, &c.] He contradicts his father Abraham, or at leaſt deſires it might not be ſo; this way he ſuggeſts, was not ſo right, and would not ſucceed; for he knew his brethren were a rebellious and ſtiff-necked people, and would not hear Moſes and the prophets, notwithſtanding all their outward boaſt of them, and pretenſions of regard to them: but if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent; but alas! repentance is not of man's will, but a gift of God's grace; nor could theſe men repent, becauſe in a judicial way their eyes were ſhut, their ears were ſtopped, and their hearts were hardened; and though Chriſt came in perſon to them, and preached, as never man did, with power and authority, and confirmed his doctrine with miracles, yet they repented not, nor did they when he aroſe from the dead.

Ver. 31. And he ſaid unto him, &c.] That is, Abraham ſaid unto him, as the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions expreſs it: if they hear not Moſes and the prophets; as they did not, nor regarded what they ſaid of Chriſt, but diſbelieved both him and them: neither will they be perſuaded; or brought to repent and believe: though one roſe from the dead; as Chriſt did; whoſe reſurrection, the truth of it they endeavoured to baffle, ſtifle, and ſuppreſs: this was the ſign Chriſt gave them, of the truth of his Meſſiahſhip; and yet they repented not of what they had done to him, that they might believe in him; but remained ſtill in their impenitence and infidelity, and ſo died. This ſhows the regard that ought to be had to the written word, as read, or preached; and that it is a ſad ſign of a deſperate condition, when men reject divine revelation. Beza's ancient copy adds, and ſhould go unto them.

C H A P. XVII.

Ver. 1. THEN ſaid he unto his diſciples, &c.] In the Alexandrian copy, and in three of Beza's Exemplars it is read, his diſciples; and ſo read the Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions; that is, Jeſus ſaid to his diſciples what follows, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions expreſs, and the latter reads, he ſaid again. About the time that he delivered the above parable concerning the rich man and Lazarus, he repeated to his diſciples what he had before ſaid to them on another occaſion, Matt. xviii. 7. it is impoſſible but that offences will come; conſidering the decree of God, the malice of ſatan, the wickedneſs of men, the corruption both of their principles and practices. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, temptation will come; that which will be trying to the faith of the ſaints, and a ſtumbling-block to weak minds, as reproach and perſecution, errors and hereſies, and the evil lives of profeſſors: but wo unto him thro' whom they come; ſee the note on Matt. xviii. 7.

Ver. 2. It were better for him that a milſtone, &c.] See the notes on Matt. xviii. 6. and on Mark ix. 42.

Ver. 3. Take heed to yourſelves, &c.] Or to one another, that ye neither give, nor take offence. Take heed to your ſpirits, to your doctrines, walk, and converſation, that you give no offence to any, and that you are not ſtumbled by what you ſhall ſee in, and meet with from others: if thy brother treſpaſs againſt thee; ſee the note on Matt. xviii. 15. rebuke him; privately, and proceed according to the rules there directed to; lay his ſin before him; endeavour not only to convince him of the fact, but of the evil of it; how contrary to the will of God; how unbecoming the Goſpel of Chriſt, and the profeſſion he makes; how hurtful to himſelf, as well as injurious to his brother; and how ſuch evils give the enemy occaſion to reproach the ſaints, to ſpeak evil of the ways of God, and blaſpheme the name and doctrines of Chriſt, and harden ſinners in their ſins, as well as ſtumble weak chriſtians, and ſadden the hearts of the righteous. And if he repent; if he is made ſenſible of his evil, and is truly ſorry for it, and ingenuouſly acknowledges it: forgive him; the injury committed againſt a man's ſelf; and pray to God for him, for an application of his pardoning grace and mercy to him; and comfort him with the hope of forgiveneſs with God, by the gracious promiſes and declarations of pardon made to ſuch perſons; drop all reſentment and anger, and behave towards him with all ſweetneſs of temper, and affability, and reſpect: and this is to be done immediately, as ſoon as a man repents: and ſo ſay the Jews [p]; “ ſays R. Chanina bar Papa, whoever commits a thing, and repents of it, they forgive him directly; as it is ſaid, Mal. iii. 5. and fear not me; lo, they that fear me, forgive immediately:” ſuch were reckoned good men, men fearing God.

Ver. 4. And if he treſpaſs againſt thee ſeven times in a day, &c.] For good men are frequently apt to fall into ſin, and offend both God and man; ſee Prov. xxiv. 16. and ſeven times in a day turn again to thee, ſaying, I repent; as often as he ſins, and appears to be truly ſenſible of it, and humble for it, and makes acknowledgments of it; and not only barely in words profeſſes his concern for it, but there is reaſon to believe that he is heartily grieved for it, and to hope that he will behave better for the future: thou ſhalt forgive him; this ſeems to be occaſioned by Peter's putting ſuch a queſtion to Chriſt, how often a brother might ſin againſt him, and he forgive him; ſee Matt. xviii. 21, 22. The Jews plead for great tenderneſs and readineſs to forgive penitents, when they aſk for forgiveneſs; which they inſiſt upon ſhould be done: they ſay [q], it “ is forbidden an injured perſon to be cruel, and not forgive; this is not the way of the ſeed of Iſrael: but when he that has done the injury aſks of him, and prays him once and again, and he knows that he has returned from his ſin, and hath repented of his evil, he ought to forgive him;

[p] T. Bab. Chagiga, fol. 5. 1.

[q] Maimon. Hilchot Chobel Umezik, c. 5. §. 10.

“and whoever makes haſte to forgive, is praiſe-worthy.” But then, they ſay [r], “if he brings all the rams of Nebaioth that are in the world, he is not to have pardon, unleſs he aſks it of him.” And they ſeem alſo to have ſet times for it, as well as reſtrain the frequent repetition of it: they obſerve [s]; “if a man returns by repentance, in the intermediate time, (i. e. as the Gloſs explains it, between the beginning of the year, or new-year's-day, and the day of atonement) they pardon him; but if he does not return in the intermediate time, though he brings all the rams of Nebaioth in the world, they do not pardon him.” A man that was always forgiving, was reckoned by them an extraordinary man: it is ſaid [t] of Mar Zutra bar Nachman, that he was, מוחל בכל יום, forgiving every day; but yet they don't ſeem to care to carry it to ſo great a length, and to repeat it ſo often as our Lord directs; they allow a man to forgive three times, but not a fourth; ſee the note on Matt. xviii. 22.

Ver. 5. And the apoſtles ſaid unto the Lord, &c.] Either on account of what was now ſaid by Chriſt concerning offences, and forgiving injuries; being conſcious to themſelves of their own weakneſs to withſtand temptations; and fearful leſt they ſhould be ſtumbled and offended with what they ſhould meet with; or that they ſhould give offence to others; and being alſo ſenſible of what ſpirits they were of, and of the difficulties of conquering them, and maſtering the reſentment of their minds, when injured and provoked; and alſo the neceſſity of divine aſſiſtance, of having freſh ſupplies of grace, and of having their graces, and particularly faith, ſtrengthened, and drawn into a lively exerciſe; or on account of their not being able to caſt out a devil from one that was poſſeſſed, Matt. xvii. 19, 20. when words, to the ſame purpoſe, were ſpoken by Chriſt, as in the following verſe; on occaſion of one or other of theſe, tho' more likely the former, the apoſtles addreſſed Chriſt in this manner, increaſe our faith; both the faith of working miracles, and the grace of believing in him: by which, as they expreſs their ſenſe of the weakneſs, and imperfection of their faith, and their great deſire to have it increaſed, which might be for their comfort, and his glory; ſo they acknowledge his divine power, and that he is the author and finiſher of faith; and that as the beginning, ſo the increaſe of it is from him: wherefore faith is not of a man's ſelf, or the produce of man's free-will and power, but is the gift of God; and even where it is, it is not in man to increaſe it, or add to it, or to draw it forth into exerciſe; this alſo is the operation of God. And if the apoſtles had need to put up ſuch a petition to Chriſt, much more reaſon have other men.

Ver. 6. And the Lord ſaid, &c.] In anſwer to the diſciples. The Syriac verſion leaves out the word Lord; and the Perſic verſion, in the room of it, reads, Jeſus: if ye had faith as a grain of muſtard ſeed; ſee the note on Matt. xvii. 20. ye might ſay unto this ſycamine tree; which was near at hand; for in Galilee, where Chriſt now was, ſuch trees grew, eſpecially in lower Galilee: hence thoſe words [u]; “from Caphar-Hananiah, and upwards, all the land which does not bear, שקמין, ſycamines, is upper Galilee; and from Caphar-Hananiah, and downwards, all which does bear ſycamines, is lower Galilee.” This, by Maimonides [w], is ſaid to be a wild fig-tree; but the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions render it, the mulberry tree: and that the ſycamine and mulberry tree are the ſame, Beza ſhows from Dioſcorides, Athenæus, and Galen; tho' whether it is the ſame with the ſycamore in chap. xix. 4. is not certain. The firſt of theſe writers makes them to be the ſame; and the laſt aſſerts they are different, and ſo they ſhould ſeem by their different names. Be thou plucked up by the root, and be thou planted in the ſea, and it ſhould obey you: for ſuch a tree to be plucked up by the root at a word ſpeaking, is very wonderful and miraculous, and beyond the power of nature; and much more for it to remove into the ſea, and plant itſelf there, where trees grow not; and to believe this ſhould be done, and ſuch a word of command obeyed, one ſhould think required very great faith; and yet, if it was but as a grain of muſtard-ſeed, which is very ſmall, it might be done. The deſign is to ſhow, what great things are done by faith, and what an increaſe of it they ſhould have.

Ver. 7. But which of you having a ſervant plowing, &c.] In order to keep the diſciples humble in the performance of ſuch miraculous works; and that they might not imagine they could have any thing at the hands of God by merit; and to excite them to go on from one duty to another; and never think they have done, or done enough, or more than what is their duty, Chriſt delivers the following parable. Which of you having a ſervant plowing, or feeding cattle; or ſheep, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions render it; or a plowman, or a ſhepherd, as the Ethiopic verſion; which are both ſervile works, and done in the field: not that the diſciples had any ſuch ſervants under them, tho' the words are directed to them, for they had left all, and followed Chriſt; nor were they brought up to huſbandry, but moſt of them in the fiſhing trade; Chriſt only puts this for inſtance, and ſuppoſes ſuch a caſe: will ſay unto him by and by; or ſtraightway, immediately, directly, when he is come from the field; and has done plowing, and feeding his cattle, ſheep, or cows, or whatever they are; as ſoon as ever he comes home; or firſt, as the Perſic verſion; the firſt thing he ſhall ſay to him, upon his return from thence, go; to the other ſide of the room, and to the table there ready ſpread, and furniſhed; or go up, as the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions render it; go up to the upper room where they uſed to dine or ſup; ſee Luke xxii. 12. or come in, as the Perſic verſion renders it; and which ſome learned men obſerve, is the ſenſe of the Greek word here uſed; come into the houſe, and ſit down to meat? or fall, and lie down on the couch, as was the cuſtom in thoſe countries at eating.

Ver. 8. And will not rather ſay to him, &c.] Or, will he not ſay to him? it is very likely, it is more agreeable to the language of a maſter, and the condition of a ſervant, that he ſhould ſay to him, make ready wherewith I may ſup; by dreſſing the food, ſpreading the table, and putting the food on it; for it was the buſineſs of ſervants to prepare, as at the paſſover, ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 17. ſo at ordinary ſuppers: and gird thyſelf and ſerve me; by giving him drink, or whatſoever he called for: and as they uſed to wear long garments in thoſe countries, ſervants girded them up about their loins, that they might be fit for ſervice, expedite in it, and perform it more readily, and with greater eaſe and diſpatch: till I have eaten and drunken; finiſhed his meal: and afterward thou ſhalt eat and drink: the Perſic and Ethiopic verſions read in the imperative, then eat thou and drink. If he was an Hebrew ſervant, he eat and drank the ſame as his maſter did: for ſo one of the Jewiſh canons runs [x]; “every Hebrew ſervant, or handmaid, their maſter is obliged to make them equal to himſelf in food and in drink, in clothing, and in dwelling, as it is ſaid, Deut. xv. 16. becauſe he is well with thee: wherefore, thou ſhalt not eat fine bread, and he eat coarſe bread, nor drink old wine, and he drink new wine, &c.” And even a Canaanitiſh ſervant was to be provided with proper food and drink: they ſay indeed [y], “it is lawful to cauſe a Canaanitiſh ſervant to ſerve with rigour; but though the law is ſuch, the property of mercy, and the ways of wiſdom are, that a man ſhould be merciful, and not make his yoke heavy on his ſervant, nor oppreſs him; but cauſe him to eat and drink of all ſorts of food and drink; and the former wiſe men uſed to give their ſervants of all ſorts of food that they themſelves eat of;” which was uſing them as they did their Hebrew ſervants: yea, 'tis added; “and they gave their beaſts, and their ſervants, food, before they eat their own meal;” but this was not commonly done: it does not appear to have been the practice in Chriſt's time; nor was it neceſſary.

Ver. 9. Doth he thank that ſervant, &c.] As if he had done him a favour, and what he was not obliged to: becauſe he did the things that were commanded him? for, as a ſervant, he ought to do them, and in ſo doing does but his duty: he may indeed be commended for it, but not thanked: I trow not; or I think not; it don't ſeem ſo to me, as if he would, or as tho' it was proper and neceſſary he ſhould. The Ethiopic verſion leaves out this laſt clauſe.

Ver. 10. So likewiſe ye, &c.] This is the accommodation and application of the parable to the diſciples of Chriſt, who, whether miniſters or private believers, are as ſervants, and ſhould be as laborious as the plowman, and the ſhepherd; and as their condition is, ſo their conduct ſhould be like theirs: the employment of the miniſters of the word lies in reading, prayer, meditation, and ſtudy; in preaching the word, and adminiſtring the ordinances; and in performing other duties of their office: and every private believer has buſineſs to do, which lies in the exerciſe of grace, as the work of faith, the labour of love and patience, of hope; and in the diſcharge of duty with regard to themſelves, in their families, the church, and the world; and theſe ſervants ſhould be continually employed; and when one work is done, another is to be taken in hand: ſaints ſhould be always believing, hoping, waiting, loving, and doing one good work or another; as preaching or praying, reading, hearing, and doing acts of benevolence and charity; and God and Chriſt are to be ſerved by them in the firſt place, and then themſelves: but ſome that would be called the ſervants of Chriſt, mind their own bellies, and not the ſervice of Chriſt at all; others in the ſervice of Chriſt, ſeek nothing but themſelves; others are for the ſerving themſelves firſt, and then Chriſt; but the true ſervants of Chriſt, ſerve him in the firſt place, and ſeek firſt his righteouſneſs, and his kingdom, and the honour of it, believing that all other things ſhall be added to them: and when theſe have done all that are commanded them, they are not to think their ſervice thank-worthy; as for inſtance, if the ſervice be preaching the word, a man ſo employed, ought to be thankful to God, that has beſtowed miniſterial gifts upon him, and makes his labours uſeful, and uſes him as an inſtrument, to do much good to the ſouls of men, and for his glory, and has put ſuch an honour upon him; but he is not to expect thanks from God, for his moſt diligent and faithful performance of his work, or imagine that he merits any thing at his hand thereby: or if the buſineſs be hearing the word, a man ſhould be thankful to God, for the word, ordinances, and miniſters; for liberty of waiting upon God in ſuch a way; for health of body, and inclination of mind, for ſuch ſervice; and for all the good, profit, and advantage, he gains hereby; but he is not to think that he lays God under any obligation to him by ſo doing, or deſerves thanks, or a favour from him, on account of it: or if the employment be prayer, a man ſhould be greatly thankful to the God of all grace, that there is a throne of grace for him to come to; and for a mediator, who is the way of acceſs to God; and for the aſſiſtance of the Spirit in prayer; and for all the bleſſings which are given, as an anſwer of prayer; but he is never to entertain ſuch a thought, that God is obliged to him for his prayers, or ſhould thank him for them: or if the work be doing of good with worldly ſubſtance, ſuch ſhould be thankful to God for their ſubſtance he has given them, and for hearts to make uſe of it; but ought not to conclude, that they hereby merit his favour, or that this is any gain to him: but on the other hand, Chriſt directs his diſciples, ſaying, when ye ſhall have done all thoſe things which are commanded you; as preaching, or hearing, or reading, or praying, and every other act of divine and religious worſhip; or all acts of juſtice and benevolence among men; every duty both for matter and manner, as it ſhould be, according to the will of God, from right principles, and to right ends, and by the aſſiſtance of the Spirit and grace of God: ſay we are unprofitable ſervants; not in ſuch ſenſe as unregenerate men are, who are diſobedient, and to every good work reprobate and unfit, Rom. iii. 12. Tit. i. 16. or as the ſlothful ſervant, who did not what his Lord commanded, Matt. xxv. 30. Nor is this the ſenſe, that they are unprofitable to men; for they may be, and are, very uſeful and ſerviceable to men, and to the ſaints; but that they are ſo to God, by whoſe grace and ſtrength they are what they are, and do what they do; and can give nothing to him but what is his own, and his due; and ſo can lay him under no obligation to them, nor merit any thing from him; no, not even thanks, and much leſs heaven and eternal life. The Perſic verſion, quite contrary to the ſenſe of the words reads, we are pure or clean ſervants, for we have done, &c. and the Ethiopic verſion leaves out the word unprofitable, and reads, we are ſervants; we acknowledge ourſelves to be ſervants: we have done that which is our duty to do; wherefore, as diligence is highly proper, and reaſonable in doing the work of the Lord, humility is neceſſary, that a man may not arrogate that to himſelf, which don't belong to him; or boaſt of his performances; or place any dependance on them; or have his expectations raiſed on account of them; ſince when he has done the moſt and beſt, he has done but what he ſhould, and what he was obliged to, and in that is greatly deficient; a ſaying ſomewhat like this, is uſed by R. Jochanan ben Zaccai [z]; [z] Pirke Abot, c. 2. §. 8.

“ if thou haſt learned the law much, do not aſcribe “ the good to thyſelf; for, for this waſt thou “ created.”

Ver. 11. And it came to paſs as he went to Jeruſalem, &c.] That is, Jeſus, as the Perſic verſion expreſſes it; though the Ethiopic verſion reads in the plural, they going to Jeruſalem paſſed, &c. that is, the diſciples, or Chriſt with his diſciples; who was now going thither to eat his laſt paſſover, and ſuffer and die for his people: that he paſſed through the midſt of Samaria and Galilee; or between Samaria and Galilee, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions render it; he ſteered his courſe through the borders of both theſe countries; and as he paſſed, Samaria was on his right hand, and Galilee on the left.

Ver. 12. And as he entered into a certain village, &c.] Whether in Samaria or Galilee, is not certain; perhaps it bordered on both, ſince there were both Jews and Samaritans in it, as appears by what follows; and ſince Chriſt was paſſing between both places: there met him ten men that were lepers; who either were confined to this place, this village, for they might not be in the larger cities, and walled towns; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 2. or elſe having heard that Jeſus of Nazareth was going to ſuch a place, got together, and met him as he entered in it, in hope of being cured by him: which ſtood afar off; from Chriſt, by reaſon of their uncleanneſs, as they were obliged to by the law, in Levit. xiii. 46.

Ver. 13. And they lifted up their voices, &c.] Together, and cried aloud, being at a diſtance, that they might be heard; as well as to expreſs their vehement deſire, and great importunity to be cleanſed; ſee Judges ix. 9, 7. And ſaid, Jeſus, Maſter; or Rabbi, Jeſus, thou great maſter in Iſrael; who art a teacher come from God, and who doſt ſurpriſing miracles, and art able to cure us: have mercy on us; and cleanſe us from our leproſy; we believe thou art able, if thou wilt; ſhew compaſſion to us, miſerable objects, as they were; their faith was the ſame with that of the other leper, in Matt. viii. 2.

Ver. 14. And when he ſaw them, he ſaid unto them, &c.] When upon their loud cry he looked up, and towards them, and ſaw what a condition they were in, his compaſſion moved towards them, and he ordered them to do as follows; go ſhew yourſelves unto the prieſts. The Ethiopic verſion reads in the ſingular number, to the prieſt, as in Matt. viii. 4. whoſe buſineſs it was to inſpect into this matter, to ſee whether a perſon was healed, or no; and if he was, to pronounce him clean, when a gift was offered according to the law, in Levit. xiv. 2, 3, 4. So careful was Chriſt that the ceremonial law, which was as yet in force, might be ſtrictly obſerved: though theſe ten lepers could not be viewed and examined by the prieſt together, but one after another; for ſo is the tradition of the Jews[a]; “ two leproſies are not looked upon together, whether they be in one man, or in two “ men; but he views one, and either ſhuts him “ up, or declares or diſmiſſes him, and then goes “ to a ſecond.” And it came to paſs that as they went, they were cleanſed; before they came to the prieſts, whilſt they were in the way, they at once found themſelves entirely healed of their diſeaſe; as Chriſt very likely gave them reaſon to believe they ſhould; whereby his power was ſeen in it; and it was a clear caſe, that it was owing to him, and not the prieſts, that they had their cleanſing. Of the nature of the diſeaſe of leproſy, and of the likeneſs there is between that and ſin, and of the agreement between the cleanſing of a leper, and the cleanſing of a ſinner by the blood of Chriſt, ſee the note on Luke v. 12. Here it may be obſerved, that as theſe lepers had a cure while they were in the way of their duty, going, as Chriſt ordered them; ſo generally ſpeaking, it is in the way of means, in an attendance on ordinances, that ſouls receive a ſpiritual cure from Chriſt: the man at Betheſda's pool waited long, and had healing at laſt; it is good to watch at wiſdom's gates, and wait at the poſts of her door; faith in Chriſt, whereby the heart is purified, comes by hearing the word of God.

Ver. 15. And one of them, when he ſaw that he was healed, &c.] When he felt perfect ſoundneſs in his body, and perceived that he was reſtored to his health, and ſaw with his eyes that the leproſy was gone from him, which muſt be viſible enough: turned back; either immediately, before he went to the prieſts; or afterwards, came back to Jeſus, when he had been with them: and with a loud voice glorified God; Jeſus Chriſt, who is truly God, and whoſe proper divinity might be ſeen in this miracle; ſee 2 Kings v. 7. Or God the Father, through Chriſt, and for his ſake, by aſcribing his cure to his power, and by returning thanks for it, and acknowledging with gratitude, Chriſt to be the author of it; which he did, with as loud a voice, as he cried to him for mercy; that all might know the miracle that was wrought, and join in giving glory to Chriſt: and it was but one of them that did ſo; gratitude is a rare thing, it is found but in few; unthankfulneſs cleaves to moſt perſons; it is the general character of men to be unthankful and unholy; multitudes, even all men, ſhare in the providential goodneſs of God, yet few take notice of, and are thankful for it; God is therefore ſaid to be good, to the unthankful and to the evil, Luke vi. 35. Few there are who are of Jacob's ſpirit, that judge themſelves unworthy of the leaſt of mercies, and are heartily thankful for every favour: and this the leper did, when he was ſenſible that he was healed; no man will ſeek after a cure, till he ſees, or is ſenſible of his ſickneſs and his wound; and when he does, he will enquire after, and make uſe of the proper means of healing; and when he has got a cure, he is, or at leaſt ought to be, thankful for it: and ſo it is in ſpiritual things, the whole need not a phyſician, or ſee no need of the phyſician, Chriſt; but thoſe who are ſick, and ſenſible of the ſickneſs of ſin, do; and when they perceive that their diſeaſes are healed, and their ſins forgiven, then they call upon their ſouls, and all within them, to bleſs the Lord, who has done this for them: and it becomes ſuch who are cured of the leproſy of ſin, to glorify God; not only with their mouths, by bringing their offering and ſacrifice of praiſe to him, as the leper by the law was obliged to bring his offering, at the time of his cleanſing; but by deeds alſo, with their bodies, and with their ſpirits; by a holy, humble, and ſpiritual converſation before men, ſignified by the lepers waſhing himſelf, and cloaths, and ſhaving off all his hair; and by attending on the word and ordinances, by a profeſſed ſubjection to the Goſpel of Chriſt, ſignified by the blood being put upon the tip of the right ear of the leper, and on the thumb of his right hand, and on the great toe of his right foot, Levit. xiv.

[a] Miſn. Negaim, c. 3. §. 1.

Ver. 16. And he fell down on his face at his feet, &c.] For being cleanſed, he might draw nigh unto Jeſus; and which he did, with the moſt profound reſpect unto him, and reverence of him; and having a deep ſenſe of the favour he had received from him, he proſtrated himſelf in this manner before him: giving him thanks; who had ſhewn compaſſion to him, had exerted his power on him, and had favoured him with ſuch a ſingular mercy, as reſtoring him to health: and he was a Samaritan; this is particularly remarked by the Evangeliſt, becauſe the Samaritans were reckoned by the Jews, to be ignorant and irreligious perſons, and no better than heathens; and yet this man behaved as a religious good man, who had a ſenſe of his mercy, knew his duty, and his obligations, and performed them; when the other nine, who very likely were all Jews, acted a very ſtupid and ungrateful part.

Ver. 17. And Jeſus anſwering, ſaid, &c.] After the Samaritan had paid his reſpects to him, and made his acknowledgments in this grateful way: were there not ten cleanſed? ſo many applied for a cure, and ſo many had it: but where are the nine? or nine of them; here was one, but where were the reſt? they went and ſhowed themſelves to the prieſts, and then returned to their ſeveral places of abode, and took no notice of their phyſician and ſaviour, to make any returns to him. They are many, that are cleanſed by the blood of Chriſt; his blood was ſhed for many, for the remiſſion of ſins; and by his righteouſneſs, he juſtifies many; at leaſt there are many who profeſs themſelves to be cleanſed by him, and yet there are but few that glorify him, by keeping cloſe to the rule of his word, by giving up themſelves to the churches of Chriſt, and by walking with them in the ordinances of the Goſpel: Chriſt's flock, which is ſeparated from the world, and walks in Goſpel order, within the incloſures of it, is but a little flock; they are but a few names in Sardis, who have not defiled themſelves, with corruptions in doctrine and diſcipline; and theſe few are often ſuch, who have been the worſt of men, the vileſt of ſinners, from whom it has been leaſt expected, they ſhould glorify Chriſt: publicans and harlots go into the kingdom of heaven, the Goſpel church-ſtate, embrace its doctrines, and ſubmit to its ordinances, when the Scribes and Phariſees, ſelf-righteous perſons, do not: ingratitude is a crime many are guilty of, and it is highly reſented by Chriſt; inſtances of gratitude are few, but as one in ten; now and then a ſingle Samaritan, a ſtranger, one that has been a vile ſinner, comes and acknowledges the grace of Chriſt in cleanſing him; comes to the miniſters of Chriſt, and to the churches, and tells them what God has done for his ſoul: but where are the reſt, the many others, who have received ſpiritual advantages, and never come to relate them, and expreſs by words and deeds, thankfulneſs for them?

Ver. 18. There are not found that returned, &c.] Or it don't appear, that any have returned: to give glory to God; for inaſmuch as they did not return to give thanks to Chriſt, and acknowledge him the author of their cure and cleanſing, they did not give glory to God: ſave this ſtranger; for ſo the Samaritans were reckoned by the Jews, even as the Gentiles, aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael, and ſtrangers to the covenants of promiſe. Chriſt ſpeaks in the language and dialect of the nation, and yet we find ſometimes, that, כותי, a Cuthite, or a Samaritan, is diſtinguiſhed from, נכרי, a ſtranger, or a Gentile: they might ſet up their beaſts in the inns of the Samaritans, but not in the inns of ſtrangers; and a man might let out his bath to a Samaritan, but not to a ſtranger [b]; but this muſt be underſtood of them in times paſt, before they were found out to be idolaters; when, as Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel ſays [c], they were as Iſraelites in all things, and kept the law and the precepts of it, and even more exactly than the Iſraelites themſelves did [d]; but afterwards a Samaritan was reckoned a Gentile, and ſo he was in the times of Chriſt; and therefore he calls a Samaritan a ſtranger: that tradition of the Jews, requires ſome notice and conſideration [e]; "all are defiled with leproſies, except, הנכרים, "ſtrangers, and the proſelyte of the gate." And yet here's a ſtranger among the Jews, and reckoned unclean, on account of leproſy, and ſent with them to ſhew himſelf to the prieſt.

Ver. 19. And he ſaid unto him ariſe, &c.] For, as yet, he lay at his feet upon his face, adoring and praiſing him; nor did he attempt to riſe till Jeſus bid him: adding, go thy way; to thine own country, town, or city, and to thy friends and relations, and about thy buſineſs: thy faith hath made thee whole; or ſaved thee, in ſoul, as well as body; that is, Chriſt, the object of faith, had ſaved him; for his ſalvation is aſcribed to his faith, not as the efficient cauſe of it, but as that was wrought in him, and drawn forth from him, and exerciſed by him, in receiving this bleſſing from Chriſt, the author of it, even both corporal and ſpiritual ſalvation.

Ver. 20. And when he was demanded of the Phariſees, &c.] Or aſked by them; who expected the Meſſiah, and that when he was come he would ſet up a temporal kingdom, and deliver them from the Roman yoke; when they ſhould enjoy great liberty, peace, and proſperity; ſo that they might put the following queſtion to Chriſt in a ſerious manner, agreeable to theſe expectations: or it may be occaſioned by the frequent mention that had been made of the kingdom of God by John, and Chriſt, and his diſciples in their miniſtry, and ſo be put in a way of deriſion; or, as moſt of their queſtions were, with a view to enſnare or puzzle: when the kingdom of God ſhould come; either the kingdom that God had promiſed, or the kingdom of the Meſſiah, who is truly God, that had been ſo often ſpoken of by John the Baptiſt, Chriſt, and his Apoſtles. The Ethiopic verſion reads, the kingdom of heaven, which is the ſame with the kingdom of God; for theſe phraſes are promiſcuouſly uſed. This queſtion they need not have aſked, had they carefully attended to the writings of the Old Teſtament they had in their hands; and had they diligently obſerved the ſigns of the times, in which they lived; and had they ſeriouſly regarded the miniſtry and miracles of Chriſt among them; from theſe things, they might have concluded, not only that the time was at hand, when the kingdom of God ſhould be ſet up, but that it was already come: they might have obſerved, that not only the harbinger of the Meſſiah was come, who was John the Baptiſt; but that the Meſſiah himſelf was among them, by the many wonderful things which he wrought among them, and by the many ſcripture propheſies which were fulfilled in him; they might have ſeen that the ſceptre was manifeſtly departing from Judah; that all power and authority were falling into the hands of the Romans; and that only a mere ſhadow and appearance of it were among them; they might have have known, by calculation, that the time fixed in Daniel's prophecy, for the coming of the Meſſiah, was now up, and therefore he muſt be come; and they had very good reaſon to believe that Jeſus was he. He anſwered them and ſaid, the kingdom of God cometh not with obſervation; or ſo as to be obſerved by the eye, or to be diſtinguiſhed when it comes as the kingdoms of this world, by outward pomp and ſplendor, by temporal riches, external honours, and worldly power and grandeur; tho' it ſo far came with obſervation, that had they had eyes to ſee, they might have obſerved that it was come, by what they ſaw done by Chriſt, particularly the power that he ſhowed in the diſpoſſeſſing devils out of the bodies of men; ſee Matt. xii. 28. The Syriac verſion reads, with obſervations; and ſome underſtand the words of the obſervances of the ceremonies of the law, of days, months, and years, and the difference of meats, and the like, which the kingdom of God is not in, and which were to ceaſe upon its coming; but the former ſenſe is beſt.

Ver. 21. Neither ſhall they ſay, &c.] Or ſhall it be ſaid by any, making their obſervations, and pointing to this, or that place: lo here, or lo there; in this, or that place, country or city, the kingdom of God is ſet up; the throne of the Meſſiah is there; and there are the regalia, or enſigns of his regal power; no ſuch thing will fall under the obſervations of man: not but that this would be ſaid, and was ſaid by ſome perſons, as it is ſuggeſted it ſhould, ver. 23. and it appears from Matt. xxiv. 26. that ſome would ſay he was in ſuch a wilderneſs, and others, that he was in ſome private retirement in a houſe, or that he was in ſuch a town, or city; as, particularly it was ſaid in Adrian's time, that he was in a place called Bither, where Bar Cochab ſet up himſelf for the Meſſiah: but the ſenſe of the words is, that no ſuch thing ought to be ſaid; and if it was ſaid, it would not be true; nor ſhould it be credited: and the Cambridge copy of Beza's adds, believe not, as in Matt. xxiv. 26. for behold the kingdom of God is within you; in the elect of God among the Jews, in their hearts; it being of a ſpiritual nature, and lying in righteouſneſs, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghoſt; in the diſpoſſeſſion of ſatan, the ſtrong man armed; in the putting down of the old man, ſin, with its deceitful luſts, from the throne; and in ſetting up a principle of grace, as a governing one; and ſo eſcapes the obſervation of natural men, and can't be pointed at as here, or there: hence it appears, that the work of grace is an internal thing; it is wrought in the hearts of men; it has its ſeat in the inward parts, and is therefore called the inner, and the hidden man: it does not lie in words, in an outward profeſſion of religion: it is oil in the veſſel of the heart, and is diſtinct from the lamp of a viſible profeſſion: it does not lie in external works and duties, but it is an inward principle of holineſs in the ſoul, or ſpirit of man, produced there by the Spirit of God, and is therefore called by his name, John iii. 6. and it alſo appears to be a very glorious thing, ſince it is ſignified by a kingdom: it is a rich treaſure; it is gold tried in the fire, which makes rich; it is an eſtate, that good part, and portion, which can never be taken away; it is preferable to the greateſt portion on earth men can enjoy; even the largeſt and richeſt kingdom in the world is not to be compared with it; it is a kingdom which cannot be moved; and as it is glorious in itſelf, it makes ſuch glorious who are partakers of it: the king's daughter is all glorious within, Pſ. xlv. 13. and it is high in the eſteem of God; it is the hidden man of the heart, but it is in his ſight; it is in his view, and is in his ſight of great price: it is likewiſe evident from hence, that it has great power and authority in the ſoul; it has the government in it; it reigns, thro' righteouſneſs, unto eternal life; and by it, Chriſt, as king of ſaints, dwells and reigns in his people. Now this is not to be underſtood of the Scribes and Phariſees, as if they had any ſuch internal principle in them, who were as painted ſepulchres, and had nothing but rottenneſs and corruption in them: but the ſenſe is, that there were ſome of the people of the Jews, of whom the Phariſees were a part, who had been powerfully wrought upon under the miniſtry of John, Chriſt, and his Apoſtles; and were ſo many inſtances of efficacious grace, and of the kingdom of God, and of his Goſpel coming with power to them. Tho' the words may be rendered, the kingdom of God is among you; and the meaning be, that the king Meſſiah was already come, and was among them, and his kingdom was already ſet up, of which the miracles of Chriſt were a full proof; and if they could not diſcern theſe ſigns of the times, and evident appearances of the kingdom of God among them, they would never be able to make any obſervation of it, hereafter, or elſewhere.

Ver. 22. And he ſaid unto his diſciples, &c.] Who alſo were expecting a worldly kingdom, and external honours, and temporal emoluments, and riches; and therefore to take off their minds from theſe things, and that they might not have their expectations raiſed this way, but, on the other hand, look for afflictions and perſecutions, he obſerves to them, the days will come when ye ſhall deſire to ſee one of the days of the ſon of man; ימות המשיח, the days of the Meſſiah, a phraſe frequently uſed in Jewiſh writings; that is, when they ſhould be glad to enjoy one ſuch a day in the perſonal preſence of Chriſt, as they now did; and inſtead of looking forward for happy days, in a temporal ſenſe, they would look back upon the days they have enjoyed with Chriſt, when he was in perſon among them, and wiſh they had one of thoſe days again; when beſides his corporal preſence, and ſpiritual communion with him, and the advantage of his miniſtry and miracles, they had much outward peace and comfort: whereas in thoſe days nothing but afflictions and perſecutions abode them, where-ever they went; ſo that by theſe words Chriſt would have have them to underſtand, that they were not to expect better times, but worſe, and that they would be glad of one of the days they now had, and in vain wiſh for it: and ye ſhall not ſee it, or enjoy it. Moreover, days and opportunities of publick worſhip, of praying to the Lord, of ſinging his praiſe, of hearing his word, and of attending on his ordinances, may be called days of the ſon of man, or Lord's days; ſee Rev. i. 10. even the firſt days of weeks, on which days the Apoſtles, and primitive churches, met together for religious worſhip: and theſe may very well be called days of the ſon of man, ſince, on thoſe days, he firſt appeared to his diſciples, after his reſurrection, John xx. 19, 26. and on the ſame days his diſciples and followers met together to preach in his name, to hear his Goſpel, and to commemorate his ſufferings and death, Acts xx. 7. 1 Cor. xvi. 1, 2. and ſtill continue to do ſo; and ſeeing he often meets with his people at ſuch ſeaſons and opportunities, fills them with his Spirit, communicates his grace, and indulges them with fellowſhip with himſelf, which make thoſe days deſirable ones: but ſometimes ſo violent has been the perſecution of the ſaints, that they have not been able, for a long time, to enjoy one of thoſe days openly, and with freedom, tho' greatly deſired by them; which may be conſidered as a fulfilment, at leaſt in part of this prediction of our Lord's: and therefore, whenever this is the caſe, it ſhould not be thought ſtrange; it is no other than what Chriſt has foretold ſhould be: and it may teach us to prize, make uſe of, and improve ſuch days and opportunities, whilſt we have them, we know not how ſoon our teachers may be removed into corners, when we ſhall wiſh in vain for them, and ſeaſons of hearing them, as is here ſuggeſted: ſad it is to know the worth of Goſpel opportunities, by the want of them!

Ver. 23. And they ſhall ſay unto you, ſee here, or ſee there, &c.] That is, there is Chriſt; and in two of Beza's Exemplars, the word Chriſt is added, as in Matt. xxiv. 23. from whence it ſeems to be tranſcribed: and the ſenſe is, it ſhall be ſaid by one or another; Chriſt is in ſuch a place, or he is in ſuch a place, and he will quickly appear, and deliver the people of the Jews out of all their diſtreſſes and calamities by the Romans. Go not after them, nor follow them: the laſt clauſe, nor follow them, is left out in the Syriac and Perſic verſions; the meaning is, give no credit to them; as if Chriſt was come again in perſon, and was in ſuch a place; don't go along with them, where they direct, as into the deſart, or into the ſecret chambers; for to follow them will be very dangerous, of bad conſequence, as well as vain and fruitleſs; ſee Acts v. 36, 37.

Ver. 24. For as the lightning that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven, &c.] The Syriac verſion reads, out of heaven, and the Arabic verſion, in heaven; which is the ſeat of lightning, and from whence it ariſes: and ſhineth unto the other part under heaven; enlightens the earth, which is under the heaven: tho' the ſenſe of the words, as they lie in the original text, ſeems to be, that as the lightning lightens at one end of the heavens, and ſhines to the other; which is done at once, in a moment, in a twinkling of the eye, and to which agrees the Ethiopic verſion; ſo ſhall alſo the ſon of man be in his day: which is not to be underſtood of the ſwift progreſs of the Goſpel, after his reſurrection and aſcenſion, and the pouring forth of his ſpirit; but of his ſudden coming, firſt to take vengeance on the Jewiſh nation for their rejection of him, and then, at the laſt day, to judge both quick and dead. By his day, is meant his kingdom and glory, or his appearance with power, and great glory: Thus we read [f] of Solomon, בשעתו, in his hour, that is, in his glory, in the time of his kingdom, when he was in his greateſt magnificence.

Ver. 25. But firſt muſt he ſuffer many things, &c.] By cruel mockings, ſpitting, buffeting, ſcourging, and, at laſt, death itſelf; all which muſt be, and were before his day came, or he entered into his glory, or came in it: and be rejected of this generation; as the Meſſiah, and be treated with the utmoſt ſcorn and contempt, and in the moſt baſe and ignominious manner; being put to the death of the croſs, and hanged upon the accurſed tree: all which were neceſſary, muſt be; on account of the purpoſes and decrees of God; the covenant engagements of Chriſt; the predictions of the prophets of the Old Teſtament, and his own; and the ſalvation of his people.

Ver. 26. And as it was in the days of Noe, &c.] Whilſt he was building the ark, and before he went into it; for this reſpects the days of Noah before the flood, and not after it; for he lived after the flood three hundred and fifty years, Gen. ix. 28. ſo ſhall it be alſo in the days of the ſon of man; ſome time before, and at his coming in power, and great glory, to deſtroy the Jews, their nation, city, and temple; and as then, ſo it will be when he ſhall come in perſon, at the laſt day, to deſtroy the world: the times of Noah's flood, of Jeruſalem's deſtruction, and of the end of the world, bear a great reſemblance to each other: and when the ſon of man comes in either of theſe ſenſes, then will the kingdom of God come; or then will it appear that the Meſſiah is come, and has took to himſelf his great power, and reigns.

Ver. 27. They did eat, they drank, &c.] That is, the inhabitants of the old world eat and drank, not merely in a common way, with moderation, and for the ſupport and comfort of life, which is not blameworthy, nor inconſiſtent with religious exerciſes; but they lived in an extravagant and luxurious manner; they indulged their ſenſual appetites, and put away the evil day far from them, that Noah told them of: they married wives, they were given in marriage; not as ſhould have been done by profeſſors of religion among themſelves; but the ſons of God, or profeſſors of the true religion, the poſterity of Seth took them wives of the daughters of men, of the wicked, of the ſeed of Cain; and very likely gave their daughters in marriage to the ſons of men; ſee Gen. vi. 2, 4. and ſo they went on in a ſecure manner, notwithſtanding all the remonſtrances, warnings, and threatenings of God, by his ſervant: until the Day that Noe entered into the ark; which he had built by divine direction, for the ſaving of himſelf and family, and the creatures that were with him, from the waters of the flood; and this was in the ſix hundredth year of his life, in the ſecond month, the month of October, and in the ſeventeenth day of that month; Gen. vii. 11, 13. and the flood came and deſtroyed them all; all the inhabitants of the earth, every living ſubſtance, men, cattle, creeping things, and fowls of the heaven; all but Noah, and his wife, and his three ſons, and their wives, and the creatures that were with him in the ark: the flood came not of itſelf, or by chance, or through the influence, or by the concurrence of ſecond cauſes merely; though theſe were uſed, ordered, and directed by the firſt cauſe of all things; but it came by the power of God, according to his will; he brought it on the world of the ungodly; ſee 2 Pet. ii. 5. The mode of expreſſion is Jewiſh; it is ſaid of Cain, who is ſuppoſed by the Jews to have lived till the flood, באמבול ושטפו, the flood came, and waſhed him away [g].

Ver. 28. Likewiſe alſo as it was in the days of Lot, &c.] When he lived in Sodom, and before, and at the time of the deſtruction of that city with other neighbouring ones: they did eat, they drank; ſee the note in the preceding verſe, and Ezek. xvi. 49. This is to be underſtood of the inhabitants of Sodom and the other cities that periſhed with it: they bought, they ſold; they traded among themſelves, and with their neighbours; and, as it appears from the text referred to, they had no regard to the poor and needy; they made no conſcience of defrauding and oppreſſing them: they planted; vineyards, and fruit trees; living in a very fruitful ſoil, like the garden of God, Gen. xiii. 10. they builded; houſes for themſelves and poſterity; and thus, as a Jewiſh writer [h] obſerves of them, in agreement with our Lord's deſign in all this, being filled with the increaſe of the earth, they lived in ſecurity, peace, and tranquillity.

[h] Pirke Eliezer, c. 25.

Ver. 29. But the ſame day Lot went out of Sodom, &c.] Being plucked and brought from thence by the angels early in the morning; and a fine morning it was; the ſun was riſen, and ſhone out upon the earth, as Lot got into Zoar, Gen. xix. 15, 16, 23. The Jews [i] ſay it was the ſixteenth day of Niſan: it rained fire and brimſtone from heaven; the Syriac verſion reads, the Lord rained; ſo it is ſaid in Gen. xix. 24. the Lord rained from the Lord; Jehovah the Son, rained from Jehovah the Father; or the word of the Lord, as Targums of Jonathan, and Jeruſalem render it; and which is no inconſiderable proof of the deity of Chriſt: and the Perſic verſion here reads, God rained; and ſo this amazing ſhower of fire and brimſtone, and which was a violent ſtorm of thunder and lightning, is aſcribed to God in 2 Pet. ii. 6. ſee the note there. The Hebrew word, גפרית, uſed in Gen. xix. 24. though it is rendered in the Targum of Jonathan, כבריתא, and by the Septuagint, θειον; both which words ſignify ſulphur, or brimſtone; and which laſt word is uſed here, following the Greek verſion; yet it is obſerved, by ſome learned men, that it rather ſignifies pitch, or roſin, which proceeds from ſome ſort of trees; and indeed, by its derivation, it ſeems to ſignify ſomething belonging to, or that comes out of the wood of Gopher, of which the ark was made, Gen. vi. 14. which ſome think to be the pine-tree, from whence comes pitch: and this, though it comes from the inſide of a tree, may as well be ſaid to be rained from heaven, as brimſtone, which is taken out of the bowels of the earth; and the rather, ſince pitch is ſometime fluid; and eſpecially it being combuſtible, may be joined with fire, as well as ſulphur, or brimſtone; though a ſhower of neither, can be accounted for in an ordinary way, but muſt be extraordinary and miraculous: the deſtruction of this city, with others, by fire from heaven, and the lake Aſphaltites, being a bituminous and ſulphurous one, into which the tract of land they ſtood upon was converted, are confirmed by the teſtimonies of heathen writers; as Tacitus [k], Solinus [l], Strabo [m], Juſtin [n], and Pliny [o]; as well as by Joſephus [p], and Philo the Jew [q]. And deſtroyed them all; all the inhabitants of Sodom, and all of Gomorrah, Admah, and Zeboim; and which was an enſample of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the land of Judea, Deut. xxix. 23. and of the burning of the world, and of the perdition of the wicked in hell, 2 Pet. ii. 6. Jude 7.

Ver. 30. Even thus ſhall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed.] In his power, when he comes to avenge himſelf on the Jews; and when he is revealed from heaven in flaming fire, at the laſt day. As in the days of Noah and Lot, men lived in great carnality and ſecurity, thoughtleſs and fearleſs of danger, ſo were the Jews before the deſtruction of their city and temple, buoying themſelves up with deliverance to the laſt; and ſuch will be the times of indolence and ſupineneſs, before the coming of the day of the Lord to judgment: and as the deſtruction of the old world, and men of Sodom, and the adjacent parts, was ſudden and unexpected, ſo was the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and ſo will be the burning of the world; that day will come, as a thief in the night: and as in the above calamities, there was a remnant ſaved, who were taken care of; as Noah and his family in the ark, and as Lot, and his wife and daughters were ſnatched out of Sodom, when the reſt were deſtroyed; ſo when the chriſtians removed from Jeruſalem, and went to Pella, being directed by a divine oracle, then came on the ſiege of Jeruſalem [r]; and when all the elect will be gathered in, and brought to faith and repentance, then ſhall the earth, and the works in it be burnt up: and as theſe judgments were univerſal, ſo was that upon the people of the Jews; and ſuch will be the general deſolation in the laſt day.

Ver. 31. In that day, he which ſhall be upon the houſe-top, &c.] Either for diverſion or devotion, when he ſhall hear that the Roman armies are approaching to Jeruſalem, to beſiege it: and his ſtuff in the houſe; or his veſſels, his goods and furniture; or his utenſils, and inſtruments of trade and buſineſs: let him not come down; the inner way of the houſe, from the top: to take it away; with him in his flight, but let him deſcend by the ſteps, or ladder, on the outſide of the houſe, and make his eſcape directly to Pella, or the mountains: and he that is in the field; at work, and has laid down his clothes in ſome certain part of the field, or at home: let him likewiſe not return back; to fetch them, but make the beſt of his way as he is; ſee the notes on Matt. xxiv. 17, 18.

Ver. 32. Remember Lot's wife.] Whoſe name by the Jews, is ſaid to be Adith, as ſome [s]; or Irith, as others [t]: and who, they alſo ſay, was a native of Sodom; and that the reaſon of her looking, was either to ſee what would be the end of her father's houſe and family [u]; or as others [w], becauſe her heart yearned after her daughters, and ſhe looked back to ſee if they followed her; upon which ſhe became a pillar of ſalt, Gen. ix. 26. They ſay [x], that her bones were burnt with the brimſtone, and along with which was ſalt, into which ſhe was turned, according to Deut. xxix. 23. They often ſpeak of, מלח סדומית, ſalt of Sodom [y]; where the Gloſs ſays, it is thick and hard, as a ſtone; and to which they ſometimes [z] aſcribe this virtue, that it blinds the eyes: and there is a ſort of ſalt, which they call [a] Galilean ſalt, of like hardneſs; and Pliny [b] ſpeaks of ſalt in the Indies, which they cut out, as ſtones out of quarries; and that, at Carrhis, a town in Arabia, is ſalt with which they build houſes and walls: of a very durable nature 'tis certain, was this pillar of ſalt, Lot's wife became; for Joſephus reports [c], that he ſaw this pillar of ſalt in his time; and Irenæus aſſerts [d], that it was in being when he lived; and modern writers, as Burchardus and Adrichomius, ſpeak of it as ſtill exiſting; and the Jeruſalem paraphraſt on Gen. xix. 26. ſays, it ſhall endure till the time the reſurrection comes, in which the dead ſhall live: the reaſon of her becoming a pillar of ſalt, the Jews ſay is, that ſhe ſinned by ſalt, and ſo was puniſhed by ſalt; and which is differently related, and in a very fanciful way: one writer [e] reports, that when the angels came, Lot ſaid to her, give me a little ſalt for theſe travellers, ſhe replied to him, truly this is a bad cuſtom, which thou bringeſt to be uſed in this place; and elſewhere [f] 'tis ſaid, that upon their coming, ſhe went to all her neighbours, and ſaid to them, give me ſome ſalt, for we have travellers; but her intention was, that the men of the city might know them: but leaving thoſe things, our Lord's deſign in theſe words, is to inſtruct his followers by this inſtance, not to look back in their flight, or to turn back to their houſes, to ſave their goods, when the deſolation of Jeruſalem was coming on, leſt they ſhould ſuffer in it; and to warn all profeſſors of religion, in all ages, againſt looking back to things that are behind, or turning their backs on him, in a time of diſtreſs and perſecution; ſince ſuch are not fit for the kingdom of God; and in theſe God has no delight and pleaſure.

Ver. 33. Whoſoever ſhall ſeek to ſave his life, &c.] By fleeing to ſome ſtrong hold, or by continuing in the metropolis, and ſtrongeſt city in the nation Jeruſalem: ſhall loſe it; there he'll be in the greateſt danger: and whoſoever ſhall loſe his life; or expoſe it to danger, by fleeing to the mountains, or going to Pella, a ſmall town beyond Jordan, of no ſtrength, and where there might be thought no ſecurity: ſhall preſerve it; he ſhall be ſafe; ſee the note on Matt. xvi. 25.

Ver. 34. I tell you, in that night, &c.] Of affliction and calamity, that ſhall be upon the Jewiſh nation, and which is before called that day, ver. 36. and therefore is not to be underſtood literally of the night: there ſhall be two men in one bed; this is ſaid agreeable to the time, the night before-mentioned, that being the time to be in bed, at reſt and aſleep; for they that ſleep, ſleep in the night; and ſtill ſuggeſts the ſecurity, the people of the Jews would be in, at the time of their deſtruction. The word men is not in the text, it is only, there ſhall be two in one bed; and may as well be underſtood of a man and his wife, ſince it is not ſo uſual for two men to lie in one bed; and this the rather more ſtrongly expreſſes the diſtinguiſhing providence of God in ſaving one, and ſuffering the other to be taken and loſt: the words may be rendered, there ſhall be two upon one couch; that is, ſitting together at ſupper, which was alſo in the night ſeaſon: it was the cuſtom of the ancients, to ſit upon beds, or couches, at meals; and they had a bed, or couch, which held two perſons only, and was called Biclinium[h]: and ſo this likewiſe intimates, that the deſtruction of the Jews, would be at a time when they were thoughtleſs of it, and were eating and drinking, as in the days of Noah and of Lot, ver. 27, 28. The one ſhall be taken; by the Roman ſoldiers: and the other ſhall be left; being by one providence or another, preſerved; which is mentioned, to ſhew the diſtinction God will make in his providence, and to encourage believers to truſt in it.

Ver. 35. Two women ſhall be grinding together, &c.] In Matt. xxiv. 41. it is added, in the mill; in the houſe where the mill was, and at one and the ſame mill; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion here, two ſhall grind in one mill: and it was common for two women, to grind at one hand-mill; and though the word women is not in the text, it is rightly put into the tranſlation; ſince the word uſed is of the feminine gender, and ſince grinding was the buſineſs of women; and ſo the Perſic verſion here ſupplies it, as we do; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 41. The one ſhall be taken and the other left; the Roman ſoldiers entering the mill, will lay hold on the one, and carry her away with them, and leave the other; and for which no other reaſon can be given, but the ſovereign will and providence of God, which ſhould overule and diſpoſe the minds of theſe men, to act in ſuch a manner.

Ver. 36. Two men ſhall be in the field, &c.] At work there, tilling the ground, or ſowing the ſeed in it, or reaping the corn; which of them ſoever was the work of the field, at the time of Jeruſalem's deſtruction: the one ſhall be taken, and the other left: the circumſtances attending theſe ſeveral inſtances ſhew, that they can't be conſidered as expreſſive of the uſe and effect of the preaching of the Goſpel, that being the ſavour of life unto life to ſome, and the ſavour of death unto death to others, ſome being effectually called by it, and others being left to die in their ſins; ſince theſe men and women are ſaid to be either in a bed aſleep, or on a couch feaſting, or grinding in a mill, or at work in the field, and ſo not in proper places, and at leiſure to hear the Goſpel preached. The whole verſe is left out in the Ethiopic verſion, and in ſome Greek copies; though it is in the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions, and in the Complutenſian edition, and in ſome ancient copies, as Beza obſerves.

Ver. 37. And they anſwered and ſaid unto him, where, Lord? &c.] That is, either the Phariſees put this queſtion to Chriſt, who demanded of him when the kingdom of God would come, ver. 20. or rather the diſciples, to whom Chriſt more eſpecially directed his diſcourſe, ver. 22. who hearing of the diſtinction that would be made of perſons in theſe diſmal times, aſk where it ſhould be; not where the perſons would be left, but whither the others would be taken, and by whom: and he ſaid unto them, whereſoever the body is; the carkaſs of the Jewiſh nation, as at Jeruſalem chiefly, and in whatſoever place: thither will the eagles be gathered together; the Roman army, whoſe enſign was the eagle; theſe will come, ſeize upon them, and take them and devour them, as they did: the Perſic verſion renders it, vultures; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 28. Theſe words can by no means be underſtood of ſinners fleeing to Chriſt for eternal life and ſalvation; nor of the gathering of ſaints to him, at the laſt day; for how fitly ſoever ſuch perſons may be compared to eagles, the word body, or carkaſs, as in Matt. xxiv. 28. and which is ſo read in ſome copies here, is not ſo ſuitable to Chriſt; and eſpecially at his glorious appearing; and beſides, the words are an anſwer to a queſtion, where ſuch perſons would be, who would be taken and deſtroyed, when others would be left, or preſerved; and manifeſtly refer to the body, or carkaſs of the Jewiſh people at Jeruſalem, and other fortified places; where they ſhould think themſelves ſafe, but ſhould not be ſo, the Roman armies gathering about them, and ſeizing them as their prey: it is yet a more ſtrange interpretation, which is propoſed by a very learned man[i]; that by the eagle is meant, Chriſt; and by the body, or carkaſs, the church in the times of antichriſt; and by gathering to it, the coming of Chriſt: for though Chriſt may be ſaid to bear and carry his people, as the eagle bears and carries its young upon its wings, which he obſerves from Exod. xix. 4. Deut. xxxii. 11. Iſa. lxiii. 9. yet not a ſingle eagle, but eagles, in the plural number, are here mentioned; which ſhows, that not a ſingle perſon, as Chriſt, but many are here intended, even legions of Roman ſoldiers: nor can the church of Chriſt be compared to a dead and filthy carkaſs, in the worſt of times, even in the times of antichriſt; for however forlorn, diſtreſſed, and afflicted her condition is, ſhe is kept alive, and in ſome meaſure pure from antichriſtian pollutions; and is repreſented by a woman, to whom two wings of a great eagle are given (wherefore ſhe ſhould rather be deſigned by the eagles) to fly with into the wilderneſs, where ſhe is preſerved and nouriſhed for a time, and times, and half a time, Rev. xii. 14. Nor is Chriſt's coming ever expreſſed by the gathering of him to his people; but on the other hand, they are always ſaid to be gathered unto him; ſee 2 Theſſ. ii. 1.

CHAP. XVIII.

Ver. 1. AND he ſpake a parable unto them, &c.] To his own diſciples, as the Ethiopic verſion reads, in order to encourage them to prayer, with perſeverance in it; ſince ſuch ſore times of trial and affliction were coming upon the Jews, of which he had ſpoken in the preceding chapter; and ſuch times more eſpecially call for prayer; ſee Pſal. l. 15. to this end, that men ought always to pray. This is oppoſed to them, who pray not at all, or have left off prayer before God, or who pray only in diſtreſs; and ſuggeſts, that a man ſhould pray as often as he has an opportunity; ſhould be conſtant and aſſiduous at the throne of grace, and continue putting up his requeſts to God, though he does not preſently return an anſwer: and not to faint; by reaſon of afflictions, temptations, deſertions, and delays in anſwering prayer; and prayer itſelf is an admirable antidote againſt fainting under afflictive providences: 'tis with the Jews an affirmative precept, that a man ſhould pray, בכל יום, every day [k]; it was uſual with them to pray three times a day; ſee Pſal. lv. 17. Dan. vi. 10. there is no ſet time fixed by Chriſt; men ſhould be always praying. This is not to be underſtood, that a man ſhould be always actually engaged in the work of prayer; that he ſhould be continually either in his cloſet, in private devotion to God, or attending exerciſes of more public prayer, with the ſaints; for there are other religious exerciſes to be performed, beſides prayer; and beſides, there are many civil affairs of life, it is every man's indiſpenſable duty to regard: nor does our Lord mean in the leaſt to break in upon, or interrupt the natural and civil duties of life; but his meaning is, that a man ſhould perſevere in prayer, and not leave off, or be dejected, becauſe he has not an immediate anſwer; and this is clear from the following caſe.

Ver. 2. Saying, there was in a city a judge, &c.] In every city in the land of Iſrael, there was a Sanhedrim, or court of judicature; in Jeruſalem was the great Sanhedrim, conſiſting of ſeventy-one; and in every city where there were an hundred and twenty men, or more, there was a leſſer Sanhedrim, conſiſting of twenty-three; and in a city in which there were not an hundred and twenty men, were three judges; for there was no Sanhedrim, or court of judicature, that conſiſted of leſs than three [l]: but “ although there is no judicature leſs than three, “ מותר לאחד לדון, it is lawful for one to judge, “ according to the law, as it is ſaid, Levit. xix. 15. “ In righteouſneſs ſhalt thou judge thy neighbour; but “ according to the words of the Scribes (only,) “ when there are three, and two that judge, their “ judgment is no judgment: one who is publickly “ approved or authorized, or who has taken a licence “ from the Sanhedrim, it is lawful for him to judge “ alone, but it is not accounted a judicature; and “ though it is lawful, it is the command of the “ wiſe men, that he ſet others with him; for lo, “ they ſay, don't judge alone, for there is none “ that judgeth alone, but one [m].” It may be, this judge was, מומחה, an authorized and approved one; however, we have inſtances of ſingle judges, or of perſons that have judged alone, at leaſt by the conſent of parties. “ R. Abbu was ſitting “ judge, in a ſynagogue in Cæſarea, by himſelf; “ his diſciples ſaid to him, did not Rabbi ſo teach “ us, do not judge alone? he replied to them, “ when ye ſee me ſit judge by myſelf, and ye come “ to me, as thoſe that have taken upon themſelves “ (or agreed to be judged by me;) for the tra- “ dition is, of things in which they do not take “ upon them; but if they take upon them, (or “ agree to be judged) one may judge, though “ alone [n].” And again elſewhere [o]; “ if he is “ publickly authorized or approved, he judges, “ though alone; ſays R. Nachman, as I judge pe- “ cuniary cauſes alone; and ſo ſays R. Chijah, as I “ judge pecuniary judgments alone.——Mar Zutra, “ the ſon of R. Nachman, judged a cauſe, and erred; “ he came to R. Joſeph, who ſaid to him, if they have “ received thee upon them (agreed to be judged by “ thee) thou needſt not finiſh; but if not, go and “ finiſh.” The qualifications of one to be a judge, even of the bench of three, were theſe [p]; “ wiſ- “ dom, meekneſs, (or modeſty,) and fear, (i. e. “ of God,) and hatred of mammon, (or money,) “ love of truth, and to have the love of men, and “ to be maſters of a good name, (or to be of good “ report.”) But the judge in the text, came greatly ſhort of theſe qualifications: his character follows, which feared not God, neither regarded man; and therefore, according to the above canon, was diſqualified from being a judge, ſince he was deſtitute of the fear of God; and ſeeing he regarded not men, he could neither have any love to men, nor any ſhare in the affections of men, and ſuch an one is very unfit to be a judge, for he cannot be thought to have any regard to his conſcience, or his credit, and ſo not to juſtice and equity. The former of theſe characters, is what belongs to every man in a ſtate of unregeneracy; there's no true fear of God before the eyes, or in the heart of any unconverted man; wherever it is, it is put there by the grace of God: this is one of the firſt things which appears in converſion, and ſhews itſelf in an hatred of ſin, and in the performance of duties; and is increaſed, by the diſcoveries of the grace and goodneſs of God; but the want of this, is more viſible in ſome, than in others: ſome, though they have not the grace of fear, yet are under ſome awe of the divine being, and pay a regard to the word of God; and what through the force of education, and the dictates of a natural conſcience, dare not go ſuch lengths in ſin, as ſome do: but there are others, who even ſay there is no God, and at leaſt live as if there was none; they endeavour to work themſelves, and others, into a diſbelief of the being of God; and ſet their mouths againſt the heaven, deny his providence, and deſpiſe his word; ſtretch out their hands, and ſtrengthen themſelves againſt the Almighty; and in a fearleſs manner, run upon the thick boſſes of his bucklers; they declare their ſin as Sodom, and hide it not, yea, glory in it; they promiſe themſelves impunity, and laugh at a future judgment; and of ſuch a caſt was this judge, and therefore a very improper perſon for ſuch an office; for civil magiſtrates, and rulers of every ſort, ought to be juſt, ruling in the fear of God: and as for the other part of his character, it is not to be wondered at; for ſuch that fear not God, will have little regard to men; no otherwiſe, or further, than they are obliged to it: indeed, judges ought not to regard men in judgment; that is, to reſpect the perſons of men, and thro' affection, or flattery, or bribes, wreſt judgment: but this is not the ſenſe of the phraſe here, ſince this agrees not with the other part of the character, and ſince he is called an unjuſt judge; but the meaning is, that he had no regard to the laws of men, any more than the laws of God; but made his own will the rule of his actions, and had no regard to doing juſtice between man and man; nor did he care what any man ſaid of him; he had no concern about his reputation and character, having none to loſe.

Ver. 3. And there was a widow in that city, &c.] Poor and helpleſs, and none among men to counſel, direct, and aſſiſt her, and take her part: now as in the accommodation of this parable, the elect of God anſwer to this widow; ſuch an one is rather pitched upon to repreſent the helpleſs, deſolate, and forlorn condition they are in among men in this world, though they are eſpouſed to one huſband, Chriſt; and eſpecially to ſignify the ſtate and condition of God's elect among the Jews in thoſe ſad times, before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, this parable has reſpect unto. Chriſt is the bridegroom of his church and people; he is their huſband, the Lord of hoſts is his name; and they are eſpouſed as a chaſte virgin to him; and whilſt he was here on earth, his diſciples, who were the children of the bridegroom, could not faſt and mourn, for which they had no reaſon; but upon the death of Chriſt, when he was removed from them, they had great ſorrow of heart; they were left like widows and orphans; hence thoſe words of Chriſt, John xiv. 18. and were perſecuted by the Jews in their own land; and where-ever they went, they ſtirred up the Gentiles againſt them; and ſo things continued till near the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; during which time many a requeſt was made to God, the judge of the widows and fatherleſs, to the following purport: and ſhe came unto him, ſaying, avenge me of mine adverſary; or do me juſtice in the cauſe depending between me, and him that has wronged me; hear the cauſe, and do right; vindicate, and deliver me. Many are the adverſaries of God's people, as the ſins and corruptions of their own hearts, ſatan, and his angels, wicked oppreſſors, and perſecutors; the laſt ſeem, in the myſtical ſenſe, to be deſigned here: it's lawful to pray for vengeance on them; it's right to apply to God, and leave it with him, to whom it belongs; and it has been the ſuit and cry of the beſt of men; ſee Rev. vi. 9, 10. It does not become the people of God to avenge themſelves, even when it is in the power of their hands; nor ſhould they deſire it for their own ſakes, ſo much as for the glory of God; they ſhould aſk it, not to gratify a revengeful ſpirit in them, but for the honour of divine juſtice; and this ſhould be always with ſubmiſſion to the will of God, leaving it to his own time and way, to whom vengeance belongs, and who has ſaid it is mine, and I will repay it; as he certainly will ſooner or later: the purity of his nature, his abhorrence of ſin, and ſinful men, and his love to his own people engage him to it.

Ver. 4. And he would not for a while, &c.] He would give no ear to her cries, nor take her cauſe in hand, nor right her wrongs, and clear her of her adverſary: but afterward he ſaid within himſelf; as he was conſidering the matter in his own mind, and reflecting on this woman's caſe, and the frequent application ſhe had made to him: tho' I fear not God, nor regard man; a monſter in iniquity he was, to ſay ſo of himſelf; for tho' the character belongs to many, there are few that are ſo impudent in ſin, as to take it to themſelves, and glory in it.

Ver. 5. Yet becauſe this widow troubleth me, &c.] By often knocking at his door, by loud cries and earneſt entreaties, with ſtrong arguments, and floods of tears, and could not eaſily be removed from his preſence, or got out of his houſe: I will avenge her; I will hear her cauſe, do her juſtice, and deliver her from her troubleſome adverſary: leſt by her continual coming ſhe weary me; ſo that it was not from a conſcience of duty in him, as a judge, or from commiſeration of the poor widow's caſe; but from a ſelfiſh end, for his own eaſe, in perfect agreement to his character, that his houſe might not be diſturbed, and his ears ſtunned with her noiſe and cry, and he be peſtered with her company day after day. The character of this judge, his reaſoning with himſelf upon it, his principles from which he acted, and the ends he had in view, are wholly to be left out in the accommodation of this parable; and no further to be conſidered than as the argument from the leſſer to the greater, may be ſtrengthened by them; the intention of the parable being only to ſhow the force, efficacy, and uſefulneſs of importunity in prayer, as appears by the application of it, by our Lord, in the verſes following.

Ver. 6. And the Lord ſaid, &c.] The Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who delivered out this parable to his diſciples: hear what the unjuſt judge ſaith; and take encouragement from hence to be frequent and importunate in prayer with God; for if ſuch a cruel, mercileſs, and unjuſt judge is to be wrought upon by importunity, to do juſtice, who has no principle to influence him, how much more will not God, who is a juſt judge, the judge of widows, and of the oppreſſed, a God of great mercy and compaſſion, who delights in the prayers of his people, knows their caſes, and is able to help them, and who has an intereſt in them, and they in him? how much more will not he regard their importunate requeſts, and ariſe, and ſave them? much ſuch like reaſoning as this is uſed by the Jews: "ſays R. "Simeon ben Chelphetha, an impudent man over- "comes a good man, or a modeſt man, (by his im- "portunity), how much more the goodneſs of the "world itſelf [q]?" that is, how much more will a man, by his continual prayer, prevail with God, who is goodneſs itſelf? And they have another ſaying [r], that agrees with this: "ſays R. Nachman, "impudence (i. e. importunity) even againſt God is "profitable." The application of this parable follows:

Ver. 7. And ſhall not God avenge his own elect, &c.] Who are a ſelect number, a ſpecial people, whom he has loved with an everlaſting love, ſo as of his own ſovereign good will and pleaſure to chuſe in his Son Jeſus Chriſt unto everlaſting life and ſalvation, thro' certain ways and means of his own appointing, hence they are peculiarly his: and theſe he will avenge and vindicate, right their wrongs, do them juſtice, and deliver them from their adverſaries, and take vengeance on them; as may be concluded from his hatred of ſin, his juſtice, and his holineſs, from his promiſes, and from his power, and from the efficacy of prayer, and the regard he has to it: for it follows, which cry unto him day and night; whoſe prayers he always hears; whoſe tears he puts up in his bottle; and whoſe importunity muſt ſurely be thought to have more regard with him, than that of the poor widow with the unjuſt judge: tho' he bear long with them? either with their adverſaries, their oppreſſors, and perſecutors, who are veſſels of wrath, fitted for deſtruction, whom he endures with much long-ſuffering, till the ſufferings of his people are accompliſhed, and the iniquities of theſe men are full; or rather with the elect, for the words may be rendered, and is long-ſuffering towards them: delays his coming, and the execution of his vengeance, as on the Jewiſh nation, ſo upon the whole world of the ungodly, till his elect are gathered in from among them; ſee 2 Pet. iii. 9.

Ver. 8. I tell you that he will avenge them ſpeedily, &c.] As he did in a few years after the death of Chriſt, when God's elect among the Jews were ſingled out, and gathered in from them, and were delivered from their perſecutors, and ſaved from temporal ruin and deſtruction, whilſt the Roman army made ſad havock of their enemies; and ſo will he do in the end of the world. Nevertheleſs, when the ſon of man cometh; either to deſtroy Jeruſalem, or to judge the world: ſhall he find faith on the earth? either in the land of Judea, the believers being removed from thence, and ſcattered among the Gentiles, and not a man, at leaſt in Jeruſalem, that had any faith in Jeſus, as the Meſſiah; or in the world at the laſt day: there will then be little of the doctrine of faith, and leſs of the grace of faith, and ſtill leſs of the exerciſe of faith, particularly in prayer, and eſpecially about the coming of Chriſt; it will be little thought of, and expected, or faith little exerciſed about it. With this agree ſome expreſſions in the Jewiſh writings [s]: “Says R. “ Joſe, the holy, bleſſed God, will not be revealed to “ Iſrael, but in the time, דלא אשתכח מהימנותא, “ that faith is not found among them.” And elſewhere [t], ſpeaking of the times of the Meſſiah, and of a ſtar that ſhall then appear, it is ſaid, “ when “ that ſtar ſhall be ſeen in the world, at that time “ mighty wars ſhall be ſtirred up in the world, on “ all the four ſides, ומהימנותא לא ישתכח, and “ faith will not be found among them.” They ſeem to regard the firſt coming of the Meſſiah; and which was true with reſpect to the majority of their nation; and the ſame holds good with regard to his ſecond coming; ſee 2 Eſdras v. 1.

Ver. 9. And he ſpake this parable unto certain, &c.] Or with reſpect to certain men; having a view to them, in order to expoſe their pride, vanity, arrogance, and ſelf-confidence: which truſted in themſelves that they were righteous; or, as if they were righteous; or becauſe they were ſo, in their own eyes, and in the eſteem of others: the ground of their truſt and confidence were themſelves, their hearts, and the ſuppoſed goodneſs of them, their outward holineſs, their moral behaviour, their duties, and good works, their alms-deeds, and religious exerciſes, their ceremonial obſervances, and fleſhly privileges; on account of which they thought themſelves very righteous perſons, ſuch as could not fail of being accepted with God, and juſtified in his ſight; whereas there are none righteous in, and of themſelves, no, not one. All the deſcendants of Adam, as ſuch, are ſinners, deſtitute of a righteouſneſs, and filled with all unrighteouſneſs, and are enemies to true righteouſneſs: no man is naturally righteous, nor is he capable of making himſelf ſo, by any thing he can do: none are righteous by their obedience to the law of works, for that is imperfect, and can't juſtify before God, in whoſe ſight no fleſh living can be juſtified on this account, however righteous they may appear before men, or may be in their own eyes; for this is contrary to God's way of making men righteous, and would diſannul the death of Chriſt, and encourage boaſting in men. Such truſt and confidence muſt be very vain, and ariſe from ignorance; from ignorance of God, of the perfection of his juſtice, and of the nature of his righteous law; and of themſelves, of the impurity of their hearts, and the imperfection of their obedience. Theſe were of the phariſaical ſort, and of which complexion were the generality of the Jews; and many of theſe were now ſtanding by Chriſt, and within the hearing of this parable, and for whoſe ſake it was delivered: and deſpiſed others; or, every man, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions read; all the reſt of mankind, all but themſelves; they made nothing of them, had them in no account; treated them as perſons unworthy of the regard of God, and not fit to ſtand near them, or to be named with them.

Ver. 10. Two men went up into the temple to pray, &c.] Which is called an houſe of prayer, Iſ. lvi. 7. the Jews had a mighty notion of praying in a place of religious worſhip, as in the temple, or in a ſynagogue; imagining that their prayers were more acceptable to God, and ſooner heard by him in ſuch a place than in private: “ the prayers of the con- “ gregation, they ſay [u], are heard always; and “ though there are ſinners among them, the holy, “ bleſſed God, does not deſpiſe the prayer of many; “ wherefore, a man ought to join himſelf with the “ congregation, and not pray alone, whenever he “ can pray with that: and let a man go always, “ morning and evening, to the ſynagogue; for “ there is no prayer heard at all times but in the “ ſynagogue; and whoever has a ſynagogue in his “ city, and does not pray in it with the congrega- “ tion, is called an ill neighbour.——A divinity- “ ſchool is greater than a ſynagogue; and the great “ wiſe men, though they had many ſynagogues in “ their cities, did not pray but where they ſtudied “ in the law.” And they ſay [w], that “ he that “ prays (in the ſynagogue) is as if he offered a pure “ offering.——Says R. Abbu, in the name of R. “ Abbu, ſeek the Lord where he may be found; where “ is he to be found? in the ſynagogues, and in the “ ſchools.” Theſe two men had, doubtleſs, both of them a notion of the ſanctity of the place, and acted according to the prevailing ſenſe of the people. They went up hither, not by conſultation, agreement, and appointment; for they were of a different caſt from each other; but ſo it happened. Had they went by conſent, there was a rule for them [x]: “ two men that go to a ſynagogue to pray, and “ one has finiſhed his prayer before his neighbour, “ if he ſtays for him, his reward is double; and if “ he does not ſtay for him, his prayer is not heard.” And they had rules alſo for the manner of their going to, and from the place of prayer: when they went thither, they were to go nimbly, in haſte, and even run; but when they came back, they were to go very ſlowly and gently [y]. “ The commandment, “ they ſay [z], is to run to a ſynagogue; for it is ſaid, Hoſ. vi. 3. we ſhall know, we ſhall follow on to know the Lord: but when a man comes out of the ſynagogue, let him not take large ſteps; but let him walk, little by little, or take ſhort ſteps.” How far theſe rules were complied with by theſe men, is of no great moment to know; who they were follows; the one a Phariſee; one of thoſe that truſted in themſelves, as righteous, and deſpiſed all others, eſpecially publicans and ſinners; of theſe ſee the note on Matt. iii. 7. This was the ſtricteſt ſect among the Jews; they were men that prayed, and faſted much, and were great ſticklers for the ceremonies of the law, and the traditions of the elders, and did all they did to be ſeen of men: and the other a publican; a gatherer of the Roman tax, though by nation a Jew; and therefore ſuch were had in great contempt by the Jews in general; nor would they eat and drink and converſe with them; ſee the notes on Matt. ix. 10, 11.

Ver. 11. The Phariſee ſtood, &c.] Standing was a praying poſture; ſee the note on Matt. vi. 5. nor is this obſerved, as if it was ſomething amiſs: but the ſenſe is, either, that he ſtood in ſome place of eminence, that he might be ſeen of others; or he ſtood in a ſet, fixed poſture, in a very grave and ſolemn manner, ſhewing great devotion and ſeriouſneſs; or he ſtood with great boldneſs and confidence: and prayed thus with himſelf; the phraſe, with himſelf, may be read either with the word ſtood, as it is in the Syriac verſion; and then the ſenſe is that he ſtood alone, apart from the publican, at a diſtance from him, as deſpiſing him; and leſt he ſhould be polluted by him; ſee Iſ. lxv. 4. or with the word prayed, and does not deſign internal prayer, which was what the Phariſees did not uſe; for all they did was to be ſeen, and heard of men: but the meaning is, that he prayed only with reſpect to himſelf; he was wholly intent upon himſelf; his own ſelf, and the commendation of himſelf, were the ſubject of his prayer; his whole dependance in it was on himſelf; and he was only ſeeking by it his own glory: he had no regard to the people of God, to all the ſaints, nor did he put up one petition for them; nor had he any reſpect to Chriſt, the mediator, through whom acceſs is had to God, and acceptance with him; nor to the Holy Spirit for his aſſiſtance; and though he addreſſed himſelf to God, yet in praiſe of himſelf, ſaying, God I thank thee: there is no petition in this prayer of his for pardoning grace and mercy; nor for larger meaſures of grace; nor for ſtrength to perform duties, and to hold on to the end; nor for any favour whatever; nor is there any confeſſion of ſin in it. So that it ſcarce deſerves the name of a prayer, for in it is only a thankſgiving: indeed, thankſgiving in prayer is right; and had he been a man that had received the grace of God, it would have been right in him to have given thanks to God for it, by which he was made to differ from others: nor would he have been blameworthy, had he thanked God for the good things which he had received from him, or which by his aſſiſtance he had done; but nothing of this kind is ſaid by him; he thanks God, in order to exalt himſelf, and places his righteouſneſs in his own works, and treats all other men in a cenſorious and diſdainful manner; thanking God, or rather bleſſing himſelf, ſaying, that I am not as other men are; and yet he was as other men, and no better: he was a ſinner in Adam, as other men; and a ſinner by nature, as others are; and had the ſame iniquities and corruptions in his heart, as others; and had no more goodneſs in him than other men, and as far from true real righteouſneſs. Perhaps he means the Gentiles, whom the Jews looked upon as ſinners, and the worſt of men; and yet they were in no wiſe better than the Gentiles, as to their ſtate and condition by nature: it was uſual to call the Gentiles, אחרים, other men; which phraſe is ſometimes explained by the nations of the world[a]; and ſometimes by the Cuthites, or Samaritans[b]; ſee the note on Luke v. 29.—He goes on, extortioners, unjuſt, adulterers; and yet all theſe characters belonged to the men of his ſect: the Phariſees were oppreſſors of the poor, devoured widows houſes, and extorted money from them, under a pretence of long prayers: they are aptly repreſented by the unjuſt ſteward, in ch. xvi. 1, 8. and they were an unclean, unchaſte, and an adulterous generation of men, Matt. xii. 39. John viii. 8, 9. or even as this publican; pointing to him at ſome diſtance, with great ſcorn and diſdain. This was his prayer, or thankſgiving. It may gratify the curioſity of ſome to have ſome other prayers of the Phariſees; and it may be worth while to compare them with this, between which there will appear a pretty deal of likeneſs. “R. Nechunia ben Hakkana uſed to pray, when he went into the ſchool, and when he came out, a ſhort prayer: they ſaid unto him, what is the goodneſs (or the excellency) of this prayer? he replied to them, when I go in, I pray, that no offence might come by means of me; and when I go out, I give thanks for my portion: when I go in, this is what I ſay, let it be thy good pleaſure before thee, O Lord, my God, the God of my fathers, that I may not be angry with my collegues, nor my collegues be angry with me; that I may not pronounce that which is pure defiled, and that which is defiled, pure; that I may not forbid that which is lawful, nor pronounce lawful that which is forbidden; and that I may not be found aſhamed in this world, and in the world to come: and when I come out, this is what I ſay; I confeſs before thee, (or I thank thee) O Lord God, and the God of my fathers, that thou haſt given me my portion among thoſe that ſit in the ſchools, and ſynagogues, and haſt not given me my portion in the theatres and ſhows; for I labour, and they labour; I watch, and they watch; I labour to inherit paradiſe, and they labour for the pit of corruption[c].” And theſe two prayers the Jews were obliged to recite at their going in, and coming out of the ſynagogue. “It is a tradition of R. Juda, ſaying, three things a man ought to ſay every day; bleſſed be thou, שלא עשאני גוי, that thou haſt not made me a Gentile; bleſſed art thou, that thou haſt not made me an unlearned man, (or one that is vain and fooliſh, uncivil and uncultivated;) bleſſed art thou that haſt not made me a woman[d].” In their prayer-books[e], theſe thankſgivings ſtand thus: “bleſſed art thou, O Lord our God, the king of the world, that thou haſt made me an Iſraelite; (in ſome books it is, as before, that thou haſt not made me a Gentile) bleſſed art thou, O Lord our God, the king of the world, that thou haſt not made me a ſervant; bleſſed art thou, O Lord our God, the king of the world, that thou haſt not made me a woman:” when the women, inſtead of this laſt, ſay; “bleſſed art thou, O Lord our God, the king of the world, who has made me as he pleaſes.” And very agreeable to one of theſe benedictions does the Ethiopic verſion render the prayer of the Phariſee here; I thank thee, O Lord, that thou haſt not made me as other men.

Ver. 12. I faſt twice in the week, &c.] Not on the ſabbath, as the words may be literally rendered, and as they are in the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions; for the ſabbath was not a faſting, but a feaſting-day with the Jews; for they were obliged to eat three meals, or feaſts, on a ſabbath-day, one in the morning, another at evening, and another at the time of the meat-offering: even the pooreſt man in Iſrael, who was maintained by alms, was obliged to keep theſe three feaſts [f]. It was forbidden a man to faſt, until the ſixth hour, on a ſabbath-day; that is, till noon [g]: wherefore, 'tis a great miſtake in Juſtin [h], and Suetonius [i], that the ſabbath was kept by the Jews as a faſt. But the word is rightly rendered, in the week: the whole ſeven days, or week, were by the Jews commonly called the ſabbath; hence, אחד בשבת, the firſt of the ſabbath, and the ſecond of the ſabbath, and the third of the ſabbath [k]; that is, the firſt, ſecond, and third days of the week. Now the two days in the week on which they faſted were Monday and Thurſday, the ſecond and fifth days; on which days the law of Moſes, and the book of Eſther were read, by the order of Ezra [l]; and faſts for the congregation were appointed on thoſe days [m]; and ſo a private perſon, or a ſingle man, as in this inſtance, took upon him, or choſe to faſt on the ſame [n]: the reaſon of this is, by ſome, ſaid to be, becauſe Moſes went up to mount Sinai on a Thurſday, and came down on a Monday [o]. But though theſe men faſted ſo often, they took care not to hurt themſelves; for they allowed themſelves to eat in the night till break of day. 'Tis aſked [p], "how long "may a man eat and drink, i. e. on a faſt-day? "until the pillar of the morning aſcends (day "breaks); theſe are the words of Rabbi (Judah): "R. Eliezer ben Simeon ſays, until cock crowing." So that they had not ſo much reaſon to boaſt of theſe performances: he adds, I give tithes of all that I poſſeſs; not only of what was titheable by the law of Moſes, as the produce of his ground; and by the traditions of the elders, as the herbs in his garden, Matt. xxiii. 23. but of every thing he had, which was not required by either of them; upon which he thought himſelf a very righteous perſon, and more than a common man: 'tis aſked [q], "who is a plebeian? (one of the people of the "earth, or the common people) whoever does not "eat his common food with purity (with hands "waſhed); theſe are the words of R. Meir: but "the wiſe men ſay, whoever does not tithe his "fruit." This man would not be thought to be ſuch an one.

Ver. 13. And the publican ſtanding afar off, &c.] Not at the outermoſt porch, or at the door; for "a man might not fix his place at the door of the "ſynagogue, but, ירחיק, he muſt go afar off, the "ſpace of two doors, and then pray [r]," it may be in the court of the Gentiles, when the Phariſee was in the court of the Iſraelites; at leaſt he was afar off from him: and indeed, thoſe who came to humble themſelves before the Lord, and confeſs their ſins, were obliged to ſtand at the diſtance of four cubits one from another, that one might not hear the prayers and confeſſions of the other [s]: and it might be, that this poor man might ſtand at a greater diſtance than was required, that he might not diſpleaſe the Phariſee, who, he knew, would reſent it, ſhould he ſtand near him; or rather this was done, to teſtify the ſenſe he had of his ſtate and condition, and of his unworthineſs; as that he was afar off from God, and unworthy to draw nigh unto him, and deſerved to be kept at a diſtance from him for ever. So it is ſaid [t] of the Iſraelites, that they trembled at mount Sinai, and ſtood afar off, להורות ענותנותם, to ſhew their humility; and under a work of the law, and under ſuch a like diſpenſation was this publican; and therefore would not ſo much as lift up his eyes unto heaven: and which, as it was an humble poſture he ſtood in, agrees with the rules the Jews give [u]; "the order "(or poſture) of the body, how is it? when a man "ſtands in prayer he ought to ſet his feet one by "the ſide of the other, and fix his eyes, למטה, "below, as if he looked to the earth; and his "heart muſt be open above, as if he ſtood in the "heavens; and lay his hands upon his heart, put-"ing the right hand over the left; and muſt ſtand "as a ſervant before his maſter, with trembling, "and fear, and dread, and may not put his hands "upon his loins." And agreeable to this, 'tis elſewhere [w] ſaid, "he that prays, ought to fix "his eyes below, and his heart above." And the Jews uſed to look downward, or ſhut their eyes, for the ſake of attention in prayer; and it was even forbidden them to open their eyes to look upon the wall [x]. This ſhewed in the publican, that the guilt of his ſins lay heavy on him; that he could not look up; that ſhame filled him with bluſhing; that ſorrow cauſed his countenance to fall; and that fear of divine wrath, and diſpleaſure, poſſeſſed him; and that he looked upon himſelf as unworthy of the ſmiles of heaven: but ſmote upon his breaſt; pointing at the fountain of his ſin; expreſſing, by this action, his ſorrow, and repentance for it; and an averſion and abhorrence of himſelf on account of it, joined with indignation and revenge; and he did this to arouſe, and ſtir up all the powers, and faculties of his ſoul, to call upon God. The Perſic verſion renders it, he fell on his knees, and beat the earth with his head; taking a ſort of revenge on himſelf for ſin: ſaying, God be merciful to me a ſinner. This is his prayer; a ſhort, but a very full one, and greatly different from that of the Phariſee: in which is a confeſſion that he was a ſinner; a ſinner in Adam, who had derived a ſinful nature from him, being conceived and born in ſin; and a ſinner by practice, having committed many actual tranſgreſſions, attended with aggravating circumſtances; a guilty and filthy ſinner, a notorious one, deſerving of the wrath of God, and the loweſt hell: he ſpeaks of himſelf, as if he was the only ſinner in the world; at leaſt, as if there was none like him: and there is in this prayer alſo a petition; and the object it is put up to, is God, againſt whom he had ſinned; with whom there is mercy and forgiveneſs; and who only can forgive ſin; and who has promiſed that he will; and has proclaimed his name, a God, pardoning iniquity, tranſgreſſion, and ſin; and has given inſtances of his forgiving-grace and mercy; and therefore the publican was right in addreſſing him by confeſſion: the petition he makes to him is, to be merciful, or propitious to him; that is, to ſhew mercy to him, through the propitiatory ſacrifice of the Meſſiah, which was typified by the ſacrifices under the law: the firſt thing a ſenſible ſinner wants, is an application of pardoning-grace and mercy; and forgiveneſs ſprings from mercy; and becauſe the mercy of God is free and abundant, therefore pardon is ſo: but this is not to be expected from an abſolute God, or God out of Chriſt. God is only propitious in Chriſt: hence it may be obſerved, that God pardons none but thoſe to whom he is propitious in his ſon; and that he forgives ſin upon the foot of a reconciliation, and ſatisfaction made to his law, and juſtice, and ſo pardon is an act of juſtice, as well as of mercy; and that there is no pardoning-mercy but through Chriſt. The Arabic verſion renders it, ſpare me, becauſe I am a ſinner; ſee Pſ. xxv. 11.

Ver. 14. I tell you that this man, &c.] The Publican that ſo freely owned himſelf to be a ſinner, and by his carriage acknowledged he was unworthy of any favour; and who was treated with ſo much contempt by the Phariſee: went down to his houſe; from the temple which was built on a mountain, juſtified, rather than the other; accounted as a righteous perſon in the ſight of God; juſtified from all his ſins, and accepted by him, when the other was abhorred and neglected. The Syriac and Perſic verſions, and ſo Beza's moſt ancient copy, read, than the Phariſee, who had ſuch an high opinion of himſelf, and deſpiſed others: not that the Phariſee was juſtified at all, when the publican really was; but the ſenſe is, that if judgment had been to have been made, and ſentence paſſed according to the then conduct and behaviour of both parties, the publican had greatly the advantage, in the ſight of God; a humble demeanour being well-pleaſing and acceptable to him, when pride, and arrogance, boaſting of, and truſting in a man's own righteouſneſs, are abhorred by him; for every one that exalteth himſelf, ſhall be abaſed, and he that humbleth himſelf, ſhall be exalted. This was a proverbial expreſſion, often mentioned by Chriſt on different occaſions, and frequently uſed by the Jews; ſee the note on Matt. xxiii. 12. to which may be added the following paſſages; "whoever is of a haughty "ſpirit, at laſt ſhall be made low [y]." And again, "whoſoever humbleth himſelf, the holy, bleſſed "God will lift him up [z]."

Ver. 15. And they brought unto him alſo infants, &c.] As well as grown perſons, that were ſick, to be healed by him: that he would touch them; in order, as ſome learned men think, to cure them, of diſeaſes that attended them; for one of the ways by which Chriſt healed perſons, was by touching them; nor do we read of his touching in common for any other purpoſe, or of perſons deſiring him to touch them, or theirs, but for this end; in Matthew it is read, that he ſhould put his hands on them; and ſo the Arabic and Perſic verſions here read, in order to pray over them, and bleſs them: but neither in one place, or the other, is any mention of their baptiſm, or of their being brought for ſuch a purpoſe; nor can it be concluded from hence: but when his diſciples ſaw it, they rebuked them; the perſons that brought the infants; ſee the note on Matt. xix. 13.

Ver. 16. But Jeſus called them unto him, &c.] Not the diſciples, as the Ethiopic verſion reads, nor the perſons that brought the children, but the children themſelves; for the antecedent to the relative αυτα, them, can be no other; which ſhews, that theſe infants were not new-born babes, or children at the breaſt, but ſuch as were more grown up, ſince they were capable of being called to, and of coming to Chriſt: and ſaid; that is, to the diſciples; ſo the Perſic verſion expreſſes it: ſuffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; ſee the note on Matt. xix. 14. for of ſuch is the kingdom of God; or of heaven, as the Syriac verſion reads, and as in Matt. xix. 14. that is, the kingdom of God belongs to ſuch, who are as theſe; or, like to theſe, as the Syriac, Arabic and Perſic verſions render the words; ſee the note as before.

Ver. 17. Verily I ſay unto you, &c.] Chriſt takes an occaſion from hence to teach his diſciples humility, and guard them againſt pride and vanity: whoſoever ſhall not receive the kingdom of God; the king Meſſiah, the doctrines of the Goſpel, and the ordinances of it, even the whole Goſpel-diſpenſation: as a little child; without prejudice, pride, ambition, and vanity, with meekneſs, and humility: ſhall in no wiſe enter therein; he is a very unfit and improper perſon to be a profeſſor of the Goſpel; or to be admitted to Goſpel-ordinances; or be a member of a Goſpel-church; or be reckoned a ſubject of the Meſſiah's kingdom, which is of a ſpiritual nature; and as he has not a meetneſs for, and a right unto, the kingdom of Glory, he ſhall never ſee it, and enjoy it.

Ver. 18. And a certain ruler aſked him, &c.] A young man, Matt. xix. 20. a ruler among the Jews, a civil magiſtrate, and a very rich man; he ran after Jeſus, and overtook him in the way, as he was going towards Jericho, Mark x. 17. ſaying, good maſter; Rabbi, or doctor, what ſhall I do to inherit eternal life? ſee the note on Matt. xix. 16.

Ver. 19. And Jeſus ſaid unto him, &c.] In anſwer to his queſtion, beginning with the character he gave him: why calleſt thou me good? it being unuſual to addreſs men, even their Rabbins, under ſuch a title: none is good, ſave one, that is, God; or but God alone, as the Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions render it; or, but the one God, as read the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions; ſee the note on Matt. xix. 17.

Ver. 20. Thou knoweſt the commandments, &c.] The ten commandments given to Moſes, and delivered to the people; and which they were careful to teach their children; though five are only here mentioned, and not in the order in which they ſtand: ſuggeſting hereby that theſe muſt be kept, or the law muſt be fulfilled, and ſatisfaction made for the violation of it, or there can be no inheriting eternal life. The five commandments mentioned, are, the ſeventh, ſixth, eighth, ninth, and fifth: do not commit adultery; do not kill; do not ſteal; do not bear falſe witneſs; honour thy father and thy mother; ſee the notes on Matt. xix. 17. and Mark x. 19.

Ver. 21. And he ſaid, &c.] That is, the ruler ſaid to him, as the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions add; to Jeſus, as the Perſic verſion expreſſes it; all theſe have I kept from my youth up; ſee the note on Matt. xix. 20. where it is added, what lack I yet?

Ver. 22. Now when Jeſus heard theſe things, &c.] That he had kept all theſe commandments, and that ever ſince he was a child, and to that very time: he ſaid unto him, yet lackeſt thou one thing; not but that he lacked many other things, and even every thing; for he had performed no one thing as it ſhould be; but Chriſt ſaid, partly in anſwer to his pert queſtion, what lack I yet? and partly by an ironical conceſſion, granting he had kept them all, as he had ſaid, yet one thing was wanting; and chiefly with a view to mortify his pride and vanity: ſell all that thou haſt, and diſtribute unto the poor, and thou ſhalt have treaſure in heaven, and come and follow me; ſee the note on Matt. xix. 21.

[z] Zohar in Lev. fol. 39. 1.

Ver. 23. And when he heard this, &c.] That one thing was wanting, and what that was, which was to part with all his worldly ſubſtance, and follow Chriſt; he was very ſorrowful, for he was very rich; ſee the note on Matt. xix. 22.

Ver. 24. And when Jeſus ſaw that he was very ſorrowful, &c.] As he might, by his looks and geſtures; and perceived that he was determined not to part with his poſſeſſions, and follow him: he ſaid, to his diſciples, how hardly ſhall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God! embrace the Goſpel, and ſubmit to the ordinances of it; deny themſelves, part with their worldly ſubſtance for the cauſe of Chriſt, and intereſt of religion. Riches, which ſhould be a reaſon for, are often a bar unto a profeſſion of Chriſt, and his Goſpel. This is delivered as an affirmation, or by way of aſſertion, in Matt. xix. 23. ſee the note there.

Ver. 25. For it is eaſier for a camel, &c.] Theſe words were ſpoken to the diſciples again, and were a ſecond addreſs to them, after they had ſhewn aſtoniſhment at the former; ſee the notes on Matt. xix. 24. and Mark x. 24, 25.

Ver. 26. And they that heard it, ſaid, who then can be ſaved?] Theſe were the diſciples of Chriſt, who ſo ſaid; ſee Matt. xix. 25.

Ver. 27. And he ſaid, &c.] That is, Jeſus, as the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions expreſs it: the things which are impoſſible with men, are poſſible with God; ſee the note on Matt. xix. 26.

Ver. 28. Then Peter ſaid, &c.] To him, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions add; that is, to the Lord Jeſus, as the Ethiopic verſion expreſſes it; who was always the moſt forward to ſpeak on any occaſion: he obſerving what was required of the young man, and how unwilling he was to comply with it, and the difficulty in every rich man's way of entrance into the kingdom of God, ſpoke as follows; lo, we have left all: the Arabic verſion reads, all ours; all we had, our friends, trades, and worldly ſubſtance; and followed thee: in Matt. xix. 27. 'tis added, what ſhall we have therefore? referring to the promiſe of Chriſt, to the young man, that ſhould he ſell all he had, and give it to the poor, he ſhould have treaſure in heaven; ſee the note there.

Ver. 29. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] To his diſciples, as the Ethiopic verſion reads; tho' the Syriac and Perſic verſions read, and Jeſus ſaid to him; that is, to Peter; he particularly replied to him: verily I ſay unto you, there is no man; not only you ſhall have peculiar honour done you, as to ſit on thrones, and judge the twelve tribes of Iſrael; but there is not a ſingle perſon of a more private character, that hath left houſe, or houſes, as read the Syriac and Perſic verſions; or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children, for the kingdom of God's ſake; that is, for Chriſt's ſake, and for the ſake of his Goſpel, as the other Evangeliſts have it; and which teaches us how to underſtand the kingdom of God here, and elſewhere.

Ver. 30. Who ſhall not receive manifold more in this preſent time, &c.] Not more houſes, parents, brethren, &c. but that which is abundantly preferable to them; ſuch comfort, peace, ſatisfaction, and pleaſure, as are not to be found in ſuch enjoyments: and in the world to come life everlaſting; which was what the young man was deſirous of inheriting, v. 18. ſee the note on Matt. xix. 29.

Ver. 31.] Then he took unto him the twelve, &c.] His twelve diſciples, as the Ethiopic verſion expreſſes it; he took them aſide from the reſt of the company, as they were travelling on the road, and privately delivered to them, what follows; ſee Matt. xx. 17. and ſaid unto them, behold, we go up to Jeruſalem; to the feaſt of the paſſover, which was drawing near, and the laſt Chriſt was to eat with his diſciples, the time of his ſufferings, and death, being now at hand; and of which he though fit to give his diſciples notice: and therefore he called them aſide, and, in a private manner, told them, that all things that are written by the prophets, concerning the Son of man, ſhall be accompliſhed; particularly, Pſ. ii. 1, 2. and xxii. 6, 7, 8. Iſ. l. 6. Micah v. 1. Iſ. liii. 5, 6, 12. Pſ. xxii. 15. and xvi. 10. Hoſ. vi. 2. for to theſe the following things have reſpect.

Ver. 32. For he ſhall be delivered unto the Gentiles, &c.] As he was by the chief prieſts, Scribes, and elders, to Pilate, the Roman governour, and by him to the ſoldiers: and ſhall be mocked; as he was by the latter, when they crowned him with thorns, arrayed him in a purple-robe, and put a reed into his hand, and bowed the knee to him, ſaying, hail king of the Jews; and likewiſe by the Jews when he hung upon the croſs: and ſpitefully intreated. The Syriac and Perſic verſions leave out this clauſe here, and read it in the next verſe. It may regard the injuries done him, the abuſes and affronts he received, both by words and blows: and ſpitted on; as he was both by the officers in the high-prieſt's palace, and by the Roman ſoldiers in Pilate's hall; ſee Iſ. l. vi.

Ver. 33. And they ſhall ſcourge him, &c.] As he was by Pilate's order, before he was crucified: and put him to death; a ſhameful, and a painful one, the death of the croſs: and the third day he ſhall riſe again; as he accordingly did.

Ver. 34. And they underſtood none of theſe things, &c.] Not one of them, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions render it; every article of his ſufferings and death were unintelligible by them; they knew not how to underſtand him in any one point; or how to reconcile theſe things to the notions they had entertained of the temporal grandeur, and glory, of the Meſſiah, and his kingdom; and which ſhews their great ignorance of the prophecies of the Old Teſtament concerning theſe things. And this ſaying, or thing; for it anſwers to the Hebrew word דבר, which ſignifies any affair, or matter, as well as a word, or ſaying: and ſo here, the whole of this affair was hid from them; unleſs it ſhould have a peculiar regard to that part of it, which expreſſes his reſurrection from the dead; ſee Mark ix. 10. or the delivery of him to the Gentiles, Luke ix. 44, 45. neither knew they the things which were ſpoken; the meaning of them. The Ethiopic verſion leaves out this, and puts the former clauſe, by way of queſtion, and he ſaid unto them, and is this ſaying hid from you?

Ver. 35. And it came to paſs that as he was come nigh unto Jericho, &c.] Which lay in his way to Jeruſalem: a certain blind man ſat by the way-ſide begging; this was not blind Bartimeus, nor his companion, for they were cured by Chriſt as he went out of Jericho; but this man before he came to it; for we afterwards read of his entrance into, and paſſing thro' Jericho, ch. xix. 1. tho' much the ſame things are related in this account, as in that of the other two blind men; ſee the note on Matt. xx. 30.

Ver. 36. And hearing the multitude paſs by, &c.] Their voice, as the Syriac verſion expreſſes it; the noiſe of their feet, and eſpecially of their tongues; he aſked what it meant? what was the meaning of this concourſe of people, and of this clamorous noiſe; or, as the Syriac verſion reads, who it ſhould be? what perſon of note was paſſing by, that there was ſuch a multitude after him? to which the anſwer beſt agrees.

Ver. 37. And they told him, that Jeſus of Nazareth paſſeth by.] Some of the company anſwered him, that Jeſus, the prophet of Nazareth, ſo much talked of, and ſaid to be the Meſſiah, who was become ſo famous for his doctrines and miracles, for healing diſeaſes, and diſpoſſeſſing devils, was juſt then paſſing by; and this occaſioned the noiſe and clamour.

Ver. 38. And he cried, ſaying, Jeſus thou Son of David, &c.] Believing him, at once, to be the Meſſiah; whence he calls him the ſon of David, which was a character and title of the Meſſiah, well known to the Jews; ſee the note on Matt. i. 1. and therefore immediately called out unto him, being willing to take that opportunity as he paſſed, and whilſt he was within hearing, to make his ſuit to him for his ſight: ſaying, have mercy on me; a poor, blind, and miſerable creature, and reſtore me to my ſight, which will be an act of ſingular mercy, and goodneſs, and will always be gratefully owned as ſuch.

Ver. 39. And they that went before, &c.] In the company that preceded Chriſt; for he, as yet, was not come right over-againſt the blind man: rebuked him that he ſhould hold his peace; being not well pleaſed that he ſhould call him the Son of David, which was acknowledging him to be the Meſſiah; or that he might not be troubleſome to Chriſt, and retard his journey: but he cried ſo much the more, thou Son of David, have mercy on me; he neither dropped the character of Chriſt, nor his requeſt to him; but called out more loudly, and with greater vehemence, earneſtneſs, and importunity: ſo perſons ſenſible of their need of Chriſt, and of his worth, excellency, and ability, are not to be diſcouraged from an application to him, by whatſoever they meet with from men, or devils.

Ver. 40. And Jeſus ſtood, &c.] He ſtood ſtill; he made a full ſtop, and went no further, when, it is very likely, he was juſt over-againſt him: and commanded him to be brought unto him; either by the diſciples, or by ſome of the multitude: and when he was come near he aſked him; the following queſtion.

Ver. 41. Saying, what wilt thou that I ſhall do unto thee? &c.] Is it alms thou aſkeſt? or is it thy ſight thou wouldſt have reſtored? and he ſaid, Lord, that I may receive my ſight; this he choſe, this was his requeſt, and what he cried ſo vehemently for; and which he believed Chriſt, the Son of David, was able to do for him.

Ver. 42. And Jeſus ſaid unto him, receive thy ſight, &c.] Be it to thee, as thou deſireſt, look up and ſee: thus by a word ſpeaking, and power going along with it, without making uſe of any means, he fulfilled his deſire. Thy faith hath ſaved thee; or has received ſalvation for thee, a temporal ſalvation; and it may be alſo a ſpiritual and an eternal one: for that is the concern faith has in ſalvation; it is the means of receiving and enjoying it: Chriſt the object of faith, is the author of it.

Ver. 43. And immediately he received his ſight, &c.] As ſoon as ever the word was gone out of Chriſt's mouth, virtue went forth from him, and cured the man of his blindneſs; his eyes were at once opened, and he ſaw as other men: and followed him; his kind benefactor, with a grateful ſenſe of his goodneſs, with ſtrong affection for him, and faith in him: glorifying God; who had ſent ſuch a Saviour to him; who had wrought ſuch a wonderful miracle for him; for he was ſenſible, that none but God could do this. And all the people, when they ſaw it; what was done, how, that the man they juſt before ſaw was blind, and begging by the way-ſide, now had his ſight reſtored to him, in an inſtant, and was following Jeſus, in the crowd, along with them: gave praiſe unto God; or, as Beza's moſt antient copy reads, glory; they aſcribed the glory to God, and praiſed his name, that he had raiſed up the Meſſiah among them; of which this was a clear proof, inaſmuch as the eyes of the blind were opened, according to Iſ. xxxv. 5.

CHAP. XIX.

Ver. 1. AND Jeſus entered, and paſſed through Jericho.] Though the word Jeſus is not in the original text, 'tis rightly ſupplied in our verſion; as it is alſo in the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions; for of him the words are manifeſtly ſpoken: after he had healed the blind man he met with near to Jericho, he entered into it, but made no ſtay in it, paſſed thro' it at once without ſtopping, tho' a very populous city; but here he had no work, either to perform miracles, or to convert ſinners; tho' both, before he entered, and after he paſſed thro' it.

Ver. 2. And behold there was a man named Zaccheus, &c.] Or זַכָּאי, Zaccai, a name in uſe among the Jews; ſee Ezra ii. 9. We often read of ר׳ זכאי, Rabbi Zaccai, or Zaccheus[a], and very frequently of R. Jochanan ben Zaccai, a famous doctor that lived in the times of Chriſt, and even till after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. The Jews alſo make mention of one R. Zaccai, a prince of the ſeed of David the king, in later times[b]. So that this man, as appears by his name, was a Jew, though ſome have thought him to have been a Gentile[c], perhaps becauſe of his employment: but it does not follow from thence; for there were Jews that were publicans, as Levi, or Matthew, afterwards one of Chriſt's diſciples; and alſo in Jewiſh writings, mention is made, as of מוכס נכרי, a ſtranger, or a Gentile publican[d], ſo likewiſe of מוכס ישראל, an Iſraelite publican[e]; and ſuch an one was Zaccheus, as follows: which was chief among the publicans; the head of them in that place, to whom the reſt brought the tax, tribute, or toll; he was the receiver-general of the tax: at the toll-booths, at bridges, for peoples going over the water, there was, מוכס גדול, the greater publican, and מוכס קטן, the leſſer publican[f], who was deputy to the other. What ſort of tax Zaccheus was concerned in collecting, is not certain; however, he was a principal man in this employ, and had got great riches by it. And he was was rich; was a perſon of figure among the publicans, and of ſubſtance, which he had gained in his poſt. And tho' the inſtances of rich men being called by grace, are few, yet there have been ſome; and the rather this circumſtance is mentioned, becauſe it had been obſerved in the preceding chapter, how difficult, but not impoſſible, as this inſtance proves, it was for rich men to enter into the kingdom of God.

Ver. 3. And he ſought to ſee Jeſus who he was, &c.] What ſort of a perſon he was for complexion, ſtature, and age: having heard much of him, he was very deſirous of indulging his curioſity with a ſight of him; having, as yet, nothing elſe that induced him to deſire to ſee him: his deſire to ſee Jeſus was not of the ſame kind with the kings and prophets, Matt. xiii. 16. but rather like that of Herod, Luke xxiii. 8. and could not for the preſs; the multitude of people that were flocking to meet Jeſus, or who came before him, or were about him; for one part of the multitude went before him, and the other followed after him; ſo that he was in the croud, and therefore could not eaſily be ſeen; becauſe he was little of ſtature. The Syriac and Perſic verſions read, becauſe Zaccheus was little of ſtature, leſt it ſhould be thought that this is ſaid of Jeſus; for the reaſon why Zaccheus could not ſee him for the croud, was not becauſe Chriſt was little of ſtature, and ſo was hid among them, but becauſe Zaccheus was little of ſtature, and could not ſee over their heads.

Ver. 4. And he ran before, &c.] Jeſus, and the company that was with him; ſo very deſirous was he of ſeeing him: and climbed up into a ſycomore-tree to ſee him; which ſort of trees were very common about Jericho: hence we read of, קורות של שקמה, beams of ſycomore in Jericho, which thoſe that were ſtrong took up in their arms, and the owners ſtood and devoted them to God [g]; and among the things which the men of Jericho did, this was one, that they permitted the branches of trees devoted to ſacred uſes, and of the charub tree, and of the ſycomore, to be cut down and uſed [h]. This ſort of trees uſed to grow in plains and valleys, as appears from ſome paſſages of ſcripture, 1 Kings x. 27. 2 Chron. ix. 27. and from Jewiſh writings [i]; and certain it is, that Jericho was in ſuch a ſituation. Joſephus [k] ſays, it was ſeated in a plain; and Strabo ſays [l], that Jericho is a plain ſurrounded with mountains; to which agrees the account that [m] Juſtin gives of it. There is a valley, which is incloſed by mountains on all ſides, as with a wall, like a caſtle; the ſpace of the place is two hundred acres, and it is called Jericho. Hence we read of the plains and valley of Jericho in ſcripture, Deut. xxxiv. 3. 2 Kings xxv. 5. ſo that it is very probable ſycomore-trees grew there in great plenty; tho' the place was more famous for palm-trees: hence it is called the city of the palm-trees, Deut. xxxiv. 3. Judg. iii. 13. which the Targumiſt, in both places, interprets, the city of Jericho: to which agree the accounts given of it by Pliny [n], Strabo [o], and Juſtin [p], who all affirm, that it abounded with palm-trees; and the latter ſays alſo with balſam-trees, from the ſweet ſmell of which it might have its name: ſo the Jews ſay [q], the ointment of balſam is called the ointment of our land, becauſe it grows in Jericho, and becauſe of the ſmell of it, it is called Jericho; tho' ſome think it has its name from the plain, being in the form of a half-moon; the moon, in the Hebrew language, being called ירח [r]. This tree ſeems to have been without the city: and indeed, according to the Jewiſh canon, it ought to be, which runs thus [s]; "they ſet a tree at a diſtance from a city, "twenty and five cubits, but a charub tree, and "ſycomore, fifty cubits." The reaſon of the greater diſtance of the latter is, as one of their commentators ſays [t], becauſe their branches were large; and this is the reaſon why Zaccheus went up into one of theſe trees, becauſe it was large and able to bear him, and tall, from whence he could have a full view of Chriſt: for he was to paſs that way; or rather, paſs by that; for the word way is not in the text; and the ſenſe is, he was to paſs by that tree; or under it, as the Arabic verſion renders it. The tree ſtood by the road-ſide, in which Jeſus came, for which reaſon Zaccheus made choice of it, as for his purpoſe.

Ver. 5. And when Jeſus came to the place, &c.] Where the tree ſtood, in which Zaccheus was. Chriſt knows where his people are, and where to find them, where they commonly dwell, or where at any time they are, he being God omniſcient; beſides, the bounds of their habitations are fixed by the determination and appointment of God, and were foreknown by Chriſt, who, before the world began, was rejoicing in the habitable part of his earth, where he knew his ſaints would dwell, who are the ſons of men, with whom his delights were; and he knows where they are, when the time is come to call them: he knew Zaccheus was in the ſycomore-tree, as he ſaw Nathanael under the fig-tree, before Philip called him, John i. 48. and Chriſt comes to the very place where his people are, either in perſon, as here; and ſo he came to Galilee, and to the ſea there, and walked by it, and on the very ſpot, where he knew he ſhould meet with Peter, and Andrew, and James, and John, whom he called to follow him, Matt. iv. 13, 18, 21. He came to his own city Capernaum, and to the place of receipt of cuſtom near unto it, where Matthew was, and called him, Matt. ix. 1, 9. and he came to Samaria, and to Jacob's well, where he knew the woman of Samaria would be at ſuch a time, in order to call her: or, tho' he comes not in perſon to others, where they are, yet by his word, and by his Spirit; and he comes to them before they come to him; and is found of them, and finds them, who ſought him not; and is made manifeſt to them, who aſked not for him; and in this he acts the part of the good ſhepherd, that leaves the ninety-nine in the wilderneſs, and goes after that which is loſt till he finds it; and agreeable to his character as a Saviour, and to the end of his coming into the world, which was to call ſinners to repentance, and to ſeek, and ſave that which is loſt, ver. 10. He looked up and ſaw him; he knew him, he being one of thoſe the Father had given to him, and he had loved and undertook for, and was come into the world to ſeek, and to ſave, and now, at this time, was come hither to call by his grace. He had ſeen him before in the glaſs of his father's purpoſes and decrees, he being choſen in him to grace and glory, and being a veſſel of mercy, afore prepared for glory: he had ſeen him when he was brought into the bond of the covenant; and paſſed under the rod of him, that telleth all the covenant ones, as they were put into it, and given to him the mediator of it: he had ſeen him among them that were loſt in Adam, whom he came to recover out of the ruins of their fall in him; and now he ſaw him in his ſtate of nature and unregeneracy; he ſaw him in his blood, and ſaid unto him, live: this look was a look of love, grace, and mercy; he looked upon him, and loved him, and was gracious to him, and had compaſſion on him; and it was a diſtinguiſhing look, he looked on him, and not on others. There was a great croud both before and behind him, and all about him; but he looked not on theſe, but he looked up to Zaccheus. And he ſaid unto him, Zaccheus; he knew him, and could call him by his name, as he did Saul, when he called him, and revealed himſelf to him. His name was written in the lamb's book of life, and ſo muſt be known to Chriſt, who was preſent at the making of that book, and was concerned in ſetting down the names in it, and has it in his keeping: he was one of the ſheep the father had given him, he came to lay down his life for, and of whom he had ſuch perfect knowledge, as to call them by name, as he does all the choſen and redeemed ones; ſee Iſ. xliii. 1. John x. 3. It muſt be very ſurprizing to Zaccheus to hear Chriſt call him by his name, who was an utter ſtranger to him, and whom he had never ſeen before; and it is a very conſiderable inſtance of the omniſcience of Chriſt, as well of his great condeſcenſion and affectionate regard he has to his own, and the familiar way in which he uſes them. Make haſte, and come down; from the tree. The dangerous eſtate and condition of a ſinner requires haſte; it is like that of Lot in Sodom, when it was juſt going to be deſtroyed; and like that of the manſlayer, when purſued by the avenger of blood; both whom it became to eſcape for their lives, and flee for refuge as faſt as they could: and ſo it became Zaccheus to come down with all ſpeed to Chriſt, who was come hither to call and ſave him; and the enjoyment of Chriſt, and his grace, calls for haſte; ſee John xi. 28, 29. Such who come to Chriſt muſt quit all their exalted thoughts of themſelves, of their riches, fulneſs, and ſelf-ſufficiency, and come to him as poor and needy, for ſuch only he fills with his good things; and of their health and ſoundneſs, and come to him the great phyſician, as ſick and diſeaſed; and of their purity and goodneſs, holineſs and righteouſneſs, and come to him as ſinners: but it muſt be mighty grace to caſt down imaginations, and high things, that exalt themſelves againſt Chriſt, and the knowledge of him, and to humble a proud ſinner, and bring him to the feet of Jeſus. For this day I muſt abide at thy houſe; for a little while; not ſo much for the ſake of refreſhment for himſelf, and his diſciples, as for Zaccheus's good; to make known the great ſalvation to him, and to beſtow his grace upon him, and converſe with him in a ſpiritual way.

Ver. 6. And he made haſte, &c.] Such power went along with the words of Chriſt, that they immediately reached his heart, awakened his conſcience, affected his mind, and drew his ſoul to Chriſt, and knit him to him, that he made all imaginable haſte to be with him. So ſouls ſenſible of their dangerous ſtate and condition by nature, and apprehenſive of impending ruin and deſtruction, and having ſome intimation of ſafety and happineſs in Chriſt, and being filled with love to him, and a liking of him, flee with all haſte to him for refuge, for righteouſneſs, peace, pardon, life, and ſalvation: and came down; from the tree he had climbed, merely to indulge his curioſity, little thinking that he ſhould be called by name by him; that he ſhould have him a gueſt at his houſe, and have ſuch a knowledge of him, and familiar acquaintance with him: ſo ſouls, when called by Chriſt, and made ſenſible of their need of him, and the worth there is in him, quit their former poſt and place, part with their carnal luſts and ſinful companions, and renounce their own righteouſneſs and works, and come as ſinners, humble and lowly, and venture upon Chriſt: and received him joyfully; not only into his houſe, but into his arms and heart: Chriſt was a welcome gueſt to him, as he is to every ſenſible ſinner, who by faith receives him, as the Father's free gift; as the alone Saviour and Redeemer; as the great Mediator, in all his offices, of prophet, prieſt, and king; and in every relation and character he bears; and embraces his doctrines, and ſubmits to his ordinances, and that with the greateſt joy; as there is reaſon for it, ſince with him, he receives the free and full forgiveneſs of his ſins, a juſtifying righteouſneſs, an abundance of grace, and a right unto, and meetneſs for heaven.

Ver. 7. And when they ſaw it, &c.] The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions read, when they all ſaw this; that is, as the Perſic verſion rather paraphraſing than tranſlating, ſays, the men and the multitude that were with him; the phariſaical ſort, the prieſts and Levites, of which there were great numbers in Jericho; ſee the note on ch. x. 31. They all murmured; as the Scribes and Phariſees did, at his eating with publicans and ſinners, ch. xv. 2. Saying, that he was gone to be gueſt with a man that is a ſinner; a notorious one, an abandoned profligate creature; one of the worſt of ſinners, as being a publican, and the chief of them; who had amaſſed vaſt riches to himſelf, by extortion and oppreſſion; and they thought it was not agreeable to the character of an holy man, and a venerable prophet, which Chriſt bore, to go into ſuch a man's houſe, eat at his table, and have familiar converſation with him; ſee Matt. ix. 10.

Ver. 8. And Zaccheus ſtood, &c.] Before Chriſt, in reſpect to him, and reverence of him; and in the preſence of others, to make a public confeſſion before them, and that they might all hear it, when come to his own houſe: and ſaid unto the Lord; that is, to Jeſus, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions, and ſome copies read; he addreſſed himſelf to Chriſt, and made his confeſſion to him, as the Iſraelite, when he brought the baſket of the firſtfruits to the prieſt, confeſſed before the Lord his God, Deut. xxvi. 5. And the rather Zaccheus directed his ſpeech to Chriſt, being, as he was now convinced, the diſcerner of the thoughts, and intents of the heart; who knew the genuineneſs of his repentance, that it was hearty and real; and the ſincerity of his expreſſions and reſolutions, and upon what principles he acted, and propoſed to do as follows: behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give unto the poor; not to make ſatisfaction for the ſins he had committed, but to teſtify his ſenſe of them, and his repentance for them, and as willing to do good with what he had gotten; which ſhows, that the diſpoſition of his mind was altered, and of a covetous oppreſſor, he was become tender, kind, and liberal. According to an order made by the Jews in Uſha, a man might not give away more than a fifth part of his eſtate, unleſs in ſome extraordinary caſes[n]; and we read of one, that gave a third part of his goods to the poor[w]; and of another, that gave, as here, half of his mammon, or wealth [x]; and another, half of his food to the poor [y]; and of another, that gave away all his goods to them [z]; ſee 1 Cor. xiii. 3. to give a tenth part, was reckoned a medium [a]: and if I have taken any thing from any man by falſe accuſation; or by extorting any thing from him on any pretence, by making an unjuſt demand upon him; or in any oppreſſive way, by defrauding and tricking, and by doing him any injury, in any form or manner: I reſtore him fourfold; the ſame that was done in caſe of ſheep ſtealing, Exod. xxii. 1. but in ſuch a caſe as this, the law only required the principal, with the fifth part added to it; ſee Levit. vi. 5. Numb. v. 7. but Zaccheus propoſes as much, as in the caſe of theft, and which was rarely uſed. The Jews [b] ſay, "that the manner of paying double, was "more uſed than the manner of paying fourfold, "or fivefold; for the manner of paying double "was uſed, both in things animate and inanimate; "but the manner of paying fourfold and fivefold, "was uſed but with reſpect to an ox, and a ſheep "only." This was done by Zaccheus, to ſhew the truth and reality of his repentance; for with that nation, "the repentance of ſhepherds, and of collectors, and of publicans, is ſaid [c] to be very "difficult:" the reaſon given by the Gloſs is, becauſe they rob many, and don't know who to return to.

Ver. 9. And Jeſus ſaid unto him, &c.] The Perſic verſion reads, Jeſus ſaid to the multitude, and to his diſciples; to which well enough agree the following words: this day is ſalvation come to this houſe; to the maſter of it, and it may be to others in it; the Arabic verſion reads, to the inhabitants of this houſe. The Perſic verſion reads, great ſalvation; by which may be meant, the Goſpel, as in Heb. ii. 3. ſo called, becauſe it brings the account of ſalvation by Chriſt, which is not diſcoverable by the light of nature, nor made known by the law of Moſes; but the Goſpel publiſhes and proclaims it; the miniſters of it, ſhew unto men the way of ſalvation, and direct them, and encourage to go to Chriſt for it; likewiſe the Goſpel is the means of bringing near this ſalvation, and of applying it to them; and when it comes with the demonſtration of the Spirit, it is the power of God unto ſalvation: and this might be truly ſaid to come to Zaccheus's houſe; inaſmuch as Chriſt the great preacher of it, and by whom it firſt began to be ſpoken, and was ſpoken by him, as it never was by any one beſides, was now in his houſe, preaching it; the ſum and ſubſtance of which, lies in the words delivered by him in the following verſe; and the Goſpel came to him to purpoſe, and was effectual: ſometimes it comes to a people, city, town, or family, and it is rejected, and becomes of no effect; but here it came to Zaccheus, and into him; and wrought effectually in him, as his words in the preceding verſe declare: moreover, the bleſſing of ſalvation itſelf, which is wrought out by Chriſt, and publiſhed in the Goſpel, was brought home to him; he was not only made ſenſible that he ſtood in need of ſalvation, but this was brought near unto him, and ſet before him, and applied to him; he had not only hopes of it, but faith of intereſt in it; it was made known unto him, that Chriſt was his ſalvation; and it was revealed and applied to the reſt of the family, as well as to him: ſometimes the Lord takes one of a city, and two of a family; and ſometimes whole families, as Lydia's and the jailor's, and here Zaccheus's, as ſeems probable; for by his houſe may be meant, his family: though this may be underſtood of Chriſt, the author of ſalvation; who came into his houſe in a literal ſenſe, as well as in a ſpiritual ſenſe; and was made known to Zaccheus, as his Saviour and Redeemer. The Alexandrian copy reads, in this houſe: it follows, foraſmuch as he alſo is the ſon of Abraham. Theſe words are to be conſidered, either as a reaſon, or evidence, of ſalvation being come to his houſe; and therefore can't be underſtood of him as a ſon of Abraham, by natural deſcent: he was indeed a Jew, as appears by his name, and by his knowledge of the Jewiſh law, concerning reſtoration; and which may be confirmed by the ſilence of the Phariſees, who murmured at Chriſt's going along with him; who, had he been a Gentile, would not have failed to have mentioned it; but then, though this might be a reaſon juſtifying Chriſt in going to his houſe, who did not exceed the bounds of his office, as the miniſter of the circumciſion, and as ſent, and that only to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael; yet this could be no reaſon of ſpiritual ſalvation coming to him, which was not confined to Abraham's natural ſeed, nor was it neceſſary to them, more than others, and much leſs general; and indeed, very few of them then in being, partook of it; for though ſalvation was of them, and Chriſt the Saviour came unto them, yet they rejected him, and died in their ſins: nor is this a reaſon of ſalvation coming to his family; for though by virtue of the covenant of circumciſion made with Abraham and his natural ſeed, there were many outward privileges beſtowed upon them, yet ſpiritual ſalvation was not inſured by it to them; and with regard to that, natural deſcent from Abraham, and circumciſion, were of no avail: but this is to be underſtood of him, as a ſon of Abraham in a ſpiritual ſenſe, he being now a believer in Chriſt, and ſo one that walked in the ſteps of the faith of Abraham; and this was an evidence of his intereſt in ſalvation by Chriſt, the bleſſing with which he was bleſſed, with faithful Abraham: and alſo his being a ſon of Abraham, which is no other than to be a child of the promiſe, Rom. ix. 8. or in other words, one of God's elect, a choſen veſſel of ſalvation, was a reaſon why Chriſt, the author of ſalvation, came to him, why the Goſpel of ſalvation was made known to him, and why the bleſſing of ſalvation was applied to him. The Jews uſe this phraſe, not only of one whoſe natural deſcent is from Abraham, but whoſe knowledge in divine things is conſiderable: ſo when R. Eliezer ben Arach taught the Mercava, (the myſtery of Ezekiel's viſions,) "R. Jochanan ben Zaccai, ſtood and "kiſſed his head, and ſaid, bleſſed art thou, O "God of Iſrael, that has given, בן לאברהם, "a ſon to Abraham, who has knowledge to under- "ſtand, and to ſearch out, and to explain the "work of Mercava [d]." For Abraham is ſaid [e] to be a father in this ſort of knowledge, for which reaſon, this man was genealogized a ſon of Abraham.

Ver. 10. For the Son of man, &c.] Meaning himſelf, who was truly man, and the Meſſiah, and which was one of his names in the Old Teſtament: is come; from heaven, into this world, being ſent by the Father, and with the full conſent and goodwill of his own: to ſeek and ſave that which was loſt; as all his elect were in Adam, and by their own actual tranſgreſſions; and are conſidered as ſuch, whilſt in a ſtate of unregeneracy: and particularly the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael are meant, one of which Zacheus was; and ſo the words are a reaſon of Chriſt's looking him up, and calling him by his grace, and making a diſcovery of himſelf, and an application of ſalvation to him; ſee Matt. xviii. 11.

Ver. 11. And as they heard theſe things, &c.] What Zaccheus ſaid to Chriſt, and what Chriſt ſaid to Zaccheus; particularly, that ſalvation, or the Saviour was then come to his houſe, and that he was come to ſave loſt perſons: he added, and ſpake a parable; that is, as the Syriac verſion renders it, he added a parable to the word, or to what he had ſaid: becauſe he was nigh to Jeruſalem; within ten parſa's, or large miles; for at ſuch a diſtance was Jeruſalem from Jericho [f], where Chriſt now was, according to the Jewiſh writers; but according to Joſephus [g], it was a hundred and fifty furlongs, which muſt be eighteen or twenty miles, and this may be ſaid to be nigh; and not long after this, we hear of Chriſt at the mount of Olives, which was about a mile from Jeruſalem, ver. 29. And becauſe they thought that the kingdom of God ſhould immediately appear; or be revealed, or made manifeſt: the phraſe is Jewiſh; ſo Cant. ii. 12. the time of the ſinging of birds is come, is interpreted [h], the time that the kingdom of heaven, שתגלה, ſhall be revealed, is come: and elſewhere [i], "ſay to the cities of "the houſe of Judah, אתגליאת מלכותא דאלהכון, "the kingdom of your God is revealed;" meaning in both places, as here, the kingdom of the Meſſiah: what induced the diſciples of Chriſt, or the multitude, or both, to imagine that the temporal kingdom of the Meſſiah, which they were expecting, would quickly be ſet up, might be what he had ſaid to Zaccheus, that ſalvation was that day come to his houſe, he being a ſon of Abraham; which they underſtanding of a temporal ſalvation, took it as a hint, that the outward proſperity of the ſeed of Abraham was at hand; as alſo what he had ſaid, concerning his coming to ſeek and ſave that which is loſt; which they were willing to interpret, of the civil ſtate of Judea, and that he was come to reſtore its loſt liberties and privileges; and partly, becauſe he was now not a great way from Jeruſalem, and was on his journey thither, in order to make his entrance in a very public manner; which was the metropolis of their nation, and the ancient ſeat of their kings, David, Solomon, and others: now the ſcope and deſign of the following parable, is to refute the notion of a temporal kingdom, and its near approach; by ſhewing, that his kingdom lay a great way off, and was not of this world; and that his ſervants and diſciples, had a great deal of buſineſs to tranſact for him, and muſt not think of pomp and grandeur, but of labour and ſervice; and that the Jews were ſo far from receiving any advantages by his kingdom, that they would not ſubmit to his government, and would be treated as enemies, and utterly deſtroyed; even their nation, city, and temple.

Ver. 12. He ſaid therefore, &c.] The following parable, with the abovesaid deſign and view: a certain nobleman; the ſon of a great family, as the Syriac verſion renders it; of noble deſcent, of an illuſtrious extract; by whom is meant Jeſus Chriſt, who was a man, as he agreed to be, and was propheſied of as ſuch; and who frequently appeared in an human form before his incarnation; and was now actually become man, though not a mere man; and he may truly be ſaid to be noble; not only as the word may ſignify, as it ſometimes does, a perſon of great authority and power, and of great generoſity and goodneſs, but one of a noble birth; for Chriſt, as man, deſcended from the kings of the houſe of Judah, and was the ſon of David; and from the Jewiſh fathers and anceſtors of the greateſt renown, as Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob; and he may be ſo called as man, becauſe of the union of the human nature to the Son of God; or becauſe of his divine relation, as the Son of God: this illuſtrious perſon, went into a far country; by which, heaven is meant; ſo called, not only becauſe of its diſtance from the earth, but in compariſon of the earth, as a place of pilgrimage; and becauſe that it is out of ſight, and the views which are had of it, are very diſtant ones: hither Chriſt went at his aſcenſion; he came from heaven at his incarnation, by the aſſumption of human nature; he ſtaid here a while, till he had done his work he came about, and then went up to heaven; where he is received, and from whence he is expected again: the end of his going there is, to receive for himſelf a kingdom; by which is intended, not the kingdom of nature and providence; for that he had, and did not receive from another; it was his of right, and by nature; nor the kingdom of grace, ſet up in the hearts of his people, and which was already within many of them; nor the kingdom of glory, prepared for them from the foundation of the world; though into this he entered at his aſcenſion, and took poſſeſſion of it for himſelf and them: but a more viſible diſplay of his mediatorial kingdom, he received from his Father; and which, upon his aſcenſion, became more manifeſt, by the diſpoſſeſſing of ſatan, and caſting him out of the Gentile world; by converting large numbers of his people, both among Jews and Gentiles; and by ruling in their hearts, ſubduing their enemies, and protecting and defending them; and by thus reigning till he has gathered them all in, either in Judea, or in the whole world, and then he'll come again: and return; either to deſtroy the Jews; the doing of which fully proved, he had received his kingdom, was veſted with power and authority, and was made, or declared Lord and Chriſt; or at the end of the world, to judge both quick and dead: and this is ſaid, to ſhow that his perſonal glorious kingdom on earth, or his kingdom in its greateſt glory here, will not be till he comes a ſecond time; and to engage diligence in his ſervants in the mean while; and to keep up the faith, hope, and expectation of his coming again.

Ver. 13. And he called his ten ſervants, &c.] By whom are meant, not all mankind; for though theſe are all his ſervants of right, yet not in fact; nor the elect of God, who are called by grace; for though theſe are the ſervants of Chriſt, and are peculiarly his, yet all that received the pound were not ſuch, for one of them was a wicked man; but the miniſters of the Goſpel, who are eminently and in a ſpecial manner, the ſervants of the moſt high God: but as for the number ten, this can't regard the apoſtles, for they were twelve; and though they are ſometimes called the eleven, after the apoſtacy and death of Judas, yet not the ten; and beſides, there was another choſe in his room; but this number being a large and perfect one, a round number, it is ſometimes made uſe of as a certain number, for an uncertain one; ſee Matt. xxv. 1. The call of theſe by their Lord, is not to be underſtood of the call of them by his grace, but of a call of them to the office and work of the miniſtry: and delivered them ten pounds; every one a pound: the, מנה, Maneh, or pound of the Hebrews, if of gold, which contained an hundred drachmas, was of the value of our money, ſeventy-five pound; if of ſilver, the old Maneh, or pound, which contained ſixty ſhekels, Ezek. xlv. 12. amounted to ſeven pound ten ſhillings; but the Maneh, or pound, mentioned in the Miſna [k], and which was in uſe in our Lord's time, contained an hundred pence, and was of the value of our money, three pound two ſhillings and ſixpence: and by theſe pounds are deſigned, not ſpecial grace; for they intend not any thing wrought in theſe ſervants, but ſomething delivered to them, and what might be taken away again, which can't be ſaid of ſpecial grace; and beſides, it is certain, that one of theſe ſervants that had the pound, was deſtitute of that: but gifts are meant, and theſe not merely natural, or the gifts of providence, as health, riches, wiſdom, &c. nor only the outward means of grace, as the word and ordinances, but miniſterial gifts, which are the greateſt in the church, and are therefore ſignified by pounds; and are what may be improved or neglected, and be loſt or taken away; and for which thoſe that have them, are accountable: but though each of theſe ſervants are repreſented, as having every man a pound delivered to him, this muſt not be underſtood, as if the gifts of miniſters were equal and alike, any more than the inequality of their rewards, proves degrees in glory; for which ſometimes this parable is produced: and ſaid unto him, occupy; negotiate, or trade, that is, with the pounds; make uſe of the miniſterial gifts, exerciſe them, lay them out, and trade with them: the miniſtry is a trade and merchandize, to be carried on, not in the name of the miniſters of Chriſt, nor on their own ſtock, nor for themſelves, but for Chriſt, and for the good of ſouls; which ſhows, that they muſt not be ſlothful, but laborious and diligent: till I come; which ſuggeſts the certainty of Chriſt's coming, the continuance of the Goſpel miniſtry to that time; and that there's no reſt nor eaſe for Chriſt's miniſters, but a continued ſeries of labour and ſervice, until then; when, for their encouragement, they ſhall receive their reward.

Ver. 14. But his citizens hated him, &c.] Not thoſe who are fellow-citizens with the ſaints, and of the houſhold of God; whoſe citizenſhip is in heaven, and who are ſeeking the better country, and heavenly city; but the Jews, who were his own people and nation, among whom he was born, to whom he was ſent and came, and had an undoubted right to the government of them: theſe hated him with a mortal hatred, as appeared by their traducing his perſon in the moſt opprobrious manner; vilifying his doctrine as falſe; aſcribing his miracles to a diabolical influence; and by perſecuting his diſciples and followers: and ſent a meſſage after him; this ſeems to have reſpect to their outrage againſt the diſciples of Chriſt, after his aſcenſion; when they not only mocked them, as on the day of Pentecoſt, but laid hold on them, and put them in hold, even in the common priſon, and perſecuted them from place to place; and ſo virtually, ſaying, we will not have this man to reign over us: they would neither receive his Goſpel, nor ſubmit to his ordinances; but put them away from them, and judged themſelves unworthy of everlaſting life: and this is the language of every graceleſs ſoul; and is to be obſerved in their oppoſition to, and neglect of the truths of Chriſt, and his divine inſtitutions; which are a yoke they don't care to take upon them, though ſo mild and eaſy, and are cords which they caſt away from them.

Ver. 15. And it came to paſs that when he was returned, &c.] Which return was either in power to Jeruſalem, in the deſtruction of that city; or which will be in perſon to this earth, at the end of the world; and will be local and viſible, and in great glory, attended with the holy angels, and with all the ſaints: the time is fixed and certain, though unknown, and will be ſudden and unexpected; but will not be till after the Goſpel has had a general ſpread all over the world, and the Jews are converted, and the fullneſs of the Gentiles brought in, and then will Chriſt come: having received the kingdom; not only having been ſet down at the right hand of God, and crowned with glory and honour, and received gifts for men, which he beſtowed on them; and which proved him to be Lord and Chriſt; all which was done at his aſcenſion, after which his kingdom came, or he returned in power and glory, to take vengeance on the Jews; but alſo having received the kingdom of glory for all his ſaints, and particularly having received the kingdom of prieſts, or all the elect of God, theſe being all called by grace, and gathered to him, as they will every one of them before his ſecond coming; when this kingdom will be delivered to the Father compleat and perfect; and this will be a reckoning time, as follows; then he commanded thoſe ſervants to be called, to whom he had given the money. The ſervants are the miniſters of the word, who muſt all appear before the judgment ſeat of Chriſt; and give an account of themſelves to God, the judge of all; and of their gifts and talents, and miniſtrations, and the ſouls under their care: the perſons who are commanded to call them, are the angels, and who ſhall be employed in gathering all the elect together; the thing that will be enquired about, and muſt be accounted for, is the money given them; that is, the Goſpel they are entruſted with, and the gifts to preach it beſtowed on them: the end of this ſummons is, that he might know how much every man had gained by trading; not but that Chriſt, who is the omniſcient God, the ſearcher of the heart, and a diſcerner of the thoughts and intents of it, knows full well the uſe that is made of every man's gift, and the benefits and advantages ariſing from it, both for his own glory, and the good of ſouls; but theſe ſummons will be given, this account taken, and enquiry made, that theſe things which are known to him, might be made manifeſt to all, and every man have praiſe of God; whoſe will it is that he ſhould have it, and ſloth and negligence be juſtly puniſhed.

Ver. 16. Then came the firſt, &c.] Who were ſet in the firſt place in the church, the apoſtles of Chriſt, and who had the greateſt gifts, and laboured more abundantly, and were eminently uſeful; ſuch an one was the apoſtle Paul: ſaying, Lord; acknowledging the ſovereignty and dominion of Chriſt over them, owning they were accountable to him, and that he had a right to enquire, what uſe they had made of their gifts, and what advantages theſe had produced; thy pound hath gained ten pounds; it had been increaſed tenfold; or it has turned to a tenfold account, in the converſion of ſinners, in the edification of the ſaints, and in the advancement of the kingdom, and intereſt of Chriſt. [k] Peah, c. 8. §. 5. & Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.

Chriſt's; he calls them, thy pound; and therefore did not glory in them as his own attainments, or, as if he had received them not; and aſcribes the great increaſe not to himſelf, but to the pound itſelf; to the gifts of Chriſt, as they were his, and as uſed by his grace and ſtrength, and as bleſſed, and owned by him, to theſe purpoſes.

Ver. 17. And he ſaid unto him, well, thou good ſervant, &c.] Signifying he had well done, and had approved himſelf to be an honeſt, diligent, and laborious ſervant; who, having the grace of God, which made him a good man, and gifts and abilities, which made him a good miniſter of Chriſt, he made a good uſe of them, freely communicated the good things of the Goſpel, and being employed in a good work, he performed it well: becauſe thou haſt been faithful in a very little; had preached the pure Goſpel of Chriſt, and the whole of it, and ſought not to pleaſe men, but the Lord only; not his own glory, but Chriſt's; and abode by him, and his intereſt, notwithſtanding all reproaches and perſecutions, and ſo acted a faithful part to Chriſt: in a very little; not that the Goſpel is in itſelf little, or of ſmall account; 'tis a treaſure in earthen veſſels; and contains the unſearchable riches of Chriſt: nor are gifts to preach it little things; they are inſtances of rich and amazing grace; but they are little, or rather, the uſe and exerciſe of them are little, in compariſon of the glory and happineſs ſuch faithful ſervants ſhall enjoy: from whence it appears, that ſince there is no proportion between what they do, and what they ſhall have, that therefore it is not of merit, but of grace; and which is expreſſed in the following clauſe: have thou authority over ten cities; which is to be underſtood, not in a literal ſenſe, as if the apoſtles ſhould have the juriſdiction over ſo many cities, or churches in ſo many cities among the Gentiles, after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, which were planted by their means and miniſtry; for nothing of this kind appears in the word of God: and much leſs after the ſecond coming of Chriſt, ſhall faithful miniſters of the word have power over ſo many cities, literally taken; for both in the kingdom-ſtate and in the ultimate glory, there will be but one beloved city, the holy city, the new Jeruſalem: nor is any thing in particular, in a metaphorical ſenſe, intended; only in general, that the kingdom, and dominion, and the greatneſs of it, will be given unto them; and they ſhall reign with Chriſt on earth a thouſand years; and ſhall alſo have a crown of glory, life, and righteouſneſs beſtowed on them, and ſhall ſit on the throne with Chriſt; and beſides all this, the perſons they have been inſtrumental to, will be their joy, and crown of rejoicing. A learned writer [l] explains theſe ten cities, by the ten horns of the dragon, and beaſt in Rev. xii. 3. and xiii. 1. by which are meant ten kings, or kingdoms, Rev. xvii. 12. Dan. vii. 24. Theſe indeed will be overcome by Chriſt, and they that are with him, and will hate the Romiſh antichriſt, and deſtroy him; ſo that it ſeems, there will be revolutions in theſe kingdoms; and large converſions to the faith of Chriſt, which ſeems to be what this writer means by authority over them.

Ver. 18. And the ſecond came, &c.] Who was next, though leſs uſeful, yet equally diligent and active: ſaying, Lord; acknowledging alſo the power and authority of Chriſt over him: thy pound hath gained five pounds; is increaſed fivefold, or is turned to a fivefold account, to the intereſt of Chriſt, and good of immortal ſouls: the uſefulneſs of the miniſters of the Goſpel is not alike; as they have gifts different one from another, ſo their improvements are different, and their labours, tho' faithful, don't turn to the ſame account.

Ver. 19. And he ſaid likewiſe to him, &c.] He commended him as a good and faithful ſervant, tho' this is not expreſſed; and added, be thou alſo over five cities; which does not denote any inequality of glory in Chriſt's miniſters, who will all ſhine as the firmament, and as the ſtars for ever and ever; at leaſt, there will be no inequality in the ultimate ſtate of happineſs, when all the ſaints ſhall ſhine as the ſun in the kingdom of their father, whatever there may be in the kingdom-ſtate, or in Chriſt's perſonal reign with his ſaints on earth. The above learned writer would have this paſſage compared with Iſ. xix. 18.

Ver. 20. And another came, &c.] Who was one of the ſervants; had a gift, but did not uſe, and improve it, nor did it turn to any account: ſaying, Lord; owning alſo the lordſhip and dominion of Chriſt, as all will confeſs at the laſt day, even thoſe who have no intereſt in him, and cannot call him their Lord: behold, here is thy pound; he owns his gifts were the Lord's, and that he had received them from him, and now returns them: which I have kept; he had kept that which was committed to him, and that even till his Lord came; he had not loſt it, tho' it was not increaſed, or was of any advantage to Chriſt, or the ſouls of men, it being neglected by him; for it was laid up in a napkin: the Greek word, here uſed for a napkin, is adopted by the Jews into their language, and is uſed for a veil, and for a linnen cloth: this puts me in mind of what the Jews call, קנין סודר, poſſeſſion by a napkin, or linnen cloth: their cuſtom is this; when they buy, or ſell any thing, to uſe a piece of cloth they call ſudar, the word in the text, which the contractors lay hold upon, whereby they ratifie and confirm the bargain [m]: but this man made no uſe of his ſudar, or napkin, in buying and ſelling; he traded not at all; he wrapped up his money in it, and both lay uſeleſs; his gift lay dormant and unexerciſed, which was given him to profit withal.

Ver. 21. For I feared thee, &c.] Not with a right fear, with a fear of his goodneſs, who had beſtowed ſuch an excellent gift on him; for this would have taught him to have departed from evil, and have put him on doing his maſter's will, and making uſe of his gift to his glory: his fear was not of the right kind, and was ill-grounded, as appears by what follows: becauſe thou art an auſtere man; cruel and uncompaſſionate to his ſervants and hard to be pleaſed; than which nothing is more falſe, ſince it is evident, that Chriſt is compaſſionate both to the bodies and ſouls of men; is a merciful high-prieſt, and is one that has compaſſion on the ignorant, and them that are out of the way, and cannot but be touched with the feeling of his peoples infirmities; and is mild and gentle in his whole deportment, and in all his adminiſtrations: thou takeſt up that thou layeſt not down, and reapeſt that thou didſt not ſow; ſuggeſting, that he was covetous of that which did not belong to him, and withheld what was due to his ſervants, and rigorouſly exacted ſervice that could not be performed; a moſt iniquitous charge, ſince none ſo liberal as he, giving gifts, grace and glory, freely; impoſing no grievous commands on men; his yoke being eaſy, and his burden light; never ſending a man to a warfare at his own charge; but always giving grace and ſtrength proportionable to the ſervice he calls to, and rewarding his ſervants in a moſt bountiful manner, infinitely beyond their deſerts.

Ver. 22. And he ſaith unto him, &c.] By way of reply to his vile ſlander, and unrighteous charge; out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked ſervant; as he might be juſtly called: he was not only a wicked man, as all men are, even enemies by wicked works, and lie in wickedneſs; and a wicked profeſſor of religion, as there be ſome; but a wicked miniſter, and that not on account of his bad principles, and ſinful life and converſation, but for his ſloth and negligence, and the wrong thoughts he entertained of, and the falſe charges he brought againſt Chriſt; and Chriſt turns his own argument upon him, and by his own words condemns him: thou kneweſt that I was an auſtere man, taking up that I laid not down, and reaping that I did not ſow; not allowing this, but ſuppoſing it was as he ſaid; then Chriſt argues as follows, for his conviction.

Ver. 23. Wherefore then gaveſt not thou my money into the bank, &c.] Or on the table, at which the bankers ſat, and received and delivered money on intereſt. The Complutenſian edition reads, to the tablers, or bankers: had Chriſt been ſuch a perſon as he repreſents him, he ought to have been the more diligent, and made the greater uſe of his gifts, ſince he knew that he would, in a rigid manner, as he ſuggeſts, demand an account of them: that at my coming I might have required mine own with uſury? not that Chriſt approves of uſury in an unlawful way, by extortion, but reproves hereby the ſloth of this man, and expoſes his folly and wickedneſs upon his own principles.

Ver. 24. And he ſaid unto them that ſtood by, &c.] The angels, it may be; though this may not be ſtrictly taken, as if any perſons, angels, or men, will be employed in what follows, only that it will be done, or may be expected: take from him the pound; which ſhews, that it was not ſpecial grace, for that is a good part that ſhall never be taken away, but gifts which may be taken away from men, or they from them: and give it to him that hath ten pounds; not, that ſtrictly ſpeaking, the gifts of ſome men are taken from them and beſtowed on others; but the deſign of the expreſſion is to ſhew, that to diligent and laborious miniſters, there is an increaſe of gifts; their knowledge enlarges, and their light ſhines more and more to the perfect day, and they become more uſeful; and they appear brighter, and more illuſtrious, thro' the ſloth of others, or when compared with indolent, negligent, and uſeleſs miniſters.

Ver. 25. And they ſaid unto him, &c.] The byſtanders; Lord, he hath ten pounds; which they ſay either thro' envy, at his ſuperior gifts, and uſefulneſs; for it is generally the lot of the moſt eminent and uſeful ſervants of Chriſt to be envied by others; or in ſurpriſe, as wondring at the conduct of Chriſt in giving more to ſuch, who had ſo much already. The Ethiopic verſion reads the words by way of interrogation, hath he not ten pounds? is not that enough? why ſhould he have more? This verſe is left out in Beza's moſt ancient copy. However, it is rightly put into a parentheſis in our verſion; for the following verſe is ſtrictly connected with ver. 24. and contains a reaſon of what is there ordered.

Ver. 26. For I ſay unto you, &c.] And it may be depended on as truth, and what will be found matter of fact: that unto every one that hath, ſhall be given; greater and larger gifts, fitting him for greater uſefulneſs: he that has gifts, and makes uſe of them, increaſes in them; they enlarge with their uſe, and become brighter, and he more uſeful. The Vulgate Latin verſion adds, and he ſhall abound; or ſhall have abundance, as in Matt. xxv. 29. and from him that hath not, even that he hath ſhall be taken away from him; that is, that which he ſeemed to have, or thought he had, as in chap. viii. 18. for from him that has really nothing, nothing can be taken away: though the ſenſe may be, that he that does not uſe the talent, or exerciſe the gift beſtowed on him, but lays it up in a napkin, which is all one as if he had it not, even the gift itſelf ſhall be taken away from him; and as others receive no benefit by it, he ſhall receive no honour from it; ſee the notes on Matt. xiii. 12. and xxv. 29.

Ver. 27. But thoſe mine enemies, &c.] Meaning particularly the Jews, who were enemies to the perſon of Chriſt, and hated and rejected him, as the king Meſſiah; and rebelled againſt him, and would not ſubmit to his government; and were enemies to his people, and were exceeding mad againſt them, and perſecuted them; and to his Goſpel, and the diſtinguiſhing truths of it, and to his ordinances, which they rejected againſt themſelves: which would not that I ſhould reign over them; ſee ver. 14. bring hither, and ſlay them before me; which had its accompliſhment in the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, when multitudes of them were ſlain with the ſword, both with their own, and with their enemies; and to this the parable has a ſpecial reſpect, and of which Chriſt more largely diſcourſes in this chapter; ſee ver. 41, 42, 43, 44. though it is true of all natural men, that they are enemies to Chriſt; and ſo of all negligent and ſlothful profeſſors, and miniſters of the word, who, when Chriſt ſhall come a ſecond time, of which his coming to deſtroy the Jewiſh nation was an emblem and pledge, will be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction by him; and then all other enemies will be ſlain and deſtroyed, ſin, ſatan, the world, and death: of the firſt of theſe the Jews ſay [a] "in the time to come the holy, bleſſed God, "will bring forth the evil imagination (or corruption of nature), ושוחטו, and ſlay it before the "righteous, and the wicked."

Ver. 28. And when he had thus ſpoken, &c.] When he had delivered the above parable, in order to remove the prejudices of his diſciples, and the multitude, concerning a temporal kingdom, and to give them true notions of his own kingdom, and the caſe of the Jewiſh nation: he went before; his diſciples: he was the foremoſt of them in the journey; he proceeded at the head of them, with great chearfulneſs and eagerneſs: aſcending up to Jeruſalem; through the lower lands of Judea, to the city of Jeruſalem, which was built on higher ground; where he was to eat his laſt paſſover, and ſuffer, and die, in the room, and ſtead, of his people; and this ſhews how willing, and greatly deſirous he was to finiſh the work of redemption he came about.

Ver. 29. And it came to paſs when he was come nigh, &c.] The other Evangeliſts, Matthew and Mark, add unto Jeruſalem; but this Luke deſigns afterwards, ver. 37. and therefore here means, as is expreſſed, that he was come nigh to Bethphage and Bethany; two tracts of land which reached from mount Olivet to Jeruſalem; ſo that when he was there, he was nigh unto the city: at the mount, called the mount of Olives; or Elaion, as the Ethiopic verſion, which retains the Greek word for it; and which has its name from the great number of olive-trees that grew upon it: he ſent two of his diſciples; their names are not mentioned by any of the Evangeliſts, but it is very probable they were Peter and John; of the places here mentioned, ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 1.

[a] T. Bab. Succa, fol. 52. 1.

Ver. 30. Saying, go ye into the village over-againſt you, &c.] What village this was, is not ſaid by any of the Evangeliſts; it ſeems to be either Bethany, or Nob; and rather the latter, ſince the village of Bethany was fifteen furlongs, or near two miles from Jeruſalem, John xi. 18. and therefore muſt have been paſſed by Chriſt; whereas the tract called Bethany, at the mount of Olives where Chriſt now was, was but a ſabbath-day's journey, or about a mile, Luke xxiv. 50. compared with Acts i. 12. ſee the note on Matt. xxi 2. in the which at your entering ye ſhall find a colt tied: in Matthew it is ſaid, an aſs, and a colt with her; which agrees with the prophecy in Zach. ix. 9. and which, no doubt, was matter of fact: nor does Mark and Luke contradict it, tho' they do not expreſs it: whereon yet never man ſat, looſe him, and bring him hither; for it ſeems that Chriſt ſtaid at the above place, until the diſciples went and fetched it.

Ver. 31. And if any man aſk you, why do ye looſe him? &c.] As our Lord, being God omniſcient, knew this queſtion would be aſked by the owners, and therefore prepares his diſciples with an anſwer to it: thus ſhall ye ſay unto him, becauſe the Lord hath need of him. The Syriac and Perſic verſions read our Lord, yours, and ours; probably the owners of the colt might be ſuch as knew the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and by this way of ſpeaking of him, knew, at once, who was meant, and ſo made no ſcruple of ſending him, as Chriſt told them they would not, and ſo they found it; ſee the notes on Matt. xxi. 3. and Mark xi. 3.

Ver. 32. And they that were ſent went their way, &c.] The two diſciples that were ſent by Chriſt, were obedient to him, and went, as he directed them, and did as he ordered them; and found, even as he had ſaid unto them. The Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions, and ſo ſome copies, add, the colt ſtanding; that is, in the place, and manner which he had deſcribed to them; ſee the note on Mark xi. 4.

Ver. 33. And as they were looſing the colt, &c.] In order to bring it away, as Chriſt bid them: the owners thereof ſaid unto them, why looſe ye the colt? Mark takes notice of this, but does not tell us who they were, only that they were perſons that ſtood there; but this Evangeliſt informs us who they were: and it ſeems by this, that there were more owners of the colt than one, which might have made the taking away of the colt the more difficult; ſince, though one might agree to it, another might not; but Chriſt, who is God, and has the hearts of all men in his hands, could, as he did, diſpoſe the minds of theſe men to let the colt go freely, and quietly, with his diſciples; ſee the note on Mark xi. 5.

Ver. 34. And they ſaid, the Lord hath need of him.] Our Lord, as the above verſions in ver. 31. They uſed the words Chriſt directed them to, and it had the effect he ſaid it would; for the owners both let them go, and the colt with them directly; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 6. and Mark xi. 6.

Ver. 35. And they brought him to Jeſus, &c.] That is, the colt: and they caſt their garments upon the colt; that is, the diſciples, who brought him to Jeſus; the Perſic verſion here, as in Matt. xxi. 7. renders it very wrongly, Jeſus put his own garment on its back, and ſat on it; it follows, and they ſet Jeſus thereon; in order to ride upon him, as he did to Jeruſalem.

Ver. 36. And as he went, &c.] Riding on the colt towards Jeruſalem: they ſpread their clothes in the way; not the diſciples, for they had put their garments upon the colt; but them ultitude, which either came with him from Jericho, and other parts, or that met him from Jeruſalem, or both; ſee Matt. xxi. 8. and Mark xi. 8. and ſo the Perſic verſion here; men put off their clothes and caſt them in the way, that he might paſs over them; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 8.

Ver. 37. And when he was come nigh, &c.] To the city of Jeruſalem, and which was then in ſight, even now at the deſcent of the mount of Olives; being come to the foot of that mount, which lay to the eaſt of Jeruſalem, and was about five furlongs from it, or a little more than half a mile [°]: the whole multitude of the diſciples; not only the twelve, but the large company that followed Chriſt out of Galilee, and were joined by more in Judea, as they came along, ſome going before him, and others behind him. The Arabic and Perſic verſions divide theſe words, and read, the multitude, and the diſciples; not only the apoſtles, but the whole body of the people that were with Chriſt: began to rejoice, and praiſe God, with a loud voice, for all the mighty works that they had ſeen; calling to mind the many miracles he had wrought in Galilee, at Cana, Capernaum, and other places, and now, as he paſſed through Judea, particularly about Jericho, where he had reſtored ſight to two or three blind men; and eſpecially the miracle he had lately wrought at Bethany, in raiſing Lazarus from the dead; from all which they might ſtrongly conclude, that he muſt be the Meſſiah; and being filled with joy and gladneſs, at the remembrance of theſe things, and with thankfulneſs to God, that he had raiſed up the glorious ſaviour and redeemer, they lifted up their voices together, and exerted them to the uttermoſt, and made the air ring with their ſhouts, and acclamations of praiſe to God, on this occaſion.

Ver. 38. Saying, bleſſed be the king, &c.] The king Meſſiah, the king of Iſrael, the ſon of David, the Chriſt of God; ſo the Ethiopic verſion adds, bleſſed be the king of Iſrael; they ſung their Hoſannas to him, as the other Evangeliſts ſay: that cometh in the name of the Lord; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 9. peace in heaven; all heavenly peace and proſperity attend him; or let peace be made with God in heaven, by the prince of peace on earth, for ſinful men: and glory in the higheſt; glory be given to God for peace, life, and ſalvation by his ſon; and that in the higheſt heavens, by the angels there, as well as by men on earth, and in the higheſt notes and ſtrains.

Ver. 39. And ſome of the Phariſees from among the multitude, &c.] Who had placed themſelves there, to watch and obſerve what was ſaid, and done, that they might have ſomething to reproach Chriſt with, expoſe him for, or bring as a charge againſt him: ſaid unto him, maſter, rebuke thy diſciples; not being able to bear ſuch high encomiums of Jeſus, and ſuch open and public declarations of his being the Meſſiah; and would inſinuate, that it was blaſphemy in them to ſay what they did, and pride and vanity in him to allow of it; and that the conſequence might be ſedition, and tumult; and therefore it became him to check ſuch a diſorderly, noiſy, evil, and dangerous practice.

[°] Joſeph. Antiq. l. 20. c. 6.

Ver. 40. And he anſwered and ſaid unto them, I tell you, &c.] As a truth, which may be depended on, and you may be aſſured of; this he ſpake with great earneſtneſs, fervour, and courage: that if theſe ſhould hold their peace; be ſilent, and not ſing the praiſes of God, and aſcribe glory to him, and profeſs the Meſſiah, and make this public acknowledgment of him: the ſtones would immediately cry out; either againſt them, or in a declaration of the Meſſiah: by which expreſſion our Lord means, that it was impoſſible it ſhould be otherwiſe; it would be intolerable if it was not; and rather than it ſhould not be, God, who is able out of ſtones to raiſe up children to Abraham, would make the ſtones ſpeak, or turn ſtones into men, who ſhould riſe up and praiſe the Lord, and confeſs the Meſſiah; hereby commending his diſciples, and tacitly reflecting upon the Phariſees, for their ſtupidity; and alſo giving a hint of the converſion of the Gentiles, who might be compared to ſtones, eſpecially in the opinion of the Jews.

Ver. 41. And when he was come near, he beheld the city, &c.] Of Jeruſalem; being now nearer, and in a ſituation to take a full view of it, he lift up his eyes, and looking wiſhly on it, and beholding the grandeur and magnificence of it, the number of the houſes, and the ſtately ſtructures in it, and knowing what calamities, in a few years, would come upon it; with which being affected, as man, he looked upon it, and wept over it; touched with a tender concern for it, his natural paſſions moved, and tears fell plentifully from his eyes. This muſt be underſtood of Chriſt merely as man, and is a proof of the truth of his human nature, which had all the natural properties, and even the infirmities of it; and as affected with the temporal ruin of Jeruſalem, and as concerned for its temporal welfare; and is not to be improved either againſt his proper deity, or the doctrines of diſtinguiſhing grace, relating to the ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation of God's elect; things that are foreign from the ſenſe of this paſſage: ſome ancient chriſtians, and orthodox too, thinking that this was not ſo agreeable to Chriſt, but reflected ſome weakneſs and diſhonour upon him, expunged this clauſe concerning his weeping; but we have another inſtance beſides this; ſee Joh. xi. 35. and even the Jews themſelves can't think this to be unſuitable to the Meſſiah, when they repreſent the Shekinah, and God himſelf weeping over the deſtruction of the temple [p]; and it is particularly [q] ſaid by them of the Meſſiah, that he ſhall weep over the wicked among the Jews, according to Iſ. liii. 5. and they encourage perſons to mourn over Jeruſalem: they ſay [r], whoever does any buſineſs on the ninth of Ab, (the day that city was deſtroyed) and does not mourn over Jeruſalem, ſhall not ſee its joy; but whoever does mourn over it, ſhall ſee its joy, according to Iſ. lxvi. 10 [s].

Ver. 42. Saying, if thou hadſt known, even thou, &c.] As well as other cities; or who haſt been ſo long a flouriſhing city, the metropolis of the nation, the ſeat of the ancient kings of Judah; yea, the city of the great God, the place of divine worſhip, whither the tribes came up, time after time, to ſerve the Lord; a city ſo highly honoured of God and man: or, who haſt deſpiſed the meſſages of the ſervants of God, mocked and miſuſed the prophets in time paſt, beat one, killed another, and ſtoned another: if ſuch a city, after all this, had but known its true intereſt, at leaſt in this thy day; the day of thy viſitation, the laſt day thou art to have, tho' it is ſo late: the things which belong unto thy peace; meaning, not peace with God; and the things belonging, or conducing to that, which are not mens works of righteouſneſs, nor tears of repentance, nor even faith itſelf, but the obedience and righteouſneſs, the blood, ſacrifice, and death of Chriſt; nor ſpiritual peace, or internal peace of conſcience, which comes in a Goſpel way, thro' believing, in a courſe of obedience, and all from Chriſt, the peace-maker, and peace-giver; nor eternal peace hereafter, which the grace of God gives a meetneſs for, and the righteouſneſs of Chriſt a right unto; the knowledge of all which is not natural to men, or to be obtained of themſelves, but is the gift of God's grace, and the operation of his Spirit: but ſuppoſing ſuch a peace, and ſuch things relating to it, were intended, nothing more can be inferred from hence, than if the Jews had known theſe things, they had been happy; and ſince they had the means of knowing them, they were, of all men, inexcuſable; and that Chriſt, as man, and one of their nation, and as a miniſter of the circumciſion, had a paſſionate concern for their welfare: but not that theſe Jews, or any men, can of themſelves, and without the unfruſtrable grace of God working upon their hearts, and enlightening their underſtanding, know theſe things; or that Chriſt acted any inſincere part in wiſhing for theſe things for them, as man, and a miniſter of the word, when he knew, as God, it was not conſiſtent with the will of God that they ſhould have them; ſince Chriſt, as man, ſometimes earneſtly prayed for that, which he, as God, knew could not be, as in the caſe of his own ſufferings and death; nor is this irreconcileable to his dying intentionally, only for thoſe who are actually ſaved: but after all, theſe words are only ſpoken of Jeruſalem, and the inhabitants of that city, and not of all mankind, and regard only their temporal peace and welfare, whoſe deſtruction Chriſt knew was near at hand; and of which he afterwards ſpeaks in the following verſes: but now they are hid from thine eyes; their eyes were blinded; they were given up to a judicial blindneſs, and hardneſs of heart; a ſpirit of ſlumber and ſtupidity had ſeized them; they could not diſcern the ſigns of the times, and ſo diſbelieved Jeſus as the Meſſiah, and rejected him as ſuch; whom, had they received only in a notional way, tho' they had not believed in him ſpiritually, to the ſaving of their ſouls, they would have been ſecured from outward calamities, and would have enjoyed peace and proſperity, and the things belonging to it our Lord ſpeaks of. Chriſt alludes to the name of Jeruſalem, which ſignifies the viſion of peace, or they ſhall ſee peace; but her name and caſe now did not agree. His wiſh is the ſame the Pſalmiſt encourages in Pſ. cxxii. 6. which, in the Septuagint verſion, is rendered, pray for the things that belong to the peace of Jeruſalem.

Ver. 43. For the days ſhall come upon thee, &c.] Suddenly, and very quickly, as they did within forty years after this: that thine enemies; the Romans, and ſuch the Jews took them to be, and might eaſily underſtand who our Lord meant: ſhall caſt a trench about thee, and compaſs thee round, and keep thee in on every ſide; which was not only verified in the Roman armies cloſely beſieging them; but particularly in this, as Joſephus relates [t], that Titus built a wall about the city, of thirty-nine furlongs long, and thirteen forts in it which reached ten furlongs, and all done in three days time; by which means they were pent up, ſtarved, and famiſhed, and reduced to inexpreſſible diſtreſs.

[t] De Bello Jud. l. 6. c. 8.

Ver. 44. And ſhall lay thee even with the ground, &c.] Beat down all the houſes in it, the ſtately edifices, and even the temple itſelf; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 2. and thy children within thee; that is, the inhabitants of the place ſhould be ſlain with the ſword of the enemy, and ſo fall to the ground, and lie upon it: and they ſhall not leave in thee one ſtone upon another; ſuch a conſummate, and entire deſolation ſhall be made, as was foretold by Daniel, ch. ix. 27. becauſe thou knoweſt not the time of thy viſitation; in which the day ſpring from on high had viſited them with his perſonal preſence, preaching among them, and working miracles; and yet they knew him not, but deſpiſed and rejected him; yea, after that they had put him to death, and he was riſen again, he ordered his diſciples to begin their miniſtry, and preach the Goſpel, at Jeruſalem; and they continued for ſome time only preaching to them, or at leaſt rarely elſewhere, till they put away the Goſpel from them. The time of the miniſtry of John the Baptiſt, of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles in Judea, was the time of Jeruſalem's viſitation in a way of mercy; which not being taken notice of, and obſerved, brought another kind of viſitation upon them, even in a way of wrath and vengeance. The Jews pretend to aſſign other cauſes of Jeruſalem's deſtruction; but the true cauſe was their rejection of Jeſus, as the Meſſiah. "Says Abai, Jeruſalem was not deſtroyed, but becauſe they profaned the ſabbath, as it is ſaid, Ezek. xxii. 26. and have hid their eyes from my ſabbaths, &c. Says R. Abbu, Jeruſalem was not deſtroyed, but becauſe they ceaſed reading the Shema, (hear, O Iſrael, &c.) morning and evening, as it is ſaid, Iſ. v. 11, 12, 13. wo to them that riſe up early, &c. Says Rab. Hamenuna, Jeruſalem was not deſtroyed, but becauſe there ceaſed in it the children of the ſchool of Rabban, (children were not put to ſchool) as it is ſaid Jer. vi. 11. I will pour it out upon the children, &c. Says Ula, Jeruſalem was not deſtroyed, but becauſe there was no ſhame among them, as it is ſaid, Jer. vi. 15. were they aſhamed, &c. Says R. Iſaac, Jeruſalem was not deſtroyed, but becauſe ſmall and great were put upon a level, as it is ſaid, Iſ. xxiv. 2, 3. as with the people, ſo with the prieſt, &c. Says R. Amram, the ſon of R. Simeon bar Aba, R. Chanina ſaid, Jeruſalem was not deſtroyed, but becauſe they did not reprove one another, as it is ſaid, Lam. i. 6. her princes are become like harts, &c. Says R. Judah, Jeruſalem was not deſtroyed, but becauſe they deſpiſed the diſciples of the wiſe men, as it is ſaid, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16. but they mocked the meſſengers of God, &c.[*]" Thus they ſhifted off the true cauſe of their ruin, and aſcribed it to other things.

Ver. 45. And he went into the temple, &c.] Being come into the city he alighted from the colt he rode on, and having committed it to the care of a proper perſon to return it to the owner, he went up directly to the temple, of which he was the Lord and proprietor, and where he had ſome work to do the few days he had to live. And began to caſt out them that ſold therein, and them that bought; that traded in ſheep, and oxen, and doves; ſee John ii. 15. and Matt. xxi. 12. The Ethiopic verſion adds here, as there, and overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and the ſeats of them that ſold doves.

Ver. 46. Saying unto them, it is written, &c.] In Iſ. lvi. 7. my houſe is the houſe of prayer; built and devoted for that ſervice: but ye have made it a den of thieves; which clauſe is not written in the above prophecy, but are the words of Chriſt referring to Jer. vii. 11. The Ethiopic verſion adds, and robbers; and the Perſic verſion adds, and a place of cut-purſes; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 13.

Ver. 47. And he taught daily in the temple, &c.] Every day till the paſſover came, and only in the day; for at night he went out of the city to Bethany, or to the mount of Olives: ſome of his diſcourſes in the temple, the parables he delivered, and his diſputations with the doctors, are recorded in Matt. xxi. 23. to the end of the 23^d^ chapter, and in Mark xi. 27. to the end of the 12^th^ chapter: but the chief-prieſts, and the Scribes, and the chief of the people; or, the elders of the people, as the Syriac verſion renders it; that is, the whole Sanhedrim: ſought to deſtroy him; met and conſulted together, how to get him into their hands, what charges to bring againſt him, in order to put him to death.

Ver. 48. And could not find what they might do, &c.] The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions, and ſo Beza's moſt ancient copy, add, to him; they could not find an opportunity of ſeizing him, nor any advantage againſt him; they knew not what ſteps to take, nor how to bring about their wicked deſign of deſtroying him. For all the people were very attentive to hear him; there were great crouds always about him, that hung upon him, as the word rendered attentive ſignifies; they heard him with great eagerneſs and diligence, and were ready to catch every word that dropped from his lips; and were exceedingly taken with him, having never heard any man ſpeak like him: wherefore having ſo many followers, and being ſo high in the opinion and affection of the people, the Sanhedrim were at a loſs what method to make uſe of to gain their point; and they feared the people, ſhould they ſeize him publickly, leſt they ſhould riſe and reſcue him, and cauſe a tumult and diſturbance.

CHAP. XX.

Ver. 1. AND it came paſs, that on one of thoſe days, &c.] According to the account of the Evangeliſt Mark, it muſt be the ſecond day, or two days after his public entrance into Jeruſalem; for on the evening of the day he made his entry, he went out to Bethany with his diſciples; the next morning, as he returned from thence, he curſed the barren fig-tree; and when he came to the temple caſt out the buyers and ſellers; at evening he went out again, either to Bethany, or the mount of Olives; and the next morning, as he and his diſciples returned, the fig-tree was obſerved to be dried up; and when they were come to Jeruſalem, as he was walking in the temple, he was attacked by the Sanhedrim, and had the following diſcourſe with them: as he taught the people in the temple, and preached the Goſpel; for he taught them by preaching that, and which he did moſt clearly, faithfully, and publickly, being abundantly anointed and qualified for it, and ſent to do it. The chief-prieſts, and the Scribes, came upon him, with the elders. The whole Sanhedrim being purpoſely convened together, came upon him in a body; and it may be ſuddenly, and at an unawares, and came open-mouthed againſt him, and attacked him with great warmth and vehemency.

Ver. 2. And ſpake unto him, ſaying, tell us by what authority doeſt thou theſe things? &c.] The Arabic and Ethiopic verſions read, this thing; as if the Sanhedrim only referred to his preaching the Goſpel, which is mentioned in the preceding verſe, and was what he was about when they came to him: but the Perſic verſion reads, all theſe things; not only preaching, but working miracles; and particularly driving the buyers and ſellers out of the temple, which eſpecially affected them, they loſing their rents thereby: or who is he that gave thee this authority? God or man? ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 23.

Ver. 3. And he anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] That is, Jeſus replied to them, as the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Perſic verſions expreſs it: I will alſo aſk you one thing, and anſwer me; when he alſo promiſed, that if they would give him an anſwer to his queſtion, he would ſatisfy them in the point they interrogated him about: and as this was a prudent decline to avoid the ſnare they laid for him, ſo it was not an impertinent reply to them; ſince it led on to a proper anſwer to their queſtion, as appears by the caſe propoſed; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 24.

Ver. 4. The baptiſm of John, was it from heaven, or of men?] This was a new ordinance, and John muſt have his authority for adminiſtring it either from God, or from men; and Chriſt is deſirous to know from which he derived it in their opinion; ſuggeſting, that by the ſame authority John, his fore-runner, came baptizing, he himſelf came preaching and working miracles; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 25.

Ver. 5. And they reaſoned with themſelves, &c.] Or they thought with themſelves, as the Syriac verſion; or within themſelves, as the Vulgate Latin, tho' they did not expreſs it; or one with another, as the Arabic verſion; they took counſel together, and debated the matter among themſelves, and reaſoned after this manner: ſaying, if we ſhall ſay from heaven; which was what, in their own conſciences, they believed to be true: he will ſay, why then believed ye him not? in what he ſaid concerning the Meſſiah; which if they had, as they ſhould, there would have been no reaſon for ſuch a queſtion they had put; ſee the note, as above.

Ver. 6. But and if we ſay of men, &c.] Which they had a good will to againſt the dictates of their own conſciences: all the people will ſtone us; meaning the common people, that were then in the temple about Chriſt, hearing him preach; who would be ſo enraged at ſuch an anſwer, that without any regard to their character and office, they would riſe and ſtone them. The Ethiopic verſion adds, whom we fear; ſee Matt. xxi. 26. for it ſeems that they had not ſo behaved as to have the good-will and eſteem of the people, at leaſt they did not pin their faith on their ſleeve: for they be perſuaded that John was a prophet; they were fully aſſured of it; and the ſentiments and authority of the chief-prieſts could have no weight and influence upon them to weaken their faith in this point; the evidence was ſo ſtrong, and their faith ſo firm and ſure.

Ver. 7. And they anſwered, that they could not tell whence it was.] Whether from heaven, or of men; in this, no doubt, they told an untruth: but they choſe rather to ſacrifice their conſciences than their intereſt, and pretend ignorance rather than profeſs the truth, when they ſaw they ſhould be put to confuſion, or be expoſed to the reſentments of the people.

Ver. 8. And Jeſus ſaid unto them, &c.] Since they would not give him a direct anſwer to his queſtion: neither tell I you by what authority I do theſe things; nor was there any need of it; they might eaſily perceive by what he had ſaid, from whence he profeſſed to have received his authority, from God, and not from men; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 27.

Ver. 9. Then began he to ſpeak to the people this parable, &c.] According to the other Evangeliſts it ſeems to be ſpoken to the chief-prieſts, Scribes, and elders; and certain it is, that they looked upon themſelves as ſtruck at in it; it might be ſpoken to both. Chriſt having ſilenced the Sanhedrim, turned himſelf to the people, and delivered the parable of the vineyard to them, though his principal view was to the prieſts: a certain man planted a vineyard; the people of the Jews are deſigned by the vineyard, and the certain man, or houſholder, as Matthew calls him, is the Lord of hoſts; and the planting of it is to be underſtood of his bringing and ſettling the people of Iſrael in the land of Canaan. Luke omits certain things which the other Evangeliſts relate, as ſetting an hedge about it, digging a wine-preſs, and building a tower in it; and the Perſic verſion here adds, and planted trees, and ſet a wall about it; all which expreſs the care that was taken to cultivate and protect it; and ſignify the various bleſſings and privileges the Jews enjoyed under the former diſpenſation; ſee the notes on Matt. xxi. 33. and Mark xii. 1. and let it forth to huſbandmen; put the people of the Jews under the care not only of civil magiſtrates, but of eccleſiaſtical governours, who were to dreſs this vine, or inſtruct theſe people in matters of religion, that they might be fruitful in good works: and went into a far country for a long time; for a long time it was, from the times of Moſes and Joſhua, when the firſt ſettlement, both of the civil and eccleſiaſtical ſtate of the Jews, was made, to the times of Chriſt; it was fourteen or fifteen hundred years; ſee the notes, as above.

Ver. 10. And at the ſeaſon, &c.] Or when it was the time of fruit, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it, agreeable to Matt. xxi. 34. ſee the note there: he ſent a ſervant to the huſbandmen; or ſervants, as in Matthew; the prophets of the Lord, his meſſengers, whom he ſent to them, to exhort them to bring forth the fruits of righteouſneſs, as follows: that they ſhould give him of the fruit of the vineyard; that is, that they, bringing forth good fruit in their lives and converſations, whereby it might appear that they were trees of righteouſneſs, and the planting of the Lord; he, or they obſerving them, might give an account of them to the Lord, to the glory of his name: but the huſbandmen beat him, and ſent him away empty; the Jews not only mocked theſe meſſengers of the Lord, and deſpiſed their words, but miſuſed them, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 15. they beat them with their fiſts, ſmote them on the cheek, and ſcourged them with ſcourges; ſo that they had no account to give of their fruitfulneſs in good works, but the contrary; ſee the notes on Matt. xxi. 35. and Mark xii. 3.

Ver. 11. And again he ſent another ſervant, &c.] Or ſett of prophets in after-times, and yet before the Babyloniſh captivity: and they beat him alſo; as they had done the other; they continued in their male-practices, yea increaſed in them: and entreated him ſhamefully; putting him to open ſhame, uſing him in a very ignominious and ſhameful manner, which it was a ſhame to relate, and which was ſhameful for them to do: and ſent him away empty; as they had done the other.

Ver. 12. And again he ſent the third, &c.] Perhaps after the return of the Jews from captivity, and between that time and the coming of Chriſt, in which interval many good men were uſed in a very inhuman manner, Heb. xi. 37, 38. and they wounded him alſo; by caſting ſtones at him; ſee Mark xii. 4. and caſt him out; of the vineyard.

Ver. 13. Then ſaid the Lord of the vineyard, &c.] Who planted it, and let it out to huſbandmen, and expected fruit from it, and ſent his ſervants from time to time for it: what ſhall I do? or what can be done more than has been done? Iſ. v. 4. who elſe can be ſent that is likely to do any good with ſuch an ungrateful and unfruitful people? I will ſend my beloved Son; the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Son of God, who lay in his boſom, was the darling of his ſoul, and the delight of his heart; him he determined to ſend, and him he did ſend to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael: it may be they will reverence him, when they ſee him; it might be thought after the manner of men, that conſidering the greatneſs of his perſon, as the Son of God, the nature of his office, as the redeemer and ſaviour of men, the doctrines which he preached, the miracles which he wrought, and the holineſs and harmleſſneſs of his converſation, and the great good he did both to the bodies and ſouls of men, that he would have been had in great eſteem and veneration with the men, to whom he was ſent, and among whom he converſed: but, alas! when they ſaw him, they ſaw no beauty, comelineſs, and excellency in him, and nothing on account of which he ſhould be deſired by them.

Ver. 14. But when the huſbandmen ſaw him, &c.] In human nature, heard him preach, and obſerved the miracles done by him: they reaſoned among themſelves; as the Scribes and Phariſees, and elders of the people often did: ſaying, this is the heir; the heir of God, being his ſon; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion; this ſon is his heir, or the heir of the vineyard; being, by appointment, heir of all things, and by his deſcent from David heir to the kingdom of Iſrael: come, let us kill him, that the inheritance may be ours. The Arabic and Perſic verſions render it, and his inheritance ſhall be ours; the nation, city, temple, and all the emoluments and benefits thereof. The word come is left out in the Alexandrian copy, and in the Gothic and Vulgate Latin verſions.

Ver. 15. So they caſt him out of the vineyard, &c.] Rejected him as the Meſſiah, even denied that he was of the Jewiſh nation; ſaid he was a Samaritan, and delivered him to the Gentiles that were without, and were aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael; and at laſt had him without their city, and put him to death, as follows: and killed him; the Prince of life, the Lord of glory, and heir of all things; ſee Acts ii. 23, 36. and iii. 15. and v. 30. and x. 39. what therefore ſhall the Lord of the vineyard do unto them? the huſbandmen, the chief prieſts, elders, Scribes, and Phariſees; at whoſe ſollicitations the life of his ſon, and heir, was taken away; by which he muſt be greatly provoked and incenſed.

Ver. 16. He ſhall come and deſtroy theſe huſbandmen, &c.] Which had its accompliſhment at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem: according to the other Evangeliſts, theſe words are the anſwer of the chief prieſts, Scribes, and elders, to the above queſtions put to them by Chriſt, after he had delivered the parable; but here they ſeem to be the words of Chriſt, who alſo ſaid the ſame, and confirmed what they had obſerved, and could not but own, that it was juſt and right, and what might be expected, with what follows: and ſhall give the vineyard to others; the land of Judea, to the Romans in particular, and the church-ſtate, with the Goſpel and ordinances of it, to the Gentiles in general, ſometimes called others; ſee the notes on chap. v. 29. and xviii. 11. and when they heard it, they ſaid, God forbid; for though they were their own words, yet being repeated and confirmed by Chriſt, and perceiving that they were the perſons intended, deprecate the fulfilment of them; at leaſt ſo far as they underſtood they related to the killing of the Meſſiah, and to the deſtruction of their nation, city, and temple.

Ver. 17. And he beheld them, &c.] Looked very earneſtly and wiſhly at them, ſpeaking as it were by his looks, ſignifying, that verily ſo it would be, as he had ſaid; that they would reject the Meſſiah, and put him to death, and bring utter ruin upon themſelves, and deprive their poſterity of many advantages and privileges: and ſaid, what is this then that is written; that is, what elſe is the meaning of ſuch a ſcripture? is not the ſenſe of that perfectly agreeable to what has been ſaid, that the Meſſiah ſhall be rejected by the principal men among the Jews in church and ſtate, and yet he ſhall be exalted, who will then take vengeance on them? the ſtone which the builders rejected, the ſame is become the head of the corner? The paſſage is in Pſal. cxviii. 22. ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 42.

Ver. 18. Whoſoever ſhall fall on that ſtone, ſhall be broken, &c.] Not who ſhall fall upon Chriſt by faith, and build upon him as the foundation ſtone, for ſuch ſhall be ſaved; but that ſtumble at him, and are offended with him, and fall by unbelief and hardneſs of heart; ſuch do themſelves much hurt and miſchief, and expoſe themſelves to danger and ruin; they bid very fair for deſtruction: but on whomſoever it ſhall fall; as it did with its full weight upon the Jews at their deſtruction, and as it will upon all chriſtleſs ſinners at the laſt day: it will grind him to powder; the ruin of ſuch will be unavoidable, and there will be no recovery; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 44.

Ver. 19. And the chief prieſts, and the Scribes, that ſame hour, &c.] As ſoon as he had delivered the above parable, together with that of the two ſons: ſought to lay hands on him; they had a good-will to it, being exceedingly graveled with the queſtion he put to them concerning John's baptiſm, which confounded them, and put them to ſilence; and with the parables he delivered, in which they were ſo manifeſtly pointed at: and they feared the people; leſt they ſhould riſe and ſtone them, as in ver. 6. or reſcue him out of their hands; for they perceived that he had ſpoken this parable againſt them; and that they were the huſbandmen that had uſed the ſervants of God ſo ill, and would put to death the ſon of God, the Meſſiah; and who would at length be deſtroyed themſelves, and the kingdom of God be taken from them, tho' they ſeem to deteſt and deprecate it, ſaying in ver. 16. God forbid; that we ſhould kill the heir, or that we ſhould be deſtroyed, and the vineyard given to others: theſe things grievouſly nettled them, and exaſperated them againſt him; but they knew not how to help themſelves at preſent.

Ver. 20. And they watched him, &c.] What he ſaid, and what he did, and where he went, that they might take an advantage againſt him, or know where he was to ſend to him, as they ſhould think fit, and take the beſt opportunity of ſo doing. The Syriac and Perſic verſions leave out this clauſe: and ſent forth ſpies which ſhould feign themſelves juſt men; men of virtue and religion, conſcientious men, that would do nothing but what was juſt and right, and were deſirous of being exactly informed of the truth of things, that they might act right in every punctilio: that they might take hold of his words; improve them, and form a charge upon them, of ſedition and treaſon: that ſo they might deliver him unto the power and authority of the Governour; the Roman governour, and by him be put to death. Theſe men were ſome of them the diſciples of the Phariſees, and others were Herodians; ſee Matt. xxii. 16.

Ver. 21. And they aſked him ſaying, maſter, &c.] Rabbi, or doctor; hoping, by this flattering title, and the flattering words uſed by them, to work him up to an openneſs and freedom of converſation with them: we know that thou ſayeſt, and teacheſt rightly; rightly divideſt the word of God, and delivereſt out ſound doctrine according to it: and this he certainly did, tho' they ſpoke theſe words hypocritically, not believing what they themſelves ſaid; at leaſt, they did not care that others ſhould believe this of him: neither accepteſt thou the perſon of any. The Perſic verſion very wrongly renders it, and lookeſt not upon the countenance, and heart of any one whomſoever; for tho' Chriſt did not look upon the countenances of men, and judge according to the outward appearance, nor regard men on account of outward circumſtances, as riches, honours, learning, &c. yet he looked upon the heart, and knew what was in it, and reſpected ſincerity and uprightneſs wherever he found it, and which were wanting in theſe men: but teacheſt the way of God truly; the way of worſhipping God, and of enjoying him, both in this world, and in that to come; ſee the note on Matt. xxii. 16.

Ver. 22. Is it lawful for us to give tribute unto Cæſar, or no?] The Syriac and Perſic verſions here, as in the other Evangeliſts, render it, head money. The phraſe, for us, is here added, and on it lies the emphaſis, and ſtreſs of the queſtion; for the doubt pretended, was not whether it was lawful for the Romans to pay tribute to Cæſar, but whether it was lawful for them who were Jews, were Abraham's ſeed, and, as they boaſted, were never in bondage, but were the Lord's free people, to pay tribute to an heathen emperor, or no.

Ver. 23. But he perceived their craftineſs, &c.] Knowing what was in them, and being a diſcerner of the thoughts and intents of their hearts, he clearly ſaw that their view was either, that they might have a charge againſt him to the Roman governours, ſhould he declare againſt payment of tribute; or that they might expoſe him to the people of the Jews, ſhould he aſſert the lawfulneſs of it: and ſaid unto them, why tempt ye me? with this enſnaring queſtion.

Ver. 24. Shew me a penny, &c.] A Roman denarius, value ſeven-pence half-penny of our money. The Perſic verſion adds, they ſhewed it, he aſked of them; and the Ethiopic verſion, and they brought it, and he ſaid unto them, as follows; whoſe image and ſuperſcription hath it? for the penny had an head upon it, with ſomething written, as the name of the emperor, whoſe image it was, his titles, the date of the coin, or ſome motto on it: they anſwered and ſaid, Cæſar's; very likely Tiberius Cæſar's, who was at that time emperor of Rome; ſee the notes on Matt. xxii. 20, 21.

Ver. 25. And he ſaid unto them, render therefore unto Cæſar the things which be Cæſar's, &c.] The Arabic verſion renders it, give to the king what is the king's; the tribute that was due to him; ſince they were under his government, and were protected by him, and traded with his money; the currency of which among them was an acknowledgment of him as their ſovereign: and unto God the things which be God's; which relate to his worſhip, honour, intereſt, and kingdom; ſee the note on Matt. xxii. 21.

Ver. 26. And they could not take hold of his words before the people, &c.] Which was what they wanted; that if he had dropped any ſeditious and treaſonable expreſſions againſt the government, they might be witneſſes againſt him; or if he had not vindicated the liberties of the people, and the rights of the Jewiſh nation, theſe might be exaſperated againſt him, and leave him: and they marvelled at his anſwer; which was ſo formed, as to give them no handle againſt him either way: and held their peace; they were ſilenced, and had nothing to ſay to him, nor againſt him, but left him, and went their way.

Ver. 27. Then came to him certain of the Sadducees, &c.] That is, to Jeſus, as the Perſic verſion expreſſes it; and it was the ſame day, as Matthew ſays, on which the diſciples of the Phariſees, and the Herodians, had been with him, putting the queſtion about tribute to him: which deny that there is any reſurrection; that is, of the dead; that there ever was any inſtance of it, or ever will be: this was the diſtinguiſhing tenet of that ſect; ſee Acts xxiii. 8. and they aſked him; the following queſtion, after they had put a caſe to him.

Ver. 28. Saying, maſter, Moſes wrote unto us, &c.] In Deut. xxv. 5. where the ſubſtance of what follows is contained, tho' not in expreſs words: if any man's brother die, having a wife, and he die without children, that his brother ſhould take his wife, and raiſe up ſeed unto his brother; the meaning of which is, that if a man died without iſſue, and left a wife behind him, his next brother, if unmarried, was to marry his wife, and the firſt child born of her, was to be reckoned the deceaſed's, and to inherit his eſtate; ſee the note on Matt. xxii. 24.

Ver. 29. There were therefore ſeven brethren, &c.] In the place where theſe Sadducees dwelt; or, however, that were known by them; at leaſt they ſuppoſed ſuch a caſe, and it might be fact: and the firſt took a wife, and died without children; ſon or daughter, and ſo had none to keep up his name, and to poſſeſs his inheritance.

Ver. 30. And the ſecond took her to wife, &c.] As he was obliged by the above law, or pluck off the ſhoe: and he died childleſs; as his eldeſt brother before him.

Ver. 31. And the third took her, &c.] To wife, by virtue of the ſame law: and in like manner the ſeven alſo; the other four, one after another, when all ſeven married her: and they left no children, and died; or they died, leaving no children behind them.

Ver. 32. Laſt of all the woman died alſo.] Having had no children by either of her ſeven huſbands.

Ver. 33. Therefore in the reſurrection, &c.] At the time of the reſurrection of the dead, in that ſtate, ſuppoſing there will be ſuch an one, which they denied; whoſe wife of them is ſhe? the firſt, or the laſt, or any of the intermediate ones? for ſeven had her to wife; and ſhe had no child by either of them; ſo that their claim ſeems to be alike; this they thought unanſwerable, and ſufficient to ſet aſide the notion of a reſurrection.

Ver. 34. And Jeſus anſwering, ſaid unto them, &c.] After he had obſerved that their error aroſe from ignorance of the ſcriptures, and the power of God: the children of this world marry, and are given in marriage; that is, ſuch who live in this world, in the preſent mortal and imperfect ſtate, being mortal men, and die, and leave their eſtates and poſſeſſions; theſe marry, and have wives given them in marriage; and it is very right, and fit, that ſo it ſhould be, in order to keep up a ſucceſſion of men, and that they may have heirs to enjoy their ſubſtance when they are gone.

Ver. 35. But they which ſhall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, &c.] The world to come, eternal life and happineſs; not by their own works and merits, but through the blood, ſacrifice, and righteouſneſs of the Meſſiah: and the reſurrection from the dead; that is, the firſt reſurrection, the reſurrection unto life, which only the dead in Chriſt will enjoy; otherwiſe all will be raiſed; but ſome to the reſurrection of damnation: theſe neither marry, nor are given in marriage; there will be no need of any ſuch practice, for the reaſons that follow.

Ver. 36. Neither can they die any more, &c.] Therefore there will be no need of marrying to procreate children, to keep up a ſucceſſion of men, any more than there is among the angels: for they are equal unto the angels; in ſpirituality, purity and immortality; ſee the note on Matt. xxii. 30. and are the children of God; as they are now by adopting-grace; but, as yet, it does not appear as it will then, what they are, and will be: being the children of the reſurrection; as Chriſt was declared to be the ſon of God by his reſurrection, ſo will they appear to be the children of God by their reſurrection to eternal life; for though others will riſe, yet not to everlaſting life; and thus appearing to be children of God, they will alſo be heirs of God, and enjoy the inheritance which they will always live to poſſeſs in their perſons; and therefore the caſe being different with them from the children of the world, they'll not marry, nor be given in marriage, as they are.

Ver. 37. Now that the dead are raiſed, &c.] Or that there will be a reſurrection of the dead, this is a proof of it: even Moſes ſhewed at the buſh; when the Lord appeared to him out of it, and he ſaw it burning with fire, and not conſumed; when the Lord called to him out of it by the following name, as he has recorded it in Exodus iii. 6. Hence it is ſaid, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob; for tho' the Lord called himſelf ſo, yet Moſes likewiſe calls him by theſe names, when he gives an account of this affair, and when he went from him to the children of Iſrael; ſee the note on Matt. xxii. 32.

Ver. 38. For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living, &c.] See the note on Matt. xxii. 32. for all live unto him. The Perſic verſion reads, all theſe live unto him; namely, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob; for tho' they are dead to men, they are not to God; their ſouls live with him, and their bodies will be raiſed by him: he reckons of them, as if they were now alive, for he quickens the dead, and calls things that are not, as though they were; and this is the caſe of all the ſaints that are dead, as well as of thoſe patriarchs. The Ethiopic reads, all live with him; as the ſouls of all departed ſaints do; the Arabic verſion reads, all live in him; ſo all do now, Acts xvii. 28.

Ver. 39. Then certain of the Scribes anſwering, ſaid, &c.] Who believed the doctrine of the reſurrection, which the Sadducees denied, and ſo were pleaſed with our Lord's reaſonings on this ſubject: maſter, thou haſt well ſaid; thou haſt ſpoken in a beautiful manner, reaſoned finely upon this head, and ſet this matter in a fair and clear light; ſee the note on Mark xii. 28.

Ver. 40. And after that, they durſt not aſk him any queſtion at all.] Neither the Phariſees, Sadducees, Scribes, nor Herodians.

Ver. 41. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion reads, to the Phariſees; and ſo it appears, that it was to them he ſpoke, from Matt. xxii. 41. how ſay they? The Syriac verſion reads, how ſay the Scribes? as in Mark xii. 35. and the Perſic verſion, how ſay the wiſe men, the doctors in Iſrael, that Chriſt is David's ſon? than which nothing was more common among the Jews.

Ver. 42. And David himſelf ſaith in the book of Pſalms, &c.] In Pſal. cx. 1. the Lord ſaid to my Lord, ſit thou on my right hand; which words were delivered by David, as inſpired by the ſpirit of God; and contain a ſpeech of God the father to his ſon Jeſus Chriſt, upon his aſcenſion to heaven, after his ſufferings, death, and reſurrection from the dead; when he was bid to ſit down in human nature, at the right hand of God, in token of having done his work on earth to full ſatisfaction; and in the relation of which David calls Chriſt his Lord; and is the reaſon of their being mentioned.

Ver. 43. 'Till I make thine enemies thy footſtool.] Which words are a continuation of the citation out of the above Pſalm; and for the application of theſe words, with the preceding, to the Meſſiah, ſee the note on Matt. xxii. 44.

Ver. 44. David therefore calleth him Lord, &c.] Or, my Lord, as the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions read; or, his Lord, as the Arabic verſion. This is the inference from the words before cited, upon which the following queſtion is aſked, how is he then his ſon? how can theſe things be reconciled? in what ſenſe can he be both his Lord and ſon? ſee the note on Matt. xxii. 45.

Ver. 45. Then in the audience of all the people, &c.] Whilſt they were about him, and hearing him, and for their ſakes too; he ſaid unto his diſciples; yea, he ſpake to the multitude, as well as to the diſciples, as appears from Matt. xxiii. 1.

Ver. 46. Beware of the Scribes, &c.] And alſo of the Phariſees; for they are joined together in Matthew: which deſire to walk in long robes: the rule for the length of a ſcholar's garment was this[a]; "his fleſh muſt not appear under his garments, as the light linnen garments, and the like, they make in Egypt; nor muſt his garments be drawn upon the ground, as the garments of proud men, but muſt reach to his heel, and his glove muſt reach the tops of his fingers." According to this rule, the garments of the doctors were to be ſo long as to cover the whole body, even down to their heels, but were not to be any longer; and by this it appears their garments were very long; but they did not always go by this rule; ſome had their garments ſo long as to have a train after them; ſee the note on Matt. xxiii. 5. and love greetings in the markets; or in courts of judicature; they loved to be ſaluted with the titles of Rabbi, maſter, and the like: and the higheſt ſeats in the ſynagogues; which were next to the place where the book of the law was read and expounded, and where they might be ſeen by the people: and the chief rooms at feaſts; the uppermoſt; ſee the notes on Matt. xxiii. 6, 7.

Ver. 47. Which devour widows houſes, &c.] As the characters of them, in the preceding verſe, expoſe their pride, this ſhews their avarice; they were very voracious and cruel; they did not ſpare widows, but devoured their ſubſtance: and for a ſhew make long prayers; to cover their wickedneſs; pretending great devotion and religion: the ſame ſhall receive greater damnation; than openly prophane ſinners; doing ſuch wickedneſs under a cloke of religion, will aggravate their condemnation; ſee the note on Matt. xxiii. 14.

CHAP. XXI.

Ver. 1. AND he looked up, &c.] As Chriſt ſat over-againſt the treaſury, looking upon the ground, he lift up his eyes; for the treaſury was not in an high place, or above Chriſt, who was right againſt it. The Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions leave out this clauſe. And ſaw the rich men caſting their gifts into the treaſury; ſee the note on Mark xii. 41.

Ver. 2. And he ſaw alſo a certain poor widow, &c.] Whom he took particular notice of above all the reſt: the poor, and the widow, are regarded by him, and are his care; nor are their mean ſervices done in faith, and from a principle of love, deſpiſed by him, but preferred to the greater ſervices of others, where faith and love are wanting: caſting in thither two mites; the value of a farthing. The Perſic verſion renders it, two bottoms of yarn; ſee the note on Mark xii. 42.

Ver. 3. And he ſaid, &c.] To his diſciples, as the Ethiopic verſion adds; theſe he called to him, upon this occaſion, as appears from Mark xii. 43. of a truth I ſay unto you, that this poor woman hath caſt in more than they all; than all the rich men; not in quantity, but in proportion to her ability; ſee the note on Mark xii. 43.

Ver. 4. For all theſe have of their abundance, &c.] Which they had remaining; the ſame Hebrew word יתר, ſignifying to remain, and to abound: they had large poſſeſſions, and gave in much, and yet had a great deal left; out of which they caſt in unto the offerings of God; or gifts of God: not as gifts unto him; or among the gifts of God; but into the treaſury where the gifts, and free-will offerings were put; the ſame with the Corban, in Matt. xxvii. 6. and ſo the Syriac verſion here renders it, the houſe of the offering of God: and it is expreſſed in the plural number; becauſe there were ſeveral cheſts, in which theſe gifts were put, for various uſes; ſee the note on Mark xii. 41. but ſhe of her penury hath caſt in all the living ſhe had; ſee the note on Mark xii. 44.

Ver. 5. And as ſome ſpake of the temple, &c.] Theſe were the diſciples; Mark ſays one of them; but it ſeems there were more than one; one might begin the diſcourſe, and others join him: how it was adorned with goodly ſtones and gifts; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 1. he ſaid; what follows. This was as he went out of the temple.

Ver. 6. As for theſe things which ye behold, &c.] Some, as the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions, read theſe words by way of interrogation; are theſe the things which ye behold? do ye look upon theſe with wonder and delight? the days will come; and they are haſtening on; a little while, a few years more: in the which there ſhall not be left one ſtone upon another, that ſhall not be thrown down; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 2.

Ver. 7. And they aſked him, &c.] That is, his diſciples, when they were come to the mount of Olives, and as he ſat upon that, Matt. xxiv. 3. ſaying, maſter, but when ſhall theſe things be? when the temple ſhall be deſtroyed; and one ſtone ſhall not be left upon another; and what ſign will there be when theſe things ſhall come to paſs? which ſhows that this refers to the deſtruction of the temple, and ſo the ſigns following; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 3.

Ver. 8. And he ſaid, take heed that ye be not deceived, &c.] With falſe Chriſts, and falſe prophets: for many ſhall come in my name; making uſe of his name, taking it to them; not that they would pretend they were ſent by him, but that they were he himſelf: ſaying, I am Chriſt; ſo the Syriac and Perſic verſions ſupply as we do: and the time draweth near; not that ſuch will come, but when come, they will ſay, that the time of the deliverance of the Jewiſh nation from the Roman yoke is at hand: go ye not therefore after them; don't be their diſciples, or follow them where they would lead you; for nothing but deſtruction will be the conſequence of it.

Ver. 9. But when ye ſhall hear of wars and commotions, &c.] Or ſeditions, and Tumults; wars may deſign the wars of the Romans, againſt the Jews; and the commotions, or ſeditions, the inteſtine troubles among themſelves: be not terrified; as if the deſtruction of the nation, city, and temple, would be at once: for theſe things muſt firſt come to paſs, but the end is not by and by; or immediately. The Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions leave out this laſt word, and read, as in Matt. xxiv. 6. ſee the note there.

Ver. 10. Then ſaid he unto them, nation ſhall riſe, &c.] See the note on Matt. xxiv. 7.

Ver. 11. And great earthquakes ſhall be in divers places, and famines, and peſtilences, &c.] See the note on Matt. xxiv. 7. and fearful ſights; or terrible things; whether heard, or ſeen, as dreadful thundrings, and lightnings; and a voice heard in the temple, ſaying, let us go hence; and an ideot that went about ſeveral years together, ſaying, wo to the people, wo to the city, &c. a flame was ſeen in the temple, and the doors of it opened of themſelves: and great ſigns ſhall there be from heaven; as comets and blazing ſtars, a flaming ſword, or a comet like one, hanging over Jeruſalem, and armies in the air engaged againſt each other [b]. The Syriac verſion adds, and great winters there ſhall be; that is, very long and cold; and ſo the Perſic verſion, and winter, and cold, ſhall be protracted.

Ver. 12. But before all theſe, &c.] Before all theſe things come to paſs: they ſhall lay their hands on you; as the high-prieſt, the prieſts, and the captain of the temple did upon the apoſtles, Acts iv. 1, 3. and v. 17, 18. and perſecute you; as upon the death of Stephen, Acts viii. 1. delivering you up to the ſynagogues; to be ſcourged there; or to the courts of judicature, the conſiſtories of the Jews, their great Sanhedrim; before theſe the apoſtles were brought, Acts iv. 6, 7, 15. and v. 17. and into priſons; as were all the apoſtles together, and Peter at another time ſeparately, Acts iv. 3. and v. 18. and xii. 4. being brought before kings, and rulers, for my names ſake; for being called by his name, and calling upon it; for profeſſing, and preaching his Goſpel; ſee the note on Matt. x. 18.

[b] Vid. Joſeph. de Bello Jud. l. 6. c. 5.

Ver. 13. And it ſhall turn to you for a teſtimony.] By this means they would have an opportunity of leaving their teſtimony for Chriſt before kings and rulers; and what they ſhould meet with from them, would be a means of ſtrengthening and confirming them in the truths of the Goſpel; and be a proof and evidence to them of the certainty of the above things Chriſt had ſaid, ſhould be accompliſhed; as well as be for a Teſtimony againſt the rulers and governours, Jews, and Gentiles, before whom they ſhould be convened; ſee Matt. x. 18,

Ver. 14. Settle it therefore in your hearts, &c.] Reſolve on this in your minds, and let it be a rule never to be departed from: not to meditate before what you ſhall anſwer; not to ſit down, and ſtudy a form of words, and ſcheme of things, what to reply to the enſnaring queſtions that may be thought would be aſked, by kings and rulers, or any of the judges before whom they ſhould be brought; it being natural for perſons, eſpecially of a low life, to be timorous and fearful, to appear before ſuch great perſonages, and to be thoughtful and ſollicitous what to ſay to any queſtion that may be aſked them; ſee the note on Matt. x. 19.

Ver. 15. For I will give you a mouth, &c.] A faculty of ſpeaking, a freedom of expreſſion, a door of utterance, a good degree of elocution, to ſpeak properly, pertinently and freely to any point: and wiſdom; to anſwer with great propriety, and in the moſt prudent manner, to any difficult and enſnaring queſtion; and to furniſh with ſuch knowledge of the Goſpel, and with ſuch gifts and abilities to preach and defend it, that they ſhould be able to give a clear and diſtinct account of it, and prove every point in it, by the moſt ſtrong and convincing arguments, and vindicate it againſt all objections: which all your adverſaries ſhall not be able to gainſay or reſiſt. This was remarkably fulfilled in Peter, and John, and in Stephen, Acts iv. 13, 14. and vi. 10. The firſt word, gainſay, is left out in the Syriac and Perſic verſions.

Ver. 16. And ye ſhall be betrayed both by parents, and brethren, &c.] See the note on Matt. x. 21. and kinsfolks and friends. The Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions add, your, to each of theſe relations, as your parents, &c. and ſome of you ſhall they cauſe to be put to death; as Stephen was ſtoned to death, and James, the brother of John, Herod killed with the ſword, Acts vii. 58. and xii. 2. and indeed all of them were put to death, excepting John, before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem.

Ver. 17. And ye ſhall be hated of all men, &c.] See Matt. x. 22. and xxiv. 9.

Ver. 18. But there ſhall not an hair of your head periſh.] That is, without the will of God, as in Matt. x. 29, 30. or not one ſhall periſh, but what ſhall be reſtored again: or, the ſenſe is, that tho' they ſhould be betrayed by their friends, and hated, and perſecuted, and impriſoned by their enemies, yet they ſhould be no loſers in the main; all things ſhould work together for their good; and tho' even they ſhould be put to death, yet that would be to their advantage, ſince inſtead of a temporal, troubleſome life, they ſhould enjoy an eternal and happy one: for this can't be underſtood of entire preſervation from all corporal damages and hurt; ſeeing it is before declared, that they ſhould be put into priſons, and ſome of them put to death; nor of their preſervation at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, for none of them was living at that time, but the apoſtle John, and he was not in thoſe parts.

Ver. 19. In your patience poſſeſs ye your ſouls.] By patiently bearing all afflictions, reproaches, indignities and perſecutions, enjoy yourſelves; let nothing diſturb or diſtreſs you; poſſeſs that peace and joy in your ſouls, which the world cannot take away; ſee Rom. v. 3, 4, 5. The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read, ye ſhall poſſeſs; and the ſenſe may be this; by patient continuance, or by perſeverance in the ways of God, and the truths of Chriſt unto the end, ye ſhall be ſaved; ſhall find your lives, and enjoy your ſouls, as in Matt. x. 22. and xxiv. 13.

Ver. 20. And when ye ſhall ſee Jeruſalem compaſſed with armies, &c.] The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Perſic verſions, with an army; that is, with the Roman army, as it was by the army which Titus Veſpaſian brought againſt it, and beſieged it with: then know that the deſolation thereof is nigh; ſignifying, that there would be no deliverance to be expected, as when the Aſſyrian army under Rabſhekah appeared againſt it; but that whenever the Roman army beſieged it, its deſtruction might be looked upon as inevitable; nor was the ſiege raiſed until it was deſtroyed, which was about four years after.

Ver. 21. Then let them which are in Judea, flee to the mountains, &c.] See the note on Matt. xxiv. 16. And let them which are in the midſt of it; either of Judea, as the preceding clauſe ſeems to direct the ſenſe; or in Jeruſalem, and which indeed was in the midſt of Judea; and this ſenſe is favoured by the Perſic verſion, which renders it, within the city; let them go out of it, as the chriſtians did to Pella, mount Libanus, and other places: and let not them that are in the countries; either foreign countries, or in country towns and villages: enter thereinto; either into Judea, or into Jeruſalem; contrary to this advice, they came from all countries to the feaſt of the paſſover at Jeruſalem, and were there ſhut up by the ſiege and deſtroyed [c].

Ver. 22. For theſe be the days of vengeance, &c.] Of God's vengeance on the Jewiſh nation, for their rejection and crucifixion of the Meſſiah; that all things which are written may be fulfilled; as in Moſes and the prophets; ſee Deut. xxviii. 20—68. and xxxii. 22—26. Iſa. vi. 10, 11, 12. Dan. ix. 26, 27.

Ver. 23. But wo unto them that are with child, &c.] See the note on Matt. xxiv. 19. For there ſhall be great diſtreſs in the land; of Judea. The Greek word αναγκη, here uſed, properly ſignifies neceſſity, but here intends afflictions and diſtreſs; in which ſenſe it is often uſed by the Septuagint, as in Pſal. cvii. 6, 13, 19, 28. and cxix. 143. and Jer. ix. 15. and it is alſo by the Targumiſts adopted into their language, and uſed in the ſame ſenſe [d]: and indeed, the diſtreſs was very great, and ſuch a time of tribulation, as was never known ſince the beginning of the world, nor never will be the like; what with the enemy without, and their ſeditions and diviſions within, the robberies, murders, and famine, which prevailed and abounded, their miſeries are not to be expreſſed: and wrath upon this people; of the Jews; even the wrath of God, as well as of man, which came upon them to the uttermoſt; and their own hiſtorian obſerves, that God, who had condemned the people, turned every way of ſalvation to their deſtruction [e].

Ver. 24. And they ſhall fall by the edge of the ſword, &c.] Or mouth of the ſword, an Hebraiſm; ſee the Septuagint in Jud. i. 8, 25. The number of thoſe that periſhed by the famine and ſword, were eleven hundred thouſand [f]: and ſhall be led away captive unto all nations; when the city was taken, the moſt beautiful of the young men were kept for the triumph; and thoſe that were above ſeventeen years of age, were ſent bound into Egypt, to labour in the mines; many were diſtributed through the provinces, to be deſtroyed in the theatres, by the ſword or beaſts; and thoſe that were under ſeventeen years of age, were led captive to be ſold; and the number of theſe only, were ninety-ſeven thouſand [g]: and Jeruſalem ſhall be trodden down of the Gentiles; the Romans, who ploughed up the city and temple, and laid them level with the ground; and which ſpot has been ever ſince inhabited by ſuch as were not Jews, as Turks and Papiſts: and ſo it will be, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled; that is, till the fulneſs of the Gentiles is brought in; until the Goſpel is preached all over the world, and all God's elect are gathered in out of all nations; and then the Jews will be converted, and return to their own land, and re-build and inhabit Jeruſalem; but till that time, it will be as it has been, and ſtill is poſſeſſed by Gentiles. The word Gentiles, is left out in one of Beza's Exemplars, and ſo it is likewiſe in the Perſic verſion.

Ver. 25. And there ſhall be ſigns in the ſun, and in the moon, &c.] They ſhall be darkened, and ſuffer very ſtrange and ſurprizing eclipſes: and in the ſtars; they ſhall fall from heaven, as in Matt. xxiv. 29. and ſo the Ethiopic verſion reads here: all which, as it may be underſtood in a literal ſenſe, ſo it may likewiſe in a figurative and myſtical one, and be interpreted of the changes there ſhould be in the Jewiſh ſtate; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 29. So the Jewiſh writers [h] interpret the ſun, the light, the moon, and ſtars, in Eccl. xii. 2. By the ſun they underſtand, the kingdom of the houſe of David; by the light, the law; by the moon, the Sanhedrim; and by the ſtars, the Rabbins; and the ſame ſeem to be deſigned by the ſtars here: and upon the earth diſtreſs of nations; upon the land of Iſrael, in the ſeveral nations and countries belonging to it; as Galilee of the nations, Judea, and the region beyond Jordan, ſhall be in great diſtreſs: with perplexity; of mind, not knowing what to do, which way to go, or ſtep to take; the Syriac verſion inſtead of it, reads clapping, or preſſing of the hands; which is done by perſons, when in an agony and great diſtreſs: the ſea and the waves roaring; which deſign ſome unuſual and extraordinary ſtorms and tempeſts, and inundations in the ſea of Galilee, or Tiberias, which would be ſo very terrible, as to cauſe great uneaſineſs, diſtreſs, and perplexity; and ſo ſome verſions render it, becauſe of the ſea, &c.

Ver. 26. Mens hearts failing them for fear, &c.] Of what theſe ſigns in the heaven, earth, and ſea portend: and for looking after thoſe things which are coming on the earth; on the land of Judea: for the powers of heaven ſhall be ſhaken; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 29.

Ver. 27. And then ſhall they ſee the Son of man, &c.] See the note on Matt. xxiv. 30.

Ver. 28. And when theſe things begin to come to paſs, &c.] When the firſt of theſe ſigns appears, or any one of them: then look up and lift up your heads; be chearful and pleaſant; don't hang down your heads as bullruſhes, but erect them, and put on a chearful countenance, and look upwards, from whence your help comes; and look out wiſhly and intently, for your ſalvation and deliverance: for your redemption draweth nigh; not the redemption of their ſouls from ſin, ſatan, the law, the world, death, and hell; for that was to be obtained, and was obtained, before any of theſe ſigns took place; nor the redemption of their bodies at the laſt day, in the reſurrection, called the day of redemption; for this reſpects ſomething that was to be, in the preſent age and generation; ſee ver. 32. but the deliverance of the apoſtles and other chriſtians, from the perſecutions of the Jews; which were very violent, and held till theſe times, and then they were freed from them: or by redemption is meant, the Redeemer, the Son of man, who ſhall now come in power and glory, to deſtroy the Jews, and deliver his people; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, for he draws nigh who ſhall ſave you.

Ver. 29. And he ſpake to them a parable, &c.] That is, to his diſciples: behold the fig-tree, and all the trees; that, or any other tree; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 32.

Ver. 30. When they now ſhoot forth, &c.] Their buds, branches, and leaves; the Vulgate Latin adds, of themſelves: ye ſee and know of your own ſelves; without any hint, or direction from others, the caſe is ſo plain and obvious; the Syriac and Arabic verſions read, of them; the trees, by their putting forth their buds and leaves; the Perſic and Ethiopic verſions, leave out the clauſe of yourſelves; and none of the Oriental verſions read the word ſee: the ſummer is now nigh at hand; ſee Matt. xxiv. 32.

Ver. 31. So likewiſe when ye ſee theſe things come to paſs, &c.] The ſigns before-mentioned, in ver. 8, 9, 10, 11, 20, 25, 26. Know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand; a more viſible and glorious diſplay of the kingdom of the Meſſiah, in the deſtruction of his enemies, the Jews; ſee Mark ix. 1.

Ver. 32, 33. Verily I ſay unto you, this generation, &c.] See the notes on Matt. xxiv. 34, 35. All the Oriental verſions read here as there, all theſe things; before related.

Ver. 34. And take heed to yourſelves, &c.] To your ſouls and bodies, to your lives and converſations; be upon your watch and guard: leſt your hearts be overcharged with ſurfeiting and drunkenneſs; with exceſſive eating and drinking; for theſe, as they oppreſs and burden the ſtomach, and diſorder the body, ſo they ſtupify the ſenſes, and make the mind dull and heavy, and unfit for ſpiritual and religious exerciſes; ſuch as reading, meditation, and prayer: and cares of this life; concerning food and cloathing, what you ſhall eat or drink, or wherewith ye ſhall be cloathed; all ſuch anxious and worldly cares, being that to the ſoul, as intemperance is to the body; for there is ſuch a thing as being inebriated with the world, as well as with wine: and ſo that day come upon you unawares; the day of Jeruſalem's deſtruction; and this ſuggeſts, that ſuch would be the carnality and ſecurity of ſome perſons, and ſo would be ſurprized with ruin at once; ſee ch. xvii. 26—30.

Ver. 35. For as a ſnare ſhall it come, &c.] In which a bird is ſuddenly taken, and cannot get out again; the Perſic verſion renders it, as lightning and the ſplendor of the ſun; which break out at once, and enlighten the whole earth; ſo the deſtruction of the Jewiſh nation, ſhould be ſudden, and unavoidable, and univerſal; for it ſhould come come on all them that dwell upon the face of the whole earth: or land of Judea; and ſo it was, for not only Jeruſalem, but all Judea, and Galilee, ſuffered in this deſolation.

Ver. 36. Watch ye therefore, and pray always, &c.] Watch againſt every ſin, ſnare, and temptation; particularly, againſt the above things, ſurfeiting, drunkenneſs, and worldly cares; pray continually, for freſh ſupplies of grace: that ye may be counted worthy; not for watchfulneſs and prayer, but through the grace and goodneſs of God: to eſcape all theſe things that ſhall come to paſs; the dreadful miſeries and diſtreſs, that ſhall come upon the Jews: and to ſtand before the Son of man; with intrepidity, confidence, and pleaſure; and meet him at his coming in this way, with joy and comfort; and likewiſe at death, and at judgment; ſee 1 John ii. 28.

Ver. 37. And in the day time he was teaching in the temple, &c.] That is, Jeſus, as the Perſic verſion expreſſes it; his conſtant method every day, till the feaſt of paſſover came, was to go up to the temple, and there openly and freely preach the Goſpel to the people, who reſorted thither in great numbers, for that purpoſe: and at night he went out; of the temple, and out of the city: and abode in the mount that is called the mount of Olives; very likely to pray, both for himſelf and for his diſciples, his time with them being ſhort.

Ver. 38. And all the people came early in the morning, &c.] Not all the people in Jeruſalem, every inhabitant of the city; this word all, is often to be taken with a reſtriction, and here it deſigns a large number; the Perſic verſion renders it, vaſt multitudes: theſe, ſome out of curioſity, and others from a real love to him, and his miniſtry, roſe betimes, and came early, to him in the temple, to hear him; which is ſaid, in commendation of Chriſt's hearers, and is worthy of imitation; as the former verſe is a commendation of the preacher, in his conſtancy and diligence in his work, and following it with his prayers.

CHAP. XXII.

Ver. 1. NOW the feaſt of unleavened bread drew nigh, &c.] Which laſted ſeven days; during which the Jews eat their bread without leaven, in commemoration of the haſte in which they went out of Egypt; being ſuch, that they had not time to leaven their dough, but took it with their kneading-troughs along with them, as it was; and as figurative of the unleavened bread of ſincerity and truth, with which the Goſpel feaſt is to be kept; ſee Exod. xii. 34. 1 Cor. v. 8. Which is called the paſſover; becauſe the Lord paſſed over the houſes of the Iſraelites, when he ſlew all the firſt-born in Egypt; now the time of this feaſt drew near, when the conſpiracy was formed againſt the life of Chriſt: Matthew and Mark are more expreſs, and ſuggeſt, that it was two days before the paſſover; ſee Matt. xxvi. 2. Mark xiv. 1.

Ver. 2. And the chief prieſts and Scribes, &c.] Matthew adds, and the elders of the people; which made up the great Sanhedrim and council of the nation; theſe met together, not in their uſual place the temple, but at the palace of Caiaphas, the high-prieſt; ſee Matt. xxvi. 3. And ſought how they might kill him; that is, Jeſus, as the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions read; they had determined before, upon the advice of Caiaphas, to put him to death, and very likely had fixed what kind of death he ſhould die; ſee John xi. 49, 50, 53. and now they conſult together, of the manner of bringing it about, and at what time; and the majority were not for doing it on a feaſt-day, when there was a great concourſe of people, but with more privacy: for they feared the people; which were now in great multitudes with him, who came along with him from Galilee, and other parts; and had hoſanna'd him into the city, and ſtill abode with him, and their numbers were increaſing; and the Sanhedrim were aware, that at the paſſover there would be ſtill a greater company of people from all parts of the land; and they might conclude, that he would have a large number of his friends come out of Galilee, where he had been for the moſt part teaching, and working miracles; and they were afraid, ſhould they lay hold on him publickly, the people would riſe and ſtone them; at leaſt would reſcue him out of their hands, and diſappoint them of their deſigns.

Ver. 3. Then entered ſatan into Judas, &c.] At the ſame time that the Sanhedrim were ſitting, and conſulting about the death of Chriſt, ſatan, or the adverſary, as the word ſignifies, the devil, who is the enemy of the Meſſiah, the woman's ſeed, entered into Judas; not corporally, as he did into thoſe that were poſſeſſed by him; but he entered into his heart, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; he put it into his heart to betray him, as it is ſaid in John xiii. 2. he ſtirred up, and worked upon the corruptions of his heart; ſuggeſted evil things to his mind, and baited his temptations agreeable to his malice and covetouſneſs: and this man was ſurnamed Iſcariot; to diſtinguiſh him from another apoſtle of the ſame name; concerning this his ſurname, ſee the notes on Matt. x. 4. and John xiii. 2. Being of the number of the twelve; apoſtles, or diſciples of Jeſus, as the Perſic verſion reads, and which is an aggravation of his ſin: now this being two days before the paſſover, ſhows, that the ſop which Judas took, after which the devil entered into him, John xiii. 27. could not be the paſſover ſop, but was the ſop he eat at the ſupper in Bethany, in the houſe of Simon the leper, ſo long before it.

Ver. 4. And he went his way, &c.] From Chriſt, and the reſt of the apoſtles, out of Bethany; and when it was night, about two miles from Jeruſalem, whither he went directly: and communed with the chief prieſts and captains; that is, of the temple, as in ver. 52. and ſo the Perſic verſion reads, the militia of the temple; and the Syriac verſion renders it, the captains of the militia of the temple; inſtead of captains, the Ethiopic verſion reads Scribes, and ſo does the Arabic, and which adds, and the ſoldiers; but theſe captains were not Roman officers, or ſoldiers, but eccleſiaſtical perſons, who preſided in the temple, and were heads and governours, over bodies of men employed there, of which ſort were the following[i]: "there were fifteen, ממונין, preſidents, or governours in the ſanctuary, and ſo they were appointed for ever over each of theſe fifteen things, "one governour; and they are theſe: one was "over the times, or ſolemn ſeaſons; the ſecond, "over the ſhutting of the gates; the third, over "thoſe that kept watch; the fourth, over the ſingers; the fifth, over the cymbal, with the reſt of the ſinging inſtruments; the ſixth, over the lots; the ſeventh, over the neſts (of doves;) the eighth, over the ſeals, or tickets; the ninth, over the drink-offerings; the tenth, over the ſick (prieſts;) the eleventh, over the waters; the twelvth, over the buſineſs of the ſhew-bread; the thirteenth, over the buſineſs of the incenſe; the fourteenth, over the buſineſs of the vail; and the fifteenth, over the buſineſs of the prieſts garments; and every one of theſe governours, had under him abundance of men, that ſo they might prepare the buſineſs they preſided over." Theſe ſeem rather to be meant, than the watch in the temple; which, though kept in ſeveral places, there was but one ſingle perſon that preſided over it; as appears from the above account, and from what follows; and who was called the man of the mountain of the houſe, or the governour of the temple[k]: "in three places the prieſts kept watch in the ſanctuary, in the houſe of Abtines, and in the houſe of Nitzotz, and in the houſe of Moked, and the Levites in twenty and one places——the man of the mountain of the houſe, went round every ward with torches burning before him, and every one that was not ſtanding, he ſaid to him, peace be on thee; and if he found that he was aſleep, he ſtruck him with his ſtaff, and had power to burn his garments." Whence it does not appear to me, that there were heads or captains over every ward, as Dr. Lightfoot ſuggeſts, but one over them all; perhaps theſe captains may be the ſame with the governours of the temple, in 1 Eſdras i. 8. and vii. 2. But be theſe who they will, Judas it ſeems was informed where, and upon what they were met together, and he went to them, and converſed with them: how he might betray him unto them; in the moſt ſecret manner, and with the leaſt noiſe and diſturbance.

Ver. 5. And they were glad, &c.] For nothing could be more opportune and agreeable to them, than that one of his diſciples ſhould meet them at this juncture, and offer to put him into their hands in the moſt private manner; and covenanted to give him money. The Ethiopic verſion reads, thirty pieces of ſilver; which was the ſum they agreed to give him, and he accepted of; ſee Matt. xxvi. 15.

Ver. 6. And he promiſed, &c.] He undertook to deliver him into their hands; he laid himſelf under obligation to do it; he faithfully promiſed he would. The Arabic verſion renders it, he gave thanks; for the money he received, being well pleaſed he had made ſuch a bargain; and ſo the word here uſed, ſometimes ſignifies; and indeed commonly either to confeſs, or to give thanks, in which latter ſenſe it is uſed, in Matt. xi. 25. but here rather it is to be underſtood, in the ſenſe of promiſing: and ſought opportunity; the two days following before the paſſover: to betray him unto them in the abſence of the people; when they were gone from him, and he was alone; but found no opportunity of doing it this way, which they had agreed upon with him, and he had promiſed, until the night of the paſſover, when he was alone in the garden with his diſciples.

Ver. 7. Then came the day of unleavened bread, &c.] The firſt of them, the fourteenth day of the month Niſan: when the paſſover muſt be killed; that is, the paſſover lamb, as the Perſic verſion renders it; and which, according to the law in Exod. xii. 6. was to be done between the two evenings; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 17.

Ver. 8. And he ſent Peter and John, &c.] That is, Jeſus ſent them, as the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions expreſs it; theſe were two favourite diſciples of Chriſt, and were now ſent by him from Bethany to Jeruſalem: ſaying, go and prepare us the paſſover, that we may eat; it together; ſo ſervants uſed to be ſent, to go and prepare the paſſover for their maſters; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 17.

Ver. 9. And they ſaid unto him, where wilt thou that we prepare?] Meaning, not in what village, town, or city, for it was a fixed and determined thing, that the paſſover ſhould be eat at Jeruſalem, and no where elſe; ſee Deut. xvi. 2. but in what houſe in Jeruſalem?

Ver. 10. And he ſaid unto them, behold, &c.] Giving them a ſign, whereby they ſhould know the very houſe, where he would keep the paſſover: when ye are entered into the city; that is, the city of Jeruſalem; for Chriſt and his diſciples were now at Bethany, from whence he ſent Peter and John thither, where only the paſſover was to be killed and eaten: there ſhall a man meet you, bearing a pitcher of water; the Perſic verſion adds, upon his back; for which he had been to ſome well, or fountain in the city, in order to mix with wine at the paſſover: follow him into the houſe where he entereth in; ſo that it ſeems they were to return, and go after him into the houſe, where he went with his pitcher of water; this was a trial of the faith and obedience of the diſciples, and as the ſequel ſhews, a proof of the omniſcience and deity of Chriſt.

Ver. 11. And ye ſhall ſay unto the good man of the houſe, &c.] The maſter of it; for the man bearing the pitcher of water, ſeems to be a ſervant only: the maſter ſaith unto thee; by theſe his two diſciples, Peter and John; it looks as if the word maſter, as peculiar to Chriſt, and by way of eminency belonging to him, Matt. xxiii. 10. was well known to thoſe who believed, and were followers of him, as the man of this houſe might be; ſee John xi. 28. The Syriac and Perſic verſions read, our maſter ſaith, and leave out the other phraſe, to thee: where is the gueſt-chamber; or dining-room: the word properly ſignifies an inn, or place to bait at; ſo called, from travellers unlooſing their burdens there, either from themſelves, or their beaſts; the Arabic verſion renders it, the place of my reſt; a place for refreſhment and feaſting: where I ſhall eat the paſſover with my diſciples? who were a ſufficient number to eat the paſſover lamb by themſelves; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 18.

Ver. 12. And he ſhall ſhew you a large upper room furniſhed, &c.] With all things neceſſary, to eat and drink out of, at the paſſover; there make ready. The Ethiopic verſion adds, for us, as in Mark xiv. 15. The Perſic verſion renders it, there prepare a place; but this was prepared already; the words deſign the preparation of the paſſover, and every thing proper for it.

Ver. 13. And they went, &c.] From Bethany to Jeruſalem: and found as he had ſaid unto them; they met the man with the pitcher of water, and by following him, found the houſe Chriſt meant to keep the paſſover at; they told the maſter of it, what Chriſt ordered them, who immediately ſhowed them a very convenient room, as he had deſcribed to them: and they made ready the paſſover; provided a lamb, and got it killed and dreſſed, and prepared every thing neceſſary for the keeping of the feaſt, according to divine appointment; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 19.

[k] Miſn. Middot, c. 1. §. 1, 2.

Ver. 14. And when the hour was come, &c.] When it was evening, the laſt of the two evenings, when it was dark, at leaſt after ſix o'clock; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 20, he ſat down; or lay along on a couch, as was the cuſtom; ſee the note, as before: and the twelve apoſtles with him; for Judas, after he had made his bargain with the chief-prieſts, Scribes, and elders, came and took his place with the reſt of the apoſtles, both to cover his ſin, and to watch the beſt opportunity of betraying his maſter.

Ver. 15. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] The twelve apoſtles, as they were eating the paſſover, it being uſual to talk and converſe much at ſuch a time; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 21. With deſire have I deſired to eat this paſſover with you before I ſuffer; not for the ſake of eating; for though he was traduced as a glutton, and did often eat and drink in a free and familiar way, both at the tables of Phariſees, and of publicans and ſinners; yet he was not a man given to appetite; witneſs his faſt of forty days and forty nights, and his great negligence of himſelf, which ſometimes obliged his diſciples to pray him to eat; ſee John iv. 31, 34. Indeed, according to the Jewiſh canons, it was not judged proper, that a man ſhould eat much on the day before the paſſover, that he might be hungry, and eat the paſſover, בתאבון, with deſire [l], or with an appetite. Our Lord may allude to this; but this was not the thing he means; nor merely does he ſay this on account of the paſſover, as it was God's ordinance; tho' as he was made under the law, and that was in his heart, he had a great regard to it, and a delight in it, which he had ſhown in his frequent and conſtant attendance on it from his youth: but tho' he had kept many paſſovers, yet of none of them did he ſay, what he does of this, which was his fourth paſſover from his entrance on his public miniſtry, and his laſt: two reaſons are ſuggeſted in the text why he ſo greatly deſired to eat this paſſover; the one is, becauſe he ſhould eat it with his diſciples: an emphaſis lies on the phraſe, with you, to whom, and not ſo much to the paſſover, and the eating of that was his deſire; as it is to all his people: it was ſo from everlaſting when he deſired them as his ſpouſe and bride; and in time when he became incarnate, ſuffered, died, and gave himſelf for them: his deſire is towards them whilſt in unregeneracy, that they may be converted; and to them when converted, notwithſtanding all their backſlidings and revoltings. His deſire is to their perſons, and the comelineſs and beauty of them, which he himſelf has put upon them; and to their graces, and the exerciſe of them, with which he is raviſhed; and to their company and communion with them, which he chooſes and delights in: and his deſire is towards their being with him to all eternity, and which he delighted in the fore views of from eternity; and is the joy ſet before him, and which carried him through his ſufferings and death; and is the amount and accompliſhment of all his prayers and interceſſion: and the other reaſon of this his ſtrong deſire in the text is, that this was the laſt paſſover, and that his ſufferings and death were juſt at hand, and which he longed to have over; not that he deſired theſe ſufferings, for the ſake of them, which could not be agreeable to, and deſirable by his human nature, but becauſe of the effects of them; ſince hereby juſtice would be ſatisfied, the law would be fulfilled, ſin atoned for, and the ſalvation of his elect obtained; for whom he bore the ſtrongeſt affection, and whom he loved with a love of complacency, and whoſe ſalvation he moſt earneſtly deſired, and even ſufferings for the ſake of it.

Ver. 16. For I ſay unto you, I will not any more eat thereof, &c.] Of the paſſover, and which now, with the reſt of the ceremonial law, was to be aboliſhed: until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God; ſignifying, not that he ſhould eat of it in the kingdom of God, where it would be fulfilled; ſeeing the paſſover was never more to take place, neither in the Goſpel-diſpenſation, nor in the heavenly glory; both which may be meant by the kingdom of God; but that he ſhould never eat more of it in this ceremonial way, ſince it would have its accompliſhment in each of thoſe ſtates: and it has been already fulfilled under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, which is often meant by the kingdom of God; in himſelf, who is the paſſover ſacrificed for us, 1 Cor. v. 7. for the paſſover-lamb was a type of Chriſt, and he is the ſum and ſubſtance of that ſhadow, and the fulfilling end of that type; it had its accompliſhment in him; of which ſee the note on 1 Cor. v. 7. and it will alſo be fulfilled in the kingdom of heaven, or eternal glory, when there will be a perfect deliverance of the ſaints from ſin, ſatan, and the world; which the deliverance of the Iſraelites out of Egypt was typical of, commemorated in the paſſover; and therefore then will be ſung the ſong of Moſes, and the lamb; and then will Chriſt, and his true followers, eat and drink together in his father's kingdom, and ſpend an endleſs eternity in never-fading joys and pleaſures.

Ver. 17. And he took the cup and gave thanks, &c.] There were four cups of wine drank at the paſſover, which the pooreſt man in Iſrael was obliged to drink; and over each of which a bleſſing was pronounced [m]: and this was one of them, and ſeems to be the firſt; for the paſſover was begun by mixing a cup of wine, and bleſſing it, or giving thanks over it [n]; and which was uſually done in the following manner [o]: “ bleſſed art thou, O Lord our “ God, the king of the world, who haſt created “ the fruit of the vine: bleſſed art thou, O Lord “ our God, the king of the world, who hath “ choſen us above all people, and hath exalted “ us above every tongue, and hath ſanctified us “ by his commandments; and thou haſt given “ unto us, O Lord our God, in love, the ſtated “ feſtivals for joy, and the feaſts and ſeaſons for “ rejoicing; this day of the feaſt of unleavened “ bread, this time of our freedom, a holy convo- “ cation, in remembrance of the going out of “ Egypt; for thou haſt choſen us, and thou haſt “ ſanctified us, above all people; and the feaſts of “ thine holineſs with joy and rejoicing thou haſt “ made us to inherit: bleſſed art thou, O Lord, “ who haſt ſanctified Iſrael, and the ſeaſons: bleſſed “ art thou, O Lord our God, who hath kept us “ alive, and preſerved us, and haſt brought us to “ this time.” After this every one drank of his cup, and put it on the table: accordingly it follows, and ſaid, take this and divide it among yourſelves; that is, every one drink of it.

Ver. 18. For I ſay unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, &c.] That is, wine; ſee the bleſſing at the paſſover-cup in the notes on the preceding verſe: until the kingdom of God ſhall come; with power, as in Mark ix. 1. in the reſurrection of Chriſt from the dead; in his exaltation and ſeſſion at God's right hand; in the pouring forth of the Spirit on the Apoſtles; in the converſion of great multitudes both in Judea, and in the Gentile world; in the deſtruction of the Jews; in the latter day-glory; and in the ultimate ſtate of happineſs and bliſs in the world to come. The Ethiopic verſion reads, until I drink it new in the kingdom of God, as in Mark xiv. 25. ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 29.

Ver. 19. And he took bread and gave thanks, &c.] Or bleſſed it, as in Matt. xxvi. 26. Mark xiv. 22. Here begins the account of the Lord's ſupper after the paſſover was eaten: and brake it, and gave unto them; the diſciples, as is expreſſed in Matt. xxvi. 26. ſaying, this is my body; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 26. which is given for you; or will be given for you, as an offering for ſin in your room and ſtead; and accordingly it was given into the hands of men, and of juſtice, and unto death. The phraſe denotes the ſubſtitution and ſacrifice of Chriſt in the room of his people, and the voluntarineſs of it; and is only mentioned by Luke in this account: the Apoſtle Paul writes, which is broken for you, 1 Cor. xi. 24. alluding to the breaking of the bread in the ordinance, and as expreſſing the bruiſes, wounds, ſufferings, and death of Chriſt: the Ethiopic verſion here adds, for the redemption of many. This do in remembrance of me; that is, eat this bread in remembrance of my love to you, and in commemoration of my body being offered up for you. Obſerve this ordinance in the manner I now inſtitute it, in time to come, in memory of what I am about to do for you; for this direction does not only regard the preſent time and action, but is intended as a rule to be obſerved, by the churches of Chriſt in all ages, to his ſecond coming: and it is to be obſerved, that the Lord's ſupper is not a reiteration, but a commemoration of the ſacrifice of Chriſt. This phraſe is only mentioned by Luke here, and by the Apoſtle Paul, who adds it alſo at the drinking of the cup, 1 Cor. xi. 24, 25. The Perſic verſion here reads, do this perpetually in remembrance of me.

Ver. 20. Likewiſe alſo the cup after ſupper, &c.] Both after the paſſover, and the Lord's ſupper; that is, he took the cup after they had eat the bread, and gave thanks over it, and gave it to his diſciples, bidding them drink of it, as in Matt. xxvi. 27. ſee the note there: ſaying, this cup is the New Teſtament in my blood, which is ſhed for you. The Ethiopic verſion reads, for many; as in Matt. xxvi. 28. where it is added, for the remiſſion of ſins; ſee the note there.

Ver. 21. But behold the hand of him that betrayeth me, &c.] By the hand is meant, not figuratively the counſel, contrivance, and conſpiracy of Judas to betray him, as the word is uſed in 2 Sam. xiv. 19. but literally the hand of Judas, which was then dipping in the diſh with Chriſt, Matt. xxvi. 23. and it follows here, is with me on the table; and is an aggravation of his ſin, that one that ſat with him at his table, eat bread with him, and dipped his morſel in the ſame diſh, ſhould be the betrayer of him, according to the prophecy in Pſ. xli. 9. as well as deſcribes and points at the perſon that ſhould do this action, even one of his diſciples; for which diſciples he had juſt now ſaid, his body is given, and his blood is ſhed. The phraſe, with me, is left out in the Syriac and Perſic verſions. From Luke's account it appears moſt clearly, that Judas was not only at the paſſover, but at the Lord's ſupper, ſince this was ſaid when both were over.

Ver. 22. And truly the ſon of man goeth, &c.] That is, dies, which is going the way of all the earth, Joſh. xxiii. 14. as it was determined; in the counſels and purpoſes of God, and agreed to by Chriſt in the covenant of grace; ſee Acts ii. 23. and iv. 28. the death of Chriſt, the manner of it, and the means by which it was brought about, were all predetermined by God; yet this did not, in the leaſt, excuſe the ſin of thoſe concerned in it, nor exempt them from puniſhment: but wo unto that man by whom he is betrayed; who not only came to an untimely end, and died an infamous death by his own hands, but went to his own place, the place of everlaſting torments allotted him: wherefore in Matt. xxvi. 24. 'tis added, it had been good for that man if he had not been born; ſee the note there.

Ver. 23. And they began to enquire among themſelves, &c.] Two days before, at the ſupper in Bethany, when the ſame thing was hinted to them, they looked at one another, John xiii. 22. as perſons in the utmoſt ſurprize and conſternation, not being able, for a while, either to ſpeak to Chriſt, or one another; but now they enquired among themſelves, and of Chriſt likewiſe, Matt. xxvi. 21. which of them it was that ſhould do this thing; ſo barbarous, ſhocking, and horrible.

Ver. 24. And there was alſo a ſtrife among them, &c.] The Perſic verſion reads, at a certain time there was a contention among the apoſtles; and ſome think, that this refers to the time when the mother of Zebedee's two ſons aſked the favour of Chriſt, to ſet one of them at his right hand, and the other at his left, in his kingdom; which greatly incenſed the other diſciples, and occaſioned a diſpute about precedence; when our Lord interpoſed, and uſed much the ſame arguments as here; and which, 'tis thought, Luke here inſerts out of the proper place. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, then his diſciples diſputed among themſelves; pinning it down to this very time: and what might give occaſion to the preſent diſpute, may be what Chriſt had ſaid concerning the kingdom of God, ver. 16, 18. which they underſtanding of the temporal kingdom of the Meſſiah, and fancying, by his words, that it was near at hand, began to ſtrive among themſelves who ſhould be the greateſt in it; or it might be brought on by their enquiry among themſelves, who ſhould betray him, which might lead them on each one to throw off the imputation from himſelf, and to commend himſelf as a ſteady follower of Jeſus, and to expreſs his hopes of being his chief favourite, and principal miniſter in his kingdom: for the ſtrife was, which of them ſhould be accounted the greateſt; by Chriſt; or that ſhould be ſo in his kingdom. Perhaps the contention might be chiefly between Peter, James and John, the two ſons of Zebedee, and who were the favourite diſciples of Chriſt; and Peter might urge his ſeniority, and what Chriſt had ſaid to him, Matt. xvi. 18, 19. and the rather, ſince it is certain ſatan was now buſy about him; wherefore Chriſt calls him by name, and ſingles him out among the reſt, ver. 31.

Ver. 25. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] The diſciples; that is, Jeſus ſaid to them, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions expreſs: the kings of the Gentiles exerciſe lordſhip over them; by which our Lord would diſſuade his diſciples from ſeeking to introduce a ſuperiority over one another, ſince this was the practice of the heathens, of the men of the world, of ignorant Gentiles; whereas Chriſt's kingdom was a ſpiritual kingdom, and not of this world, and therefore not to be managed in ſuch a way. And they that exerciſe authority upon them are called benefactors; either by themſelves, or by their court-flatterers, to cover their ambition, tyranny, and cruelty. Two of the kings of Egypt were called by the name Euergetes[p]; the word that is here uſed, and tranſlated benefactors; and it was commonly given to other kings, princes, and men in power: ſo Cyrus was called by the Armenians; Antigonus by the Greeks; and Phylacus among the Perſians: the ſame name was given to Mithridates king of Pontus, to Titus Ælius Hadrianus, to Menander, to Marcus Aurelius Severus, and to Cato Uticenſis, and others[q].

Ver. 26. But ye ſhall not be ſo, &c.] See the note on Matt. xx. 26. but he that is greateſt among you; in age or gifts, or would be thought to be the greateſt, who is moſt ambitious of grandeur and authority, which perhaps might be Peter's caſe, who was the oldeſt man: let him be as the younger; as John, the beloved diſciple, who was the youngeſt of them; and be as modeſt, and as humble as he, and reckon himſelf as in his place, and condeſcend to men of low eſtates, and eſteem each other, even the youngeſt, better than himſelf. So the phraſe, היכרבא היכזעירא[r], both greater and leſſer, is uſed of the elder and younger. And he that is chief; that is, a ſpiritual ruler and governour in the church of God, as all the diſciples were: as he that doth ſerve; for the apoſtles and miniſters of the word, tho' they are over others in the Lord, and have the rule over them, yet they are ſervants for Jeſus ſake, and ſo ought to reckon themſelves; ſee the note on Matt. xx. 27.

Ver. 27. For whether is greater, &c.] Chriſt appeals to themſelves, and puts a caſe that is plain and obvious to any one, who is the greater, and more honourable perſon: he that ſitteth at meat; that ſits, or lies down at table, and another waits on him: or he that ſerveth? that ſtands behind, obſerves orders, and miniſters to thoſe that ſit down: is not he that ſitteth at meat? you, and every one muſt own, that he is the greateſt, and moſt honourable perſon: but I am among you, as he that ſerveth; Chriſt took upon him the form of a ſervant, and inſtead of being miniſtred unto, miniſtred to others; and had very lately, but two days before, girt himſelf, and took a baſon and a towel, and waſhed and wiped the feet of his diſciples: now our Lord, by his own example throughout the whole of his conduct among them, as well as by ſuch a ſingle action, would diſſuade from their ambitious views of ſuperiority over each other, and learn of him who was meek and lowly, and by love ſerve one another.

Ver. 28. Ye are they which have continued with me, &c.] From the beginning of his miniſtry, to that very time, they abode by him, and never departed from him, when others withdrew and walked no more with him: in my temptations; not in the wilderneſs by ſatan; for they were not with him then, not being as yet called to be his diſciples and followers: but his afflictions, by the reproaches, and cavils, and enſnaring queſtions of the Scribes and Phariſees, and their attempts upon him to take away his life by ſtoning, &c. which were trials and temptations to him. So the Ethiopic verſion renders it, in my affliction: now, ſince they had ſtood their ground, and firmly adhered to him in all his trials, he would have them ſtill continue with him, and in his intereſt, tho' they ſhould not have that temporal glory and grandeur they expected; but, on the contrary, freſh troubles and exerciſes, reproach, perſecution, and death itſelf; and, for their encouragement, he promiſes both pleaſure and honour, though of another ſort, than what they were ſeeking after.

Ver. 29. And I appoint unto you a kingdom, &c.] Not a temporal one, but a ſpiritual one; and either intends, that they ſhould have in the government of the church, peculiar to them, as apoſtles, they being ſet in the firſt, and higheſt place, and office, in the church; and have the keys of the kingdom of heaven, or the Goſpel-diſpenſation, and church-ſtate, committed to them, whereby they ſhould open the door of faith to men, both to Jews and Gentiles; and have the power of binding and looſing, or of pronouncing things to be lawful or unlawful to be retained and uſed, and even of remitting ſins in a miniſterial and declarative way; and not only of rebuking and reproving for ſin with authority, but even of inflicting corporal puniſhment on delinquents, and that in a very ſevere way, as in the caſes of Ananias and Sapphira, Elymas the ſorcerer, the inceſtuous perſon at Corinth, and Hymenæus and Philetus: or the kingdom of grace, which they had in common with all the ſaints, which lies not in outward things, but in righteouſneſs, peace, and joy, and which can never be moved, or taken away; by virtue of which Chriſt reigns in the hearts of his people, and they are kings, and prieſts to God, and have power, as princes, with God and men, and overcome, and reign over their own luſts, and the world, and ſatan: or that kingdom, and dominion, and greatneſs of the kingdom, which ſhall be given to the ſaints of the moſt high, Dan. vii. 27. in the latter-day glory and kingdom-ſtate of Chriſt on earth, when the ſaints ſhall reign with him: or the kingdom of glory prepared from the foundation of the world; a gift of our heavenly father's, which the ſaints are called unto, made meet for, and have a right unto, in Chriſt, and are heirs of, and into which he will introduce them at the laſt day: and indeed, all theſe ſenſes may be taken into the account of this text: as my father hath appointed unto me; a kingdom, not of nature and providence, which he has in right of nature, being of the ſame eſſence, and having the ſame perfections with his father; and in right of creation, all being made by him; for this is not given, or appointed to him; nor is he accountable for it to any, ſince he receives it not from any: but his mediatorial kingdom, which is given him, and which he will deliver up the account of to his father another day; ſee Dan. vii. 14. 1 Cor. xv. 24. which took place here on earth in the days of his fleſh; though it was not of this world, nor came with obſervation, or with worldly pomp and ſplendor; and became more viſible upon his reſurrection from the dead, his exaltation at the right hand of God, the effuſion of the ſpirit, the great converſions among men, and the deſtruction of the Jewiſh nation. This kingdom takes in the whole Goſpel-diſpenſation, reaching from the times of Chriſt being in the fleſh, to his ſecond coming; and comprehends all the elect of God, who are a kingdom of prieſts, or a royal prieſthood, in whoſe hearts Chriſt reigns by his ſpirit, and grace; it includes the whole viſible Goſpel church-ſtate on earth, which is God's holy hill of Sion, over which he has ſet Chriſt, as king, and which he governs by laws of his own enacting, and by governours appointed under him, among whom he'll reign; firſt more ſpiritually in the latter day, when the Goſpel ſhall be ſpread all over the world, and the kingdoms of this world, ſhall become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Chriſt; and next perſonally with all his ſaints together, for the ſpace of a thouſand years; and laſt of all triumphantly to all eternity, in the ultimate glory and kingdom of his father.

Ver. 30. That ye may eat, and drink, at my table, in my kingdom, &c.] In the Goſpel-diſpenſation, or Goſpel church-ſtate, in which Chriſt has a table, called the table of the Lord, 1 Cor. x. 21. which is the Lord's ſupper, and is a table well furniſhed with the beſt of proviſions, his fleſh and blood, of which believers may eat and drink with a hearty welcome; Chriſt himſelf being preſent to ſup with them: and in his perſonal reign on earth, where will be the marriage-ſupper of the lamb, to which all the ſaints will be called; and will ſit down with Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and be regaled with joys and pleaſures not to be expreſſed: and in the ultimate glory, when the lamb ſhall feed them, and ſhall lead them to fountains of water; and they ſhall never hunger nor thirſt more, but ſhall have fulneſs of joy, and be ſatiated with pleaſures that will never fade nor end: and ſit on thrones; expreſſive of the great honour and dignity they were raiſed to, both in this, and the other world, from a low and mean eſtate, being before as beggars on the dunghil, now among princes, and on thrones, even on the ſame throne with Chriſt; ſee 1 Sam. ii. 8. Rev. iii. 21. judging the twelve tribes of Iſrael; doctrinally and miniſterially; accuſing the Jews, and arraigning them for the crucifixion of Chriſt; paſſing ſentence upon them, and condemning them, and declaring that they ſhould be damned for their diſbelief and rejection of him; ſee the note on Matt. xix. 28.

Ver. 31. And the Lord ſaid, Simon, Simon, &c.] Peter is particularly, and by name, ſpoken to, either becauſe he might be a principal perſon in the debate and contention about ſuperiority, mentioned in the context; or becauſe he was chiefly to ſuffer in the following temptation of ſatan; or becauſe he was generally the mouth of the reſt of the apoſtles: and he is addreſſed, not by the name of Peter, the name Chriſt gave him, when he firſt called him, ſignifying his future ſolidity, firmneſs, and ſtedfaſtneſs; becauſe in this inſtance, he would not give any proof of it; but by his former name, Simon, and which is repeated, partly to ſhow the earneſtneſs of Chriſt in the delivery of what follows, and partly to expreſs his affectionate concern for him; ſo the Jews obſerve [s] concerning God's calling, Moſes, Moſes, Exod. iii. 4. that כפול לשון חבה, the doubling of the word, is expreſſive of love, and finding grace and favour; even as it is ſaid Abraham, Abraham, Gen. xxii. 11. or it may be to excite attention to what Chriſt was about to ſay. Though the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read the firſt of theſe, to Simon, thus; Jeſus ſaid to Simon, Simon, behold ſatan hath deſired to have you; not only Peter, but all the apoſtles; for the word υμας, you, is plural: ſatan the enemy of the woman's ſeed, the accuſer of the brethren, the wicked one, and the tempter, deſired, aſked leave of God, for he can do nothing without permiſſion; that he might have theſe diſciples, under his power, and in his hand; juſt as he got leave to have the goods, and even the body of Job in his hand, and fain would have had his life, and ſoul too, could he have obtained it; and he would have the lives and ſouls of others; for he goes about, ſeeking to devour whom he may; and he had now an evil eye upon the apoſtles, and wanted an opportunity to gratify his malice and envy: his end in deſiring to have them in his power was, that he may ſift you as wheat; not to ſeparate the chaff from the wheat, but to make them look like all chaff, by covering the wheat of grace with the chaff of ſin and corruption; or to deſtroy the wheat, was it poſſible; or to toſs them to and fro as wheat is in a ſieve; that is, to afflict and diſtreſs them; ſee Amos ix. 9. by ſcattering them both from Chriſt, and one another; by filling them with doubts about Jeſus being the Meſſiah and redeemer; and by frighting them with the fears of enemies and of death, which end he obtained; ſee Matt. xxvi. 56. Luke xxiv. 31. John xx. 19.

Ver. 32. But I have prayed for thee, &c.] Chriſt prayed for all the apoſtles; but particularly for Peter, becauſe he was in the greateſt danger: whether the prayer Chriſt refers to was that in John xvii. in which are many paſſages relating to the preſervation, ſanctification, final perſeverance and glorification of the apoſtles, as well as of other ſaints, as in ver. 9, 11, 15, 17, 20, 24. and ſo theſe words might be ſpoken a little after that prayer was ended, which was about this ſame time; or whether it was any other, and only mental, and not vocal, is not certain: however, the petition was, that thy faith fail not; ſatan in his temptations ſtrikes principally at the faith of God's people; that being a grace which gives much glory to God, and in the exerciſe of which believers have much peace, joy, and comfort; both which he envies and grudges; and it is alſo a ſhield which keeps off, and quenches his fiery darts, and is a piece of armour he is ſadly haraſſed with, and therefore endeavours all he can, to weaken and deſtroy it, or wreſt it out of their hands: but tho' thro' the power of ſin, and the force of temptation, it may fail as to ſome degree of the ſtedfaſtneſs of it, as to the actings and exerciſe of it, and as to the ſenſe believers may have of it; yet never as to its principle, it being an irrevocable gift of God's grace; a work of his almighty power; a ſolid and ſubſtantial grace, even the ſubſtance of things hoped for; an immortal and incorruptible ſeed, and of which Chriſt is the author and finiſher: and to nothing more is its ſecurity owing, than to the prayers of Chriſt, which are always heard, and to his powerful mediation, and prevalent interceſſion; Chriſt is the advocate of his people; he prays that they might have faith, and then he prays, that it may not fail; and it ſhall not, notwithſtanding all the oppoſition of hell, and earth, unto it: and when thou art converted, ſtrengthen thy brethren: Peter was now a converted man, and had been for ſome years; but whereas he would fall by temptation into a very great ſin of denying his Lord, and which was attended with ſuch circumſtances as made him look like an unconverted, and an unregenerate man; his recovery by the freſh exerciſe of faith in Chriſt, and repentance for his ſins, is called a converſion; and which was not his own act, but owing to the power and efficacy of divine grace; ſee Jer. xxxi. 18. Some verſions render it in the imperative, in time, convert, turn, or return, and ſtrengthen thy brethren; as the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions; as he afterwards did: for whereas all the diſciples forſook Chriſt, and fled, ſome one way, and ſome another, Peter, after his recovery, got them together again, and returned them to Jeruſalem; when they with him aſſembled together, till the third day Chriſt was riſen: he ſtrengthened their faith in the Meſſiah, and put them upon filling up the place of Judas, by chooſing another apoſtle; and on the day of pentecoſt pentecoſt preached a moſt excellent ſermon, which, as it was made uſeful for the converſion of three thouſand ſinners, was, doubtleſs, a means of confirming the minds of the diſciples; and he has left two exceeding uſeful epiſtles for the ſtrengthening of his brethren in all ages of time; the deſign of which is to eſtabliſh the ſaints in faith and holineſs, that they may not be drawn aſide, and fall from the ſtedfaſtneſs of their faith, either by the luſts of the fleſh, or by the perſecutions of men, or by the error of the wicked.

Ver. 33. And he ſaid unto him, &c.] That is, Simon, or Simeon, ſaid unto him, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions expreſs it; he made a reply to Jeſus, ſaying, as one fearleſs of danger, and confident in himſelf: I am ready to go with thee, both into priſon, and to death; he ſuggeſts, that he was not afraid of ſatan, nor of his temptations, of being ſifted, ſhaken, and toſſed by him: he was not to be frighted out of his faith by him, or to be ſcared with a priſon, and death itſelf; he was ready for both; and they were welcome, come when they would; and rather than part from, or deny his Lord, he was then prepared to go with him, at once, to either of them. The phraſe, to go, is not in the Syriac verſion.

Ver. 34. And he ſaid, &c.] To him, as all the Oriental verſions add; to Peter, as what is ſaid ſhews; that is, Jeſus ſaid to him, as the Syriac and Perſic veſions expreſs: I tell thee, Peter; who knew him, and his heart, better than he did himſelf, as well as knew what was to come, and what would befal him; and therefore declares it, as he does with the greateſt aſſurance and certainty, and which might be depended on, and accordingly came to paſs: the cock ſhall not crow this day; in this night, as in Mark xiv. 30. or this night, as in Matt. xxvi. 34. for it was now night; a natural day includes both night and day; a like way of ſpeaking, ſee in Luke ii. 8, 11. before that thou ſhalt thrice deny that thou knoweſt me; as he did, ver. 57, 58, 60. See the note on Matt. xxvi. 34.

Ver. 35. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] To the diſciples, as the Perſic verſion reads; not to Peter only, but to them all: when I ſent you without purſe, and ſcrip, and ſhoes; without the neceſſaries of life, without proper accommodation, for a journey, without proviſions, or money, to buy any with: ſo ανευ βαλαντιȣ, without a purſe, is, by the Scholiaſt on Ariſtophanes [t], interpreted by ανευ αργυριȣ και δαπανης, without money and expence: Chriſt here refers to his miſſion of them in Matt. x. 5, 9, 10. lacked ye any thing? any of the common bleſſings of life, food to eat, or raiment to wear? and they ſaid, nothing; they lacked nothing at all; wherever they came, they had friendly accommodations; they were provided with every thing neceſſary for them; they had both food and raiment, and good lodgings in every place; the houſes and hearts of men were opened by Chriſt to receive them, tho' they were ſent out by him, ſo empty and deſtitute.

Ver. 36. Then ſaid he unto them, &c.] That is, Jeſus ſaid unto them, as the Perſic verſion expreſſes it: but now he that hath a purſe let him take it, and likewiſe his ſcrip; ſignifying hereby, that from this time forward, immediately after his departure from them, after his death, reſurrection, and aſcenſion, when they ſhould be ſent into all the world to preach the Goſpel, it would be otherwiſe with them than before; that they ſhould be reduced to great penury and diſtreſs, ſhould neither have food, nor money to buy any with; and that they ſhould ſuffer hunger, and thirſt, and nakedneſs, and have no certain dwelling-place, as was their caſe; ſee 1 Cor. iv. 11. and that they would not be received, and entertained in the manner they had been; and therefore it would be adviſeable, if they had any proviſions, to take them with them in their ſcrips; or if they had any money, to carry it with them in their purſes; for glad would they be to provide themſelves with neceſſaries at any rate: and he that hath no ſword; the word ſword is not in this clauſe, but in the next; 'tis only in the original, he that hath not; which, at firſt ſight, looks as if the ſenſe was, he that hath not a purſe, or a ſcrip, to ſell, and buy a ſword with, let him ſell his garment, and buy one: but, as de Dieu obſerves, the phraſe, he that hath not, is the ſame with he that has nothing; who is a poor man, and has no money to buy a ſword with, let him part with his garment, which rich men, who had money, had no need to do; though the Syriac, Perſic, and Arabic verſions put the word ſword, in both clauſes: he that hath no ſword, let him ſell his garment and buy a ſword; that is, if he could get one no other way. Chriſt here uſes the common dialect of the nation, as Dr. Lightfoot obſerves. So on the feaſt of dedication of the temple, "if a "man had not any thing to eat, but what he had "by alms, he muſt beg, or מוכר כסותו, ſell his "garment, and take oil, and lamps, and light "them [u]." Theſe words of Chriſt are not to be underſtoood literally, that he would have his diſciples furniſh themſelves with ſwords at any rate, ſince he would never have ſaid, as he afterwards does, that two were ſufficient; which could not be enough for eleven men; or have forbid Peter the uſe of one, as he did in a very little time after this: but his meaning is, that wherever they came, and a door was opened for the preaching of the Goſpel, they would have many adverſaries, and theſe powerful, and would be uſed with great violence, and be followed with rage and perſecution; ſo that they might ſeem to ſtand in need of ſwords to defend them: the phraſe is expreſſive of the danger they would be expoſed to, and of their need of protection; and therefore it was wrong in them to be diſputing and quarrelling about ſuperiority, or looking out for, and expecting temporal pomp and grandeur, when this would be their forlorn, deſtitute, and afflicted condition; and they would quickly ſee the affliction and diſtreſs begin in himſelf. In ſeven ancient copies of Beza's, 'tis read in the future tenſe, he ſhall take, he ſhall ſell, he ſhall buy.

Ver. 37. For I ſay unto you, that this that is written, &c.] In Iſ. liii. 12. muſt yet be accompliſhed; it having not been as yet; at leaſt not ſo perfectly fulfilled: and he was reckoned among the tranſgreſſors. The Syriac and Arabic verſions read in the firſt perſon, and I ſhall be reckoned, &c. and ſo the Perſic verſion, that I may be numbered, &c. and the Ethiopic renders it, and the Lord Jeſus is numbered with ſinners; neither right: for the words are a proper citation from Iſ. liii. 12. which, as the whole prophecy belongs to the Meſſiah, was fulfilled in Jeſus; who, though he was no tranſgreſſor, yet being in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, and dwelling among, and converſing with ſinners, was traduced as one, and was joined with Barabbas, a murderer, a thief, and a robber, and put up with him for the people to chuſe which of the two they would have releaſed; and was at laſt crucified between two thieves; and more than this, being in the law-place, and ſtead of his people, and having their ſins laid upon him, and imputed to him, he was made and accounted, by imputation, imputation, not only a ſinner, but ſin itſelf; and as ſuch, was conſidered in the eye of the law, and by the juſtice of God, and was treated accordingly; ſee the note on Mark xv. 28. for the things concerning me have an end. The Syriac verſion renders it, all of them; or the whole of it, as the Ethiopic verſion; all that were concerning him; all the counſels, purpoſes, and decrees of God, relating to his ſufferings and death; to the manner in which his death was brought about, by one of his diſciples betraying him; to the ſeveral indignities he ſhould be uſed with, by Herod, Pontius Pilate, the Jews, and Roman ſoldiers; and to his death itſelf; all which were by the determinate counſel, and foreknowledge of God, and now were about to have, and quickly had their fulfilling end; as alſo all his own covenant-engagements and agreements he entered into with his father, to bear the ſins of many, to make his ſoul an offering for ſin, to be numbred with tranſgreſſors, and pour out his ſoul unto death; and likewiſe all the types and ſhadows of the law, all ſacrifices in general, and the daily ſacrifice in particular, with the paſſover, brazen ſerpent, and other things, even the whole law, both moral and ceremonial, had their full and final accompliſhment in him; together with all the prophecies of the Old Teſtament relating to this matter, particularly Gen. iii. 15. Pſal. xxii. 12—18. Iſ. liii. 5—12. Dan. ix. 26. Zach. xii. 10. and xiii. 6, 7.

Ver. 38. And they ſaid, Lord, behold here are two ſwords, &c.] That is, the diſciples ſaid ſo, as the Perſic verſion expreſſes it; for they underſtood Chriſt's words literally; and two ſwords being among them, and which they might bring with them from Galilee, to defend themſelves from thieves, and robbers, which infeſted the roads between that country and Jeruſalem; and one of theſe, as appears afterwards, belonged to Peter, they mention them with a deſire of knowing whether they were ſufficient, or whether they muſt provide themſelves with more: and he ſaid unto them, it is enough; or, they are ſufficient, as the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions render it; which muſt be underſtood, either ironically; yes, two ſwords to be ſure, are ſufficient for eleven men, and againſt many and powerful enemies: or his meaning is, they were ſufficient to anſwer his purpoſe, and be an emblem of what he deſigned by the ſword; or this was a ſhort way of ſpeaking, ſuggeſting their ſtupidity and ignorance; it is enough, it is very well, I perceive you don't underſtand my meaning, and I ſhall ſay no more at preſent.

Ver. 39. And he came out, &c.] That is, Chriſt, as the Perſic verſion; or the Lord Jeſus, as the Ethiopic verſion expreſſes; he came out of the gueſt-chamber, or upper-room, and out of the houſe where he had been keeping the paſſover with his diſciples; and he came out of the city of Jeruſalem, to begin his ſorrows and ſufferings without the camp, where he was to end them: and went, as he was wont, to the mount of Olives. This had been his practice and cuſtom for ſeveral nights paſt, as appears from chap. xxi. 37. Hence Judas knew the place he now went to, and could direct the ſoldiers and officers where to go, and apprehend him; and this ſhews the willingneſs of Chriſt to be taken, in order to ſuffer and die; otherwiſe he would have gone to another place, and not this. The Ethiopic verſion adds, to pray, as he did; and, as very likely he was uſed; for he would ſometimes continue a whole night in prayer on a mountain; ſee Luke vi. 12. and his diſciples alſo followed him; eleven of them, for Judas was now gone to the chief-prieſts to inform them where Chriſt was going, that they might ſeize him: but the other diſciples followed him, which was ſo ordered, that they might be witneſſes of his ſorrows and agonies in the garden, and of his being betrayed by Judas, and apprehended by the Jews; though upon this they forſook him and fled.

Ver. 40. And when he was at the place, &c.] In the garden, at Gethſemane, which was at the foot of the mount of Olives; he ſaid unto them; to the diſciples, as the Perſic verſion reads; pray that ye enter not into temptation. This, according to the Evangeliſts Matthew, and Mark, was ſaid to them after he had prayed the firſt time, and returned to the diſciples, and found them ſleeping; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 41.

Ver. 41. And he was withdrawn from them, &c.] That is, from the three diſciples, Peter, James, and John, whom he took along with him, leaving the reſt at ſome further diſtance; and from theſe he removed, about a ſtone's caſt; fifty, or ſixty feet from the place where they were: and kneeled down and prayed; the following prayer.

Ver. 42. Saying, father, if thou be willing, &c.] If it be conſiſtent with thy will of ſaving ſinners, and which thou haſt declared to me, and I have undertook to perform: the other Evangeliſts ſay, if it be poſſible; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 39. remove this cup from me; meaning, either his preſent ſorrows and diſtreſs, or his approaching ſufferings and death, which he had in view, or both: nevertheleſs not my will; as man, for Chriſt had an human will diſtinct from, though not contrary to his divine will: but thine be done; which Chriſt undertook, and came into this world to do; and it was his meat and drink to do it, and was the ſame with his own will, as the ſon of God; ſee the notes on Matt. xxvi. 39, 42.

Ver. 43. And there appeared an angel unto him from heaven, &c.] Whether this was Michael the archangel, as ſome have conjectured, or Gabriel, or what particular angel, is not for us to know, nor is it of any importance: 'tis certain, it was a good angel; an angel of God, as the Ethiopic verſion reads; ſince he came from heaven, and was one of the angels of heaven, ſent by God on this occaſion; and it is clear alſo, that he was in a viſible form, and was ſeen by Chriſt, ſince he is ſaid to appear to him: ſtrengthening him; under his preſent diſtreſs, againſt the terrors of ſatan, and the fears of death, by aſſuring him of the divine favour, as man, and of the fulfilment of the promiſes to him to ſtand by him, aſſiſt, ſtrengthen, and carry him thro' what was before him; and by obſerving to him the glory and honour he ſhould be crowned with, after his ſufferings and death, and the compleat ſalvation of his people, which would be obtained hereby, and which was the joy ſet before him; and which animated him, as man, to bear the croſs, and deſpiſe the ſhame with a brave and heroic ſpirit. Now, though God the Father could have ſtrengthened the human nature of Chriſt, without making uſe of an angel; and Chriſt could have ſtrengthened it himſelf, by his divine nature, to which it was united; but the human nature was to be brought into ſo low a condition, and to be left to its ſelf, as to ſtand in need of the aſſiſtance of an angel: and this ſhows not only the miniſtration of angels to Chriſt, as man, but that he was at this preſent time made a little lower than the angels, who was the creator and Lord of them; as he afterwards more apparently was, through the ſufferings of death.

Ver. 44. And being in an agony, &c.] Or in a conflict, and combat; that is, with the devil, who now appeared viſibly to him, in an horrible form: after his temptations in the wilderneſs ſatan left him for a ſeaſon, till another opportunity ſhould offer; and now it did; now the prince of this world came to him; ſee Luke iv. 13. John xiv. 30. and attacked him in a garden, where the firſt onſet on human nature was made: and now began the battle between the two combatants, the ſerpent, and the ſeed of the woman; which iſſued in the deſtruction of ſatan, and the recovery of mankind. The Arabic verſion leaves out this clauſe; and the Syriac verſion renders it, being in fear; and to the ſame purpoſe are the Perſic and Ethiopic verſions; that is, of death; and muſt be underſtood of a ſinleſs fear of death in his human nature, to which death being a diſſolution of it muſt be diſagreeable; tho' not death, barely conſidered, was the cauſe of this fear, diſtreſs, and agony he was in; but as it was to be inflicted on him for the ſins of his people, which he bore, and as it was the curſe of the law, and the effect of divine wrath and diſpleaſure: he prayed more earneſtly; repeating the words he had ſaid before with great eagerneſs and importunity, with intenſeneſs of mind, and fervor of ſpirit, with ſtrong crying, and tears to him that was able to ſave him from death, Heb. v. 7. and his ſweat was, as it were, great drops of blood falling to the ground. This account of Chriſt's bloody ſweat is only given by Luke, who being a phyſician, as is thought, more diligently recorded things which belonged to his profeſſion, to take cognizance of; nor ſhould it be any objection to the truth and credibility of this fact, that it is not mentioned by the other Evangeliſts, ſince it is no unuſual thing with them for one to record that which is omitted by another; nor that this is wanting in ſome Greek and Latin copies, as Jerom [w], and Hilary [x] obſerve; ſince it was expunged, as is ſuppoſed, either by ſome orthodox perſons, who weakly thought it might ſeem to favour the Arians, who denied that Chriſt was of the ſame impaſſible nature with the Father; or rather by the Armenians, or by a ſett of men called Aphthartodocetæ, who aſſerted the human nature of Chriſt to be incorruptible: but certain it is, that it is in the moſt ancient and approved copies, and in all the Oriental verſions, and therefore to be retained; to which may be added, that it is taken notice of, not to mention others, by thoſe two early writers, Juſtin Martyr [y], and Irenæus [z]: nor ſhould its being ſo ſtrange and unuſual a ſweat, at all diſcredit the hiſtory of it, ſince there have been inſtances of this kind ariſing from various cauſes; and if there had been none, ſince the caſe of our Lord was ſingular, it ought to be credited. This bloody ſweat did not ariſe from a cachexy, or ill ſtate of body, which has ſometimes been the cauſe of it, as Ariſtotle obſerves, who ſays [a], that the blood ſometimes becomes ſanious, and ſo ſerous, inſomuch that ſome have been covered with a bloody ſweat: and in another place he ſays [b], that thro' an ill habit of body it has happened to ſome, that they have ſweat a bloody excrement. Bartholinus produces inſtances in plagues and fevers [c]; but nothing of this kind appears in Chriſt, whoſe body was hale and robuſt, free from diſtempers and diſeaſes, as it was proper it ſhould, in order to do the work, and endure the ſufferings he did; nor did it ariſe from any external heat, or a fatiguing journey. The above writer [d] relates, from Actuarius, a ſtory of a young man that had little globes of blood upon his ſkin, by ſweat, thro' the heat of the ſun, and a laborious journey. Chriſt's walk from Jeruſalem to the garden was but a ſhort one; and it was in the night when he had this ſweat, and a cold night too; ſee John xviii. 18. it rather aroſe from the agony in which he was before related: perſons in an agony, or fit of trembling, ſweat much, as Ariſtotle obſerves [e]; but to ſweat blood is unuſual. This might be occaſioned by his vehement ſtriving and wreſtling with God in prayer, ſince the account follows immediately upon that; and might be owing to his ſtrong cries, to the intenſeneſs and fervor of his mind, and the commotion of the animal ſpirits, which was now very great, as ſome have thought; or, as others, to the fear of death, as it was ſet before him in ſo dreadful a view, and attended with ſuch horrible circumſtances. Thuanus [f], a very grave and credible hiſtorian, reports of a governour of a certain garriſon, who being, by a ſtratagem, decoyed from thence, and taken captive, and threatened with an ignominious death, was ſo affected with it, that he ſweat a bloody ſweat all over his body. And the ſame author [g] relates of a young man of Florence, who being, by the order of pope Sixtus the fifth, condemned, as he was led along to be executed, thro' the vehemence of his grief diſcharged blood inſtead of ſweat, all over his body: and Maldonate, upon this paſſage, reports, that he had heard it from ſome who ſaw, or knew it, that at Paris a man, robuſt, and in good health, hearing that a capital ſentence was pronounced upon him, was, at once, all over in a bloody ſweat: which inſtances ſhow, that grief, ſurprize, and fear, have ſometimes had ſuch an effect on men; but it was not mere fear of death, and trouble of mind, concerning that, which thus wrought on our Lord, but the ſenſe he had of the ſins of his people, which were imputed to him, and the curſe of the righteous law of God, which he endured, and eſpecially the wrath of God, which was let into his ſoul: tho' ſome have thought this was owing to the conflict Chriſt had with the old ſerpent the devil; who, as before obſerved, now appeared to him in a frightful form: and very remarkable is the paſſage which Dr. Lightfoot, and others, have cited from Diodorus Siculus, who reports of a certain country, that there are ſerpents in it, by whoſe bites are procured very painful deaths; and that grievous pains ſeize the perſon bitten, and alſo a flow of ſweat like blood. And other writers [h] make mention of a kind of aſp, or ſerpent, called Hæmorrhois; which, when it bites a man, cauſes him to ſweat blood: and ſuch a bloody ſweat it ſhould ſeem was occaſioned by the bite of the old ſerpent ſatan, now nibbling at Chriſt's heel, which was to be bruiſed by him: but of all the reaſons and cauſes of this uncommon ſweat, that of Clotzius is the moſt ſtrange, that it ſhould ariſe from the angels comforting and ſtrengthening him, and from the chearfulneſs and fortitude of his mind. This writer obſerves, that as fear and ſorrow congeal the blood, alacrity and fortitude move it; and being moved, heat it, and drive it to the outward parts, and open a way for it thro' the pores: and this he thinks may be confirmed from the fruit and effect of Chriſt's prayer, which was very earneſt, and was heard, as is ſaid in Heb. v. 7. when he was delivered from fear; which deliverance produced joy, and this joy iſſued in the bloody ſweat. Some think the words do not neceſſarily imply, that this ſweat was blood, or that there was blood in it; only that his ſweat, as it came out of his body, and fell on the ground, was ſo large, and thick, and viſcous, that it looked like drops, or clots of blood: but the caſe rather ſeems to be this, that the pores of Chriſt's body were ſo opened, that along with ſweat came out blood, which flowed from him very largely, and as it fell on the ground, he being fallen on his face to the earth; it was ſo congealed by the cold in the night-ſeaſon, that it became really, as the word ſignifies, clots of blood upon the earth. The Perſic verſion, different from all others, reads, his tears, like blood, fell by drops upon the ground. This agony, and bloody ſweat of Chriſt, prove the truth of his human nature; the ſweat ſhows that he had a true and real body, as other men; the anxiety of his mind, that he had a reaſonable ſoul capable of grief and ſorrow, as human ſouls are; and they alſo prove his being made ſin and a curſe for us, and his ſuſtaining our ſins, and the wrath of God: nor could it be at all unſuitable to him, and unworthy of him, to ſweat in this manner, whoſe blood was to be ſhed for the ſins of his people, and who came by blood and water, and from whom both were to flow; ſignifying, that both ſanctification and juſtication are from him.

Ver. 45. And when he roſe from prayer, &c.] The Syriac verſion reads, from his prayer, having finiſhed it; and the Perſic and Ethiopic verſions read, from the place of prayer, or where he prayed: and was come to his diſciples; to the three, which he had left about the diſtance of a ſtone's caſt: he found them ſleeping for ſorrow; on his account; for he had ſignified unto them, how exceeding ſorrowful he was; and they might perceive by his looks and geſtures, the anxiety and diſtreſs of his mind he was in, which muſt needs affect them; and beſides, he had given them ſome intimations of his being to be betrayed by one of them, and of his ſufferings and death, and ſpeedy departure from them; and becauſe of theſe things, ſorrow had filled their hearts, and this had induced heavineſs and ſleep upon them; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 40.

Ver. 46. And ſaid unto them, why ſleep ye? &c.] The Arabic verſion prefaces this with theſe words, and he awaked them; and then rebuked them for ſleeping, adding, riſe and pray, leſt ye enter into temptation; together with words recorded in Matt. xxvi. 45, 46.

Ver. 47. And while he yet ſpake, &c.] The above words to his diſciples, behold a multitude. The Perſic verſion adds, of Jews, with arrows, ſwords, and ſpears: but the multitude conſiſted partly of Roman ſoldiers, and partly of the officers of the chief-prieſts: and he that was called Judas; and ſometimes Iſcariot, to diſtinguiſh him from another Judas, who alſo was of the number of the apoſtles: one of the twelve; diſciples of Chriſt, whom he had choſen, called, and ordained: went before them; as their guide, to ſhew them where Jeſus was, and to point him out unto them; ſee Acts i. 16. and drew near unto Jeſus to kiſs him; that being the ſignal he had given them, by which they ſhould know him. The Syriac verſion here adds, for this ſign he had given to them, whomſoever I ſhall kiſs, the ſame is he: and ſo likewiſe the Perſic and Ethiopic verſions, adding alſo this, lay hold upon him; but the whole ſeems to be tranſcribed from Matt. xxvi. 48.

Ver. 48. But Jeſus ſaid unto him, Judas, &c.] Calling him by his name, that he might know he knew him, and to aggravate his ſin; what, Judas, my apoſtle, my friend, my familiar friend, in whom I truſted, or with whom I truſted all my worldly affairs, betrayeſt thou the ſon of man with a kiſs! who aſſumed human nature for the good of mankind, who is the Meſſiah ſpoken of by the prophets, under the character of the ſon of man, and who is holy, harmleſs, and never did any mortal man any hurt or injury; and what, betray ſuch an one into the hands of his moſt implacable adverſaries, and in ſuch an hypocritical and deceitful way! all which Chriſt ſaid, to ſhow he was no ſtranger to what he was about to do.

Ver. 49. When they which were about him, &c.] That is, the eleven diſciples that were about Chriſt, and with him in the garden; ſaw what would follow: that their Lord and maſter was about to be betrayed by Judas, and would be ſeized, and carried away by the multitude, that were with him: they ſaid unto him, Lord, ſhall we ſmite with the ſword? or ſwords, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions read; with the two ſwords which they had along with them. This they ſaid, not being thoroughly acquainted with the mind of Chriſt in this matter, whether they ſhould uſe the temporal ſword or no; and might chuſe to ſhow this forwardneſs to ſtand by him, and defend him, remembering how lately they had ſaid, that tho' they died with him, they would not deny him; and might, no doubt, be thoroughly exaſperated and provoked to ſee Judas at the head of ſuch a mob, with ſwords and ſtaves, and burned with true zeal for their Lord and maſter; and might be the more ſpirited up to this, by obſerving, that the men fell backwards to the ground, upon Chriſt's ſaying that he was the perſon they ſought; at leaſt their dependance was upon the exertion of his almighty power; for they could never otherwiſe imagine that eleven men, with two ſwords only, would be able to defend him, and reſcue him out of the hands of ſuch a multitude.

Ver. 50. And one of them ſmote the ſervant of the high-prieſt, &c.] The perſon that drew his ſword, and performed this daring action, not waiting for an anſwer from Chriſt, was Peter, and the high-prieſt's ſervant, that he ſmote, was Malchus; both which we learn from John xviii. 10. and cut off his right ear; he aimed, no doubt, at his head, but miſſing his blow, took off his right ear. 'Tis very likely, that this ſervant was very buſy and forward to lay hold on Chriſt, and ſhewed much virulence, and great malignity; and therefore Peter ſingled him out, and levelled his blow at him.

Ver. 51. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid, &c.] Not to the queſtion of the diſciples, but either to Peter, who had done this raſh action; and ſo the Perſic and Ethiopic verſions add, to him; or elſe to the multitude, ſuffer ye thus far; or to them both, to Peter to ſtop his hand, to proceed no farther, but put up his ſword; and ſo the Arabic verſion reads, refrain thyſelf; and to the multitude to be eaſy, and not revenge the affront that was given them: and in order to pacify them, he went to the wounded man, as the Perſic verſion inſerts, and he touched his ear and healed him; which ſhows, that though the human nature of Chriſt was in a very low condition, yet he ſtill retained the power of doing miracles; and alſo his great humanity, by which example he confirmed his precept of doing good to enemies; and likewiſe hereby, gave full proof of his willingneſs to be apprehended by them; for otherwiſe, he that wrought ſuch a miracle as this, could eaſily have delivered himſelf out of their hands; and one would have thought this would have put a ſtop to them, and have convinced them of the truth of his being a divine perſon, and the Meſſiah.

Ver. 52. Then Jeſus ſaid unto the chief prieſts, &c.] After he had wrought this miracle, and had quieted the mob, and reſtrained them from falling upon the apoſtles, and cutting them to pieces, which in all likelihood they would otherwiſe have done; he addreſſed himſelf to the chief prieſts, who were members of the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, and the captains of the temple; ſee the note on ver. 4. And the elders which were come to him; which came along with Judas and the multitude, in order to ſee things done to their mind, and to animate both Judas and the ſoldiers and their officers, by their preſence, leſt they ſhould come without him, as they had before done, John vii. 45. Be ye come out as againſt a thief with ſwords and ſtaves? ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 55.

Ver. 53. When I was daily with you in the temple, &c.] As he had been for ſome days paſt, teaching the people, and diſputing with them, the chief prieſts, &c. ye ſtretched forth no hands againſt me; to lay hold upon him, and kill him; the reaſon was, becauſe his time was not come, and they had no licence or permiſſion to hurt him, or any power given them againſt him from above: but this is your hour; the time was now come for the betraying of him by Judas; for the ſeizing and apprehending him by the Roman ſoldiers and officers; and for the delivery of him into the hands of the chief prieſts and elders; and for them to inſult, mock, buffet, ſcourge him, and ſpit upon him: and for the crucifixion of him, and putting him to death: the hour fixed for this was now come: it was now, and not before, and therefore they could not lay hold on him, and do to him what they liſted, but now they might; yet this was but an hour, a ſhort time that they had to triumph over him, in Caiaphas's palace, and Pilate's hall, upon the croſs, and in the grave; for on the third day he aroſe again, notwithſtanding all the precautions they took, and is aſcended to heaven, and is received there, and is out of their reach: and ſince then, it has been his hour to take vengeance on them; on their nation, city, and temple, for their diſbelief, rejection, and ill uſage of him; and it will be likewiſe his hour at the day of judgment, when they ſhall look on him whom they have pierced, and mourn; and hide their faces from him, and call to the mountains to cover them, and when they'll be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction from his preſence: he adds, and the power of darkneſs. The Perſic verſion reads, the power of your darkneſs; that is, either the power granted to them, who were darkneſs itſelf, born and brought up in darkneſs; were walking in darkneſs, and in the ignorance of their minds; and did works of darkneſs, and ſhunned the light, becauſe their deeds were evil; and for which reaſon they now choſe the night, to execute their black deſigns upon Chriſt: or rather, the power of the prince of darkneſs is here meant; that power which he uſurped, and was now permitted him to exerciſe againſt Chriſt: and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, the power of the Lord of darkneſs; who was once an angel of light, but now full of darkneſs, and who darkens the minds of men, and for whom blackneſs of darkneſs is reſerved: the Jews were uſed to call the evil angels by this name; for ſo they ſay [i], "the deſtroying "angels are called, חשך ואפלה darkneſs, and thick "darkneſs." The ſenſe of the whole paſſage is, that now was the time come, that Chriſt ſhould be delivered up into the hands of wicked men and devils; that the former ſhould have him in their power, and triumph over him for a ſeaſon; and that hell was now let looſe, and all the infernal powers were about him, throwing their poiſoned arrows and fiery darts at him; all which Chriſt endured, to deliver his from the preſent evil world, from the wrath of God, the curſes of the law, and from the power of darkneſs.

Ver. 54. Then took they him, and led him, &c.] The band of ſoldiers, the captain, and the officers of the Jews, laid hold on Jeſus, and bound him, John xviii. 12. and led him out of the garden; notwithſtanding the miracle he had wrought, and the humanity he had ſhown in healing the ſervant's ear; and notwithſtanding his moving addreſs to the chiefs of them; and indeed, this was a confirmation of his laſt words; for by this it appeared, that now was their time, and power was given to them as the emiſſaries of ſatan, to act againſt him: and brought him into the high-prieſt's houſe; where the Sanhedrim were aſſembled; but this was not in the temple where they uſed to ſit: it is true indeed, that the chamber in the temple, called the chamber Parhedrin, or Palhedrin, was, בית דירה, the dwelling houſe of the high-prieſt, ſeven days before the day of atonement [k]; and this was alſo called the chamber of the counſellors [l]; ſo that had the time of year agreed, it might have been thought that this was the place that Jeſus was had to; but here the high-prieſt did not uſually dwell, and it is manifeſtly diſtinguiſhed from his own houſe: for it is ſaid [m], "ſeven days before the day of atone-"ment, they ſeparate, or remove the high-"prieſt, מביתו, from his houſe, to the chamber "of Palhedrin;" ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 3. And Peter followed afar off; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 58.

Ver. 55. And when they had kindled a fire in the midſt of the hall, &c.] It being cold in the nighttime, though it was at the paſſover, and the beginning of harveſt, the ſervants and officers of the high-prieſt's, made a fire in the middle of the hall, whilſt Jeſus was examining before the Sanhedrim, at the other end of it: and were ſat down together; about it, as the Syriac verſion adds, to warm themſelves: Peter ſat down among them; for the ſame purpoſe, and as if he was one of them; and which he might do, not only to warm himſelf, but to prevent his being taken notice of, and ſuſpected; as he might have been, had he been loitering about.

Ver. 56. But a certain maid beheld him, &c.] Looked upon him, and took notice of him, and obſerved his countenance and geſture: as he ſat by the fire; or light; ſee the note on Mark xiv. 54. And both by the light of the fire, and other lights, which were doubtleſs in the hall, ſhe diſcovered ſomething in him, which made her look at him again with ſome earneſtneſs: and earneſtly looked upon him, and ſaid, this man was alſo with him; that fellow, that vile and contemptible wretch, now examining before the high-prieſt; thus in a contemptuous manner, as was the cuſtom and ſtile of that nation, ſhe diſdained to mention the name of Jeſus; though the Perſic verſion here expreſſes it; and her ſenſe was, that Peter was one of that clan, a diſciple of his, and was only come hither as a ſpy.

Ver. 57. And he denied him, ſaying, woman, I know him not.] Startled at the maid's poſitive aſſertion, and knowing not how to clear himſelf any other way, roundly, and at once, denied that Jeſus was his maſter; or that he was a diſciple of his; or that he knew any thing of him, or had any acquaintance with him: and thus he that had ſaid he would die with him, rather than deny him, is frighted at a ſervant maid, and denies him upon the firſt attack upon him.

Ver. 58. And after a little while, &c.] A quarter, or half an hour after, within an hour at leaſt: another ſaw him; not another maid, but another man, as appears from the anſwer; though the Syriac and Perſic verſions leave out the word man, it may be becauſe Matthew and Mark repreſent the perſon, on account of whoſe words Peter denied Chriſt a ſecond time, to be another maid; but then it is to be obſerved, that that maid did not ſpeak directly to Peter, as this perſon did, but to thoſe that were preſent, or that ſtood by: and one of theſe taking the hint from her, looked at him, and ſaid, thou art alſo of them; of the diſciples of Jeſus of Nazareth; thou belongeſt to that company; thou art certainly one of his followers; and Peter ſaid, man, I am not. This was after he had been out into the porch, and had muſed upon it, and was come in again, but had not courage enough to withſtand the temptation, and eſpecially now, being attacked by a man; and ſo a ſecond time denies that Chriſt was his maſter, or that he was a diſciple of his.

Ver. 59. And about the ſpace of one hour after, &c.] After the firſt aſſault, or rather after the ſecond: another confidently affirmed; who was one of them that ſtood by the fire-ſide, and heard what had paſſed; and not only ſo, but was a kinſman to him, whoſe ear Peter had cut off, and who had ſeen him in the garden with Chriſt, and therefore with all aſſurance aſſerted it, as a matter of fact, as an unqueſtionable truth, and beyond all doubt: ſaying of a truth, this fellow alſo was with him; a diſciple and follower of Jeſus, and was with him when he was apprehended; I ſaw him there, and it may be depended on as a truth; and then added this reaſon, for he is a Galilean; you may be aſſured of this yourſelves, his ſpeech bewrays him; you may know him by his language, and which confirms my aſſertion.

Ver. 60. And Peter ſaid, man, I know not what thou ſayeſt, &c.] Suggeſting, that he was ſo far from being a follower of Jeſus, or a diſciple of his, and from having any perſonal acquaintance with him, that he did not know what he was talking of, or at leaſt could not underſtand what he meant by this harangue, or by talking after this manner about him; and then began to curſe and ſwear, and wiſh the moſt dreadful things to befal him, if he knew any thing of Jeſus of Nazareth: and immediately while he yet ſpake; in this ſhocking manner, with his mouth full of oaths, curſes, and imprecations: the cock crew; the ſecond time, Mark xiv. 72.

Ver. 61. And the Lord turned, &c.] Himſelf, his back being to Peter, whilſt he was examining before the high-prieſt; but he knew full well what was doing, what had been ſaid to Peter, and how often he had denied him: and looked upon Peter; with his bodily eyes, with great earneſtneſs, expreſſing in his looks concern and pity for him; for it was a look, not of wrath and reſentment, but of love and mercy, and power went along with it; it was not only a ſignal to Peter, to put him in remembrance of what he had ſaid, but it was a melting look to him, and a means of convincing and humbling him, and of bringing him to repentance: and Peter remembered the word of the Lord, how he had ſaid unto him, before the cock crow, thou ſhalt deny me thrice; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 75.

Ver. 62. And Peter went out and wept bitterly.] See the note on Matt. xxvi. 75.

Ver. 63. And the men that held Jeſus, &c.] Whilſt he was before the Sanhedrim; and were either the Roman ſoldiers, or the ſervants of the high-prieſt, who kept hold of him all the while, leſt he ſhould get away; though there was no reaſon for it; his time was come, nor would he eſcape out of their hands, though he could eaſily have reſcued himſelf: mocked him; inſulted him, and gave him very opprobrious language, and uſed him in a very ſcurrilous way, and even ſpit upon him; and ſmote him. This clauſe is left out in the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions; the word uſed, ſignifies plucking off the ſkin; they pinched him, and tore off his fleſh with their nails; they plucked the hairs of his beard, and the ſkin of his cheeks along with them, and ſo fulfilled Iſa. l. 6.

Ver. 64. And when they had blindfolded him, &c.] Or put a vail, or linnen cloth over his eyes, as children do at play, to make themſelves ſome ſport with him: they ſtruck him on the face; on that part of it which was not covered, either with their hands, or with rods: and aſked him, ſaying, propheſy, who is it that ſmote thee? hereby deriding his prophetic office, and uſing ſuch language as children do at blindman's buff; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 68.

Ver. 65. And many other things blaſphemouſly ſpake they, &c. As denying and ridiculing his deity, and divine ſonſhip; mocking at, and burleſquing his offices, of prophet, prieſt, and king; aſſerting him to be a mere man, and a very wicked one; a profane ſinner, a glutton, and a wine-bibber; a ſabbath-breaker, a blaſphemer, and a ſeditious perſon; and one that had a devil, or dealt with familiar ſpirits: and thus ſpake they againſt him; his perſon, office, and character.

Ver. 66. And as ſoon as it was day, &c.] See the note on Matt. xxvii. 1. The elders of the people; or the preſbytery of the people, that were choſen from among the people to ſit in the Sanhedrim; the Iſraelites, as diſtinct from prieſts and Levites, and the doctors; and the chief prieſts and the Scribes came together; which made up the great Sanhedrim, or council of the nation: and led him into their council; or Sanhedrim, the place where the Sanhedrim ſat, which was in the temple, and in the chamber called, לשכת הגזית, the paved ſtone chamber [n]; here they uſually met, and ſo the Perſic verſion renders it, where their congregation was daily there.

Ver. 67. Saying, art thou the Chriſt? &c.] The Meſſiah, promiſed and propheſied of by Moſes, and all the prophets, and long expected by us: tell us. The Ethiopic verſion adds, openly; tell us frankly, freely, plainly, as in John x. 24. And he ſaid unto them, if I tell you, you will not believe. The Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions read, will not believe me; neither what he ſaid, nor that he was the Meſſiah; they were determined not to believe in him, and receive him as ſuch; their unbelief was wilful, obſtinate, and invincible; they were proof againſt all arguments, evidence, and demonſtration itſelf.

[n] Miſna Sanhedrin, c. 10. §. 2. & Middot, c. 5. §. 3.

Ver. 68. And if I alſo aſk you, &c.] Or enter into a diſcourſe on this ſubject, and require an anſwer to the arguments, proving me to be the Meſſiah, or deſire to know what objections can be made thereunto: you will not anſwer me; fairly and directly, or go into a ſerious and ſober converſation on this head: nor let me go; or diſmiſs me, though I ſhould appear to be the Meſſiah, or ever ſo free from the charge of blaſphemy and ſedition; you are reſolved, right or wrong, to detain me in bonds, and take away my life; ſo that it ſignifies nothing ſaying any thing to you.

Ver. 69. Hereafter ſhall the Son of man, &c.] Meaning himſelf, who was truly man, and then in a low and mean form, and thought by the Jews to be a mere man; though this character was known by them to belong to the Meſſiah, eſpecially what follows; as that he ſhould ſit on the right hand of the power of God: as he did after his reſurrection, and aſcenſion, and which was manifeſt by the deſtruction of their nation, city, and temple; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 64.

Ver. 70. Then ſaid they all, &c.] The whole Sanhedrim, with one voice, being greedy to lay hold on, and improve theſe words, that they might have ſomething to lay to his charge: art thou the Son of God? for they knew that the Meſſiah, or the Son of man, that was to ſit at the right hand of God, and come in the clouds of heaven, was the Son of God: and he ſaid unto them, ye ſay that I am; or rather the words may be rendered, ye ſay it, and ye ſay right; it is the very truth: for I am; that is, the Son of God, as the Ethiopic verſion here adds; which ſenſe agrees with Mark xiv. 62. and the following words ſeem to require this ſenſe and verſion.

Ver. 71. And they ſaid, &c.] That is, the council, as the Perſic verſion reads; ſome of the members of the Sanhedrim, or the whole body of them: what need we any farther witneſs? or give any farther trouble in getting witneſſes, and hearing them: for we ourſelves have heard of his own mouth; his blaſphemy, and what amounts to a ſufficient charge of that kind; upon which they all pronounced him worthy of death, and determined to deliver him into the hands of Pilate the Roman governour, in order to paſs ſentence on him, and put him to death.

CHAP. XXIII.

Ver. 1. AND the whole multitude of them, &c.] Of the chief prieſts, Scribes, and elders; the whole of the Sanhedrim, excepting Nicodemus, and Joſeph of Arimathea, having in their court adjudged Chriſt to death: aroſe; from the council-chamber, where they ſat in judgment upon him: and led him unto Pilate; the Roman governour, and into the prætorium, or judgment-hall, where cauſes were tried by him; hither they brought Jeſus, having bound him as a priſoner and a malefactor, that their ſentence might be confirmed by civil authority, and that he might be put to the death of the croſs, which was a Roman puniſhment.

Ver. 2. And they began to accuſe him, &c.] After they found that Pilate would not receive him as a malefactor upon their word, and delivery of him to him as ſuch; but inſiſted on knowing what they had to charge him with, and what accuſation they had to bring againſt him: ſaying, we have found this fellow perverting the nation; the nation of the Jews. Three of Beza's copies read, our nation; and ſo do the Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions; and it is to be underſtood, either of his perverting the nation from the true doctrine of Moſes and the prophets; by ſpreading among them new notions, and falſe principles of religion; whereby he was a troubler of God's Iſrael, as Ahab charged Elijah, 1 Kings xviii. 17. where the Septuagint uſe the ſame word as here; and ſo is a charge of hereſy, or innovation in religion againſt Chriſt: and thus Jeſus ſtands charged in their writings [o]; on thoſe words in Pſal. xci. 10. Neither ſhall any plague come nigh thy dwelling, they have this note; “that thou mayeſt not have a ſon, or a diſciple, that corrupts his food publickly (i. e. his doctrine, who departs from the true doctrine and worſhip, to hereſy and idolatry, and propagates the ſame) כגון ישו הנוצרי, as Jeſus the Nazarene.” Which laſt clauſe, in ſome later editions of the Talmud, is left out: or it may be underſtood of his perverting the nation in their politicks, and ſo is a charge of ſedition againſt him, as follows; forbidding to give tribute to Cæſar; than which, nothing was more falſe; ſee Matt. xxii. 21. and xvii. 24—27. nor does what is after alledged, ſupport this charge: ſaying, that he himſelf is Chriſt, a king; or Chriſt the king, or the king Chriſt; that is, he whom the Jews ſo frequently in their writings call, מלך המשיח, the king Meſſiah; for ſo he might be, and was, without any hurt to Cæſar's dignity, or revenue; for though he was a king, yet not an earthly one; and though he had a kingdom, yet not of this world: indeed they would inſinuate by this, that he ſet himſelf up as an earthly king, in oppoſition to Cæſar, to draw off the people from him, and their allegiance and duty to him; and ſo the Jews ſay of Jeſus of Nazareth, that he was put to death, and had no mercy ſhown him, becauſe he was, קרוב למלכות, near to the kingdom [p]. The whole of this charge was untrue; he was ſo far from perverting the nation with falſe doctrine and worſhip, that he taught the true doctrine, and right way of worſhip, and refuted the falſe gloſſes of the Phariſees, and oppoſed the vain traditions of the elders, by which both were corrupted; and ſo far was he from any ſeditious principles and practices, or doing any injury to Tiberius Cæſar, the then reigning emperor, that he taught the people to give Cæſar, the things that were Cæſar's, and he himſelf paid the tribute money; and when the people would have took him by force, and have made him a king, he avoided it by getting out of the way, John vi. 15.

Ver. 3. And Pilate aſked him, ſaying, &c.] Obſerving that it was ſaid, he had given himſelf out to be a king; for as for what regarded religion, he took no notice of; he put this queſtion to him, art thou the king of the Jews? that their prophecies ſpeak of, and they have expected: and he anſwered him and ſaid, thou ſayeſt it; that is, thou ſayeſt well; it is as thou ſayeſt, I am the king of the Jews; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 25. tho' he did not leave this without an explanation; without informing him what a ſort of a king he was, and what kind of a kingdom he had; ſee John xviii. 36, 37. which made Pilate perfectly eaſy, and deſirous to releaſe him, as appears by what follows.

Ver. 4. Then ſaid Pilate to the chief-prieſts, and to the people, &c.] Both to the Sanhedrim, and to the mob that were gathered together about the governour's palace on this occaſion; and who were ſtanding without the judgment-hall, into which they would not enter, leſt they ſhould be defiled, and be unfit to eat the paſſover: wherefore Pilate came out to them; and this was the ſecond time of his coming out to them, when he ſaid the following words, John xviii. 28, 38. I find no fault in this man; no cauſe, or reaſon, why any puniſhment ſhould be inflicted on him, and eſpecially be put to death; no crime that can be faſtened on him, or accuſation proved againſt him, or any thing that amounts to a charge of ſedition: the man is an harmleſs and innocent man, that has done nothing againſt Cæſar, or the government, and good of the nation; and therefore is not worthy of death, or of ſtripes, but ſhould be diſcharged. This was Pilate's ſenſe.

Ver. 5. And they were the more fierce, &c.] Or urgent to have him put to death; ſo the Hebrew word חזק, is rendered in Exod. xii. 33. which anſwers to that here uſed. They cried out, as the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read; they were more clamours and noiſy; they cried out louder, and exerted themſelves with great fury and violence, and added ſtrength to their clamour, and increaſed their charges: ſaying, he ſtirreth up the people; to ſedition and rebellion: teaching throughout all Jury; or Judea; not in one, or a few places only, but every where: beginning from Galilee; where indeed our Lord did begin his miniſtry, and where he chiefly taught; ſee Matt. iv. 12, 17, 23. and which they rather choſe to mention, becauſe that the Galileans were reckoned a ſeditious people, and had been drawn into rebellion, and had ſuffered for it; ſee Acts v. 37. Luke xiii. 1. to this place; the city of Jeruſalem, the metropolis of the nation; ſuggeſting, that he taught ſeditious principles not only in Galilee, but all the way from thence throughout Judea, and even in their chief city, and had drawn many diſciples after him every where; ſo that it was a notorious caſe, as well as of great conſequence, and much danger, and ought not to trifled with.

Ver. 6. When Pilate heard of Galilee, &c.] The name of Galilee, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions read: when that was mentioned, he aſked; the Ethiopic verſion ſays, the Galileans; ſome of which might be preſent, being come to the feaſt of the paſſover, and were very proper perſons to enquire of: whether the man were a Galilean; ſo Jeſus was reputed to be; for tho' he was born at Bethlehem of Judah, he was brought up at Nazareth in Galilee, where he ſpent the greater part of his private life, and his public miniſtry was chiefly exerciſed in thoſe parts; hence the Jews thought, that he came out of Galilee, and was a Galilean, John vii. 41, 52. and ſo he uſed to be called by Julian the apoſtate; and it ſeems, that the anſwer returned to Pilate was, that he was a Galilean; and ſo the Perſic verſion adds, and they ſaid, yes; for it follows;

Ver. 7. And as ſoon as he knew that he belonged unto Herod's juriſdiction, &c.] The country which was under his power, and he had the government of; for Herod was Tetrarch of Galilee, Luke iii. 1. This was Herod Antipas, the ſon of Herod the great, and the ſame that beheaded John the Baptiſt; wherefore as ſoon as Pilate found that Jeſus was one of his province, immediately he ſent him to Herod; to be examined, and to have his cauſe tried before him: and this he did partly, that he might be rid of this troubleſome buſineſs; and partly that he might ſhew to Herod what a regard he had to his juriſdiction, and power; and that he was unwilling to break in upon it, or uſurp that to himſelf, which did not belong to him: the way from Pilate's hall, to the place where Herod was, is computed, by Adrichomius to be about three hundred and fifty ſteps: who himſelf was alſo at Jeruſalem at that time; or in thoſe days; the days of the paſſover; for Herod being born a Jew, and the ſon of a proſelyte, was come to Jeruſalem, at this time, to keep the feaſt of the paſſover.

Ver. 8. And when Herod ſaw Jeſus, he was exceeding glad, &c.] For tho' he had been brought up in his country, and had ſo frequently preached, and wrought miracles there, he had never ſeen him before; and to have a ſight of him, was a great indulgence to his curioſity: for he was deſirous to ſee him of a long ſeaſon; perhaps ever ſince he had heard of his fame, and had entertained a notion that Chriſt was John the Baptiſt riſen from the dead, whom he had beheaded; and therefore was deſirous of ſeeing him, that he might know whether he was John or no: becauſe he had heard many things of him; concerning his doctrine, and miracles, and eſpecially the latter; how that he caſt out devils, and healed all manner of diſeaſes, and even raiſed the dead to life: and he hoped to have ſeen ſome miracle done by him; which would have ſtill more gratified his curioſity, and have been the ſubject of further enquiry and converſation.

Ver. 9. Then he queſtioned with him in many words, &c.] Or talked very much to him, enquiring who he was, whether John the Baptiſt, or no; whether it was true that he had wrought ſuch miracles he had heard of, and how he wrought them, and by what power he performed them, and how he came by it; and uſed many arguments to perſuade him to work a miracle at that time: but he anſwered him nothing; would not give him one word in return to his many words, nor work any miracle in his preſence; he anſwered him neither by words nor deeds; he would not indulge his curioſity, tho' he might have obtained his liberty by it.

Ver. 10. And the chief-prieſts and Scribes, &c.] The Sanhedrim that followed him from Pilate's hall, to Herod's palace; fearing, leſt Herod ſhould be diſpoſed to let him go, ſhould he gratify him by working a miracle: ſtood; before Herod; ſo witneſſes, and accuſers, uſed to do; ſee the note on Mark xiv. 57. and vehemently accuſed him; of the ſame things they had accuſed him before Pilate, with great bitterneſs and conſtancy, increaſing, and aggravating the charges againſt him.

Ver. 11. And Herod, with his men of war, &c.] Or his ſoldiers, his life-guards that attended his perſon, who came with him from Galilee, and were both for his ſecurity and ſervice, and for his pomp and magnificence: ſet him at nought; made nothing of him; had him in no account; treated him as a ſilly, and contemptible creature, that could not do any thing that was reported of him; nor able to ſay any thing for himſelf; but took him to be a mere fool and ideot; and ſo they uſed him: and mocked him; as a king, and made ſport and paſtime with him: and arrayed him in a gorgeous robe. The Vulgate Latin renders it, a white robe; a token of his innocence, tho' not ſo deſigned by them, but rather by way of deriſion, as a ſymbol of his ſimplicity and folly. The Syriac verſion renders it, ſcarlet; and the Arabic and Perſic verſions, red. It is very likely that it was an old worn-out robe of one of the officers, or ſoldiers, which they put on him; in contempt of his being a king, as the Roman ſoldiers afterwards did, upon the ſame account: and ſent him again to Pilate; uncondemned, not knowing what to make of him, or the charge againſt him, and he might be unwilling to have any hand in his death, not having forgotten the caſe of John the Baptiſt; and therefore remits him to Pilate, to do as he thought fit with him.

Ver. 12. And the ſame day Pilate and Herod were made friends together, &c.] For it pleaſed Herod, that Pilate ſhould ſhow ſuch a regard to his authority and power, as to ſend one that belonged to his juriſdiction to take cognizance of his caſe; and eſpecially as it was a perſon that was much talked of, and he had long wanted to ſee; and Pilate, on the other hand, was pleaſed with Herod, that tho' he was one that was under his juriſdiction, and ſo had a right of trying the cauſe, and either abſolve or condemn, yet choſe not to uſe this his power, but referred the caſe to the Roman governour: for before they were at enmity between themſelves; it may be on account of the Galileans, the ſubjects of Herod, whom Pilate had ſlain, whilſt they were ſacrificing at Jeruſalem, Luke xiii. 1. which Herod might reſent, as an infringement upon his authority and power; for had they been ever ſo deſerving of puniſhment, it ought to have been left to him, to have inflicted it, and not the governour of Judea, who had nothing to do with them: but now matters were made up by this ſtep of Pilate's, in ſending Chriſt to him, ſuppoſed to be a Galilean, and ſo of Herod's juriſdiction; which was tacitly acknowledging his former conduct to be wrong, and ſhewed a regard to Herod's authority: and thus they were reconciled together, and agreed in their contemptuous uſage, and ill treatment of Chriſt, and ſo fulfilled Pſal. ii. 1, 2.

Ver. 13. And Pilate, when he had called together the chief-prieſts, &c.] That is, after Herod had ſent back Chriſt unto him, he then ſummoned the chief-prieſts together, to conſider what ſhould be done to him: and with them alſo, the rulers and the people; both the civil and eccleſiaſtical rulers, and the chief among the people, who had been forward in accuſing Jeſus, and ſeeking his death: the latter of theſe is not read in the Perſic verſion; and both are joined together in the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions, and read thus; by the former, the princes, or chiefs of the people; and by the latter, the judges of the people: in a word, he convened the whole Sanhedrim, which conſiſted of the chief-prieſts, Scribes, and elders of the people.

Ver. 14. Said unto them, ye have brought this man unto me, &c.] Pointing to Jeſus, who ſtood before him; as one that perverteth the people; from their religion, and laws, and allegiance to Cæſar. The Syriac and Perſic verſions read, your people; of the ſame nation with them, and that were under their care and juriſdiction; at leaſt in an eccleſiaſtical way: and behold, I having examined him before you; not only privately, and alone, between themſelves in the judgment-hall, John xviii. 33. and xix. 9. but openly in the preſence of them, when he brought forth Jeſus to them, and heard their charges, and urged him to anſwer to them, Matt. xxvii. 11—14. have found no fault in this man; can't perceive any charge proved againſt him, or any crime he is guilty of, for which puniſhment ſhould be inflicted on him; or at leaſt, that he ſhould be put to death: touching, or with regard to thoſe things, whereof ye accuſe him. The Syriac and Perſic verſions read, all thoſe things; intimating, that he had carefully looked into, and examined every thing, and had omitted nothing, and that all their accuſations, and charges, put together, did not make it appear that he was guilty of a ſingle crime.

Ver. 15. No, nor yet Herod, &c.] Who was a Jew, and better verſed in their religious affairs, and underſtood the nature of ſuch charges, and the amount of them, and what was ſufficient proof in ſuch caſes; and who had alſo examined Jeſus, and that in their preſence, and had heard all that they had to accuſe him with, and yet found no fault in him of any ſuch kind, as to adjudge him to death for it: for I ſent you to him; along with Jeſus, to make your allegations againſt him good before him; or, I ſent him to him, as the Syriac verſion reads; that is, Jeſus to him, as the Perſic verſion expreſſes, he being of his country, and belonging to his juriſdiction; or, he ſent him back to us; as the Arabic verſion reads, and three of Beza's copies: that is, Herod, after he had examined Jeſus, and found no fault in him, ſent him again to us; not being able to make out any crime againſt him, or to paſs any judgment on the matter, for it follows; and lo, nothing worthy of death is done unto him; or by him: the ſenſe is either, that it appeared to Herod, that Chriſt had done nothing that deſerved death; or that nothing was done to him by Herod, which ſhewed, that he thought he was worthy of it; ſince he paſſed no ſentence on him, nor ordered him to be ſcourged, nor delivered him into the hands of an executioner, or to be impriſoned 'till things could be cleared up.

Ver. 16. I will therefore chaſtiſe him, &c.] Give him ſome correction, as by ſcourging, or beating with rods: this he propoſed, not becauſe he thought him deſerving of it, but in complaiſance to the Jews; ſince it would look as if their charges were not altogether weak and groundleſs, and that Jeſus was not entirely innocent: this would carry a ſhew of guilt and puniſhment, and he hoped this might be thought ſufficient, and ſo he ſhould pleaſe them, and ſave Jeſus from dying, which he much deſired: and releaſe him; from his bonds, and let him go.

Ver. 17. For of neceſſity he muſt releaſe one, &c.] And therefore propoſed to releaſe Jeſus unto them at the feaſt; of paſſover, which now was; not that there was any law that obliged to it, but it having been cuſtomary with the Roman governour to do ſo, the people expected it; cuſtom had made it neceſſary: and ſo the Syriac, Arabic and Perſic verſions render it; it was a cuſtom to releaſe, &c. not at each feaſt, or every feaſt, as the laſt of theſe verſions read, only at the paſſover, as is expreſſed, John xviii. 39.

Ver. 18. And they cried out all at once, &c.] The chief-prieſts, rulers, and people, not bearing to hear of a releaſe of him, now they had got him in their hands; and enraged at the propoſal, in a moſt clamorous way, cried out, as one man, immediately: Saying, away with this man; to the croſs; to Calvary, the place of execution; away with him out of the world; he is not fit to live: and releaſe unto us Barabbas; whoſe character is given in the next verſe; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 16.

Ver. 19. Who, for a certain ſedition made in the city, &c.] Of Jeruſalem: he had made an inſurrection in it, in oppoſition to the government, in order to have thrown off the yoke, and to have aſſerted and maintained their liberties, as a free people; or rather to have ſeized and plundered the properties of other people, ſince he is repreſented elſewhere as a robber: and for murder; which had either been committed by himſelf, or his accomplices, in the inſurrection; and for theſe things, ſedition, and murder, he was caſt into priſon; where he lay till this feaſt, in order to be executed.

Ver. 20. Pilate therefore willing to releaſe Jeſus, &c.] Being more and more convinced of his innocence; and ſtill ſeeing more clearly into the wickedneſs, malice, and envy of his accuſers; and having received a meſſage from his wife: ſpake again to them; putting it again to them, which he ſhould releaſe; aſking them what he ſhould do with Jeſus; plainly ſignifying his mind, that he thought him innocent, and that it would be right to let him go. The Ethiopic verſion repreſents him, ſaying, will ye that I ſave for you, or releaſe to you the Lord Jeſus?

Ver. 21. But they cried, ſaying, crucify him, crucify him.] They were fierce and furious, more noiſy and clamorous, the more they perceived Pilate was for ſaving him; and they were more deſirous to have him crucified, and more impatient 'till it was done, as the repetition of the word ſhews.

Ver. 22. And he ſaid unto them the third time, &c.] After Chriſt had been ſent back to him from Herod; for he had declared before he had ſent him to him, that he found no fault in him, John xviii. 38. Why, what evil hath he done? what capital crime has he committed? is he guilty of murder? or ſedition? or blaſphemy? or robbery, and theft? or any other enormous crime? I have found no cauſe of death in him; why he ſhould be put to death at all; and much leſs to this ſhameful and painful death of the croſs, which was the puniſhment of ſlaves, and of the vileſt of men, which they were deſirous of: I will therefore chaſtiſe him, and let him go; this he ſaid, not as if he was determined to do it, whether they liked it, or no; but as ſignifying what he willed, or choſe, and hoped they would be contented with, that he ſhould be ſcourged, or beaten, and diſmiſſed, as he at firſt propoſed.

Ver. 23. And they were inſtant with loud voices, &c.] They were urgent, and inſiſted upon his crucifixion, and preſſed hard for it, and exerted their voices, and more loudly called: requiring him, that he might be crucified; deſiring it in the moſt importunate manner; ſignifying, that it muſt be, that nothing elſe would content them: and the voices of them, and the chief-prieſts, prevailed; upon Pilate to grant their requeſt, contrary to the dictates of his own conſcience, the conduct of Herod, and the meſſage of his wife; the people being ſet on by the chief-prieſts, and the chief-prieſts joining with them, their numbers were ſo great, and their requeſts were preſſed with ſo much force, and violence, and importunity, that Pilate could not withſtand them.

Ver. 24. And Pilate gave ſentence, &c.] Reſolved, determined, and gave out: that it ſhould be as they required; that they ſhould have their requeſt, what they aſked for; namely, that Jeſus ſhould be crucified, and Barabbas releaſed.

Ver. 25. And he releaſed unto them, him, &c.] Barabbas, who is not named, as being a deteſtable perſon, and unworthy to be named; and is therefore deſcribed by the infamous, tho' juſt character of him, as follows: that for ſedition and murder was caſt into priſon, as in ver. 19. whom they had deſired; to be granted to them, and releaſed; ſee Acts iii. 14. but he delivered Jeſus to their will; to do as they would with him, to mock, and ſcourge, and crucify him.

Ver. 26. And as they led him away, &c.] From Pilate's hall, and out of the city of Jeruſalem, towards Calvary; which was done by the Jews and Roman ſoldiers, after they had ſtripped him of his own clothes, and put on him a ſcarlet coat, and had platted a crown of thorns, and put it on his head, and a reed in his hand, and bowed the knee, and mocked him, ſaluting him as king of the Jews; after they had finiſhed their ſport and paſtime with him, and had put on him his own clothes again: they laid hold upon one Simon, a Cyrenian; father of Alexander and Rufus, Mark xv. 21. ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 32. coming out of the country; either out of the country-part of Judea, to the city of Jeruſalem; or out of the field where he had been about rural buſineſs, and was now returning home, and perhaps knew nothing of the matter, what had been doing at Jeruſalem: and on him they laid the croſs; on which Jeſus was to be crucified, and which he was bearing himſelf; but finding that he was weak, and languid, and unable to carry it himſelf, and fearing, ſhould he die by the way, they ſhould be diſappointed of glutting their malice, and ſeeing him in ſhame and agony on the croſs, and of triumphing over him there; and being in haſte for the execution of their malicious deſigns, they put the croſs, at leaſt one end of it, upon this man's ſhoulders: that he might bear it after Jeſus; either the whole of it, following Jeſus; or only one end of it, Jeſus going before with the other end on his ſhoulder; which ſeems to be the order in which it was carried between them.

Ver. 27. And there followed him a great company of people, &c.] Not only of the common people, but of the principal inhabitants of the city; for among theſe were the chief-prieſts, Scribes and elders: ſome went for one thing, and ſome another; ſome pitying, and others mocking at him, and all to ſee the melancholy ſight, ver. 48. as is uſual at executions: and what might make the croud the greater, was the number of people in the city, which were come from all parts to the paſſover; as alſo the fame and character of the perſon, who was going to ſuffer: and of women, which alſo bewailed and lamented him; not that theſe were the ſame with the preficæ of the Romans, or the ιηλεμιστριαι of the Grecians; for though the Jews had their מקוננות, or mourning women, who were hired to aſſiſt in mourning, by uſing mournful geſtures, tones, and ſongs, ſee Jer. ix. 17. yet public mourning was not allowed for perſons that were executed as malefactors; and therefore it is the more remarkable, that here, and in ver. 48. any public tokens of ſorrow ſhould be expreſſed: for, "thoſe that are executed by the "Sanhedrim, אין מתאבלין עליהן, they don't mourn "for them; but their near relations come and aſk "the peace of, or ſalute the witneſſes, and they "ſalute the judges, to ſhew, that they have not "any thing in their hearts againſt them, ſeeing "they have paſſed a true ſentence; but tho' they "don't uſe mourning, lo, they grieve for them; "for there is no grief but in the heart [r]." The reaſon why they did not mourn was, becauſe their ignominy and death atoned for their crime [s]: but it ſeems, there was a difference between thoſe that were put to death by the order of the Roman government, and thoſe that were put to death by the Sanhedrim: "all that are put to death by the government, altho' they are executed by the order of "the king, and the law gives power to ſlay them, "lo, they mourn for them; and they don't reſtrain "any thing from them, and their ſubſtance goes "to the king, and they are buried in the ſepulchres "of their fathers; but all that are put to death by "the Sanhedrim, they don't mourn for them; but they "grieve for them; for there is no grief but in the "heart; and they are not buried with their fathers, "till their fleſh is conſumed; and their ſubſtance "goes to their heirs [t]." And ſince Chriſt was condemned to death by the Roman governour, hence it may be public mourning was allowed of, and might be done without notice; but theſe ſtill were not the mourning-women, but perſons that followed on their own accord: ſome expreſſed their concern and ſorrow through a natural tenderneſs of ſpirit, and from a principle of humanity, being grieved that ſo uſeful and innocent a perſon, as Chriſt appeared to be, ſhould be put to ſuch a cruel and ſhameful death; and others from a ſpirit of gratitude, they, or their friends, having received cures from him, being healed by him of ſickneſſes, or diſpoſſeſſed of devils; and others from a ſpiritual, as well as natural affection for him; among whom were his own mother and his mother's ſiſter, and Mary Magdalen, and other women that followed him out of Galilee.

Ver. 28. But Jeſus turning unto them, &c.] Theſe women being behind Chriſt, at the back of him; and he knowing who they were, and what they were doing, turns himſelf to them, and addreſſed them in the following manner: and ſaid, daughters of Jeruſalem; or ye Jeruſalem women; juſt as the inhabitants of Jeruſalem are called daughters of Zion in Iſ. iii. 16. weep not for me; ſignifying, that they need not be under any concern on his account, for he was very willing to die; he deſired nothing more; this was that he came into the world about; nor was he afraid to die; death was no king of terrors to him; he went to the croſs with the greateſt courage and intrepidity: beſides, his ſufferings, tho' he knew they would be very great and painful, yet that they would be ſoon over; nor could he be long held in the power of death, but would be raiſed again, and go to his father, and be exalted at his right hand, and which ſhould be matter of joy: to which might be added, that hereby his father's counſels and covenant, purpoſes and promiſes, would have their accompliſhment, the law would be fulfilled, juſtice ſatisfied, and all the perfections of God glorified, and the ſalvation of his choſen people effected; which, as it was the joy ſet before him, is a ground of rejoicing to believers: not that weeping on account of his ſufferings and death, was ſinful; for he had offered prayers to God with cries and tears himſelf on this head; nor that it was altogether unreaſonable, ſtupid, and prepoſterous; but Chriſt's meaning is, that when things were rightly conſidered, there would be great reaſon to aſſwage their grief, on this account, and rather expreſs it on another; but weep for yourſelves, and for your children; not themſelves perſonally, but their nation and poſterity; and either for ſin, their own, and others; the ſins of profeſſors, and of the prophane; particularly the ſin of crucifying him, which would be more injurious to that people than to him, and do them more hurt than him, ſince they had imprecated his blood upon them, and their children; or rather, and chiefly on account of thoſe diſtreſſes and calamities, that would come upon them, in a ſhort time, for their rejection and crucifixion of him; on account of which he himſelf had wept over Jeruſalem, and its inhabitants, chap. xix. 41, 42.

Ver. 29. For behold the days are coming, &c.] The time is haſtening on; yet a little while, a few years more, and ſuch times of diſtreſs will be: in the which they ſhall ſay; or it ſhall be commonly ſaid; it will be in every one's mouth: bleſſed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare, and the paps that never gave ſuck; that is, happy will thoſe perſons be who have no children, to be ſtarved to death, for want of bread; or to be killed with the ſword before their eyes, which muſt greatly enhance their own miſeries. Dr. Hammond thinks, that one paſſage particularly is referred to, related by Joſephus; that when Titus had ſo cloſely encompaſſed the city with a wall, that there was no coming out for proviſions, upon which a ſore famine commenced, ſo that they fed on dung and dirt, and ſhoes, and girdles, one rich and noble woman, whoſe name was Mary, the daughter of Eleazar, being ſtripped of all ſhe had, by the ſeditious, killed her own child, and dreſſed it, and eat part of it; and the other part being found by the ſoldiers that broke in upon her, the news of this ſhocking fact was ſpread all over the city, and every one looked with horror upon it, and with the ſame compaſſion, as if they had done it themſelves: and then might thoſe words be ſaid, bleſſed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare, &c. who, tho' ſtarving themſelves, were under no temptation to do ſuch a deteſtable action.

Ver. 30. Then ſhall they begin to ſay, &c.] The Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions read, then ſhall ye begin to ſay; the tribulation being ſo great, as never was the like ſince the creation of the world, nor never will be to the end of it; and being ſo ſore preſſed with the ſword and famine; with the enemy without, and diviſions, robberies, and murders within; and their miſeries being inexpreſſible, and intolerable, they will ſeek to go into the holes of the rocks, and caves of the earth, as is propheſied of them, Iſ. ii. 19. and as Joſephus ſays, many of them did, when the city was taken; and, like thoſe in Hoſ. x. 8. will ſay, to the mountains fall on us, and to the hills cover us; will chuſe rather that the mountains and hills round about Jeruſalem, ſhould fall upon them, and they be buried under the ruins of them, than live in ſuch terrible diſtreſs, or fall into the hands of their enemies! compare with this Rev. vi. 15, 16.

Ver. 31. For if they do theſe things in a green tree, &c.] Or it may be rendered impersonally, if theſe things are done in a green tree; by which is meant the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is often compared to a tree, as to a green fir-tree, an apple-tree, a vine, and is called the tree of life: and may be ſaid to be a moiſt or green tree; becauſe, as a green tree is full of juice, ſo is he of grace and goodneſs; as that is flouriſhing, ſo was he in the fame of his doctrine and miracles, in the ſpread of his Goſpel, and in the increaſe of his kingdom and intereſt; and as that is fruitful and uſeful, ſo was he in preaching the Goſpel, and healing diſeaſes; and as that is not proper to be cut down, nor fit fuel for the fire, ſo he was not deſerving of death, or to be uſed in the manner he was; the metaphor ſeems deſigned to expreſs the righteouſneſs and innocence of Chriſt; ſee Ezek. xx. 47. and xxiv. 4. who was pure in his nature, without ſin in his life, harmleſs in his converſation, and did no hurt to any man's perſon or property: his enemies could find nothing, nor prove any thing againſt him; nor even the devil himſelf, but owned him to be the holy one of God; and he was alſo declared innocent by his judge, the Roman governour: and yet, how many hard, and grievous things, were done unto him! He was perſecuted in his infancy, and his life was ſought for; he was deſpiſed and reproached by men all his days; he was apprehended as if he had been a thief, and was bound as a malefactor; and arraigned at the bar of men, as if he had been the greateſt criminal on earth; he was mocked, buffeted, and ſpit upon in the palace of the high-prieſt; he was ſcourged by Pilate, and miſuſed by his ſoldiers, who arrayed him with a ſcarlet robe, put a crown of thorns on his head, and a reed in his hand, and in a mock-way bowed the knee to him, and ſaluted him as king of the Jews; they crucified him between two thieves, and as he hung on the croſs mocked him, and gave him gall and vinegar to drink. To which may be added, that he was forſaken by his God, and father, and his wrath was poured out upon him, as he ſuſtained the perſons, and bore the ſins of his people; the curſe of the law was executed on him, and juſtice drew its ſword, and ſheathed it in him: and now if all theſe things were done to ſuch an uſeful, holy, harmleſs, and innocent perſon, what ſhall be done in the dry? by whom wicked men are deſigned; who, as dry trees, are without juice, ſo are they deſtitute of grace and righteouſneſs, and all that is good, and bring forth no fruit, neither to God, nor themſelves, nor others; but, like dead and withered trees, are dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, and full of all manner of ſin, and rottenneſs, and impurity; and are deſerving to be cut down, and are fit fuel for the fire of divine wrath and diſpleaſure, both in this, and in the other world. The wicked Jews that rejected Chriſt, and crucified him, are particularly meant; and if ſuch evil things were done by them to ſo juſt a perſon, what may not be expected will fall on them in retaliation for ſuch uſage? and if the Roman ſoldiers, under their encouragement acted ſuch a part to Chriſt, who had never done them any injury, what will they not do to theſe men, when provoked by their inſults and rebellions? and if ſuch things were done to Chriſt by his father, according to the requirement of the law, and the ſtrictneſs of divine juſtice, when he was made ſin for his people, tho' he knew none, nor committed any himſelf, what vengeance will fall on them, who muſt anſwer for their ſins in their own perſons? what devouring flames, and everlaſting burnings, will ſuch dry trees be expoſed to, as being fit for them, and deſerving of them? ſo the children of men are, by the Jews, in their writings, called, עצים יבשים, dry trees [u]; the Targumiſt on Ezek. xvii. 24. paraphraſes the words thus; "I have humbled the kingdom of the nations, which "was ſtrong as a green tree, and I have ſtrengthened the kingdom of the houſe of Iſrael, which was "weak as a dry tree." It is a common proverb with the Jews [x]; "two dry ſticks, or brands, and "one green, the dry burn up the green:" intimating, that a few righteous perſons among wicked men ſuffer with them; but if righteous men ſuffer, how much more the wicked? ſee 1 Pet. iv. 17, 18.

Ver. 32. And there were alſo two other malefactors, &c.] Not that Chriſt was one, tho' indeed he was looked upon and treated as one by the Jews; but as the words may be read, there were alſo two others that were malefactors; really ſuch, two thieves, who had been guilty of theft and robbery, and were condemned to die: and theſe were led with him; for the greater ignominy and reproach of Chriſt, that it might be thought he was equally a malefactor, and as deſerving of death as they: to be put to death; the death of the croſs, which was the death the Romans put ſlaves, thieves, and robbers, and the worſt and baſeſt of men to.

Ver. 33. And when they were come to the place which was called Calvary, &c.] Or Cranion, which ſignifies a ſkull; ſo called from the ſkulls of perſons that lay about, who were executed. It is a tradition of the ancients [y], that Adam was buried in this place where Chriſt was crucified, and that his ſkull lay here. It was uſual to crucify on high places, and on mountains, ſuch an one as this was [z]: there they crucified him, and the malefactors; the two thieves; one on the right hand, and the other on the left; and ſo fulfilled the prophecy in Iſ. liii. 12.

Ver. 34. Then ſaid Jeſus, father, forgive them, &c.] When he was crucified between the two thieves, and as he hung upon the croſs, and while inſulted and abuſed by all ſorts of men, and put to the greateſt pain and torture, he addreſſed himſelf to God his father: the Arabic verſion reads, my father, who was ſo to him, not as he was man; for as ſuch he had no father; but as he was God, being as a divine perſon, his beloved, and only-begotten ſon: and this he uſes, whilſt, as man, he is praying to him; partly to expreſs his faith of relation to him, his confidence of being heard; and partly to ſet believers an example of praying, as he has directed, ſaying, our father, &c. and the petition put up by him is for forgiveneſs; which is with God, and with him only; and that for his enemies, his crucifiers; not for thoſe who ſinned the ſin unto death, the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, who knowing him to be the Meſſiah, maliciouſly crucified him, for whom prayer is not to be made; but for thoſe who were ignorantly concerned in it, as the next clauſe ſhews, even for his own elect, whom the father had given him out of the world, which were among his crucifiers; for thoſe, and not the world, he prays; and the fruit of this his prayer quickly appeared, in the converſion of three thouſand of them under Peter's ſermon on the day of Pentecoſt, next following, in ſix weeks time. Tho' ſuch might be his affection, as man, in general, as to wiſh for, and deſire, as ſuch, was it conſiſtent with the divine will, forgiveneſs for all of them; adding for they know not what they do, or are doing: meaning, in crucifying him, which was the caſe of many of them, and of their rulers; they did not know that Jeſus was the Meſſiah, nor the prophecies concerning him, nor the evil they were committing in putting him to death: not that their ignorance excuſed their ſin; nor was it without ſin; nor does Chriſt uſe it as a plea for pardon, or found his interceſſion upon it, which is always done upon his own propitiatory ſacrifice; but this is mentioned as deſcriptive of the perſons Chriſt prays for, and points out a branch of his prieſtly office he exerciſes, in having compaſſion on the ignorant, and them that are out of the way: and they parted his raiment, and caſt lots; that is, upon his veſture, or ſeamleſs coat, and ſo fulfilled the prophecy in Pſal. xxii. 18. ſee the notes on Matt. xxvii. 35. and John xix. 23, 24.

Ver. 35. And the people ſtood beholding, &c.] This diſmal and affecting ſight; inſulting and reviling him, and wagging their heads at him, as did alſo thoſe that paſſed by: and the rulers alſo with them derided him; the chief-prieſts, Scribes, and elders, the members of the Sanhedrim, whoſe characters ſhould have reſtrained them from ſuch an inhuman conduct. The phraſe, with them, is wanting in the Oriental verſions, and in one of Beza's copies: ſaying, he ſaved others; by healing their diſeaſes, or raiſing them from the dead: let him ſave himſelf; from death, by unnailing himſelf, and coming down from the croſs; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 42. if he be Chriſt; the Meſſiah, he and his followers give out he is; even the choſen of God, referring to Iſ. xlii. 1. The Arabic verſion reads, the choſen Son of God, very wrongly; for Chriſt was not choſen to be the Son of God; he was ſo by nature; but he was choſen to be a ſervant, as the text cited ſhows, to be a mediator between God and man, and the ſaviour of his people.

Ver. 36. And the ſoldiers alſo mocked him, &c.] The Roman ſoldiers, to whom the execution was committed, who crucified him, and parted his garments, and ſtood at his croſs watching; theſe joined in the inſult, which is not to be wondered at. Coming to him, and offering him vinegar; which was what was a part of their allowance, and was their drink; ſee the note on John xix. 29.

Ver. 37. And ſaying, if thou be the king of the Jews, &c.] Or their Meſſiah, who was ſpoken of as a divine perſon; for otherwiſe he might have been their king, and not have been able to have done what is propoſed: ſave thyſelf; or deliver thyſelf from the croſs.

Ver. 38. And a ſuperſcription alſo was written, &c.] Containing the crime he was charged with, and accuſed of; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 37. and John xix. 19, 20.

Ver. 39. And one of the malefactors, which were hanged, &c.] On the croſs, one of the thieves crucified with Chriſt; the Oriental verſions add, with him: according to the Evangeliſts Matthew and Mark, both of them reviled him, and threw the ſame things in his teeth as the prieſts, people, and ſoldiers did; which how it may be reconciled, ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 44. railed on him, ſaying, if thou be Chriſt, ſave thyſelf, and us; taking up the words of the rulers, and adding to them, perhaps, with a deſign to curry favour with them, hoping thereby to get a releaſe; or, however, ſhowing the wickedneſs and malice of his heart, which his ſufferings and puniſhment, he now endured, could make no alteration in; ſee Rev. xvi. 9.

Ver. 40. But the other anſwering, rebuked him, &c.] That is, the other malefactor made anſwer to him, and reproved him for his baſeneſs and wickedneſs: ſaying, doſt not thou fear God; or, neither doſt thou fear God, any more than theſe prieſts, people, and ſoldiers, that are acting ſuch a barbarous and inhuman part to a man in miſery: and wilt thou do the ſame, and ſhow that thou art an impious wretch, now thou art juſt going out of the world, and neither fears God, nor regards man, and art without compaſſion to a fellow-ſufferer, adding ſin to ſin, ſeeing thou art in the ſame condemnation? undergoing the ſame ſort of puniſhment, tho' not on the ſame account, which might be the reaſon why they ſuffered on the ſame day: for the Jews ſay[a], they never judge (or condemn) two in one day, but one to-day, and the other to-morrow: but if they are in one tranſgreſſion, "ומיתה אחת, "and one death, as an adulterer with an adultereſs, "they condemn them both in one day; but if "the adulterer lies with a prieſt's daughter, ſeeing "he is to be ſtrangled, and ſhe to be burnt, they "don't execute them both in one day."

Ver. 41. And we indeed juſtly, &c.] For ſins committed againſt the law; our ſentence is juſt, we are righteouſly puniſhed: which ſhows that he had a true ſenſe of ſin; for where that is, there will be not only an acknowledgment of the offence, but a vindication of the juſtice of God, ſhould he proceed to deal according to the demerit of ſin: for we receive the due reward of our deeds; though, according to the law of Moſes, theft was not puniſhable with death, but with a reſtoration, either double, or fourfold, or fivefold, according to the nature of it; ſee Exod. xxii. 1, 4. It may be theſe men had committed murder along with the robbery: but this man hath done nothing amiſs; or abſurd, unreaſonable, wicked, and deteſtable: he did no injury to God, or man; wronged no man's perſon or property; did all things well; obeyed the law of God perfectly, and always did the things which were pleaſing to God. Thus, from the mouth of one of the malefactors Chriſt ſuffered with, was he declared innocent; when the Jews deſigned, by crucifying him with them, to have led the people to have believed that he ſuffered for a crime equal, or ſuperior to theirs.

Ver. 42. And he ſaid unto Jeſus, Lord, &c.] Acknowledging him to be the Meſſiah, the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords; the Lord of all, and eſpecially of his church and people, and his own Lord. So the Syriac and Perſic verſions read, my Lord: however, he ſaid this by the Spirit of God, who enlightened his underſtanding, and wrought faith in him to believe in Chriſt; ſee 1 Cor xii. 3. remember me when thou comeſt into thy kingdom; or rather in thy kingdom, as in Matt. xvi. 28. for this man had not only faith in the kingdom of Chriſt, as being of a ſpiritual nature, and not of this world, and not coming with outward pomp and obſervation; in which reſpect his faith exceeded that of the Apoſtles themſelves, who were looking for, and expecting a temporal kingdom; and he not only was without all doubt, or ſcruple, about Chriſt's entering into his kingdom and glory after death, but he had knowledge of, and faith in his ſecond coming, when his glorious kingdom ſhould appear, or his kingdom appear in glory; and when he deſired he might be remembered by him, have favour ſhown him, and he ſhare in the glories and happineſs of it. This was great faith indeed to be exerciſed on Chriſt at ſuch a time as this, when he was under the greateſt reproach and ignominy; while he was inſulted and derided by all ſorts of people; and when he was forſaken by his own Apoſtles, and was ſuffering a ſhameful puniſhment, and now dying.

Ver. 43. And Jeſus ſaid unto him, &c.] Jeſus immediately anſwered him, tho' he ſaid not one word to the other that railed at him, or to the multitude that abuſed him; and promiſed him more than he aſked for, and ſooner than he expected. Verily I ſay unto thee, to-day thou ſhalt be with me in paradiſe; בגן עדן, in the garden of Eden; not the earthly paradiſe, nor the church militant, but the future place, and ſtate of the happineſs of the ſaints, even heaven, and eternal glory, which the Jews frequently call by this name; ſee the note on 2 Cor. xii. 4. and is ſo called, becauſe, as the earthly paradiſe, or Eden's garden, was of God's planting, ſo is the heavenly glory of his providing and preparing: as that was a place of delight and pleaſure, ſo here are pleaſures for evermore: as there was a river in it, which added to the delightfulneſs and advantage of it, ſo here runs the river of God's love, the ſtreams whereof make glad the ſaints now, and will be a broad river to ſwim in to all eternity: as there were the tree of life, with a variety of other trees, both for delight and profit, ſo here, beſides Chriſt, the tree of life, which ſtands in the midſt of it, are an innumerable company of angels, and the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect: and as the inhabitants of that garden were pure and innocent creatures, ſo into this paradiſe ſhall nothing enter but what is righteous, pure, and holy: and whereas the principal enjoyment of man in Eden was converſation with God, and communion with him, the glory of the heavenly paradiſe will lie in fellowſhip with God, Father, Son, and Spirit, in beholding the face of God, and ſeeing him as he is: and this is the happineſs promiſed by Chriſt to the penitent and believing thief, that he ſhould be here; and not only ſo, but with him here, which is far better than being in this world, and than which nothing can be more deſirable; and which, when enjoyed, will be for ever: and this he was to enter upon that very day; which ſhows, that Chriſt's ſoul did not deſcend into hell, locally and literally conſidered, or into the Limbus Patrum, the papiſts talk of, to fetch the ſouls of the patriarchs thence, but as ſoon as it was ſeparated from the body was taken up into heaven; and alſo, that the ſouls of departed ſaints are immediately, upon their ſeparation from the body, there; which was the caſe of this wonderful inſtance of the grace of God; and ſhows the ſwiftneſs of the ſoul, or the velocity of angels in conveying it thither immediately: and this agrees with the ſenſe of the Jews, who ſay [b], that "the ſouls of the fathers, or patriarchs have reſt, and in a moment, immediately enter into their ſeparate places, or apartments, and not as the reſt of the ſouls; of whom it is ſaid, all the twelve months the ſoul aſcends and deſcends, (goes to and fro) but the ſouls of the fathers, מיד בהפרדן, immediately, upon their ſeparation, return to God that gave them." Some would remove the ſtop, and place it after to-day, and read the words thus, I ſay unto thee to-day; as if Chriſt only ſignified the time when he ſaid this, and not when the thief ſhould be with him in paradiſe; which, beſides it being ſenſeleſs, and impertinent, and only contrived to ſerve an hypotheſis, is not agreeable to Chriſt's uſual way of ſpeaking, and is contrary to all copies and verſions. Moreover, in one of Beza's exemplars it is read, I ſay unto thee, οτι σημερον, that to-day thou ſhalt be with me, &c. and ſo the Perſic and Ethiopic verſions ſeem to read, which deſtroys this ſilly criticiſm. And becauſe this was a matter of great importance, and an inſtance of amazing grace, that ſo vile a ſinner, one of the chief of ſinners, ſhould immediately enter into the kingdom of God, and enjoy uninterrupted, and everlaſting communion with him; and that it might not be a matter of doubt with him, or others, Chriſt, who is the amen, the faithful witneſs, and truth itſelf, prefaces it after this manner: verily I ſay unto thee; it is truth, it may be depended on. This inſtance of grace ſtands on record, not to cheriſh ſloth, indolence, ſecurity and preſumption, but to encourage faith and hope in ſenſible ſinners, in their laſt moments, and prevent deſpair. The Papiſts pretend to know this man's name; they ſay his name was Diſma; and reckon him as a martyr, and have put him in the catalogue of ſaints, and fixed him on the twenty-fifth of March.

Ver. 44. And it was about the ſixth hour, &c.] Or twelve o'clock at noon; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion, when it was noon; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 45.

Ver. 45. And the ſun was darkened, &c. There was an eclipſe of it, which was preternatural, it being now full moon, and laſted three hours, and ſo total, as to darken the whole earth; and now was the propheſy in Amos viii. 9. literally fulfilled: and the vail of the temple was rent in the midſt. The Perſic verſion renders it, the gate of the temple; and ſo the Syriac verſion, the face of the gate of the temple; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 51.

Ver. 46. And when Jeſus had cried with a loud voice, &c.] A ſecond time; for at the firſt loud cry, he uttered theſe words, Eli, Eli, lama, ſabachthani; and at the ſecond what follows; ſee Matt. xxvii. 46, 50. and the notes there: he ſaid, father, into thy hands I commend my ſpirit; not the holy ſpirit, nor his divine nature, but his human ſoul: for that he had a reaſonable ſoul, as well as a true body, is certain; from his having an human underſtanding, will, and affections, aſcribed to him; and indeed, without this, he would not have been a perfect man, nor like unto us; and could not have been tempted, bore ſorrows and griefs, and endured the wrath of God; nor could he have been a Saviour of ſouls: now juſt as he was expiring, as he made his ſoul an offering for ſin, and which he offered unto God, he committed it to his divine care and protection; and to enjoy his preſence, during its ſeparation from his body, uſing the words of the Pſalmiſt in Pſal. xxxi. 5. and this ſhews, that his ſpirit, or ſoul, belonged to God, the father of ſpirits, and now returned to him that gave it; that it was immortal, and died not with the body, and was capable of exiſting in a ſeparate ſtate from it, and went immediately to heaven; all which is true of the ſouls of all believers in Chriſt; and what the dying head did, dying members may, and ſhould, even commit their ſouls into the ſame hands: and having ſaid thus, he gave up the ghoſt; breathed out his ſoul, diſmiſſed his ſpirit, laid down his life, freely and voluntarily, and which no man, or devil, otherwiſe could have taken away from him.

Ver. 47. Now when the centurion ſaw what was done, &c.] The eclipſe of the ſun, the darkneſs upon the land, the earthquake, the rocks rent, and Jeſus expire in ſo uncommon a manner: he glorified God; by confeſſing that Chriſt was the ſon of God, and declaring him an innocent perſon: ſaying, certainly this was a righteous man; clear of the charges exhibited againſt him, and has ſuffered wrongfully; and this he concluded from thoſe unuſual appearances, and which he conſidered as tokens of divine reſentment.

Ver. 48. And all the people that came together to that ſight, &c.] To ſee the execution of Jeſus; and ſome of them might be his inveterate enemies, and came to inſult him, and did inſult him; many of theſe, tho' not every individual of them: beholding ing the things which were done; the eclipſe, earthquake, &c. ſmote their breaſts; as conſcious of guilt, and as fearing ſome dreadful judgment would fall upon them, and their nation, for this ſin of crucifying Chriſt. The Perſic verſion reads, they went back, and kneeled down, and proſtrated themſelves to the ground; as being in the utmoſt aſtoniſhment, confuſion, fear, and dread: and returned; to the city, and to their own houſes, where they might more ſeriouſly, and with the greater compoſure of mind, reflect on theſe things.

Ver. 49. And all his acquaintance, &c.] That were related to him in a natural, or in a ſpiritual ſenſe, or both, as his own mother, and beloved diſciple John, who were both preſent, John xix. 26. or thoſe that were known unto him, and familiar with him, who attended on his miniſtry, and often converſed, and were intimately acquainted with him: and the women that followed him from Galilee; among whom were Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Joſes, and Salome the mother of Zebedee's children: ſtood afar off; from the croſs: beholding theſe things; with wonder, as well as looking upon their dear ſuffering Lord, with aking hearts, and flowing eyes.

Ver. 50. And behold, there was a man named Joſeph, &c.] See the note on Matt. xxvii. 57. a counſellor; Mark ſays, he was an honourable one; he was either one of the council of the high-prieſt, or a member of the great Sanhedrim; ſee the note on Mark xv. 43. and he was a good man, and a juſt; he was kind and beneficent in his temper, and juſt, and righteous in his life and actions; a like character is given of Joſeph the huſband of Mary, the mother of our Lord, Matt. i. 19.

Ver. 51. The ſame had not conſented to the counſel and deed of them, &c.] Tho' he was with the Jews, the chief-prieſts, Scribes, and elders, in the high-prieſt's palace, being one of that great council; yet he did not agree with them; nor was it his advice and counſel, that they ſhould put Chriſt to death; he was againſt it, at leaſt did not conſent to it: he was of Arimathea, a city of the Jews; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 57. This clauſe in the Syriac and Perſic verſions ſtands in the preceding verſe, and follows after the mention of his name and office, and where it ſeems moſt natural; who alſo himſelf waited for the kingdom of God; ſee the note on Mark xv. 43.

Ver. 52. This man went unto Pilate, &c.] Mark ſays, he went boldly to him; ſee the note on Mark xv. 43. and begged the body of Jeſus; knowing he was dead; that he might bury it, as the Ethiopic verſion adds, and prevent its being interred with the two malefactors, or abuſed by the mob.

Ver. 53. And he took it down, &c.] From the croſs, with the help of others, having obtained leave of Pilate ſo to do: and wrapped it in linnen; as was the cuſtom of the Jews in burying their dead; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 59. and laid it in a ſepulchre that was hewn in ſtone; cut out of a rock; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 60. wherein never man before was laid; ſo that it could not be ſaid it was another body, and not that of Chriſt's, that was raiſed from the dead. This circumſtance ſerves to confirm the truth of his reſurrection.

Ver. 54. And that day was the preparation, &c.] Both for the ſabbath, and for the Chagigah, or grand feſtival, which they kept on the fifteenth day of the month, in a very pompous manner; ſo that the day following was an high day; and the ſabbath drew on, or ſhone out; which is ſo ſaid, though it was evening, on account of the lights, which were every where, in every houſe, lighted up at this time, and which they were, by their traditions, obliged to: for ſo run their canons [c]; "three things "a man is obliged to ſay in the midſt of his houſe, "on the evening of the ſabbath, when it is near "dark, have ye tithed? have ye mixed? (i. e. the "borders of the ſabbath, the courts and food) "הדליקו הנר, light the lamp." This was what could by no means be diſpenſed with; for ſo they ſay [d], "the lighting of the lamp on the ſabbath is "not in a man's power, (or at his liberty,) if he "pleaſes he may light, and if not, he may not "light.—But it is what he is obliged to, and every "man and woman are bound to have in their houſes "a lamp lighted up on the ſabbath; and tho' he "has nothing to eat, he muſt beg, and get oil, "and light a lamp; for this is included in the delight of the ſabbath.—And he that lights, ought "to light within the day, before the ſetting of the "ſun." So that when theſe lamps were every where lighting, before the ſun was ſet, and the ſabbath properly come, it might be ſaid to draw on, or to be ſhining forth. Beſides, it was uſual to call the evening of any day by the name of light: thus it is ſaid [e], "אור לארבע עשר, on the light, (i. e. the "night) of the fourteenth, (of the month Niſan) "they ſearch for leaven, &c." So that the Evangeliſt might, very agreeably to the way of ſpeaking with the Jews, ſay, that the ſabbath was enlightning, or growing light, tho' the evening was coming on.

Ver. 55. And the women alſo which came with him from Galilee, &c.] See the note on ver. 49. followed after, Joſeſph; and thoſe that were with him, when they carried the body of Jeſus, in order to interr it: and beheld the ſepulchre; took notice of it, what an one it was, whereabout it ſtood in the garden, that they might know, and find it again: and how his body was laid; in what poſition, form, and order; and obſerved that it was only wrapped in linnen, and not anointed, or embalmed.

Ver. 56. And they returned, &c.] To the city, and to their own houſes, or to ſome one of them: and prepared ſpices and ointments; for the anointing, and embalming the body of Chriſt, called by the Jews the ſpices of the dead; ſee the note on Mark xvi. 1. and reſted the ſabbath-day, according to the commandment, in Exod. xx. 8—11. not knowing as yet the abolition of it, with the reſt of the ceremonial law; and therefore, tho' they had bought and prepared the ſpices and ointments, they did not carry them to the ſepulchre to anoint the body with them, till the ſabbath was over; for this was forbidden to be done on a ſabbath-day. It is aſked [f], "what is "that thing that is lawful to be done to a living "man, and is forbidden a dead man? it is ſaid, "זה סיכה, this is anointing." Tho' elſewhere [g] this "is allowed of; for ſo runs one of their traditions; "they do all things neceſſary for the dead, (i. e. on "a ſabbath-day) סכין, they anoint, and waſh him, "only they may not move a limb of him." But how he could be anointed, and waſhed, without a limb being moved, is not very eaſy to ſay, as his foot, or hand, or eye-brows, which are the parts one of their commentators inſtances in [h].

CHAP.

CHAP. XXIV.

Ver. 1. NOW upon the firſt day of the week, &c.] On which day it appears by what follows, Chriſt roſe from the dead, and which was the third day from his death, and ſo verified the ſcriptures, and his own predictions: very early in the morning; juſt as light began to ſpring, the day to dawn, and break; the firſt appearance of the morning; when it firſt began to dawn; when it was yet dark, as in John xx. 1. and ſo read the Syriac and Perſic verſions here; and the Ethiopic verſion, while it was yet night: this muſt be underſtood of the time when the women ſet out from the city, or ſuburbs; for by that time they got to the ſepulchre it was ſun-riſing, Mark xvi. 2. and ſhews their great love, zeal, and devotion for Chriſt, and great courage and fearleſſneſs to go out of the city at ſuch a time, without any man with them, and to a grave: they came unto the ſepulchre, where Chriſt was laid; that is, the women who came with Chriſt from Galilee, and who had obſerved where, and how his body was interred: bringing the ſpices which they had prepared; on the ſabbath eve, to anoint the body, but were prevented by reaſon of the ſabbath; ſee chap. xxiii. ver. 56. and certain others with them; that is, other women; beſides Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of Joſes, and Salome, and other Galilean women, there were other Jeruſalem-women, or of Bethany, it may be, Mary, and Martha, the ſiſters of Lazarus, and of the parts adjacent: this clauſe is left out in the Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic verſions, and in one ancient copy of Beza's; but is retained in the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions.

Ver. 2. And they found the ſtone rolled away from the ſepulchre.] Which Joſeph had laid there, for the ſecurity of the body, and in the ſight of theſe women; and which gave them a concern, as they went along, ſeeing they were all women, who ſhould roll away the ſtone for them, Mark xvi. 3. but when they came to the ſepulchre, to their great ſurprize, they found it rolled away, which was done by an angel, Matt. xxviii. 2.

Ver. 3. And they entered in, &c.] To the ſepulchre, being invited, encouraged, and led on by the angel that ſat upon the ſtone; for the Jews ſepulchres were built large enough for perſons to go into; ſee the note on Mark xvi. 5. and found not the body of the Lord Jeſus; as they expected, having ſeen him put there, and had obſerved in what cave in the ſepulchre, and in what form he was laid.

Ver. 4. And it came to paſs as they were much perplexed thereabout, &c.] About the body of Chriſt, and its being gone, what ſhould become of it, whether it was removed, and by what means, and by whom; whether by a friend, or foe, for they had no thought, nor expectation of a reſurrection: behold, two men ſtood by them in ſhining garments; who were angels in the form of men; and as theſe were the firſt witneſſes of Chriſt's reſurrection, there were two of them; for by the mouth of two or three witneſſes every thing is eſtabliſhed. Matthew and Mark take notice but of one; but John makes mention of two, as here, ſeen by Mary Magdalene, tho' in a different poſture; they were ſitting, the one at the head, the other at the feet, where the body of Jeſus had lain; but when the reſt of the women came, they were riſen up, and ſtood cloſe by them, on a ſudden, at an unawares, being arrayed in white raiment, as white as ſnow, as a token of their purity and innocence, and as bringers of good tidings; and as joining in the triumph of their Lord's reſurrection: their garments were bright and glittering like lightning, to ſet forth the glory and majeſty of theſe celeſtial ſpirits, and that they might be known to be what they were.

Ver. 5. And as they were afraid, &c.] That is, the women were afraid of theſe angels; theſe bright appearances and majeſtic forms, as it was uſual for good men and women to be, as appears from the caſes of Zacharias, the virgin Mary, and others: and bowed down their faces to the earth; thro' great fear and reverence of theſe heavenly ſpirits, and as not being able to bear the luſtre of their countenances and garments: they ſaid unto them; that is, the angels: why ſeek ye the living among the dead? intimating, that Chriſt, tho' he had been dead, was now living, and not to be ſought for in a ſepulchre; a way of ſpeaking, much like this, is uſed in a parable of R. Levi's, concerning Pharaoh's not finding the name of God, among the Gods of the nations, upon ſearching for it. Moſes and Aaron ſaid to Pharaoh, "thou fool, is it uſual "for the dead to ſeek them among the living? "שמא החיים אצל המתים, or ever the living "among the dead? our God is living, theſe thou "ſpeakeſt of are dead[i]." Nor is Chriſt to be found among dead ſinners, or lifeleſs profeſſors, but among living ſaints, and among the churches of the living God; nor is life to be found among the dead works of the law, or to be obtained by lifeleſs performances to the dead letter of the law.

Ver. 6. He is not here, but is riſen, &c.] So in Matt. xxviii. 6. ſee the note there: remember how he ſpake unto you when he was yet in Galilee; for theſe women that followed him from Galilee were along with the diſciples when he ſaid the following words to them; and which are recorded in Matt. xvii. 22, 23.

Ver. 7. Saying, the ſon of man muſt be delivered into the hands of ſinful men, &c.] As Chriſt was, who is intended by the ſon of man, he being the ſon of David, and the ſon of Abraham, and the ſon of Adam, tho' he was the ſeed of the woman, and born of a virgin; he was truly man, and ſubject to the infirmities of men; for this is ſometimes uſed as a diminutive expreſſion, tho' a title of the Meſſiah in the Old Teſtament, and regards him in his ſtate of humiliation. He was delivered into the hands of the band of men and officers by Judas, who came againſt him with ſwords and ſtaves, as againſt a thief; and by the Jews to Pontius Pilate, the Roman governour, a very wicked man; and by him, to the will of the Jews, who, with wicked hands, took him, and ſlew him; and into the hands of the Roman ſoldiers, who crucified him, and who may more eſpecially be meant by ſinful men, the Gentiles; and eſpecially heathen ſoldiers, being reckoned by the Jews notorious ſinners: to be among ſinners, in the company of ſuch ſinful men, muſt needs be very diſagreeable to the holy and harmleſs lamb of God; but to be in their hands, and at their mercy, whoſe tender mercies are cruel, muſt be very afflicting: and be crucified; which was a Roman death, and a very ſhameful, and painful one: and the third day riſe again; 'tis for the ſake of this chiefly that the angels put the women in mind of this whole paragraph, which ſo fully confirms their teſtimony of his reſurrection; and which the women might be aſſured of, upon calling to mind theſe words, which they themſelves had heard from Chriſt's mouth; and it being now the third day ſince the death of Chriſt. The words declare, that all theſe things muſt be; that there was a neceſſity of them; partly on account of the decrees of God, by which it was determined they ſhould be; and partly on account of the covenant-engagements of Chriſt, in which he agreed unto them; and alſo, by reaſon of the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, which gave out, that thus it muſt be; yea, our Lord's own predictions made them neceſſary; and the law, and juſtice of God required them; or otherwiſe, the ſalvation of God's people could not have been obtained.

[i] Shemot Rabba, §. 5. fol 95. 3.

Ver. 8. And they remembred his words.] That is, the words of Chriſt, as the Perſic verſion expreſſes it; which they had forgot, and it may be had never truly underſtood 'till now; and had now their memories refreſhed with them by the angels, and their underſtandings opened by the ſpirit of God. Saints are ſometimes apt to forget even the gracious promiſes of God, they have underſtood and received comfort from; the word, or words, on which they have been cauſed to hope, until the ſpirit of God, who is their beſt remembrancer, puts them in mind of them.

Ver. 9. And returned from the ſepulchre, &c.] Quickly, immediately, as ſoon as ever the angel had done ſpeaking to them; they fled from the ſepulchre in great haſte, as perſons affrighted and amazed, with fear and reverence, on account of the viſion they ſaw, and with joy at what was told them; ſee Matt. xxviii. 8. Mark xvi. 8. and told all theſe things; as that the ſtone was rolled away from the ſepulchre; and that they found not the body of Jeſus in it; that they had ſeen a viſion of angels, who had told them, that Chriſt was riſen, and had put them in mind of ſome words of his ſpoken to the diſciples in their hearing in Galilee: unto the eleven, and to all the reſt; of the diſciples; not only to the eleven apoſtles, but the ſeventy diſciples, and as many others as were aſſembled together, perhaps the hundred and twenty, Acts i. 15. The Perſic verſion very wrongly reads, to all the twelve; for Judas was not now one of them, nor alive; and Matthias was not yet choſen.

Ver. 10. It was Mary Magdalene, &c.] Out of whom Chriſt had caſt out ſeven devils, who was a ſincere penitent, a true believer in Chriſt, and an affectionate lover of him, and to whom he firſt appeared: and Joanna; the wife of Chuza, Herod's ſteward, one that had been a follower of Chriſt, and had miniſtred to him of her ſubſtance; ſee Luke viii. 2, 3. and Mary the mother of James; called the leſs; and alſo of Joſes, and Simon, and Judas, the brethren, or kinſmen of Chriſt; this Mary, being the wife of Cleophas, or Alpheus, ſaid[k] to be the brother of Joſeph, the huſband of Mary, the mother of our Lord: and other women that were with them; as Salome, the mother of Zebedee's children, and others, that came from Galilee; Mark xv. 40, 41. and xvi. 1. which told theſe things unto the apoſtles; before obſerved.

Ver. 11. And their words ſeemed to them as idle tales, &c.] As fabulous things, as mere whims, and the fancies of their brains: as a dream, according to the Perſic verſion; or, as a jeſt, as the Arabic verſion renders it. They looked upon them as mere deceptions and deluſions, and not real things; the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read, theſe words; what they related concerning what they ſaw, and heard, at the ſepulchre: and they believed them not; for they had no thought, nor expectation of Chriſt's riſing from the dead; they did not know that he was to riſe again, according to the ſcriptures; nor did they underſtand him when he told them of his riſing again; and had no faith in it, nor hope concerning it, and could give no credit to it, when it was told them; and the Arabic verſion reads, they did not believe it; the word or report which the women delivered to them.

Ver. 12. Then aroſe Peter, &c.] Who, tho' he did not believe the report made, yet liſtened to it, and was alarmed and arouſed by it, and was willing to know the truth of it: and ran unto the ſepulchre; not alone, but with John, being in haſte to be ſatisfied, how things were: and ſtooping down; ſee the notes on Mark xvi. 5. and John xx. 5. he beheld the linnen clothes laid by themſelves; in which the body of Jeſus was wrapped; theſe lay by themſelves, without the body, in one place; and the napkin about his head was wrapped together, and lay in another place by itſelf; ſo that it was a plain caſe, the body was not ſtolen, nor taken away; for neither friends, nor foes, would have taken the pains, or have loſt ſo much time, as to have ſtripped the body, but would rather have carried off the clothes along with it. The Alexandrian copy leaves out the word, μονα, alone, or by themſelves: and departed; from the ſepulchre to Jeruſalem, to John's houſe there: wondring in himſelf at that which was come to paſs; that the body ſhould not be there, and yet the clothes ſhould remain; he could not tell what to make of it. As for a reſurrection, he had no notion of that, and yet could not account for the removal of the body, either by friends or foes, and the clothes left behind.

Ver. 13. And behold two of them went that ſame day, &c.] Two of the diſciples, as the Perſic verſion reads; not of the eleven apoſtles, for it is certain that one of them was not an apoſtle; but two of the ſeventy diſciples, or of the ſociety of the hundred and twenty that were together; one of theſe was Cleophas or Alpheus, as appears from ver. 18. the other is, by ſome, thought to be Luke the Evangeliſt, as Theophylact on the place obſerves, who, out of modeſty, mentions not his name; others have thought that Nathanael was the other perſon; and Dr. Lightfoot ſeems very confident, from ver. 34. and 1 Cor. xv. 5. that the apoſtle Peter was the other; but it is not certain who he was: however this very remarkable affair happened, and therefore a behold is prefixed to it, on the ſame day; the firſt day of the week; the day on which Chriſt roſe from the dead; and the third day from his death it was, ſee ver. i. 21. that theſe two diſciples travelled: to a village called Emmaus; whither they might go either to ſee their friends, or upon ſome ſecular affair, or to be retire from the noiſe of the city, and be ſecure from danger by their enemies; or it may be this was the place of Cleophas's abode, who, with the other diſciple, was returning home after the celebration of the paſſover. The place whither they went is particularly mentioned, not becauſe it was a place of note, but for the certainty of the fact. It was now but a village, having been burnt ſince the death of Herod the great, by the order of Varus, the Roman governour[l]; tho' it afterwards became a conſiderable city, if it is the ſame with Nicopolis, as Jerom aſſerts[m]; though that rather ſeems to be the Ammaus, or Chammath of Tiberias, ſince it was ſituated by the lake of Geneſareth. However, it is certain, that Emmaus is reckoned, by Joſephus[n], one of their chief cities; and Jarchi, and Bartenora[o] ſay, it is the name of a city; and Pliny[p] calls it a toparchy, and ſays it was watered with fountains; which agrees with the account the Jews give of it[q]. “R. Jochanan ben Zaccai had five diſciples; all the time that he ſtood, or lived, they ſat before him; when he departed, they went to Jabneh; and R. Eleazar ben Arach went to his wife, לאמאום, at Emmaus, a place of pleaſant waters, and a beautiful habitation.” It is mentioned, in company with Bethoron, and Lud, or Lydda: it is ſaid[r], “from Bethoron, to אמאום, Emmaus, is the mountain; and from Emmaus to Lydda, the plain; and from Lydda, to the ſea, the valley.” Bethoron is mentioned as near Nicopolis, by Jerom; and perhaps is the ſame with Betholone in Pliny: in Emmaus it was a market; at leaſt there was a butchers market in it; hence, we read of, אטלים של אמאום, the ſhambles of Emmaus[s]; mention is made of a place ſo called, in 1 Maccab. iii. 40, 57. and iv. 3. another Emmaus is here meant: which was from Jeruſalem about threeſcore furlongs; or ſeven miles and a half; for eight furlongs make a mile. Joſephus[t] ſays the ſame, and confirms the account of the diſtance of this place from Jeruſalem.

[k] Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. l. 3. c. 11. 32. & 4. 22.

Ver. 14. And they talked together, &c.] As they went along, on their journey: of all theſe things which had happened; concerning their dear Lord and Maſter, Jeſus Chriſt; how that he had been betrayed by Judas, one of his diſciples; had been led bound, firſt to Annas, and then to Caiaphas, the high-prieſt, in whoſe palace he had been condemned to death; how that he was delivered by the chief prieſts and elders, to Pontius Pilate, the Roman governour, of whom they requeſted, that he might be crucified: they very likely diſcourſed alſo, about the ignominious treatment he met with, both in the high-prieſt's palace, and in Pilate's hall; and how at laſt he was crucified between two thieves, and was dead and buried; and particularly, they might be talking together, of what they had heard that morning from the women, that had been at the ſepulchre of Chriſt, and reported that he was riſen.

Ver. 15 And it came to paſs, that while they communed together, &c.] About the above ſaid things: and reaſoned; with one another, about the truth and credibility of the late report: Jeſus himſelf drew near; the Perſic verſion adds, ſuddenly; he came up at once to them, as if he had been a traveller on the road, and overtook them: and went with them; joined himſelf in company to them, and travelled with them.

Ver. 16. But their eyes were holden, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion adds, and were covered; and the Arabic verſion renders it, now he had veiled their eyes, aſcribing it to Chriſt; and the Perſic verſion renders it, and the eyes of the diſciples were ſhut: to me it ſeems, that their eyes were held downwards; or they kept looking upon the ground as they walked, which was a poſture ſuitable to their melancholy ſpirits; and there might be a peculiar influence of divine power and providence, ſo diſpoſing them, that they did not look up to Chriſt their new fellow traveller, who walked on with them: and this was ſo ordered, that they ſhould not know him; that ſo they might not be ſurprized at once, as they would have been, had they looked at him, and diſcerned who he was; and that they might converſe the more freely with him; and that he might convince them of their ſtupidity and unbelief, by proper arguments.

Ver. 17. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] That is, Jeſus, as the Perſic verſion, or our Lord, as the Ethiopic verſion, expreſs it: what manner of communications are theſe, that ye have one to another, as ye walk? what is the ſubject of your diſcourſe? what is it your converſation one with another, turns upon, in your journey? and are ſad? what melancholy ſtory are you telling to one another, which cauſes ſuch ſadneſs of countenance, and dejection of mind? for Chriſt by their countenances and geſtures, as the ſhaking of their heads, and lifting up and wringing of their hands, could eaſily diſcern as man, as well as know as God, that they were full of ſorrow and heavineſs, and which were occaſioned and increaſed by what they were talking of.

Ver. 18. And one of them whoſe name was Cleophas, &c.] Or Alpheus, for it is the ſame name; he was one of the ſeventy diſciples, and father of the apoſtles James and Jude, and brother to Joſeph, the huſband of Mary, the mother of Chriſt, as before obſerved: anſwering, ſaid unto him, art thou only a ſtranger in Jeruſalem, and haſt not known the things which are come to paſs there in theſe days? The Perſic verſion reads, in theſe two days: the ſenſe is, that whereas he appeared to come from Jeruſalem, that if he was only a ſtranger and a ſojourner, and not a ſtated inhabitant there, he could not be ignorant of what had been done there a few days paſt; or if he was, that he muſt be the only ſtranger, and the only man, that was ſo; for the facts referred to were ſo notorious, that every one muſt know them, inhabitant or ſtranger.

Ver. 19. And he ſaid unto them, what things? &c.] Still appearing as if he was ignorant, and in order to draw out of them a particular relation: and they ſaid unto him; both of them, or rather Cleophas, for himſelf and his companion: concerning Jeſus of Nazareth; that is, what had happened to him, who was commonly known by this name, and was called ſo by way of contempt: but which was a prophet; not only a foreteller of things to come, as he foretold his ſufferings, death, and reſurrection, the troubles that ſhould befal his diſciples, the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the end of the world; but he was a preacher of the Goſpel, an eminent one, a famous and extraordinary one, that prophet which Moſes ſpake of ſhould come; and who was mighty in deed and word: he was anointed with the Holy Ghoſt and with power, which he ſhewed by the miracles he wrought; ſuch as healing the ſick, cleanſing lepers, caſting out devils, reſtoring ſight to the blind, cauſing the deaf to hear, the dumb to ſpeak, the lame to walk, and raiſing the dead to life; and in the doctrines he taught, which were with authority, and ſuch as never man ſpake: before God and all the people; he was ſent and anointed by God as a prophet, and approved by him; who bore a teſtimony to him by a voice from heaven, declaring him to be his beloved Son; and the works he wrought, were done publickly before men, who glorified God on that account; and the doctrines he taught, were not taught in ſecret, but in the ſynagogues and in the temple, in the audience of all the people, and to their ſurprize and admiration.

Ver. 20. And how the chief prieſts and our rulers, &c.] Civil and eccleſiaſtic: delivered him; to Pontius Pilate, the Roman governour: to be condemned to death; the death of the croſs, by the ſaid governour, having firſt ſeized him and examined him before their Sanhedrim, and pronounced him guilty of death: and have crucified him; for though Pilate paſſed the ſentence, and the Roman ſoldiers executed it, yet theſe men are ſaid to do it, becauſe it was at their requeſt, and through their inſtigation, that it was done; hence Peter charges the Jewiſh Sanhedrim with it, Acts iv. 10.

Ver. 21. But we truſted, &c.] In him, as the Ethiopic verſion adds: that it had been he which ſhould have redeemed Iſrael; they thought, hoped, and believed, that he was the Meſſiah, ſpoken of under the character of the Redeemer of Iſrael; and they had been in expectation of redemption by him, though only of a temporal kind, from the Roman yoke and bondage; but now they could not tell what to think of it, ſince he was dead; indeed they were not altogether without hope, ſince there was a report of his being raiſed from the dead; but what credit was to be given to that, they could not ſay: but certain it is, that he was the true Meſſiah, and promiſed Redeemer; and who was to redeem, and has redeemed the whole Iſrael of God; even all the elect of God, whether among Jews or Gentiles, from the ſervitude and damning power of ſin, from the ſlavery of ſatan, and the bondage of the law, and from every enemy; and that by his precious blood, his ſufferings and death, the very things which were the occaſion of theſe diſciples doubts about him, as the Redeemer: ſo the Jews ſay [u], “that upon the death of Meſſiah, the ſon of “Joſeph, all Iſrael ſhall flee to the deſerts, “and ſuch as are of a doubtful heart, ſhall “turn to the nations of the world and ſay, is this “the redemption we have waited for, for the Meſſiah “is ſlain?” And beſides all this, to day is the third day, ſince theſe things were done; which is either mentioned, as an aggravation of the ignorance of the ſtranger, that theſe things ſhould be done ſo lately, as within three days, and yet he ſhould be ignorant of them, or not remember them, and need to be informed about them; or as a further reaſon of their doubting, that it was now the third day ſince the death of Jeſus, and there was nothing certain of his reſurrection, only the report of the women, which they could not depend upon; or elſe as a reaſon of their truſting, that he was the perſon that ſhould redeem Iſrael, ſince this was the third day from his crucifixion, the day on which he ſaid he ſhould riſe from the dead, and of which there was a report ſpread, not to be diſproved, that he was that day actually riſen: this day is greatly obſerved by the Jews [w]: they take notice, that the ſcriptures ſpeak of ſeveral remarkable third days; and beſides Gen. xxii. 4. Hoſ. vi. 2. is cited, a paſſage which refers to the reſurrection of Chriſt on the third day; and they ſpeak “of the third day “of the tribes, Gen. xlii. 18. of the third day of “the ſpies, Joſh. ii. 16. of the third day of the “giving of the law, Exod. xix. 16. of the third “day of Jonas, Jonah i. 17. (which was a type “of the reſurrection of the Meſſiah, Matt. xii. 40.) “of the third day of thoſe that came up out of “the captivity, Ezra viii. 15. of the third day of “the reſurrection of the dead, Hoſea vi. 2. and of “the third day of Eſther, Eſther v. 1.”

Ver. 22. Yea, and certain women alſo of our company, &c.] Who came with them from Galilee, who were of the ſame religion, profeſſed the ſame faith, and belonged to the ſame ſociety and community; who they were, and their names, ſee ver. 10. Made us aſtoniſhed; ſurprized us, with an account they brought, ſo that we could not, nor can we now tell, what to think or ſay of it; it is ſuch an one, we know not how to believe, nor to diſprove; it is we fear too good to be true, and ſhould it be as they report, 'tis amazing indeed: which were early at the ſepulchre; of the perſon now mentioned, Jeſus of Nazareth; even this very morning, by break of day, at leaſt at ſunriſing, whither they went to anoint his body, thinking nothing at all about the reſurrection of him.

Ver. 23. And when they found not his body, &c.] In the ſepulchre, as they expected, and ſo could not do what they intended: they came; they returned from the ſepulchre with great haſte, and in a very great fright, and came to the diſciples, where they were aſſembled; ſaying, that they had alſo ſeen a viſion of angels. The Syriac and Perſic verſions add, there; at the ſepulchre, for there were two of them at leaſt, if not three; ſee ver. 4. John xx. 12. Matt. xxviii. 2. They not only reported, that they could not find the body of Jeſus, but alſo that they had ſeen ſome angels: or the ſenſe may be, that they told them, that though they could not find the dead body of their Lord, yet they had ſeen him alive, as they did by the way, as they were returning, Matt. xxviii. 9, 10. and alſo that a viſion of angels had appeared to them: which ſaid that he was alive; ſee ver. 5, 6. So that it was not a deception of their ſight, they certainly ſaw both Chriſt and the angels; and were aſſured from their teſtimony, as well as by their own eyes and ears, that he was certainly riſen: now, though this was ſo clear a point, and ſo well atteſted, the diſciples knew not how to believe it; they were perplexed about it; they could neither receive it, nor diſcredit it; they hoped it might be ſo, but feared it was not.

Ver. 24. And certain of them which were with us, &c.] The apoſtles and brethren, who were together when the women came, and made the above report; particularly Peter, who is named, ver. 12. and John, who alſo was with him, as appears from John xx. 2. theſe went to the ſepulchre; of Jeſus, to ſatisfy themſelves and their companions, as much as they could, about theſe things: and found it even ſo as the women had ſaid; that is, that the body of Jeſus was not there, and that the linnen clothes were laid by themſelves: but him they ſaw not; the Ethiopic verſion reads, and him they found not: the women, as before obſerved, might report, that though they found not the body in the grave, yet they ſaw him alive by the way, but ſo did not the diſciples; which made it look very ſtrange, doubtful, and ſuſpicious, that the women ſhould ſee him, and not his apoſtles; they could not tell how to account for this, and this made them to be in ſuſpenſe about the fact.

Ver. 25. Then he ſaid unto them, &c.] That is, Jeſus ſaid unto them, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions read: O fools; not in a natural ſenſe, as if they were deſtitute of the common underſtanding of men; nor in a moral ſenſe, as wicked men, and as they themſelves had been in their unregenerate eſtate; nor in a way of anger and contempt, and with a deſign to provoke; wherefore Chriſt did not act contrary to his own rule, in Matt. v. 22. but becauſe they were ſo void of underſtanding in the ſcriptures, and were ſo very ignorant of them, and were ſo blind as to the knowledge of them; particularly thoſe which concerned the ſufferings and reſurrection of the Meſſiah, being influenced by the popular prejudices of education: he therefore expreſſes himſelf with much warmth, concern, and ſurprize, that he ſhould have been ſo long with them, and they ſo long under his doctrine and miniſtry; beſides the advantages of having the ſcriptures, and being converſant with them from their youth; and which they daily read, and had heard expounded, and yet were ſo very ſenſeleſs and ſtupid: and ſlow of heart to believe, all that the prophets have ſpoken; that is, upon theſe points, concerning the ſufferings of Chriſt, and his reſurrection from the dead; and indeed, they were very ſlow of heart to believe, not only what the women reported from the angels, but even thoſe of their brethren, who had ſeen him after he was riſen; for which Chriſt upbraids them, Mark xvi. 14. Yea, one of them declared after all, that he would not believe, unleſs he ſaw the print of the nails in his hands and feet, and put his hand into it, and thruſt it into his ſide; wherefore Chriſt had good reaſon to treat them in this ſharp manner, and charge them with folly and incredulity: the Jews ought not to object to the word fools, as unbecoming Chriſt, ſince they frequently repreſent God as making uſe of it; as for inſtance, 'tis ſaid, [x] “the “holy bleſſed God ſaid to them, שוטים, O ye “fools that are in the world, whatſoever ye do, ye “do for your own neceſſities——And a little after, “O ye fools that are in the world, he that labours “on the evening of the ſabbath, ſhall eat on the “ſabbath-day.”

[w] Bereſhit Rabba, §. 56. fol. 49. 3.

Ver. 26. Ought not Chriſt to have ſuffered theſe things, &c.] Mentioned in ver. 20. as to be delivered by the chief prieſts, to be condemned to death, and to be crucified: Chriſt ſuffered many things in his perſonal character, being traduced as a ſinful and wicked man, and a friend and encourager of ſinners; as a man of immoral principles and practices; as an idolater, a blaſphemer, an impoſtor, a ſeditious perſon; as one that had had familiarity with the devil, and did his miracles by his aſſiſtance, with a load of other reproaches; and theſe he endured, to anſwer to the loſs of the divine honour and glory, ſuſtained by the ſin of man; and to teach his people patience, under the loſs of their good names, characters, and reputations: and he ſuffered much in his body, in the infirmities of it; which he aſſumed with it, being in all things like to his brethren, excepting ſin; and in the pains which he endured, through buffeting and ſcourging before his crucifixion, and when he hung upon the croſs: and he ſuffered greatly in his ſoul, partly from the temptations of ſatan; and partly from the treatment of his own diſciples, through the frowardneſs of their ſpirits; and eſpecially his being betrayed by one, denied by another, and forſaken by them all, muſt greatly afflict his mind; but chiefly from his bearing the loathſome ſins of men, the ſtrokes of juſtice, and the wrath of God; and particularly, through his being forſaken by him: and of all theſe there was a neceſſity; he ought to have ſuffered theſe things, as he did; the counſels and purpoſes of God, the covenant tranſactions and agreement he himſelf entered into with his father, the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, and his own predictions concerning theſe things, together with the ſalvation of his people, in a way conſiſtent with the juſtice of God, and the honour of his law, made them neceſſary: and to enter into his glory; which began at his reſurrection from the dead, and is ſeen in his exaltation and ſeſſion at the right hand of God; upon his aſcenſion he was received up to glory, entered into it, took poſſeſſion of it, and is crowned with it; and which will ſtill be more manifeſt, when he ſhall come to judge the world in righteouſneſs; when his ſaints alſo ſhall appear in glory with him, and ſhall be everlaſting ſpectators of his glory; and indeed, his entrance into glory is not merely for himſelf, but in the name and behalf of them. The Vulgate Latin verſion reads, and ſo, or thus to enter into his glory; that is, by the way of ſufferings, which is the way through which his ſaints enter the kingdom, Acts xiv. 22. And by a view of the glory that was to follow them, and which he and his people were to enjoy together, was he animated to endure them chearfully and patiently; and this he is entered into, poſſeſſes and enjoys, as the conſequence and reward of his ſufferings.

Ver. 27. And beginning at Moſes, &c.] The writings of Moſes, the book of Geneſis particularly, ch. iii. 15. which is the firſt prophecy of him, and ſpeaks of the bruiſing of his heel, or of the ſufferings of death by him; and proceeding to open and explain the types concerning his bearing the croſs, and the lifting him upon it, in the buſineſs of Iſaac, and of the brazen ſerpent; and concerning the ſhedding of his blood, and the oblation of himſelf in the ſacrifices of the law of Moſes: and all the prophets; as David, Iſaiah, Daniel, and others, very likely the paſſages in Pſ. xxii. Iſ. liii. Dan. ix. he expounded unto them in all the ſcriptures in Moſes, and the prophets, concerning himſelf; eſpecially concerning theſe two points, his ſufferings, and his glory, which the Spirit of Chriſt, in the prophets, teſtified before-hand: beſides the above places referred to, concerning the ſufferings of Chriſt, ſee the following, in reference to his reſurrection and glory, Pſal. xvi. 10, 11. and lxviii. 18. and cx. 1, 7.

Ver. 28. And they drew nigh unto the village, &c.] Of Emmaus, before they were aware; their converſation was ſo very agreeable, that the way did not ſeem tedious, nor the time long: whither they went; where they intended to go, when they ſet out; this was the end of their journey; wherefore this village was not ſome intermediate place between Jeruſalem and Emmaus: and he made as tho' he would have gone further; when they were come to Emmaus, and to the houſe where the two diſciples intended to make their abode that night: whether it was a publick houſe, or an houſe of one of their friends, or one of their own, it matters not; Chriſt ſtopped not, nor attempted to go in with them, but ſtepped a few ſteps onward, taking his leave of them. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, he began to paſs by them; which carried in it an appearance as if he intended to have travelled further; and in it there was no fraud, diſſimulation, or colluſion: he would have gone ſome little way further doubtleſs, had they not detained him; and he intended to ſtay with them, provided they ſhould aſk him, as he did, tho' not all night, which he never deſigned: the whole of it is nothing elſe but a piece of modeſty, deſty, civility, and prudence; for guile was never found in his mouth.

Ver. 29. But they conſtrained him, &c.] The Arabic verſion renders it, they held him by force: but the meaning is not, that they laid hands on him, and held him in a forcible manner againſt his will; but they were very urgent and importunate with him, that he would ſtay with them; they would take no denial. The ſenſe is better given in the Perſic verſion, the diſciples with importunity ſaid unto him; they were ſo preſſing with arguments, that he could not withſtand them: ſaying, abide with us; his converſation was ſo engaging, and his diſcourſes were ſo heavenly and inſtructive, ſo ſweet and delightful, ſo powerful and moving, that they could not bear to part with him, but were exceeding deſirous of his continuance with them, even tho' he was a ſtranger to them. And as they had in view their own pleaſure and profit, ſo they urge the neceſſity and advantage of his ſtay, with reſpect to himſelf: for it is towards evening, and the day is far ſpent; it might be four or five o'clock in the afternoon: and he went in to tarry with them; for a while, not all night. So earneſt, importunate, and reſolute was the church, when ſhe had found Chriſt, that he would abide with her, Cant. iii. 4, 5.

Ver. 30. And it came to paſs as he ſat at meat with them, &c.] When they were ſat down at table with the proviſions before them: he took bread and bleſſed it, and brake, and gave to them; as if he was the maſter of the houſe, when he was both a gueſt, and a ſtranger, and as he uſed to do at common meals, when he eat with his diſciples; and thus he did, when he fed five thouſand at one time, and four at another, Matt. xiv. 19. and xv. 26. ſee the notes there. Whether only Chriſt, and the two diſciples, ſat down together, or whether others that belonged to the houſe ſat down with them, is not certain: if they were only three, they were a proper company to bleſs the bread together; that is, one in the name of the reſt, they joining with him: if there were but two, they bleſſed, or ſaid grace for themſelves ſeparately; but if three, the rules were theſe, according to the Jews[y]: "three that "eat together, they are obliged to call a bleſſing "(or for one)—— and how do they call a bleſſing "among three? one ſays, let us bleſs: if there are "three beſides himſelf, he ſays, bleſs ye.——Three "that eat together have no power to divide;" that is, to make a ſeparate bleſſing, but are obliged to it conjunctly: thus here, being three at leaſt, Chriſt bleſſed bread for them all.

Ver. 31. And their eyes were opened, &c.] Not that they were before ſhut, or cloſed up, but what before held them was removed, and what hindered their ſight and knowledge was taken away; and perhaps theſe actions of his taking the bread, and bleſſing, and breaking, and giving it to them, might put them in mind of him, and cauſe them to look wiſhly at him, when, what beclouded their ſight, being gone, and he appearing in his uſual form, they perceived who he was: and they knew him; to be their dear Lord and maſter, for whoſe death they had been ſorrowing, and of redemption by him, and of whoſe reſurrection they had been doubting: and vaniſhed out of their ſight; not that he vaniſhed as a ſpectre, or as ſmoak vaniſhes into air; but agility being a property of his riſen body, he very ſuddenly, and ſwiftly, and in a moment, withdrew himſelf from them; for if he could withdraw himſelf from company in a very ſpeedy manner before his reſurrection, much more after; ſee Luke iv. 30. John v. 13. The Syriac verſion renders it, he was taken away from them; as if ſome of the miniſtring angels were made uſe of to remove him at once; but this ſeems not neceſſary: the Arabic verſion renders it, he was hidden from them; that ſame power of his that held their eyes all the while they were travelling together, interpoſed ſome object between him and them, ſo that he could not be ſeen by them that very inſtant, even before he was gone out of the houſe.

Ver. 32. And they ſaid one to another, &c.] After Chriſt was gone, being ſurprized at what happened, that they ſhould not know him all that while; and that as ſoon as they did, he ſhould diſappear, or withdraw himſelf in this manner: did not our hearts burn within us while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the ſcriptures? concerning himſelf, his ſufferings, death, and reſurrection, which are in Moſes, the prophets, and the Pſalms. The ſcriptures are as a ſealed book to men, learned and unlearned; and none ſo fit to open them as the lion of the tribe of Judah: he did open and explain them to theſe his diſciples, as well as converſed with them about other things, as they travelled together; and his words came with ſuch evidence, power, and ſweetneſs, that they were raviſhed with them; their minds were irradiated with beams and rays of divine light; their hearts were warmed and glowed within them; they became fervent in ſpirit, and their affections were raiſed and fired; they found the word to be as burning fire within them; and they now knew ſomewhat what it was to be baptized with fire, which is Chriſt's peculiar office to adminiſter; ſee Pſ. xxxix. 3. Jer. xx. 9. they ſeem as it were not only to reflect on theſe things with wonder and pleaſure, but alſo to charge themſelves with want of thought, with inattention and ſtupidity; ſince they might have concluded from the uncommon evidence, force, and energy with which his words came to them, who he was, ſeeing no man could ſpeak as he did, and with ſuch effect as his words had.

Ver. 33. And they roſe up the ſame hour, &c.] Tho' it was now evening, and the day was ſpent and gone; and notwithſtanding what buſineſs they might have to do at Emmaus, about which they came, and even might not have made an end of eating, or ſufficiently refreſhed themſelves; and though they had had a walk of ſixty furlongs that afternoon, yet being big with this appearance of Chriſt to them, and in haſte to impart the joyful news to their fellow-diſciples, they immediately roſe up from table: and returned to Jeruſalem; the ſame night, from whence they had come that day: and found the eleven gathered together; at a certain houſe known to theſe two, and who met together in the night-ſeaſon, for the ſake of privacy, and for fear of the Jews, and who were now up, tho' it was late: theſe are called eleven, becauſe Judas was now gone from them, and dead; and this being their whole number, it is uſed, though every one might not be preſent, as particularly Thomas was not; ſee John xx. 19—24. and them that were with them; the ſeventy diſciples, and other believers, both men and women; ſee Acts i. 15.

Ver. 34. Saying, &c.] The following words; and which are not the words of the two diſciples, but of the apoſtles, whom they found gathered together; and who, juſt as theſe two entered the room, ſaid to one another, or rather to theſe two diſciples, to whom at once, and as ſoon as ever they ſaw them, not being able to hold it in, communicated municated the good news they had juſt heard; and which, perhaps, Peter had been juſt telling them: the Lord is riſen indeed; it is certainly matter of fact: for tho' the women were not credited, but their accounts were as idle tales, and, at moſt, only occaſioned ſome thoughts and reflections, which they could not ſettle; yet now they were ſatisfied of the reality of his reſurrection, and ſpeak of it with the greateſt aſſurance and joy: and hath appeared unto Simon; he appeared to him firſt, before he did to any of the reſt, tho' he had denied him in ſo ſhameful a manner; which is an inſtance of great grace and goodneſs: and he appeared to him, on purpoſe, no doubt, to comfort him under his diſtreſs; as well as being the oldeſt diſciple, and a man of figure and credit among them, his report would be believed. None of the writers of the New Teſtament take notice of this appearance beſides, only the apoſtle Paul, 1 Cor. xv. 5. It is certain that it was the ſame day Chriſt roſe from the dead; and was after the women had ſeen him, and after Peter had been at the ſepulchre; and before the return of the two diſciples from Emmaus, and before he ſhewed himſelf to the reſt of the apoſtles.

Ver. 35. And they told what things were done in the way, &c.] That is, when the eleven had done ſpeaking, and had finiſhed their report, which they did with great joy and pleaſure; then theſe two diſciples, as the Perſic verſion expreſſes it, to confirm them the more in the truth of Chriſt's reſurrection, gave them a particular account, how, as they were travelling, Jeſus joined himſelf to them, and entered into a converſation with them, and opened the ſcriptures in a ſweet and powerful manner to them; and yet their eyes were holden all the while, ſo that they did not perceive who he was: and how he was known of them in breaking of bread; that ſo it was, that whilſt he was breaking the bread, and giving it to them, and they were eating together, their eyes were opened, and they ſaw plainly who he was: now, tho' this was a common meal, and not the ordinance of the Lord's ſupper, yet ſince Chriſt made himſelf known to his diſciples at an ordinary meal, may not his followers expect that he will make himſelf known to them, and grant them communion with him at his table? and which ſhould be no ſmall argument to engage believers to a conſtant attendance on it.

Ver. 36. And as they thus ſpake, &c.] While the two diſciples, that came from Emmaus, were giving the above relation; juſt as they had finiſhed it, and had ſcarcely done ſpeaking: Jeſus himſelf ſtood in the midſt of them; the apoſtles; who were aſſembled together in a certain houſe, the doors being ſhut for fear of the Jews; and it was on the evening of the ſame day Chriſt roſe from the dead, and late at night; ſee John xx. 19. and without hearing the doors opened, or the ſound of the feet of Jeſus, and without ſeeing him come in, and approach unto them, he, in a moment, at once, ſtood in the middle of them, as if he had immediately roſe up out of the earth before them; and ſo the Perſic verſion renders it, Jeſus roſe up out of the midſt of them: by his power he opened the doors, and ſecretly let himſelf in, and ſhut them again at once; and by the agility of his body moved ſo ſwiftly, that he was not diſcerned until he was among them, where he ſtood to be ſeen, and known by them; whereby he made that good in a corporal ſenſe, which he had promiſed in a ſpiritual ſenſe, Matt. xviii. 20. and was an emblem of his preſence in his churches, and with his miniſters, to the end of the world. And ſaith unto them, peace be unto you; which was an uſual form of ſalutation among the Jews; ſee the note on John xx. 19. The Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions add, I am he, fear not; but this clauſe is not in the Greek copies.

Ver. 37. But they were terrified and affrighted, &c.] At the ſight of him, and at his ſudden appearance among them, without being heard, or ſeen before, and the doors ſhut and bolted; they could not tell how to account for it, that it ſhould be Jeſus himſelf riſen from the dead in his own body, tho' they had been juſt ſpeaking of his reſurrection, and had had a confirmation of it from the diſciples that went to Emmaus: and ſuppoſed that they had ſeen a ſpirit; that what they ſaw was a phantom, or apparition, or a ſpirit, that had aſſumed, and appeared in, the ſhape of Jeſus, and was not he himſelf.

Ver. 38. And he ſaid unto them, why are ye troubled, &c.] Who had more reaſon to rejoice, and be glad, as they were when they knew that it was Jeſus: and why do thoughts ariſe in your hearts? whether what they ſaw was Jeſus, or an apparition, which gave them a great deal of trouble and uneaſineſs, and filled them with fright and terror; as it was, and is uſual with perſons when they fancy they ſee a ſpirit, or an apparition; ſee Matt. xiv. 26.

Ver. 39. Behold my hands, and my feet, &c.] The Evangeliſt John adds, and ſide; that is, the prints of the nails and ſpear, in his hands, and feet, and ſide; and the wounds they made there, and the ſcars they left behind; by which they might be convinced he was not a ſpirit, and be aſſured of the truth of his reſurrection, and that in the ſame numerical body in which he ſuffered; as well that it might be obſerved by them how great was his love to them, to endure what he did for them. Handle me and ſee; or know by feeling, as well as by ſight; ſo that if the one was not ſufficient, the other might confirm; ſight might be deceived, but feeling could not: Apollonius Tyaneus, to them that did not know whether he was alive or dead, and who took him for a ſpirit, propoſed himſelf to be touched, and handled, that they might be convinced[z]: for a ſpirit hath not fleſh and bones; nothing but appearance, or air at moſt; no ſolid ſubſtance to be felt and handled: as ye ſee me have; or may perceive, both by ſight and feeling.

Ver. 40. And when he had thus ſpoken, &c.] And put them into a method of ſatisfying themſelves by their ſenſes: he ſhewed them his hands and his feet; that is, he held them forth to be ſeen and handled by them, which no doubt they did; and which were the infallible proofs by which he ſhewed himſelf alive to them after his paſſion; and by which they knew the truth of his incarnation, or that he aſſumed a true and real body, and of the reſurrection of the ſame body; ſee Acts i. 3. 1 John i. 1.

Ver. 41. And while they yet believed not for joy, &c.] Tho' they had been prepared for the belief of Chriſt's reſurrection, by the report of the women, the relation of Simon Peter, and the account of the two diſciples that came from Emmaus; yet ſuch was the joy they were tranſported with, upon the evidence of it, the news was ſo good, and the favour and benefit ſo great, that they could ſcarcely believe their own ſenſes of ſeeing and feeling: and wondred; at the ſight of their riſen Lord, and at the power of God, which was ſeen herein: the thing was marvellous in their eyes, and was a wonderful confirmation of the truth of his Deity, Sonſhip, and Meſſiahſhip. He ſaid unto them, have ye any meat? not that he needed any, or was hungry and deſirous of ſome to ſatisfy, or gratify his appetite, but to give them a further proof that he was not a ſpirit; and that he was riſen from the dead in a true and real body, which was capable of eating and drinking.

[z] Philoſtratus de Vita Apollon. l. 8. c. 5.

Ver. 42. And they gave him a piece of a broiled fiſh, &c.] Which was left by them at ſupper, of which they had been eating; for being fiſhermen, moſt of them, this was agreeable food to them: and of an honey-comb; not to eat with the fiſh, but after it.

Ver. 43. And he took it, and did eat before them.] That is, he took both the fiſh, and the honey-comb, and eat of them before them, they looking on all the while; and which was a proof of his being truly riſen from the dead, and not a ſpectre, or apparition, and which they failed not afterwards to make uſe of; ſee Acts x. 41. The Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions add, he took the reſt, or what remained, and gave it to them.

Ver. 44. And he ſaid unto them, theſe are the words which I ſpake unto you, &c.] Or this is the ſubſtance of them, the ſenſe and meaning of them; for what follows, we don't find any where expreſſed in ſo many words: while I was yet with you; that is, whilſt he was in his ſtate of humiliation, whilſt he dwelt among them, and had his abode with them; otherwiſe he was now with them, but not to continue with them; in a ſhort time he was to aſcend to his God, and their God, to his Father, and their Father: that all things muſt be fulfilled, which were written in the law of Moſes, and in the prophets, and in the pſalms concerning me; concerning his ſufferings, and death, and reſurrection from the dead, ſpoken of in Gen. iii. 15. Iſ. liii. Dan. ix. 26. Hoſ. vi. 2. Pſ. xxii. and xvi. 10. and in this he refers to what he had ſaid to his diſciples in Matt. xvi. 21. and xvii. 22, 23. and xx. 18, 19. and alludes to the uſual diſtinction among the Jews of the books of the Old Teſtament into the law, the prophets, and the Hagiographa; among which laſt ſtands the book of Pſalms, and is put for the whole; a diviſion often to be met with in both their Talmuds[a], and other writings[b].

Ver. 45. Then opened he their underſtanding, &c.] He not only opened their hearts, to attend to what he ſaid, and the proofs he gave of his reſurrection from the dead in a true body; but he removed the veil from the eyes of their minds, and gave them an underſtanding of the ſacred writings, reſpecting this matter: that they might underſtand the ſcriptures; concerning his ſufferings, death, and reſurrection, which they were very ignorant of before, and which were as a ſealed book unto them, John xx. 9. tho' they had been from their infancy brought up to the reading of the ſcriptures, and had had the advantage of Chriſt's miniſtry for ſome years; which ſhows the neceſſity of the ſpecial illumination of the Spirit, and the influence of his grace to remove the darkneſs of the mind, and give the true ſenſe of the ſacred writings.

Ver. 46. And he ſaid unto them, thus it is written, &c.] In the above cited books of the law, the prophets, and the Pſalms; not what after follows, in ſo many words, but the matter and ſubſtance thereof: and thus it behoved Chriſt to ſuffer, and to riſe from the dead the third day; it was neceſſary, both becauſe of the decree and appointment of God, and becauſe of the prophecies and predictions of the Old Teſtament; ſee ver. 25, 26.

Ver. 47. And that repentance and remiſſion of ſins, &c.] Which are the ſum of the Goſpel miniſtry; ſee Acts xx. 21. the doctrine of repentance is not of the law, which neither requires, nor admits of it, but of the Goſpel. The Perſic verſion calls it, the Goſpel of repentance; a doctrine preached by John the Baptiſt, Chriſt, and his Apoſtles; and the thing itſelf is a bleſſing of the covenant, a gift of God's grace, and in the hands of Chriſt to beſtow; and therefore the doctrine of it is publiſhed in his name, as well as remiſſion of ſins; which, tho' it ſprings from the free grace of God, is procured by the blood of Chriſt, and through him it is preached. Theſe two are joined together, not becauſe repentance is the cauſe of pardon; for repentance makes no ſatisfaction for ſin, or atonement for it; nor does the law at all regard it: tears of repentance will not waſh away ſin; notwithſtanding theſe, iniquity remains marked before God; Chriſt's tears themſelves did not take away, nor atone for ſin; his blood muſt be ſhed, and it was ſhed for the remiſſion of it; and that is the only meritorious cauſe of it. The Syriac verſion wrongly reads, repentance for the remiſſion of ſins: the Jews[c] indeed have a notion that repentance atones for ſin; but it is a very bad one, and has no countenance neither from the law of nature, nor the law of Moſes: but theſe two are put together, becauſe there is a connexion between them, as there is between repentance, and life, and ſalvation: repentance iſſues in theſe things; and to whomſoever the grace of repentance is given, to them the forgiveneſs of ſins is applied; nor need any truly repenting ſinner deſpair of the pardon of his ſin: and indeed, there is no true evangelical repentance without views, or at leaſt hopes of pardoning grace, and mercy; for that is attended with faith in Chriſt, and is heightened by the diſcoveries of forgiving love: ſuch who have the fulleſt view of the remiſſion of their ſins, have the cleareſt ſenſe of ſin, and have the moſt ſorrow for it, and loath themſelves on account of it, and are aſhamed of it, and do moſt frankly confeſs it, and moſt thoroughly forſake it. And now it was neceſſary, according to Old Teſtament prophecies, that both theſe ſhould be preached in his name; in the name of the Meſſiah; by his authority, and as coming thro' him; ſince the remiſſion of ſin is by his blood; and he is exalted as a prince, and a ſaviour, to give both repentance and forgiveneſs of ſins to all the Iſrael of God, whether Jews or Gentiles; and therefore it is fitting and proper that theſe ſhould be preached, among all nations; of the world, where God's elect are; that ſo they may be brought hereby to repentance, and receive the forgiveneſs of their ſins: beginning at Jeruſalem; from whence, according to the Old Teſtament, the word and doctrine of the Lord were to go forth, Pſ. cx. 2. Iſ. ii. 3. and is particularly mentioned, becauſe the Goſpel was to be firſt preached to the Jews, and be the power of God unto ſalvation to them; and becauſe that in Jeruſalem lived thoſe who had been concerned in crucifying Chriſt, to whom repentance and forgiveneſs muſt be preached; and which would be a great encouragement to the vileſt of ſinners, to hope for mercy and forgiveneſs, ſince ſuch received both.

Ver. 48. And ye are witneſſes of theſe things.] As they were witneſſes of the truth of his humanity, having ſeen, and heard, and handled him, both before, and after his reſurrection from the dead, and of all that he did, of all the miracles that he wrought in Jeruſalem, Judea, and Galilee, and of his transfiguration on the mount; ſo likewiſe of his ſorrows in the garden, and of his ſufferings in the palace of the high-prieſt, and in Pilate's hall, and on the croſs; and of his death, which was the death of the croſs; and alſo of his reſurrection from the dead, in the ſame body, to whom he ſhewed himſelf alive by many infallible proofs; by ſhewing them the print of the nails in his hands and feet; by being handled by them; by eating and drinking in their preſence; and by converſing with them for the ſpace of forty days: and their buſineſs was alſo to teſtify the doctrine of repentance, and remiſſion of ſins, in Jeruſalem, in all Judea, and Samaria, and to the uttermoſt parts of the earth, which they accordingly did; ſee Acts i. 8. and ii. 32. and v. 30—32. and x. 39, 41. and xx. 21.

Ver. 49. And behold, I ſend the promiſe of my father upon you, &c.] By which is meant the promiſe of the Spirit, called the promiſe of the Father, becauſe he was promiſed by the Father to be ſent, and poured on the ſaints in the times of the Meſſiah, Iſ. xliv. 3. Joel ii. 28. and becauſe Chriſt promiſed to pray the Father for him, and to ſend him from him; and that the Father ſhould ſend him in his name, who would fit and qualify them for, and aſſiſt them in bearing a teſtimony for him; ſince he would teach them all things, lead them into all truth, take of the things of Chriſt, and ſhew them to them, and bring to their remembrance all things they had ſeen and heard: and this promiſe of the Father was to be ſent in a very ſhort time, in ten days time, as accordingly it was; and might be very properly ſaid to be ſent upon them, ſince, when he was ſent down, he ſat upon them in the appearance of fire; and this being a marvellous thing, as well as of great moment and importance, it is introduced with a behold, as a note both of admiration and attention. But tarry ye in the city of Jeruſalem; for the ſpace of ten days; here they were to continue during that time, and not depart thence; yea, they were to ſit there, as the word uſed ſignifies: they were to ſit ſtill, and be ſilent; they were not to begin to preach; they were only to attend to prayer and chriſtian converſation, and to wait for the Spirit, the promiſe of the Father; and who alſo is deſigned in the following clauſe: until ye be endued with power from on high; the Spirit of God is a Spirit of might, and of power, as well as of knowledge, of underſtanding, of counſel, of love, and of a ſound mind; whereby they were to be fortified, and inſpired with courage and greatneſs of ſoul, ſo as to look their greateſt adverſaries in the face with boldneſs and intrepidity, and freely, and without fear, ſpeak unto them; and whereby their miniſtrations would be ſucceeded to the converſion of many ſouls; and accordingly ſo it was: for after the Spirit was poured out upon them, they who before were timorous and fearful, came forth publickly, with undaunted courage, and reſolution, and boldneſs, to the amazement of their adverſaries; and their preaching was with the demonſtration of the Spirit, and of power; who may be ſaid to be from on high, ſince he deſcended from heaven upon them; and they may be ſaid to be endued, or clothed with him, ſince there was ſuch an extraordinary and plentiful effuſion of his gifts and graces on them: and now they were to wait in Jeruſalem for this, that in the place where the Spirit had been diſhonoured and blaſphemed, and the unpardonable ſin againſt him had been committed by the Scribes and Phariſees, he might be in a moſt viſible and ſignal manner honoured; and alſo, becauſe the doctrine of the Lord was to go out of Zion, and the word of the Lord out of Jeruſalem. The Vulgate Latin verſion leaves out the word Jeruſalem, and reads only, ſit ye in the city until, &c. but then no other city can be deſigned.

Ver. 50. And he led them out as far as Bethany, &c.] Not the town of Bethany; could that be thought, it might be ſuppoſed that he led his diſciples thither, to pay a viſit to his dear friends there, Lazarus, Mary, and Martha, before his aſcenſion; but the town of Bethany was fifteen furlongs, or near two miles diſtance from Jeruſalem, John xi. 18. whereas the place from whence Chriſt aſcended was but a ſabbath-day's journey from it, which was two thouſand cubits, or about a mile, Acts i. 12. This Bethany, therefore, was a tract of land, ſo called from the town, which began at the mount of Olives, where Bethphage ended; ſee Mark xi. 1. and hither from Jeruſalem Chriſt led his diſciples, in order to aſcend to heaven in their ſight; and this was the ſpot of ground, where he began to ride in triumph to Jeruſalem, and here he aſcended in a triumphant manner to heaven; this was the place he frequently retired to for ſolemn, and ſolitary prayer, and where he had put up many a ſtrong cry to God, and now from hence he aſcended to him; this was the place whither he went after he had eat his laſt paſſover, where he was taken, and from whence he came to ſuffer and die for his people: and he lift up his hands, and bleſſed them. The lifting up of his hands was not in order to put them upon his diſciples; tho' the Ethiopic verſion adds, and put them on; nor was it uſed as a prayer-geſture; nor was the bleſſing of them prayer-wiſe, or by praying for a bleſſing on them; but as Aaron, his type, lift up his hands towards the people of Iſrael, and bleſſed them, when he had offered the offerings for them, Lev. ix. 22. So Chriſt, as the great high-prieſt, having offered himſelf a ſacrifice for the ſins of his people, lift up his hands towards his apoſtles, and bleſſed them in an authoritative way, by beſtowing bleſſings upon them: he bleſſed them with a larger meaſure of the ſpirit; for tho' they were to wait ſome few days longer for the extraordinary effuſion of the ſpirit, yet, in the mean while, they received from him more of it than they had formerly had; for he breathed upon them, and ſaid, receive the Holy Ghoſt, John xx. 22. He bleſſed them with larger meaſures of grace, and with more ſpiritual light, and underſtanding into the ſcriptures of truth, and with much inward peace of mind, and with the freſh diſcoveries of pardoning love; and which ſeemed neceſſary, ſince by their conduct towards him, one by denying him, and the reſt by forſaking him, the peace of their minds was broken, and they needed a freſh application of forgiving grace. The form of bleſſing the people uſed by Aaron, and his ſons, the prieſts, who were types of Chriſt, is recorded in Num. vi. 23—27, and tho' our Lord might not uſe the ſame form in bleſſing his diſciples, yet it ſeems he uſed the ſame geſture, lifting up his hands, as they did. The Targumiſts ſay [a], the bleſſing of the prieſts was done by ſtretching, or ſpreading out their hands; but other Jewiſh writers obſerve, it was by lifting them up: concerning which their rule is [e]; “in the province, the prieſts lift up their hands, as high as their ſhoulders, but in the ſanctuary, above their heads, except the high-prieſt, who did not lift up his hands above the plate of gold on his forehead.” The reaſon of this was, becauſe the name, Jehovah, was written upon it, and it was not proper his hands ſhould be lifted up above that. The account Maimonides [f] gives of this affair, is; “how is the lifting up of hands? in the borders, at the time the meſſenger of the congregation comes to ſervice, when he has ſaid, who ever will, &c. all the prieſts that ſtand in the ſynagogue, remove from their places, and go, and aſcend the deſk (or pulpit,) and ſtand there with their faces to the temple, and their backs to the people, and their fingers cloſed within their hands, until the meſſenger of the congregation has finiſhed the confeſſion, or thankſgiving; and then they turn their faces to the people, and ſtretch out their fingers, and lift up their hands to their ſhoulders and begin to bleſs, and the meſſenger of the congregation pronounces them (the bleſſings) word by word, &c.——How is the bleſſing of the prieſts in the ſanctuary? the prieſts go up into the deſk, (or pulpit) after the prieſts have finiſhed the morning daily ſervice, and lift up their hands above, over their heads, except the high-prieſt, who does not lift up his hands above the plate of gold, on his forehead; and one pronounces them (the bleſſings) word for word, as they do in the borders (in the country,) &c.” And as our Lord uſed this geſture in bleſſing, it is very likely he complied with another rule, by expreſſing it in the Hebrew tongue; for the Jews ſay [g], the bleſſing of the prieſts is not ſaid in any place, but in the holy tongue.

[a] Targum Jon. in Num. vi. 23. & Targum in Cant. vii. 7.

Ver. 51. And it came to paſs, while he bleſſed them, &c.] Juſt as he was finiſhing the words, by which he expreſſed the bleſſings he beſtowed on them: he was parted from them; as Elijah was from Eliſha: their ſpiritual and myſtical union by him remained, which is indiſſoluble; nor was his gracious preſence from them withdrawn; nor was this parting in anger and reſentment, as he ſometimes does withdraw from his people, on account of their ſinful conduct, in a little wrath, for a moment, reſenting their unbecoming carriage: but this parting was while he was bleſſing them, and was only in body; his heart was ſtill with them; it was a withdrawment of his corporal preſence from them, and that but for a while; he will come again a ſecond time from heaven, from whence the ſaints expect him, and then they will meet, and never part more: and carried up into heaven; by his divine power, as God, by virtue of which he aſcended himſelf, he went up gradually, till he became inviſible to his diſciples; or through the agility of his human body: for the bodies of the ſaints, when raiſed, will be like the angels, ſwift and nimble, and capable of moving from place to place, and of aſcending and deſcending; and much more the glorious body of Chriſt, according to which, theirs will be conformed: tho' neither of theſe deny the uſe of means, that might be made, as of a cloud, and of angels; for a cloud received him out of the ſight of the apoſtles; and there were the twenty thouſand chariots of God, even thouſands of angels, which attended him, when he aſcended on high, and in which he may be properly ſaid to be carried up into heaven, Acts i. 9. Pſal. lxviii. 17, 18. where he was received with a welcome, by his father, by all the glorified ſaints, and holy angels, and where he is placed in human nature, at the right hand of God; is crowned with glory, and honour, and exalted above all creatures, human or angelic; and where he will remain until the time of the reſtitution of all things, and then he will deſcend to judge the quick and dead. The Arabic and Ethiopic verſions read both theſe clauſes actively, he parted himſelf, or he departed from them, and went up into heaven; and ſo reads the Syriac verſion the laſt clauſe.

Ver. 52. And they worſhipped him, &c.] Not with a civil worſhip, as he was ſometimes worſhiped by men, in the days of his fleſh who, tho' they took him for ſome extraordinary perſon, knew him not to be the ſon of God; but with religious worſhip as God: for by his reſurrection from the dead, Chriſt was declared to be the ſon of God, and both by that, and by his going to his father, his aſcenſion to heaven, the diſciples were more confirmed in his proper deity, and divine ſonſhip; and therefore worſhiped him as God; by calling upon his name, aſcribing bleſſings and honour, and glory, to him; by making him the object of their reverence and fear; and by truſting in him; and by doing every religious act in his name, and which they ever after continued to do: and returned to Jeruſalem; as they were ordered, where they were to tarry and wait for the pouring down of the ſpirit: and this they did with great joy; for though their Lord was parted from them, and was gone to heaven, this did not cauſe ſorrow, as did his death, but, on the contrary, joy, even great joy; partly becauſe of the glory he was entered into, and poſſeſſed of; and partly on account of what he was gone to do for them; to appear in the preſence of God for them, to make interceſſion for them, to take poſſeſſion of heaven in their name, and to prepare a place for them, as well as to receive gifts for them; and now they return to Jeruſalem with great chearfulneſs, in full hope and expectation, yea, aſſurance of faith, that they ſhould ſhortly receive the promiſe of the father.

Ver. 53. And were continually in the temple, &c.] At the time of worſhip, at the hours of prayer, or of public ſervice; and perhaps always privately in an upper room in it, where they, with others, met frequently, and continued, with one accord, in prayer and ſupplication; ſee the note on Acts i. 14. a practice worthy of imitation, whether in the public or private way: praiſing, and bleſſing God; for his ſon Jeſus Chriſt, who had died for their ſins, was riſen again for their juſtification, and was now aſcended into heaven, to be their advocate there; and for all ſpiritual bleſſings, wherewith they were bleſſed in and by Chriſt; for all the gifts beſtowed upon them, and for what they had reaſon to expect; and for the honour done them in having a commiſſion from Chriſt to preach his Goſpel to every creature. Amen; ſo let him be praiſed, and bleſſed by all the ſaints, for all that is contained in this Goſpel. In a manuſcript copy of Beza's, 'tis added, “the Goſpel according to ſaint Luke was publiſhed fifteen years after the aſcenſion of Chriſt;” ſee the note on the title of this Goſpel.

AN EXPOSITION, &c.

The Goſpel according to St. JOHN.

THE author of this Goſpel is John, the ſon of Zebedee and Salome, the brother of James the greater; he outlived the reſt of the diſciples, and wrote this Goſpel after the other Evangeliſts; and in it many things are recorded, which are not in the other Goſpels; as various diſcourſes of Chriſt, and miracles done by him; ſeveral incidents in his life, and circumſtances that attended his ſufferings and death: the occaſion of it, is generally thought to be the errors of Ebion and Cerinthus, who denied the divinity of Chriſt, aſſerted he was a mere man, and that he did not exiſt before his incarnation; and the deſign of it is to confute them: and it is eaſy to obſerve, that he begins his Goſpel with the divinity of Chriſt; aſſerts him to be God, and proves him to be truly and properly ſo, by the works of creation, which were wrought by him, as well as ſhews that he was really man. Clemens [a] calls this Goſpel of John, πνευματικον Ευαγγελιον, a ſpiritual Goſpel, as indeed it is; conſiſting of the ſpiritual diſcourſes of our Lord, on various occaſions, both at the beginning, and in the courſe of his miniſtry, and eſpecially a little before his ſufferings and death: and the ſame writer obſerves, that John, the laſt of the Evangeliſts, conſidering that in the other Goſpels were declared, the things relating to the body of Chriſt, that is, to him, as he was after the fleſh; to his genealogy and birth as man; to what was done to him, or by him, in his infancy; to his baptiſm, temptations, journeys, &c. at the requeſt of his familiar friends, and moved by the Spirit of God, compoſed this Goſpel. Moreover, it is obſerved by ſome [b], that the other three Evangeliſts, only record what was done by Chriſt, in one year after John the Baptiſt was caſt into priſon, as appears from Matt. iv. 12. Mark i. 14. Luke iii. 20. wherefore John, at the intreaty of his friends, put theſe things into his Goſpel, which were done or ſaid by Chriſt, before John was caſt into priſon. He was called very early by Chriſt, though young; and was with him throughout the whole of his miniſtry, and was an eye and ear witneſs of what he here relates, and his teſtimony is to be received; he was the beloved diſciple, he leaned on the boſom of Jeſus, and had great intimacy with him; and might be privy to ſome things, which others were not acquainted with; and though he was a Galilean, and an unlearned man, Acts iv. 13. yet being endowed with the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, he was abundantly qualified to write this book: for what ſome ancient writers [c] ſay of him, that he was a prieſt, and wore a plate, that is, of gold upon his forehead, cannot be true, ſince he was not of the tribe of Levi; and beſides, only the high-prieſt wore that upon his mitre; unleſs they mean, as ſeems moſt likely, that he was a chriſtian biſhop: perhaps the miſtake may ariſe from John the Baptiſt, who was of the prieſtly order, and is called by ſome Jewiſh writers [d], John the high-prieſt. When and where this Goſpel was written, is not certain; ſome ſay in [e] Aſia, after he had wrote his Revelation in Patmos; and others ſay particularly, that it was wrote at Epheſus; the title of it in the Syriac verſion, ſignifies as much, which runs thus; "the holy Goſ-" "pel, the preaching of John, which he ſpoke and" "publiſhed in Greek at Epheſus." And to the ſame purpoſe is the title of it in the Perſic verſion; "the Goſpel of John, one of the twelve apoſtles," "which was ſpoken in the city of Epheſus, in the" "Greek-Roman tongue."

CHAP. I.

Ver. 1. IN the beginning was the word, &c.] That this is ſaid not of the written word, but of the eſſential word of God, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, is clear, from all that is ſaid from hence, to ver. 14. as that this word was in the beginning, was with God, and is God; from the creation of all things being aſcribed to him, and his being ſaid to be the life and light of men; from his coming into the world, and uſage in it; from his beſtowing the privilege of adoption on believers; and from his incarnation; and alſo there is a particular application of all this to Chriſt, ver. 15, 16, 17, 18. And likewiſe from what this Evangeliſt elſewhere ſays of him, when he calls him the word of life, and places him between the Father and the Holy Ghoſt; and ſpeaks of the record of the word of God, and the teſtimony of Jeſus, as the ſame thing; and repreſents him as a warriour and conqueror, 1 John i. 1, 2. and v. 7. Rev. i. 2, 9. and xix. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. Moreover, this appears to be ſpoken of Chriſt, from what other inſpired writers have ſaid of him, under the ſame character; as the Evangeliſt Luke, ch. i. 2. the Apoſtle Paul, Acts xx. 32. Heb. iv. 12. and the Apoſtle Peter, 2 Pet. iii. 5. And who is called the word, not as man; for as man he was not in the beginning with God, but became ſo in the fulneſs of time; nor is the man God; beſides, as ſuch, he is a creature, and not the creator, nor is he the life and light of men; moreover, he was the word, before he was man, and therefore not as ſuch: nor can any part of the human nature be ſo called; not the fleſh, for the word was made fleſh; nor his human ſoul, for ſelf-ſubſiſtence, deity, eternity, and the creation of all things, can never be aſcribed to that; but he is the word as the Son of God, as is evident from what is here attributed to him, and from the word being ſaid to be ſo, as in ver. 14, 18. and from thoſe places, where the word is explained by the Son, compare 1 John v. 5, 7. Matt. xxviii. 19. And is ſo called from his nature, being begotten of the Father; for as the word, whether ſilent or expreſſed, is the birth of the mind, the image of it, equal to it, and diſtinct from it; ſo Chriſt is the only begotten of the Father, the expreſs image of his perſon, in all things equal to him, and a diſtinct perſon from him: and he may be ſo called, from ſome action, or actions, ſaid of him, or aſcribed to him; as that he ſpoke for, and on the behalf of the elect of God, in the eternal council and covenant of grace and peace; and ſpoke all things out of nothing, in creation; for with regard to thoſe words ſo often mentioned in the hiſtory of the creation, and God ſaid, may Jehovah the Son be called the word; alſo he was ſpoken of as the promiſed Meſſiah, throughout the whole Old Teſtament diſpenſation; and is the interpreter of his Father's mind, as he was in Eden's garden, as well as in the days of his fleſh; and now ſpeaks in heaven for the ſaints. The phraſe, מימרא דיי, the word of the Lord, ſo frequently uſed by the Targumiſts, is well known; and it is to be obſerved, that the ſame things which John here ſays of the word, they ſay likewiſe, as will be obſerved on the ſeveral clauſes; from whence it is more likely, that John ſhould take this phraſe, ſince the paraphraſes of Onkelos and Jonathan ben Uzziel, were written before his time, than that he ſhould borrow it from the writings of Plato, or his followers, as ſome have thought; with whoſe philoſophy, Ebion and Cerinthus are ſaid to be acquainted; wherefore John, the more eaſily to gain upon them, uſes this phraſe, when that of the Son of God would have been diſagreeable to them: that there is ſome likeneſs between the Evangeliſt John and Plato in their ſentiments concerning the word, will not be denied. Amelius [f], a platonic philoſopher, who lived after the times of John, manifeſtly refers to theſe words of his, in agreement with his maſter's doctrine: his words are theſe; "and this was truly Logos, or the word, by whom always exiſting, the things that are made, were made, as alſo Heraclitus thought; and who, likewiſe that Barbarian (meaning the Evangeliſt John) reckons, was in the order and dignity of the beginning, conſtituted with God, and was God, by whom all things are entirely made; in whom, whatſoever is made, lives, and has life, and being; and who illapſed into bodies, and was clothed with fleſh, and appeared a man; ſo notwithſtanding, that he ſhewed forth the majeſty of his nature; and after his diſſolution, he was again deified, and was God, as he was before he deſcended into a body, fleſh and man." In which words it is eaſy to obſerve, plain traces of what the Evangeliſt ſays in the firſt four verſes, and in the fourteenth verſe of this chapter; yet it is much more probable, that Plato had his notion of the Logos, or word, out of the writings of the Old Teſtament, than that John ſhould take this phraſe, or what he ſays concerning the word, from him; ſince it is a matter of fact not diſputed, that Plato went into Egypt to get knowledge; not only Clemens Alexandrinus a chriſtian writer ſays, that he was a philoſopher of the Hebrews [g], and underſtood prophecy [h], and ſtirred up the fire of the Hebrew philoſophy [i]; but it is affirmed by heathen writers, that he went into Egypt to learn of the prieſts [k], and to underſtand the rites of the prophets [l]; and Ariſtobulus a Jew affirms [m], he ſtudied their law; and Numenius a Pythagoric philoſopher [n], charges him with ſtealing what he wrote, concerning God and the world, out of the books of Moſes; and uſed to ſay of him, what is Plato, but Moſes Atticizing? or Moſes ſpeaking Greek: and Euſebius [o], an ancient chriſtian writer, points at the very places, from whence Plato took his hints: wherefore it is more probable, that the Evangeliſt received this phraſe of the word, as a divine perſon, from the Targums, where there is ſuch frequent mention made of it; or however, there is a very great agreement between what he and theſe ancient writings of the Jews ſay of the word, as will be hereafter ſhewn. Moreover, the phraſe is frequently uſed in like manner, in the writings of Philo the Jew; from whence it is manifeſt, that the name was well known to the Jews, and may be the reaſon of the Evangeliſt's uſing it. This word he ſays, was in the beginning; by which is meant, not the Father of Chriſt; for he is never called the beginning, but the Son only; and was he, he muſt be ſuch a beginning as is without one; nor can he be ſaid to be ſo, with reſpect to the Son or Spirit, who are as eternal as himſelf; only with reſpect to the creatures, of whom he is the author and efficient cauſe: Chriſt is indeed in the Father, and the Father in him, but this cannot be meant here; nor is the beginning of the Goſpel of Chriſt, by the preaching of John the Baptiſt, intended here: John's miniſtry was an evangelical one, and the Goſpel was more clearly preached by him, and after him, by Chriſt and his apoſtles, than before; but it did not then begin; it was preached before by the angel to the ſhepherds, at the birth of Chriſt; and before that, by the prophets under the former diſpenſation, as by Iſaiah, and others; it was preached before unto Abraham, and to our firſt parents, in the garden of Eden: nor did Chriſt begin to be, when John began to preach; for John's preaching and baptiſm, were for the manifeſtation of him: yea, Chriſt exiſted as man, before John began to preach; and though he was born after him as man, yet as the word and Son of God, he exiſted before John was born; he was in being in the times of the prophets, which were before John; and in the times of Moſes, and before Abraham, and in the days of Noah: but by the beginning is here meant, the beginning of the world, or the creation of all things; and which is expreſſive of the eternity of Chriſt, for he was in the beginning, as the maker of all creatures, and therefore muſt be before them all: and it is to be obſerved, that it is ſaid of him, that in the beginning he was; not made, as the heavens and the earth, and the things in them were; nor was he merely in the purpoſe and predeſtination of God, but really exiſted as a divine perſon, as he did from all eternity; as appears from his being ſet up in office from everlaſting; from all the elect being choſen in him, and given to him before the foundation of the world; from the covenant of grace, which is from eternity, being made with him; and from the bleſſings and promiſes of grace, being as early put into his hands; and from his nature as God, and his relation to his Father: ſo Philo the Jew, often calls the Logos, or word, the eternal word, the moſt ancient word, and more ancient than any thing that is made [p]. The eternity of the Meſſiah is acknowledged by the ancient Jews: Mic. v. 2. is a full proof of it; which by them [q] is thus paraphraſed; "out of thee, before "me, ſhall come forth the Meſſiah, that he may "exerciſe dominion over Iſrael; whoſe name is "ſaid from eternity, from the days of old." Jarchi upon it only mentions Pſal. lxxii. 17. which is rendered by the Targum on the place, before the ſun his name was prepared; it may be tranſlated, before the ſun his name was Yinnon; that is, the ſon, namely the Son of God; and Aben Ezra intepretsit, יקרא בן, he ſhall be called the ſon; and to this agrees what the Talmudiſts ſay [r], that the name of the Meſſiah was before the world was created; in proof of which they produce the ſame paſſage. And the word was with God; not with men or angels; for he was before either of theſe; but with God, not eſſentially, but perſonally conſidered; with God his Father: not in the Socinian ſenſe, that he was only known to him, and to no other before the miniſtry of John the Baptiſt; for he was known and ſpoken of by the angel Gabriel before; and was known to Mary and to Joſeph; and to Zacharias and Elizabeth; to the ſhepherds, and to the wiſe men; to Simeon and Anna, who ſaw him in the temple; and to the prophets and patriarchs in all ages, from the beginning of the world: but this phraſe denotes the exiſtence of the word with the Father, his relation and nearneſs to him, his equality with him, and particularly the diſtinction of his perſon from him, as well as his eternal being with him; for he was always with him, and is, and ever will be; he was with him in the council and covenant of grace, and in the creation of the univerſe, and is with him in the providential government of the world; he was with him as the word and Son of God in heaven, whilſt he as man, was here on earth; and he is now with him, and ever will be: and as John here ſpeaks of the word, as a diſtinct perſon from God the Father, ſo do the Targums, or Chaldee paraphraſes; Pſal. cx. 1. the Lord ſaid to my Lord, is rendered, the Lord ſaid to his word; where he is manifeſtly diſtinguiſhed from Jehovah, that ſpeaks to him; and in Hoſ. i. 7. the Lord promiſes to have mercy on the houſe of Judah, and ſave them by the Lord their God. The Targum is, I will redeem them by the word of the Lord their God; where the word of the Lord, who is ſpoken of as a Redeemer and Saviour, is diſtinguiſhed from the Lord, who promiſes to ſave by him. This diſtinction of Jehovah and his word, may be obſerved in multitudes of places, in the Chaldee paraphraſes, and in the writings of Philo the Jew; and this phraſe, of the word being with God, is in the Targums expreſſed by, " מימר מן קדם, the word from before the Lord, or which is before the Lord; being always in his preſence, and the angel of it; ſo Onkelos paraphraſes Gen. xxxi. 22. and the word from before the Lord, came to Laban, &c. and Exod. xx. 19. thus, and let not the word from before the Lord ſpeak with us, leſt we die; for ſo it is read in the king of Spain's bible; and wiſdom, which is the ſame with the word of God, is ſaid to be by him, or with him, in Prov. viii. 30. agreeable to which John here ſpeaks. John makes uſe of the word God, rather than Father, becauſe the word is commonly called the word of God, and becauſe of what follows; and the word was God: not made a God, as he is ſaid hereafter to be made fleſh; nor conſtituted or appointed a God, or a God by office; but truly and properly God, in the higheſt ſenſe of the word, as appears from the names by which he is called; as Jehovah, God, our, your, their, and my God, God with us, the mighty God, God over all, the great God, the living God, the true God, and eternal life; and from his perfections, and the whole fulneſs of the Godhead that dwells in him, as independance, eternity, immutability, omnipreſence, omniſcience, and omnipotence; and from his works of creation and providence, his miracles, the work of redemption, his forgiving ſins, the reſurrection of himſelf and others from the dead, and the adminiſtration of the laſt judgment; and from the worſhip given him, as prayer to him, faith in him, and the performance of baptiſm in his name: nor is it any objection to the proper deity of Chriſt, that the article is here wanting; ſince when the word is applied to the Father, it is not always uſed, and even in this chapter, ver. 6, 13, 18. and which ſhews, that the word God, is not the ſubject, but the predicate of this propoſition, as we render it: ſo the Jews often uſe the word of the Lord for Jehovah, and call him God. Thus the words in Gen. xxviii. 20, 21. are paraphraſed by Onkelos; "if the word of the Lord will "be my help, and will keep me, &c. then the "word of the Lord ſhall be, לי לאלהא, my God:" again, Levit. xxvi. 12. is paraphraſed by the Targum aſcribed to Jonathan ben Uzziel, thus; "I will cauſe "the glory of my Shekinah to dwell among you, "and my word ſhall be your God, the Redeemer;" once more, Deut. xxvi. 17. is rendered by the Jeruſalem Targum after this manner; "ye have made "the word of the Lord king over you this day, "that he may be your God:" and this is frequent with Philo the Jew, who ſays, the name of God is his word, and calls him, my Lord, the divine word; and affirms, that the moſt ancient word is God [s].

Ver. 2. The ſame was in the beginning with God.] This is a repetition of what is before ſaid, and is made to ſhew, the importance of the truths before delivered; namely, the eternity of Chriſt, his diſtinct perſonality, and proper deity; and that the phraſe in the beginning, is to be joined to each of the above ſentences; and ſo proves, not only his eternal exiſtence, but his eternal exiſtence with the Father, and alſo his eternal deity; and is alſo made to carry on the thread of the diſcourſe, concerning the word, and not God the Father; and to expreſs, not only his co-exiſtence in nature, but his co-operation in the works of creation next mentioned.

Ver. 3. All things were made by him, &c.] Which is a proof at once of all that is ſaid before; as that he was in the beginning; and that he was with God the father in the beginning; and that he was God; otherwiſe all things could not have been made by him, had either of theſe been untrue: which is to be underſtood, not of the new creation; for this would be a reſtraining all things to a few perſons only; nor is it any where ſaid, that all things are new made, but made; and it is falſe, that all were converted, that have been converted, by the miniſtry of Chriſt, as man: all men are not renewed, regenerated, nor reformed; and the greater part of thoſe that were renewed, were renewed before Chriſt exiſted, as man; and therefore could not be renewed by him, as ſuch: tho' indeed, could this ſenſe be eſtabliſhed, it would not anſwer the end for which it is coined; namely, to deſtroy the proof of Chriſt's deity, and of his exiſtence before his incarnation; for in all ages, from the beginning of the world, ſome have been renewed; and the new creation is a work of God, and of almighty power, equally with the old; for who can create ſpiritual light, infuſe a principle of ſpiritual life, take away the heart of ſtone, and give an heart of fleſh, or produce faith, but God? regeneration is denied to be of man, and is always aſcribed to God; nor would Chriſt's being the author of the new creation, be any contradiction to his being the author of the old creation, which is intended here: by all things, are meant the heaven, and all its created inhabitants, the airy, ſtarry, and third heavens, and the earth, and all therein, the ſea, and every thing that is in that; and the word, or ſon of God, is the efficient cauſe of all theſe, not a bare inſtrument of the formation of them; for the prepoſition by does not always denote an inſtrument, but ſometimes an efficient, as in 1 Cor. i. 9. 2 Cor. i. 1. Gal. i. 1. and ſo here, though not to the excluſion of the father, and of the ſpirit: and without him was not any thing made that was made; in which may be obſerved the conjunct operation of the word, or ſon, with the father, and ſpirit, in creation; and the extent of his concern in it to every thing that is made; for without him there was not one ſingle thing in the whole compaſs of the creation made; and the limitation of it to things that are made; and ſo excludes the increated being father, ſon, and ſpirit; and ſin alſo, which is not a principle made by God, and which has no efficient, but a deficient cauſe. So the Jews aſcribe the creation of all things to the word. The Targumiſts attribute the creation of man, in particular, to the word of God: it is ſaid in Gen. i. 27. God created man in his own image; the Jeruſalem Targum of it is, "and the word of the Lord created man in his likeneſs." And Gen. iii. 22. and the Lord God ſaid, behold the man is become as one of us, the ſame Targum paraphraſes thus; "and the word of the Lord God ſaid, behold the man whom I have created, is the only one in the world." Alſo in the ſame writings, the creation of all things in general is aſcribed to the word; the paſſage in Deut. xxxiii. 27. the eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlaſting arms, is paraphraſed by Onkelos, "the eternal God is an habitation, by whoſe word the world was made." In Iſ. xlviii. 13. it is ſaid, mine hand alſo hath laid the foundation of the earth. The Targum of Jonathan ben Uzziah on it is, "yea, by my word I have founded the earth:" which agrees with what is ſaid in Heb. xi. 3. 2 Pet. iii. 5, 7. and the ſame ſays Philo the Jew, who not only calls him the archetype, and exemplar of the world, but the power that made it: he often aſcribes the creation of the heavens, and the earth unto him, and likewiſe the creation of man, after whoſe image, he ſays, he was made[t]. The Ethiopic verſion adds, at the end of this verſe, and alſo that which is made is for himſelf.

Ver. 4. In him was life, &c.] The Perſic verſion reads in the plural number, lives. There was life, in the word with reſpect to himſelf; a divine life the ſame with the life of the father and of the ſpirit; and is in him, not by gift, nor by derivation or communication; but originally, and independently, and from all eternity: indeed he lived before his incarnation as mediator, and redeemer. Job knew him in his time, as his living redeemer; but this regards him as the word and living God, and diſtinguiſhes him from the written word, and ſhews that he is not a mere idea in the divine mind, but a truly divine perſon: and there was life in Chriſt the word, with reſpect to others; the fountain of natural life is in in him, he is the efficient cauſe, and preſerver of it; whether vegetative, animal, and rational; and proves him to be truly God, and that he exiſted before his incarnation; ſince creatures, who have received ſuch a life from him did: and ſpiritual life was alſo in him; all his elect are dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, and can't quicken themſelves. Chriſt has procured life for them, and gives it to them, and implants it in them; a life of ſanctification is from him; and a life of juſtification is upon him, and of faith is by him; all the comforts of a ſpiritual life, and all things appertaining to it, are from him, and he maintains, and preſerves it. Eternal life is in him, and with him; not the purpoſe of it only, nor the promiſe of it barely, but the gift of it itſelf; which was granted in conſequence of his aſking it, and which he had by way of ſtipulation; and hence has a right and power to beſtow it: now, this being in him proves him to be the true God, and ſhews us where life is to be had, and the ſafety and ſecurity of it: and the life was the light of men; the life which was in, and by the word, was, with reſpect to men, a life of light, or a life attended with light: by which is meant, not a mere viſive, faculty, receptive of the ſun's light, but rational knowledge and underſtanding; for when Chriſt, the word, breathed into man the breath of life, and he became a living ſoul, he filled him with rational light and knowledge. Adam had a knowledge of God; of his being, and perfections; of the perſons in the Trinity; of his relation to God, dependance on him, and obligation to him; of his mind and will; and knew what it was to have communion with him. He knew much of himſelf, and of all the creatures; this knowledge was natural and perfect in its kind, but loſeable; and different from that which ſaints now have of God, through Chriſt, the mediator; and ſince this natural light was from Chriſt, the word, as a creator, he muſt be the eternal God. The Socinians are not willing to allow this ſenſe, but ſay that Chriſt is the light of men, by preaching the heavenly doctrine, and by the example of his holy life; but hereby he did not enlighten every man that cometh into the world; the greateſt part of men before the preaching, and example of Chriſt, ſat in darkneſs; and the greateſt part of the Jews remained in darkneſs, notwithſtanding his preaching, and example; and the patriarchs that were enlightened under the former diſpenſation, were not enlightened this way: it will be owned, that all ſpiritual and ſupernatural light, which any of the ſons of men have had, ſince the fall, was from Chriſt, from whom they had their ſpiritual life; even all ſpiritual light in converſion, and all after-degrees of light; thro' him they enjoyed the light of God's countenance, and had the light of joy and gladneſs here, and of glory hereafter.

Ver. 5. And the light ſhineth in darkneſs, &c.] Which, thro' ſin, came upon the minds of men; who are naturally in the dark about the nature and perfections of God; about ſin, and the conſequences of it; about Chriſt, and ſalvation by him; about the ſpirit of God, and his work upon the ſoul; and about the ſcriptures of truth, and the doctrines of the Goſpel. Man was created a knowing creature, but not content with his knowledge, ſins, and is baniſhed from the preſence of God, the fountain of light; which brought a darkneſs on him, and his poſterity, and which is increaſed in them by perſonal iniquity, and in which ſatan, the God of this world, has an hand; and ſometimes they are left to judicial blindneſs, and which iſſues in worſe darkneſs, if grace prevents not: now amidſt this darkneſs there were ſome remains of the light of nature; with reſpect to the being of God, which ſhines in the works of creation and providence; and to the worſhip of God, though very dimly; and to the knowledge of moral good and evil: and the darkneſs comprehended it not; or perceived it not, as the Syriac verſion renders it. By the light of nature, and the remains of it, men could not come to any clear and diſtinct knowledge of the above things; and much leſs to any knowledge of the true way of ſalvation: unleſs, rather by the light ſhould be meant, the light of the Meſſiah, or of the Goſpel ſhining in the figures, types, and ſhadows of the law, and in the prophecies and promiſes of the Old Teſtament; and yet, ſuch was the darkneſs upon the minds of men, that they could not very diſtinctly apprehend it, and much leſs fully comprehend it, ſo that there was need of a freſh and fuller revelation; an account of which follows;

Ver. 6. There was a man ſent from God, &c.] John the Baptiſt: he was not the Logos, or word; nor was he an angel, but a man; yet an extraordinary one, in his conception of a barren woman, and in being born when both parents were ſtricken in years; and whilſt he was in the womb, he leaped for joy at the ſalutation of Mary; and as ſoon as born was filled with the Holy Ghoſt; and when he was grown up, and appeared in publick, it was in an uncommon manner: his dreſs, and his diet were both out of the common way; and his temper and ſpirit were that of Elias the prophet; and as for his work and office, it was very peculiar; he was the forerunner of Chriſt, and the firſt adminiſtrator of the new ordinance of baptiſm, and the greateſt of all the prophets: this perſon had his miſſion from God, both to preach and baptize: whoſe name was John; the name given him by the angel before his conception, and by his mother Elizabeth, after her neighbours and couſins had given him another; and which was confirmed by his father Zacharias, when deaf and dumb: it ſignifies grace, or gracious; and a gracious man he was: he was very acceptable to his parents; a man that had the grace of God in him, and great gifts of grace beſtowed on him; he was a preacher of the doctrines of grace; and his miniſtry was very grateful to many.

Ver. 7. The ſame came for a witneſs, &c.] The end of his being ſent, and the deſign of his coming were, to bear witneſs of the light: by which is meant, not the light of nature, or reaſon; nor the light of the Goſpel; but Chriſt himſelf, the author of light, natural, ſpiritual, and eternal. This was one of the names of the Meſſiah with the Jews; of whom they ſay [u], נהירא שמו, light is his name; as it is ſaid in Dan. ii. 22. and the light dwelleth with him; on which they have [w] elſewhere this Gloſs, this is the king Meſſiah; and ſo they interpret Pſ. xliii. 3. of him [x]. Philo the Jew often ſpeaks of the Logos, or word, as light, and calls him the intelligible light, the univerſal light, the moſt perfect light; repreſents him as full of divine light; and ſays, he is called the ſun [y]. Now John came to bear a teſtimony to him, as he did; of which an account is given in this chapter, very largely, and elſewhere; as that he teſtified of his exiſtence before his incarnation; of his being with the father, and in his boſom; of his deity, and divine Sonſhip; of his being the Meſſiah; of the fulneſs of grace that was in him; of his incarnation and ſatisfaction; of his deſcent from heaven; and of his relation to his church, as in ver. 15, 16, 18, 23, 27, 29, 30, 34, 36. and ch. iii. 29, 31. the end of which witneſs was, that all men thro' him might believe; that is, that the Jews, to whom he preached, might, thro' his teſtimony, believe that Jeſus was the light, and true Meſſiah; for theſe words are to be taken in a limited ſenſe, and not to be extended to every individual of mankind; ſince millions were dead before John began his teſtimony, and multitudes then in being, and ſince, whom it never reached: nor can it deſign more than the Jews, to whom alone he bore witneſs of Chriſt; and the faith which he taught, and required by his teſtimony, was an aſſent unto him as the Meſſiah; tho' the preaching of the Goſpel is a means of true ſpiritual faith in Chriſt; and doubtleſs it was ſo to many, as preached by John: it points out the object of faith, and encourages ſouls to believe in Chriſt; and hence, Goſpel-miniſters are inſtruments by whom others believe; and faith comes by hearing, and hearing, by the word of God; and then is a conſiderable end of the Goſpel-miniſtry anſwered.

Ver. 8. He was not that light, &c.] He was a light; he was the forerunner of the ſun of righteouſneſs, the Phoſophorus of the Goſpel-day; he had great light in him; he knew that the Meſſiah was ready to come, and declared it; and upon his baptiſm he knew him perſonally, and ſignified him to others: he had great light into the perſon and work of Chriſt; and into the way of ſalvation by him, and remiſſion of ſins thro' him; into the doctrines of faith in Chriſt, and of evangelical repentance towards God; and into the abolition of the legal, Moſaic and Jewiſh diſpenſation; and was an inſtrument of giving light to others; yea, he was a burning and ſhining light, in whoſe light the Jews rejoiced, at leaſt for a ſeaſon: but then he was not that light, the word and wiſdom of God; that increated light that dwelt with him from all eternity; nor that which was the light of men, from the creation; nor that light, which was of old promiſed to the ſaints and patriarchs of the Old Teſtament, ment, and ſhone in the ordinances and predictions of that ſtate; nor that fountain and giver of light, of every ſort, to men; not that light in which is no darkneſs, and always ſhines; not that true light, or ſun of righteouſneſs, the Meſſiah, or that lightens every man that comes into the world: but was ſent to bear witneſs of that light; which is repeated, to diſtinguiſh him from that light; to ſhew what he was ſent for, and that he acted according to his miſſion; and to expreſs the honourableneſs of his work.

Ver. 9. That was the true light, &c.] Chriſt is that light, that famous and excellent light, the fountain of all light to all creatures; that gave light to the dark earth at firſt, and ſpoke light out of darkneſs; that light of all men in the earth, and of all the angels in heaven, and of all the ſaints below, and of all the glorified ones above: he is the true light, in diſtinction from typical lights; the Urim of the former diſpenſation; the candleſtick, with the lamps of it; the pillar of fire which directed the Iſraelites by night in the wilderneſs; and from all the typical light there was in the inſtitutions and ſacrifices of the law; and in oppoſition to the law itſelf, which the Jews [z] magnify, and cry up as the light, ſaying, there is no light but the law; and in oppoſition to all falſe lights, as prieſts, diviners, and ſoothſayers among the Gentiles; Scribes, and Phariſees, and the learned Rabbins among the Jews, ſo much boaſted of as the lights of the world; and to all falſe Chriſts and prophets that have riſen, or ſhall riſe, in the world. Which lighteth every man that cometh into the world: the ſenſe is, either that every man that is enlightened in a ſpiritual manner, is enlightened by him, which is true of Chriſt, as the Son of God, exiſting from the beginning; but not in the Socinian ſenſe, as if they were enlightened by his human miniſtry and example; for the Old Teſtament-ſaints were not enlightened by his preaching; and many were enlightened by the miniſtry of John the Baptiſt; and multitudes afterwards, through the miniſtry of the Apoſtles; and very few, comparatively, were enlightened under the miniſtry of Chriſt; and none we read of, in this ſenſe, enlightened by him, when, and as ſoon as they came into the world: or the meaning is, that he is that light which lighteth all ſorts of men; which is true in a ſpiritual ſenſe: ſome connect the phraſe, that cometh into the world, not with every man, but with the true light; and the Arabic verſion ſo reads, and joins it to the following verſe: but this reading is not ſo natural, and the order of the words requires the common reading; nor is the difficulty removed hereby; for ſtill it is every man that is enlightened: it is beſt therefore to underſtand theſe words of the light of nature, and reaſon, which Chriſt, as the word, and creator, and light of men, gives to every man that is born into the world; and which ſerves to detect the Quakers notion of the light within, which every man has, and is no other than the light of a natural conſcience; and ſhows how much men, even natural men, are obliged to Chriſt, and how great a perſon he is, and how deſerving of praiſe, honour, and glory. The phraſe, every man that cometh into the world, is Jewiſh, and often to be met with in Rabbinical writings, and ſignifies all men that are born into the world; the inſtances are almoſt innumerable; take one or two: on thoſe words in Job xxv. 3. on whom doth not his light ariſe? it is aſked [a], who is he that cometh, "מכל באי עולם, "of all that come into the world; and ſays, the ſun "hath not lightened me by day, nor hath the "moon lightened me by night? thou enlighteneſt "thoſe above, and thoſe below, and all that come "into the world." Again, God is introduced thus ſpeaking [b]: "I am the God, לכל באי עולם, of "all that come into the world; and I have not united my name, but to the people of Iſrael." Once more [c], "Moſes, our maſter, from the mouth of "power, (i. e. God; ſee Matt. xxvi. 64.) commanded to oblige, את כל באי העולם, all that "come into the world, to receive the command- "ments which were commanded the ſons of Noah."

Ver. 10. He was in the world, &c.] This is to be underſtood, not of his incarnation; for the word was denotes paſt exiſtence in the world, even all the time paſt from the creation of the world; and the world intends the world in general, as oppoſed to Judea, and the people of the Jews in the next verſe; beſides, the incarnation of the word is ſpoken of in ver. 14. as a new and diſtinct thing from this: but of his being in the world, when firſt made, and ſince, by his eſſence, by which he fills the whole world; and by his power, upholding and preſerving it; and by his providence, ordering and managing all the affairs of it, and influencing and governing all things in it: he was in it as the life and light of it, giving natural life and light to creatures in it, and filling it, and them, with various bleſſings of goodneſs; and he was in the promiſe and type before, as well as after the Jews were diſtinguiſhed from other nations, as his peculiar people; and he was frequently viſible in the world, in an human form, before his incarnation, as in Eden's garden to our firſt parents, to Abraham, Jacob, Manoah, and his wife, and others. And the world was made by him: ſo Philo the Jew often aſcribes the making of the world to the Logos, or word, as before obſerved on ver. 3. and this regards the whole univerſe, and all created beings in it, and therefore can't deſign the new creation: beſides, if all men in the world were a-new created by Chriſt, they would know him; for a conſiderable branch of the new creation lies in knowledge; whereas, in the very next clauſe, it is aſſerted, that the world knew him not; and they would alſo love him, and obey him, which the generality of the world do not; they would appear to be in him, and ſo not be condemned by him, as multitudes will. To underſtand this of the old creation, beſt ſuits the context, and proves the deity of Chriſt, and his pre-exiſtence, as the word, and Son of God, to his incarnation. And the world knew him not; that is, the inhabitants of the world knew him not as their creator; nor did they acknowledge the mercies they received from him; nor did they worſhip, ſerve, and obey him, or love and fear him; nor did they, the greater part of them, know him as the Meſſiah, Mediator, Saviour, and Redeemer. There was, at firſt, a general knowledge of Chriſt throughout the world among all the ſons of Adam, after the firſt promiſe of him, and which, for a while, continued; but this, in proceſs of time, being neglected and ſlighted, it was forgot, and utterly loſt, as to the greater part of mankind; for the Gentiles, for many hundreds of years, as they knew not the true God, ſo they were without Chriſt, without any notion of the Meſſiah; and this their ignorance, as it was firſt their ſin, became their puniſhment.

Ver. 11. He came unto his own, &c.] Not all the world, who are his own by right of creation; for theſe, his own, are oppoſed to the world, and diſtinguiſhed from them; and his coming to them deſigns ſome particular favour, which is not vouchſafed to all: nor yet are the elect of God intended; tho' they are Chriſt's own, in a very ſpecial ſenſe; they are his by his own choice, by his father's gift, by his own purchaſe, and thro' the conqueſt of his grace, and are the objects of his ſpecial love; and for their ſake he came in the fleſh, and to them he comes in a ſpiritual way, and to them will he appear a ſecond time at the laſt day unto ſalvation: but they cannot be meant, becauſe when he comes to them they receive him; whereas theſe did not, as the next clauſe affirms: but by his own are meant the whole body of the Jewiſh nation; ſo called, becauſe they were choſen by the Lord above all people; had diſtinguiſhing favours beſtowed upon them, as the adoption, the covenants, the promiſes, the giving of the law, and the ſervice of God; and had the Shekinah, and the ſymbol of the divine preſence in a remarkable manner among them; and the promiſe of the Meſſiah was in a particular manner made to them; and indeed, he was to be born of them, ſo that they were his kindred, his people, and his own nation: and this his coming to them is to be underſtood not of his incarnation; tho' when he came in the fleſh, as he came of them, ſo he came to them, particularly being ſent to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael, and was rejected by them as the Meſſiah; yet his incarnation is afterwards ſpoken of in ver. 14. as a new and diſtinct thing from this; and to underſtand it of ſome coming of his before his incarnation, beſt ſuits with the context, and the deſign of the Evangeliſt. Now Chriſt, the Word, came to the Jews before his incarnation, not only in types, perſonal and real, and in promiſes and propheſies, and in the word and ordinances, but in perſon; as to Moſes in the buſh, and gave orders to deliver the children of Iſrael out of Egypt: he came and redeemed them himſelf with a mighty hand, and a ſtretched out arm; in his love and pity he led them through the red ſea as on dry ground; and thro' the wilderneſs in a pillar of cloud by day, and a pillar of fire by night; and he appeared to them at mount Sinai, who gave unto them the lively oracles of God: and his own received him not; they did not believe in him, nor obey his voice; they rebelled againſt him, and tempted him often, particularly at Maſſah and Meribah; they provoked him to anger, and vexed, and grieved his holy Spirit, as they afterwards ſlighted and deſpiſed his Goſpel by the prophets. Of this non-reception of the Word by the Jews, and their puniſhment for it, the Targumiſt on Hoſ. ix. 17. thus ſpeaks: "my God will remove them far away, becauſe, לא קבילו למימריה, they receive not his Word; and they ſhall wander among the people." And ſo they treated this ſame Logos, or Word of God, when he was made fleſh, and dwelt among them. Somewhat remarkable is the following diſcourſe of ſome Jews among themſelves[*]: "when the Word of God comes, who is his meſſenger, we ſhall honour him. Says R. Saul, did not the prophets come, and we ſlew them, and ſhed their blood? (compare this with Matt. xxiii. 30, 31, 37.) how therefore now, נקבל מדברו, ſhall we receive his word? or wherefore ſhall we believe? Says R. Samuel, the Levite, to him, becauſe he will heal them, and deliver them from their deſtructions; and becauſe of theſe ſigns we ſhall believe him, and honour him." But they did not.

Ver. 12. But as many as received him, &c.] This is explained, in the latter part of the text, by believing in his name; for faith is a receiving him as the Word, and Son of God, as the Meſſiah, Saviour, and Redeemer; a receiving grace out of his fulneſs, and every bleſſing from him, as a juſtifying righteouſneſs, pardon of ſin, and an inheritance among them that are ſanctified; for tho' the generality rejected him, there were ſome few that received him: to them gave he power to become the ſons of God; as ſuch were very early called, in diſtinction from the children of men, or of the world; ſee Gen. vi. 2, 4. To be the ſons of God is a very ſpecial favour, a great bleſſing, and high honour: ſaints indeed are not in ſo high a ſenſe the ſons of God as Chriſt is; nor in ſo low a ſenſe as angels and men in common are; nor in ſuch ſenſe as civil magiſtrates; nor merely by profeſſion of religion; much leſs by natural deſcent; but by adopting grace: and in this, Chriſt, the Word, has a concern, as all the three divine perſons have. The Father predeſtinated men to the adoption of children, ſecures this bleſſing for them in the covenant of his grace, and puts them among the children, and aſſigns them a goodly heritage: the Spirit, and who is therefore called the Spirit of adoption, diſcovers and applies this bleſſing to them, and witneſſes to their ſpirits that they are the children of God: and Chriſt, the Word, or Son of God, not only eſpouſed their perſons, and in time aſſumed their nature, and by the redemption of them opened a way for their reception of the adoption of children; but actually beſtows upon them the power, as it is here called, of becoming the ſons of God: by which is meant, not a power of free-will to make themſelves the ſons of God, if they will make uſe of it; but it ſignifies the honour and dignity conferred on ſuch perſons: ſo Nonnus calls it, the heavenly honour; as indeed, what can be a greater? It is more honourable than to be a ſon or daughter of the greateſt potentate on earth: and it is expreſſive of its being a privilege; for ſo it is an undeſerved and diſtinguiſhing one, and is attended with many other privileges; for ſuch are of God's houſhold and family, and are provided for by him; have liberty of acceſs unto him; are Chriſt's free men, and are heirs to an incorruptible inheritance. This is a privilege that excels all others, even juſtification and remiſſion of ſins; and is an everlaſting one: and it alſo intends the open right which believers have unto this privilege, and their claim of it: hence it follows, even to them that believe in his name; that is, in himſelf, in Chriſt, the Word: the phraſe is explanative of the former part of the verſe, and is a deſcriptive and manifeſtative character of the ſons of God; for tho' the elect of God, by virtue of electing grace, and the covenant of grace, are the children of God before faith; and were ſo conſidered in the gift of them to Chriſt, and when he came into the world to gather them together, and ſave them; and ſo, antecedent to the Spirit of God, being ſent down into their hearts, to make this known to them; yet no man can know his adoption, nor enjoy the comfort of it, or claim his intereſt in it, until he believes.

[*] Ben Arama in Gen. xlvii. 4. apud Galatin. de Arcan. Cathol. Ver. l. 3. c. 5.

Ver. 13. Which were born not of blood, &c.] Or bloods, in the plural number. The birth, here ſpoken of, is regeneration, expreſſed by a being born again, or from above; by a being quickened by the Spirit and grace of God; by Chriſt being formed in men; and by a partaking of the divine nature; and by being made new creatures, as all that believe in the name of Chriſt are; and which is the evidence of their being the ſons of God: and now this is owing not to blood, or bloods; not to the blood of circumciſion; or of the paſſover, which the Jews had an high opinion of, and aſcribe life and ſalvation to, and to which notion this may be oppoſed: ſo their commentators [f] on Ezek. xvi. 6. where the word live is twice uſed, obſerve on the firſt live, by the blood of the paſſover, on the ſecond live, by the blood of circumciſion; but, alas! theſe contribute nothing to the life of the new creature: nor is regeneration owing to the blood of anceſtors, to natural deſcent, as from Abraham, which the Jews valued themſelves upon; for ſin, and not grace, is conveyed by natural generation: all men are of one blood, and that is tainted with ſin, and therefore can never have any influence on regeneration; no blood is to be valued, or any one upon it, but the blood of Chriſt, which cleanſes from all ſin. Nor of the will of the fleſh; man's free-will, which is carnal and corrupt, is enmity to God, and impotent to every thing that is ſpiritually good: regeneration is aſcribed to another will and power, even to the will and power of God, and denied of this: nor of the will of man; of the beſt of men, as Abraham, David, and others; who, tho' ever ſo willing and deſirous, that their children, relations, friends, and ſervants, ſhould be born again, be partakers of the grace of God, and live in his ſight, yet cannot effect any thing of this kind: all that they can do is to pray for them, give advice, and bring them under the means of grace; but all is ineffectual without a divine energy. So with the Jews, איש, a man, ſignifies a great man, in oppoſition to Adam, or Enoſh, which ſignify a mean, weak, frail man; and our tranſlators have obſerved this diſtinction, in Iſ. ii. 9. and the mean man (Adam) boweth down, and the great man (Iſh) humbleth himſelf: on which Jarchi has this note, Adam boweth down, i. e. little men; and a man humbleth himſelf, i. e. princes, and mighty men, men of power: and ſo Kimchi on Pſ. iv. 2. O ye ſons of men, obſerves, that the Pſalmiſt calls them the ſons of men, with reſpect to the great men of Iſrael; for there were with Abſalom the ſons of great men. Tho' ſometimes the Jews ſay [g], Adam is greater than any of the names of men, as Geber, Enoſh, Iſh. But now our Evanegliſt obſerves, let a man be ever ſo great, or good, or eminent, for gifts and grace, he cannot communicate grace to another, or to whom he will; none are born again of any ſuch will: but of God; of God, the Father of Chriſt, who begets to a lively hope; and of the Son, who quickens whom he will; and of the grace of the Spirit, to whom regeneration is generally aſcribed.

Ver. 14. And the word was made fleſh, &c.] The ſame Word, of whom ſo many things are ſaid in the preceding verſes; and is no other than the ſon of God, or ſecond perſon in the Trinity; for neither the Father, nor the Holy Ghoſt, were made fleſh, as is here ſaid of the Word, but the ſon only: and fleſh, here ſignifies, not a part of the body, nor the whole body only, but the whole human nature, conſiſting of a true body, and a reaſonable ſoul; and is ſo called, to denote the frailty of it, being encompaſſed with infirmites, tho' not ſinful; and to ſhew, that it was a real human nature, and not a phantom, or appearance, that he aſſumed: and when he is ſaid to be made fleſh, this was not done by the change of one nature into another, the divine into the human, or the Word into a man; but by the aſſumption of the human nature, the Word, taking it into perſonal union with himſelf; whereby the natures are not altered; Chriſt remained what he was, and became what he was not; nor are they confounded, and blended together, and ſo make a third nature; nor are they ſeparated, and divided, ſo as to conſtitute two perſons, a divine perſon, and an human perſon; but are ſo united as to be but one perſon; and this is ſuch an union, as can never be diſſolved, and is the foundation of the virtue and efficacy of all Chriſt's works and actions, as mediator: and dwelt among us; or tabernacled among us; in alluſion to the tabernacle, which was a type of Chriſt's human nature: the model of the tabernacle was of God, and not of man; it was coarſe without, but full of holy things within; here God dwelt, granted his preſence, and his glory was ſeen; here the ſacrifices were brought, offered, and accepted. So the human nature of Chriſt was of God's pitching, and not man's; and tho' it looked mean without, the fulneſs of the Godhead dwelt in it, as well as a fulneſs of grace and truth; in the face of Chriſt the glory of God is ſeen, and thro' him, even the vail of his fleſh, ſaints have acceſs unto him, and enjoy his preſence; and by him their ſpiritual ſacrifices become acceptable to God: or this is obſerved, in alluſion to the feaſt of tabernacles, when the Jews dwelt in booths, in remembrance of their manner of living in the wilderneſs: the feaſt of tabernacles was typical of Chriſt, and of his tabernacling in our nature. Solomon's temple, which was alſo a type of Chriſt, was dedicated at the time of that feaſt; and it ſeems probable, that our Lord was born at that time; for as he ſuffered at the time of the paſſover, which had reſpect unto him, and the pouring forth of the ſpirit was on the very day of pentecoſt, which that prefigured; ſo it is highly probable, that Chriſt was born at the time of the feaſt of tabernacles, which pointed out his dwelling among us; and is therefore very pertinently hinted at, when mention is here made of his incarnation. However, reference is manifeſtly had to the Shekinah, and the glory of it, in the tabernacle and temple; and almoſt the very word is here uſed. The Targumiſts ſometimes ſpeak of the Shekinah of the Word dwelling among the Iſraelites: ſo Onkelos in Numb. xi. 20. where the Iſraelites are threatned with fleſh, 'till they loath it; becauſe, ſays the Paraphraſt, "ye "have loathed the word of the Lord, whoſe Shekinah "dwelleth among you." Jonathan ben Uzziel, on the ſame place, expreſſes it thus; "becauſe ye have "loathed the Word of the Lord, the glory of whoſe "Shekinah dwelleth among you." And it follows here, and we beheld his glory; the glory of his divine nature, which is eſſential to him, and underived, is equal to the father's glory, is tranſcendent to all creatures, and is ineffable, and incomprehenſible; ſome breakings forth of which there were in his incarnate ſtate, and which were obſerved by the Evangeliſt, and his companions; who, in various inſtances, ſaw plainly, that Chriſt was poſſeſſed of divine divine perfections, ſuch as omniſcience, and omnipotence; ſince he knew the thoughts of the heart, and could do the things he did: his Father declared him to be his beloved Son; and the miracles he wrought, and the doctrines he taught, manifeſted forth his glory; and not only there were ſome beams of his glory, at his transfiguration, which were ſeen by the apoſtles, among which the Evangeliſt John was one, and to which he may have here a particular reference; but even at his apprehenſion, and death, and eſpecially at his reſurrection from the dead. The Jews ſpeak of the glory of the Meſſiah to be ſeen in the world to come. They ſay[h], "if a "man is worthy of the world to come, (i. e. the "times of the Meſſiah,) he ſhall ſee the glory of "the king Meſſiah." And of Moſes, they ſay[i], "there was (or will be) no generation like that in "which he lived, until the generation in which the "king Meſſiah comes, which ſhall behold the glory of "the holy, bleſſed God, as he." This our Evangeliſt, and the other diſciples of Chriſt have ſeen: the glory, as of the only-begotten of the Father; a glory becoming him, ſuitable to him as ſuch; the very real glory of the Son of God; for the as, here, is not a note of ſimilitude, but of certainty, as in Matt. xiv. 5. Pſal. ii. 8. and the Word is here called, the only-begotten of the father; which can't be ſaid of Chriſt, as man; for as ſuch, he was not begotten at all: nor on the account of his reſurrection from the dead; for ſo he could not be called the only-begotten, ſince there are others that have been, and millions that will be raiſed from the dead, beſides him: nor by reaſon of adoption; for if adopted, then not begotten; theſe two are inconſiſtent; beſides, he could not be called the only-begotten, in this ſenſe, becauſe there are many adopted ſons, even all the elect of God: nor by virtue of his office, as magiſtrates are called the ſons of God; for then he would be ſo only in a figurative and metaphorical ſenſe, and not properly; whereas he is called God's own Son; the Son of the ſame nature with him; and, as here, the only-begotten of the Father, begotten by him in the ſame nature, in a way inconceivable and inexpreſſible by us: full of grace and truth; that is, he dwelt among men, and appeared to have a fulneſs of each of theſe: for this clauſe is not to be joined with the glory of the only begotten, as if this was a branch of that; but regards him as incarnate, and in his office, as mediator; who, as ſuch, was full of grace; the Spirit, and the gifts of the Spirit; of all the bleſſings of grace, of juſtifying, pardoning, adopting, ſanctifying, and perſevering grace; of all the promiſes of grace; of all light, life, ſtrength, comfort, peace, and joy: and alſo of truth, of all Goſpel-truths; and as he had the truth, the ſum, and ſubſtance of all the types and prophecies concerning him in him; and as he fulfilled all his own engagements, and his Father's promiſes; and as poſſeſſed of ſincerity towards men, and faithfulneſs and integrity to God.

Ver. 15. John bare witneſs of him, &c.] Which was his office and buſineſs, for which purpoſe he was ſent, ver. 6, 7, 8. and cried; this agrees with his work and office, according to the prophecy of him in Iſ. xl. 3. and with the time of his miniſtry, the year of Jubilee; and with the nature of his miniſtry, which was clear, open, and publick; and performed with vigour, and in a powerful manner, with much aſſurance and certainty, with boldneſs and intrepidity, and with great zeal and fervency, and in an Evangelical way; for it was ſuch a cry as debaſed the creature, and exalted Chriſt: this was he, of whom I ſpake; when he firſt entered upon his miniſtry and baptiſm, before he ſaw Chriſt, or baptized him; ſee Matt. iii. 11. he that cometh after me; for Chriſt came into the world after John; he was born ſix months after him; he came after him to be baptized by him, and attended on his miniſtry; and came later into the public miniſtry than he did: is preferred before me; by God, the father, in ſetting him up as mediator; conſtituting him the head of the Church; cauſing a fulneſs of grace to dwell in him; appointing him the Saviour of his people; and ordaining him judge of quick and dead. And by the prophets, who ſpake much of him, and ſparingly, of John; and of him as the Meſſiah and Saviour, and of John only as his harbinger: and by John himſelf, who repreſents him as coming from above, and as above all; and himſelf as of the earth, earthly: and by all Goſpel-miniſters, and every true believer; and good reaſon there is for it: for he was before me; which can't be meant of honour and dignity; for this is expreſſed before; and it would be proving one thing by the ſame: nor of his birth, as man; for John in that ſenſe was before him, being born before him; beſides, being born before another, is no proof of ſuperior worth; others were born before John, whom he yet excelled: but of his eternal exiſtence, as the Word, and Son of God, who was before John, or any of the prophets; before Abraham, and Noah, and Adam, or any creature whatever: the Arabic and Perſic verſions read, for he was more ancient than me; being from everlaſting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was.

Ver. 16. And of his fulneſs have all we received, &c.] Theſe are the words not of John the Baptiſt; but of the Evangeliſt carrying on his account of Chriſt, after he had inſerted the teſtimony of the Baptiſt, in connexion with ver. 14. where he is ſaid to be full of grace and truth; and which fulneſs is here intended; for the fulneſs of the Godhead in him is incommunicable; and the fulneſs of his fitneſs, and ability for his office, as mediator, was for himſelf; but his fulneſs of grace and truth is diſpenſatory, and is in him, on purpoſe to be communicated unto others: and of it, the Evangeliſt ſays, have all we received; not all mankind, tho' they all receive natural light and life from him; nor merely all the prophets of the Old Teſtament, tho' they had their gifts and grace from him, who then was, as now, the head of the church; nor only all the apoſtles of Chriſt, tho' theſe may be principally intended; but all believers, who, tho' they have not all the ſame meaſure of grace, nor the ſame gifts, yet all have received ſomething: nor is there any reaſon for diſcouragement, envy, or reproach. Faith is the hand which receives Chriſt, and grace from him; and the act of receiving, being expreſſed in the paſt tenſe, ſeems to regard, firſt converſion, when faith is firſt wrought, and along with it abundance of grace is received; for a believer has nothing but what is given him, and what he has, is in a way of receiving; ſo that there is no room for boaſting, but great reaſon for thankfulneſs, and much encouragement to apply to Chriſt for more grace, which is the thing received, as follows: and grace for grace: according to the different ſenſes of the prepoſition αντι, different interpretations are given of this paſſage; as that ſignifies a ſubſtitution of a perſon, or thing, in the room of another, the ſenſe is thought to be, the Goſpel, inſtead of the law; or the grace of the preſent diſpenſation, inſtead of the grace of the former diſpenſation; grace, different from the former grace, as Nonnus expreſſes it. If it deſigns the original, and moving cauſe, the meaning is, grace is for the ſake of grace; for there is no other cauſe of electing, juſtifying, pardoning, adopting, and regenerating grace, and even eternal life, but the grace, or free favour of God; and the one is the reaſon why the other is received: if it ſignifies the end, or final cauſe, then it is explained in this way; the diſciples received the grace of apoſtleſhip, or gifts of grace, in order to preach the Goſpel of the grace of God, and for the implanting and increaſing grace in men; and grace alſo, in this life, is received, in order to the perfection of grace, or glory, in the other: if it denotes the meaſure and proportion of a thing, as one thing is anſwerable to another, then it may be interpreted after this manner; the ſaints receive grace from the fulneſs of Chriſt, according, or anſwerable to the grace that is in him; or according to the meaſure of the gift of Chriſt, and in proportion to the place, ſtation, and office they bear in the church. Some think the phraſe only deſigns the freeneſs of grace, and the free and liberal manner in which it is diſtributed, and received; along with which, I alſo think, the abundance of it, at firſt converſion, with all after ſupplies, is intended; and that grace for grace, is the ſame with grace upon grace, heaps of grace; and that the phraſeology is the ſame with this Jewiſh one[k], טיבו על ההוא טיבו, goodneſs upon that goodneſs, an additional goodneſs; ſo here, grace upon grace, an abundance of it, an addition to it, and an increaſe of it: ſo חדו על חדו[l], joy upon joy, is an abundance of joy, a large meaſure of it; and holineſs upon holineſs[m], abundance of it.

[i] Zohar in Lev. fol. 9. 4.

Ver. 17. For the law was given by Moſes, &c.] Both moral and ceremonial. The moral law was given to Adam, in innocence, which having been broken, and almoſt loſt out of the minds, and memories of men, was given by Moſes, in a new edition of it, in writing; and points out what is man's duty both to God and men; diſcovers ſin, accuſes of it, convicts of it, and condemns for it; nor could it give ſtrength to perform its demands; nor does it give the leaſt hint of forgiveneſs; nor will it admit of repentance: and hence is oppoſed to grace; tho' it was a benefit to men, being in its own nature good and uſeful in its effects. The ceremonial law pointed out the pollution of human nature, the guilt and puniſhment of ſin; was a type and ſhadow of deliverance by Chriſt, but could not give the grace it ſhadowed, and therefore is oppoſed both to grace and truth. Now both theſe were given by Moſes to the people of the Jews, not as the maker, but the miniſter of them: it was God who appointed each of theſe laws, and ordained them in the hand of the mediator Moſes, who received them from him, by the diſpoſition of angels, and delivered them to the people of Iſrael; and a very high office this was he was put into, and a very great honour was conferred upon him; but Jeſus Chriſt is a far greater perſon, and in an higher office: but grace and truth came by Jeſus Chriſt: by grace and truth, is meant the Goſpel, in oppoſition to the law; which is called grace, becauſe it is a declaration of the love, and grace, of God to men; it aſcribes ſalvation, in all the parts of it, to the free grace and favour of God; and is the means of implanting and increaſing grace in the hearts of men. And truth, not only becauſe it contains truth, and nothing but truth, it coming from the God of truth; and the ſubſtance of it being Chriſt, who is the truth; and being revealed, applied, and led into by the ſpirit of truth; but becauſe it is the truth of the types, and the ſubſtance of the ſhadows of the law: or theſe two may mean diſtinct things; grace may deſign all the bleſſings of grace which are in Chriſt, and come by him; and truth, the promiſes, and the fulfilment of them, which are all yea, and amen, in Chriſt: and when theſe are ſaid to be by him, the meaning is, not that they are by him, as an inſtrument, but as the author of them; for Chriſt is the author of the Goſpel, and the fulfiller of the promiſes, and the giver of all grace; which ſhews the ſuperior excellency of Chriſt to Moſes, and to all men, and even to angels alſo.

Ver. 18. No man hath ſeen God at any time, &c.] That is, God the father, whoſe voice was never heard, nor his ſhape ſeen by angels or men; for though Jacob, Moſes, the elders of Iſrael, Manoah, and his wife, are ſaid to ſee God, and Job expected to ſee him with his bodily eyes, and the ſaints will ſee him as he is, in which will lie their great happineſs; yet all ſeems to be underſtood of the ſecond perſon, who frequently appeared to the Old Teſtament-ſaints in an human form, and will be ſeen by the ſaints in heaven, in his real human nature; or of God in and by him: for the eſſence of God is inviſible, and not to be ſeen with the eyes of the body; nor indeed with the eyes of the underſtanding, ſo as to comprehend it; nor immediately, but thro', and by certain means: God is ſeen in the works of creation and providence, in the promiſes, and in his ordinances; but above all, in Chriſt the brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon: this may chiefly intend here, man's not knowing any thing of God in a ſpiritual and ſaving way, but in and by Chriſt; ſince it follows, the only-begotten Son; the Word that was with God in the beginning. The Jeruſalem Targum on Gen. iii. 22. ſays almoſt the ſame of the Word of the Lord, as here, where it introduces him ſaying, "the Word of the Lord God "ſaid, lo, the man whom I created, the only one "in my world, even as I am, יחידי, the only one, "(or, as the word is ſometimes rendred, the only-begotten) in the higheſt heavens." And to the ſame purpoſe the Targum of Jonathan, and alſo Jarchi, on the ſame place. The Syriac verſion here renders it, the only-begotten, God which is in the boſom of the father; clearly ſhewing, that he is the only-begotten, as he is God: the phraſe, which is in the boſom of the father, denotes unity of nature, and eſſence, in the father and ſon; their diſtinct perſonality; ſtrong love, and affection between them; the ſon's acquaintance with his father's ſecrets; his being at that time, as the ſon of God, in the boſom of his father, when here on earth, as the ſon of man; and which qualified him to make the declaration of him: he hath declared him. The Perſic and Ethiopic verſions further add, to us; he has clearly and fully declared his nature, perfections, purpoſes, promiſes, counſels, covenant, word, and works; his thoughts and ſchemes of grace; his love and favour to the ſons of men; his mind and will concerning the ſalvation of his people: he has made, and delivered a fuller revelation of theſe things, than ever was yet; and to which no other revelation in the preſent ſtate of things will be added. Somewhat like this the Jews[n] ſay of the Meſſiah; "there is none that can declare the name of his "father, and that knows him; but this is hid from "the eyes of the multitude, until he comes, ויגידהו, "and he ſhall declare him." He is come, and has declared him: ſo Philo ſpeaks of the Logos, or Word, as the interpreter of the mind of God, and a teacher of men [o].

[n] R. Moſes Haddarſan in Pſ. 85. 11. apud. Galatin. de Arcan. Cathol. ver. l. 8. c. 2.

Ver. 19. And this is the record of John, &c.] The Evangeliſt proceeds to give a large, and full account of the teſtimony John the Baptiſt bore to Chriſt, which he had hinted at before, and had ſignified was his work, and office, and the end of his being ſent. When the Jews ſent prieſts and levites from Jeruſalem, to aſk him, who art thou? The Jews that ſent were the great Sanhedrim that ſat at Jeruſalem, whoſe buſineſs it was to enquire into, examine, and try prophets, whether true or falſe [p]; and John appearing as a prophet, and being ſo eſteemed by the people, they depute meſſengers to him to interrogate him, and know who he was. The perſons ſent were very likely of their own body, ſince prieſts and levites were in that council. For it is ſaid [q], "they don't conſtitute, or appoint in the Sanhedrim but prieſts, levites, and Iſraelites, who have "their genealogies———and it is commanded, "that there ſhould be in the great Sanhedrim prieſts "and levites, as it is ſaid, Deut. xvii. 9. and thou "ſhalt come unto the prieſts, the levites, &c. and if "they are not to be found, though they are all Iſraelites, (not of the tribe of Levi) it is right." Such a Sanhedrim is a lawful one; but prieſts and levites, if ſuch could be found, that had proper qualifications, were to be admitted in the firſt place. A meſſage from ſo auguſt an aſſembly, at ſo great a diſtance, (for Jordan was a day's journey diſtant from Jeruſalem [r]; according to Joſephus [s], it was 210 furlongs, or 26 miles and a quarter) and by the hands of perſons of ſuch character and figure, was doing John a great deal of honour, and ſerves to make his teſtimony of Chriſt the more public and remarkable; and it alſo ſhows what a noiſe John's miniſtry and baptiſm made among the Jews, that it even reached Jeruſalem, and the great council of the nation; and likewiſe the queſtion put to him, which by John's anſwer ſeems to intimate as if it was thought he was the Meſſiah, ſhews the opinion that was entertained of him, and even the Sanhedrim, might not be without thoughts this way: and the queſtion they put by their meſſengers might not be, as ſome have thought, to enſnare John, nor out of diſreſpect to Jeſus, who, as yet, was not made manifeſt; but might be in good earneſt, having, from many circumſtances, reaſon to think there might be ſomething in the peoples opinion of him; ſince, tho' government was not wholly departed from Judah, yet they could not but obſerve it was going away a-pace, an Idumean having been upon the throne for ſome years, placed there by the Roman ſenate; and now the government was divided among his ſons by the ſame order; Daniel's weeks they could not but ſee were juſt accompliſhing; and beſides, from the uncommon appearances John made, the auſterity of his life, the doctrine of remiſſion of ſins he preached, and the new ordinance of baptiſm he adminiſtred, they might be ready to conclude he was the perſon.

Ver. 20. And he confeſſed, and denied not, &c.] He freely, and without any reſerve, declared, and in the plaineſt and ſtrongeſt terms profeſſed to the meſſengers before all the people, that he was not the Meſſiah; nor did he retract his confeſſion, or draw in his words again, or drop any thing that looked doubtful or ſuſpicious; but confeſſed, I am not the Chriſt; he ſtood to it, and inſiſted on it, that he was not that illuſtrious perſon; nor had they any reaſon to entertain ſuch an opinion of him; nor would he have them do ſo; they might aſſure themſelves he was not Chriſt.

Ver. 21. And they aſked him, what then? art thou Elias? &c.] Elijah, the prophet; the Tiſhbite, as Nonnus in his paraphraſe expreſſes it; who was tranſlated, ſoul and body, to heaven: the Jews had a notion that that prophet would come in perſon a little before the coming of the Meſſiah; ſee the note on Matt. xvii. 10. wherefore theſe meſſengers enquire, that ſince he had ſo fully ſatisfied them that he was not the Meſſiah, that he would as ingenuouſly anſwer to this queſtion, if he was Elias, or no: and he ſaith, I am not; that is, he was not Elijah the prophet that lived in Ahab's time, and was called the Tiſhbite; for John's anſwer is to the intention of their queſtion, and their own meaning in it, and is no contradiction to what Chriſt ſays of him, Matt. xi. 14. that he was the Elias that was to come; for he was the perſon meant by him in Mal. iv. 5. tho' not in the ſenſe the Jews underſtood it; nor is it any contradiction to what the angel ſaid to Zacharias, Luke i. 17. for he does not ſay that John ſhould come in the body, but in the power and ſpirit of Elias; ſee the note on Matt. xi. 14. Art thou that prophet? Jeremiah, whom ſome of the Jews [t] have thought to be the prophet Moſes ſpoke of, in Deut. xviii. 15. and expected that he would appear about the times of the Meſſiah; ſee Matt. xvi. 14. or any one of the ancient prophets riſen from the dead, which they alſo had a notion of, Luke ix. 8, 19. or, as it may be rendered, art thou a prophet? for prophecy had long ceaſed with them: and he anſwered, no; he was not Jeremiah, nor any one of the old prophets riſen from the dead, nor a prophet in the ſenſe they meant: he was not like one of the prophets of the Old Teſtament; he was a prophet, and more than a prophet, as Chriſt ſays, Matt. xi. 9. yet not ſuch a prophet as they were; his propheſying lay not ſo much in predicting future events, as in pointing out Chriſt, and preaching the doctrine of the remiſſion of ſins by him.

Ver. 22. Then ſaid they unto him, who art thou? &c.] Since, as yet, he had only anſwered in negatives, who he was not, that he was not the Chriſt, nor Elias, nor that prophet; they deſire he would give them a poſitive account who he was: that we may give anſwer to them that ſent us; that their labour might not be in vain; that they might not come ſo far for nothing, without knowing who he was; and that they might be capable of giving an account of him to the Sanhedrim: what ſayeſt thou of thyſelf? they inſiſted on it, that he would openly, and honeſtly declare who he was, and what was his office and buſineſs; that from his own mouth, and not from the opinion and conjectures of others, they might repreſent him in a true light to thoſe who had deputed them on this errand.

Ver. 23. And he ſaid, I am the voice of one crying in the wilderneſs, &c.] Theſe words are cited by the other Evangeliſts, and applied to John the Baptiſt; but then they are only to be conſidered as their citation, and as an application of them to him by them: but here they are uſed by John himſelf, who both expreſſes them, and interprets them of himſelf; and in which he was undoubtedly under the infallible direction of the bleſſed Spirit; and which confirms the ſenſe of the Evangeliſts, who apply the words to him. The Jews give a different interpretation of the words; though one of their celebrated commentators [u] owns, that the comforts ſpoken of in the preceding verſes are what will be in the days of the king Meſſiah: one of them [w] intreprets, the voice, of the Holy Ghoſt; and ſo far it may be true, as John was filled with the Holy Ghoſt, and he ſpake by him in his miniſtry: and another [x], of the reſurrection of the dead, or the voice that will be heard then, which will be the voice of the archangel: tho' another of [y] them better explains it by, הם המבסרים, they are they that bring glad tidings, or good news; ſuch are Goſpel preachers; only it ſhould have been in the ſingular number: for the text ſpeaks but of one voice; of one perſon crying; and of John the Baptiſt, who brought the good news, and glad tidings, that the Meſſiah was coming, yea, that he was already come, and that the kingdom of heaven was at hand. The Hebrew writers generally underſtand the paſſage, of the return of the Jews from the Babyloniſh captivity, and of removing all obſtructions in their way to Jeruſalem; to which ſenſe the Targum on the place inclines, which paraphraſes it thus; "the voice of him that crieth in the "wilderneſs, prepare the way before the people "of the Lord, make in the plain, paths before the "congregation of our God:" but not the people of the Lord, but the Lord himſelf, and not the congregation of God, but God himſelf is intended; whoſe ways were to be prepared, and made plain, even the king Meſſiah; which was to be done, and was done by his forerunner John the Baptiſt, who, with great modeſty, expreſſes himſelf in the language of this ſcripture, as being a prophecy of him: he was a voice, but not a mere voice; nor was his miniſtry a mere voice of words, as the law was, but it was the ſweet voice of the Goſpel, proclaiming the coming of the Meſſiah; encouraging men to believe in him; calling them to evangelical repentance, and publiſhing remiſſion of ſins in the name of Chriſt, and pointing him out as the lamb of God, which takes away the ſin of the world: this voice was crying; it was not a ſtill ſmall voice, it was a very loud one; John lifted up his voice like a trumpet; he delivered himſelf with great zeal and fervency; and it was in the wilderneſs where this voice was heard, in the wilderneſs of Judea, as in Matt. iii. 1. where Jeſus came preaching: the Ethiopic verſion renders the words, I am the voice of one that goes about in the wilderneſs; that is, in the ſeveral towns and villages which were in the wilderneſs, to whom John went and preached the Goſpel: the Perſic verſion reads, I am the voice and cry which cometh out of the wilderneſs; referring to the place where he was before he entered on his public miniſtry, and from whence he came; for he was in the deſerts till the day of his ſhewing unto Iſrael, Luke i. 80. The words, this voice cried, were, make ſtraight the way of the Lord; he called upon perſons to reform their ways, and walk in the way of the Lord, to repent of their ſins, believe in Chriſt, and ſubmit to the ordinance of baptiſm: the Ethiopic verſion reads, the way of God; and ſuch was the perſon, he came to prepare the way for, even the Son of God, and who is truly and properly God, as ſaid the prophet Eſaias, in Iſ. xl. 3. ſee the note on Matt. iii. 3.

Ver. 24. And they which were ſent were of the Phariſees.] Who were the ſtraiteſt ſect of religion among the Jews; were very zealous of the traditions of the elders, and profeſſed an expectation of the Meſſiah; and were famous in the nation for their knowledge and learning, as well as for their devotion and ſanctity; and many of them were in the Sanhedrim, as appears from John iii. 1. Acts xxiii. 6. ſee the note on Matt. iii. 7.

Ver. 25. And they aſked him, and ſaid unto him, &c.] They put a queſtion, by ſaying to him, why baptizeſt thou then if thou be not that Chriſt, nor Elias, neither that prophet? ſince he denied that he was the Meſſiah, or Elias that was to come before the Meſſiah, according to the expectation of the Jews, or that prophet, or a prophet, they demand by what authority he introduced a new rite and ordinance among them, which they had never been uſed to; for tho' there were divers waſhings or baptiſms among them, enjoined by the law of Moſes in certain caſes, and others which obtained by tradition, as the immerſion of themſelves after they had been at market, and of cups, pots, brazen veſſels, and tables, yet nothing of this kind that John adminiſtred: and as for the baptiſm of proſelytes, it ſeems to be of a later date than this, and had no manner of likeneſs to it. The ordinance John adminiſtred was ſuch, as they apprehended that no one ought to practiſe, unleſs he was the Meſſiah, or his fore-runner, or ſome eminent prophet; they inſiſt upon it therefore, that ſince he denied he was either of theſe, that he would ſhow his credentials, and what commiſſion he had from God to baptize; or they ſuggeſt he was liable to be called to an account by their Sanhedrim, and be condemned as a falſe prophet, or an innovator in religious affairs. From hence it appears, that the Jews expected that baptiſm would be adminiſtred in the times of the Meſſiah, and his fore-runner; but from whence they had this notion, it is not eaſy to ſay, whether from Zech. xiii. 1. as Grotius, or from Ezek. xxxvi. 25. as Lightfoot; nor do they ſpeak contemptibly of it, but rather conſider it as a very ſolemn affair, to be performed only by great perſonages: and this may teach modern ones to think and ſpeak more reſpectfully of this ordinance than they do, who have given themſelves great liberties, and have treated it with much contempt and virulence; calling it by the names of uncleanneſs, abomination, filthy water, and a devoting of perſons to ſatan [z]: likewiſe, it is clear from hence, that they expected that this ordinance would be firſt adminiſtred by ſome perſon of very great note, either ſome very famous prophet, as Elias, whom they looked for before the coming of the Meſſiah, or elſe the Meſſiah himſelf, and not by a common teacher, or any ordinary perſon; wherefore this rite, as performed by John, could have no likeneſs with any thing that was in common uſe among them: beſides, it was expreſly done in the name of the Meſſiah, Acts xix. 5. therefore they conclude he, or his fore-runner, muſt be come; and that John muſt be one, or other of them, otherwiſe, why did he adminiſter it? and it is alſo evident from hence, that no ſuch practice had obtained before among them, or they would not have been alarmed at it, as they were, nor would they have troubled themſelves to have ſent after John, and enquire of him who he was, that ſhould practiſe in this manner.

Ver. 26. John anſwered them, ſaying, I baptize with water, &c.] Or in water, ſo the Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions render it. The ſenſe of the anſwer is, that he indeed baptized perſons in water, which was all that he could do, or pretended to do; and he owned, that this was a new rite, and that he was the adminiſtrator of a new ordinance; but he ſuggeſts, as may be ſupplied from Matt. iii. 11. that there was one at hand, and even now among them, that ſhould baptize, and ſo it is read in one of Stephens's copies here, in the Holy Ghoſt, and in fire; and it was by his authority, by a commiſſion he had received from him, that he baptized in water; and that his ſpeedy manifeſtation and appearance as the Meſſiah, which would be confirmed by his power of baptizing in the Holy Ghoſt, and by his miniſtry and miracles, would be a ſufficient vindication of his conduct, and ſupport him in his adminiſtration of water baptiſm: but there ſtandeth one among you; or hath ſtood, as the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it; referring, not to his being among them at twelve years of age, but a few days ago when he came to John to be baptized, and was baptized by him; for from ver. 29. 'tis plain, he was not now, or to day, as Nonnus expreſſes it, ſtanding in the midſt of them. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, there is one about to ſtand among you, as he did the next day: though the meaning of the phraſe may only be, that he was then in being, and dwelt ſome where among them, and not that he was perſonally preſent at that time: whom ye know not; neither from whence he is, nor who he is, or what is his work and office; neither the dignity of his perſon, nor the end of his coming into the world, nor the nature of his buſineſs in it.

Ver. 27. He it is who coming after me, &c.] Both into the world, and into the miniſtry of the word; for John was before Chriſt, in both theſe reſpects, though greatly behind him in others, and therefore he adds, is preferred before me: being not only of a more excellent nature, the Son of God, and of an higher extract, the Lord from heaven; but in an higher office, and having greater gifts, and the Spirit of God without meaſure on him; and alſo being more followed by the people; for John decreaſed, but he increaſed: or rather the words may be rendered, who was before me; being the eternal Son of God, whoſe goings forth were of old, from everlaſting; who was ſet up from everlaſting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was; the firſt-born, or firſt-bringer forth of every creature; and therefore muſt be before all things, which are created by him; ſee the note on ver. 15. Whoſe ſhoes latchet I am not worthy to unlooſe; which was one of the meaneſt ſervices done by a ſervant to his maſter; ſee the note on Matt. iii. 11.

Ver. 28. Theſe things were done in Bethabara, &c.] That is, this teſtimony was bore by John; and this diſcourſe paſſed between him and the Phariſees, at the place here mentioned; which was a paſſage over Jordan, where much people walked to go on the other ſide, beyond Jordan; and where alſo John was baptizing; which brought a great concourſe of people together: ſo that this witneſs was bore in a very publick manner, and before a large number; and it is to this that Chriſt refers, in ch. v. 33. for this was ſo well known, that there was no hiding or denying it: the place where this converſation paſſed, is in the Vulgate Latin, and all the Eaſtern verſions, and in the Alexandrian copy, and many other copies, and ſo in Nonnus, called Bethany; but as De Dieu obſerves, Bethany was not beyond Jordan, nor in the wilderneſs of Judea, but near to Jeruſalem, about two miles diſtant from it; nor was it ſituated by waters convenient for baptizing, unleſs they went to the brook Cedron, which indeed was not far from it; but it is clear from the hiſtory, that John was not ſo near Jeruſalem; nor did that brook which might be forded over, continues the ſame learned author, ſeem fit and proper enough, mergendis baptizandorum corporibus, for plunging the bodies of thoſe that were to be baptized; wherefore he rightly concludes, that either this reading is an error, or there was another Bethany near Jordan: Bethabara ſignifies the houſe of paſſage, and is thought to be the place where the Iſraelites paſſed over Jordan, to go into the land of Canaan, Joſh. iii. 16, 17. And which, as it muſt be a very convenient place for the adminiſtration of baptiſm by immerſion, uſed by John, ſo it was very ſignificant of the uſe of this ordinance; which is as it were, the paſſage, or entrance, into the Goſpel church-ſtate; for perſons ought firſt to be baptized, and then be admitted into a Goſpel church, according to the example of the primitive chriſtians, Acts ii. 41. but whether there was a place of this name, where the Iſraelites went over Jordan, is not certain; and if there was, it does not ſeem ſo likely to be the place here deſigned, ſince that was right over-againſt Jericho; whereas this ſeems to be rather farther off, and over-againſt Galilee: there were ſeveral paſſages of Jordan, Judges xii. 5, 6. There was a bridge over it, between the lake of Samochon and Genneſaret, now called Jacob's bridge, where Jacob is ſuppoſed to have wreſtled with the angel, and to have met with his brother Eſau; and there was another over it at Chammath, near Tiberias, and in other places: and it might be at one of theſe paſſages, by which they went over into Galilee, that John pitched upon to continue preaching and baptizing at; partly becauſe of the number of people that went over, to whom he had the opportunity of preaching; and partly, for the ſake of baptizing thoſe who became proper ſubjects of that ordinance, through his miniſtry. Some have thought, that this place is the ſame with Beth-barah, in Judges vii. 24. which was either in the tribe of Ephraim or of Manaſſeh, and not far from the parts where this place muſt be, but was on this ſide Jordan; and ſo Beza ſays the words ſhould be rendered; and thoſe who came to John at Jordan, are not ſaid to paſs over that river: others are of opinion, that Bethabara, is the ſame with Betharabah, Joſh. xv. 6, 61. ſince this is called Bethabara by the Septuagint, in Joſh. xviii. 22. However, be it what place ſoever, and whereſoever, it was no doubt very proper for John's purpoſe; and therefore he choſe it, and for a while continued at it: and here, ſays Jerom[a], "to this day many of the brethren, that is, "of the number of believers, deſiring there to be "born again, are baptized in the vital ſtream;" ſuch veneration had they for the place where John firſt baptized: Origen ſays[b], that in his time it was ſaid, that Bethabara was ſhewed by the banks of Jordan, where they report John baptized.

Ver. 29. The next day John ſeeth Jeſus coming unto him, &c.] Not to be baptized, for he had been baptized before by him. This ſeems to have been after Chriſt had been forty days in the wilderneſs, from whence he now returned, and came to attend on John's miniſtry; both to do honour to him, and that he might be made manifeſt by him; and this was the day after John had bore ſuch a teſtimony concerning him, to the prieſts and Levites; and which Chriſt the omniſcient God, knew full well, and therefore came at this ſeaſon, when the minds of the people were prepared by John's teſtimony, to expect and receive him: one part of the work of Elias, which the Jews aſſign unto him, and the preciſe time of his doing it, exactly agree with this account of John the Baptiſt; they ſay [c], that his work is "to bring to them (the Iſraelites) the "good news of the coming of the Redeemer; and "this ſhall be, יום אחד, one day, before the com-"ing of the Meſſiah; and this is that which is "written, behold I will ſend you Elijah the prophet, "before the coming of the great and dreadful day of "the Lord, Mal. iv. 5." For John, the day before Chriſt came to him, had ſignified to the prieſts and Levites, that the Meſſiah was already come; and now on the day following, ſeeing him, pointed as with his finger to him, and ſaith, behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the ſin of the world: he calls him a lamb, either with reſpect to any lamb in common, for his harmleſneſs and innocence; for his meekneſs and humility; for his patience; and for his uſefulneſs, both for food and cloathing, in a ſpiritual ſenſe; as well as for his being to be a ſacrifice for the ſins of his people: or elſe with reſpect to the lambs that were offered in ſacrifice, under the legal diſpenſation; and that either to the paſſover lamb, or rather to the lambs of the daily ſacrifice, that were offered morning and evening; ſince the account of them beſt agrees with what is ſaid of this lamb of God, who was ſlain in type, in the morning of the world, or from the foundation of the world; and actually in the evening of the world, or in the end of it; and who has a continued virtue to take away the ſins of his people, from the beginning, to the end of the world; and their ſins, both of the day and night, or which are committed every day: for as they are daily committed, there is need of the daily application of the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt, to remove them; or of continual looking unto him by faith, whoſe blood has a continual virtue, to cleanſe from all ſin: the Jewiſh doctors ſay [d], that "the morning daily ſacrifice, "made atonement for the iniquities done in the "night; and the evening ſacrifice made atonement "for the iniquities that were by day:" and in various things they were typical of Chriſt, as that they were lambs of the firſt year, which may denote the weakneſs of the human nature of Chriſt, which had all the ſinleſs infirmities of it; they were alſo without ſpot, ſignifying the purity of Chriſt's human nature, who was holy and harmleſs, a lamb without ſpot and blemiſh; theſe were offered as a ſacrifice, and for the children of Iſrael only, as Chriſt has given himſelf an offering and a ſacrifice to God, both in ſoul and body, for the ſins of the myſtical Iſrael of God, the Iſrael whom God has choſen for himſelf, whether Jews or Gentiles; for Chriſt is the propitiation for the ſins of both: and theſe were offered daily, morning and evening; and though Chriſt was but once offered, otherwiſe he muſt have often ſuffered; yet as he has by one offering put away ſin for ever, ſo there is a perpetual virtue in his ſacrifice to take it away, and there is a conſtant application of it for that purpoſe; to which may be added, that theſe lambs were offered with fine flour, oil and wine, for a ſweet ſavour to the Lord; denoting the acceptableneſs of the ſacrifice of Chriſt to his Father, to whom it is for a ſweet ſmelling ſavour, Eph. v. 2. And Chriſt is ſtiled the lamb of God, in alluſion to the ſame, whom the Cabaliſtic Jews [e] call the ſecret of the myſtery, and, כבשי דהמנא, the lambs of God; becauſe God has a ſpecial property in him; he is his own Son; and becauſe he is of his providing and appointing, as a ſacrifice for ſin, and is acceptable to him as ſuch; and to diſtinguiſh him from all other lambs; and to give him the preference, ſince he does that which they could not do, taketh away the ſin of the world: by the ſin of the world, is not meant the ſin, or ſins of every individual perſon in the world; for ſome die in their ſins, and their ſins go before-hand to judgment, and they go into everlaſting puniſhment for them; which could not be, if Chriſt took them away: rather, the ſin which is common to the whole world, namely, original ſin; but then it muſt be obſerved, that this is not the only ſin Chriſt takes away; for he alſo takes away actual ſins; and the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions read in the plural, the ſins of the world; and alſo that this he takes away, only with reſpect to the elect; wherefore they are the perſons intended by the world, as in John vi. 33, 51. whoſe ſin, or ſins, Chriſt takes away: and a peculiar regard ſeems to be had to the elect among the Gentiles, who are called the world, in diſtinction from the Jews, as in John iii. 16. 1 John ii. 2. and the rather, ſince the lambs of the daily ſacrifice, to which the alluſion is, were only offered for the ſins of the Jews: but John here ſignifies, that the Lamb of God he pointed at, and which was the antitype of theſe lambs, not only took away the ſins of God's people among the Jews, but the ſins of ſuch of them alſo as were among the Gentiles; and this ſeems to me to be the true ſenſe of the paſſage. The phraſe taking away ſin, ſignifies a taking it up, as Chriſt did; he took it voluntarily upon himſelf, and became reſponſible to divine juſtice for it; and alſo a bearing and carrying it, for taking it upon himſelf, he bore it in his own body on the tree, and carried it away, as the ſcape-goat did under the law; and ſo likewiſe a taking it quite away: Chriſt has removed it as far as the eaſt is from the weſt, out of ſight, ſo as never to be ſeen any more; he has deſtroyed, aboliſhed, and made an utter end of it: and this is expreſſed in the preſent tenſe, taketh away; to denote the continued virtue of Chriſt's ſacrifice to take away ſin, and the conſtant efficacy of his blood to cleanſe from it, and the daily application of it to the conſciences of his people; and which is owing to the dignity of his perſon, as the Son of God; and to his continual and powerful mediation and interceſſion: this muſt be a great relief to minds afflicted with the continual ebullitions of ſin, which is taken away by the Lamb of God, as faſt as it riſes; and who, for that purpoſe, are called to behold, and wonder at, the love and grace of Chriſt, in taking up, bearing, and taking away ſin; and to look to him by faith continually, for everlaſting ſalvation; and love him, and give him the honour of it, and glorify him for it.

[e] Raya Mehimna, in Zohar in Lev. fol. 33. 2.

Ver. 31. And I knew him not, &c.] Ομμασιν, by ſight, as Nonnus paraphraſes it; perſonally he had never ſeen him, nor had had any converſation and familiarity with him; for though they were related to each other, yet lived at ſuch a diſtance, as not to know one another, or have a correſpondence with each other: John was in the deſerts, until the day of his ſhewing unto Iſrael; and Chriſt dwelt with his parents at Nazareth, in a very mean and obſcure manner, till he came from thence to Jordan to John, to be baptized by him; and which was the firſt interview they had: and this was ſo ordered by providence, as alſo this is ſaid by John, leſt it ſhould be thought, that the teſtimony he bore to Jeſus, and the high commendation he gave of him, aroſe from the relation between them; or from a confederacy and compact they had entered into: but that he ſhould be made manifeſt to Iſrael; who had been for many years hid in Galilee, an obſcure part of the world: and though he had been known to Joſeph and Mary, and to Zacharias and Elizabeth, and to Simeon and Anna; yet he was not made manifeſt to the people of Iſrael in common; nor did they know that the Meſſiah was come: but that he might be known, therefore am I come baptizing with water; or in water, as before: for by adminiſtring this new ordinance, the people were naturally put upon enquiry after the Meſſiah, whether come, and where he was, ſince ſuch a new rite was introduced; and beſides, John when he baptized any, he exhorted them to believe on him, which ſhould come after him, that is, on Chriſt Jeſus; and moreover, by Chriſt's coming to his baptiſm, he came to have a perſonal knowledge of him himſelf, and ſo was capable of pointing him out, and making him manifeſt to others, as he did.

Ver. 32. And John bare record, &c.] The ſame day that he ſaid the above things, and at the ſame time: ſaying, I ſaw the Spirit; that is, of God, as is ſaid in Matt. iii. 16. and which Nonnus here expreſſes; and the Ethiopic verſion reads, the Holy Ghoſt: deſcending from heaven like a dove; at the time of his baptiſm; ſee the note on Matt. iii. 16. And it abode upon him; for ſome time; ſo long as that John had a full ſight of it, and ſo was capable of giving a perfect account of it, and bearing a certain and diſtinct teſtimony to it.

Ver. 33. And I knew him not, &c.] That is, before he came to be baptized by him; when it was ſecretly ſuggeſted to him, who he was, and the following ſignal was given him, to confirm him in it: but he that ſent me to baptize with water; or in water; that is God; for John's miſſion was from God, as in ver. 6. and his baptiſm from heaven; he had a divine warrant and commiſſion for what he did: the ſame ſaid unto me; either by an articulate voice, or by a divine impulſe on his mind, or by the revelation of the Spirit: upon whom thou ſhalt ſee the Spirit deſcending and remaining on him, the ſame is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghoſt; that is, the Meſſiah; ſee the notes on Matt. iii. 11, 16.

Ver. 34. And I ſaw, &c.] The Spirit deſcending from heaven as a dove, and lighting upon Jeſus, and remaining ſome time on him; this he ſaw with his bodily eyes: and bore record; at the ſame time, before all the people that were with him, when he baptized Jeſus: that this is the Son of God; the natural, eſſential, and eternal Son of God; who being ſent in the fulneſs of time, had aſſumed an human nature, in which he became ſubject to all ordinances, and had the Spirit without meaſure beſtowed on him; and which was an evidence who he was, and of what he came about.

Ver. 35. Again, the next day after, &c.] The third day from the prieſts and Levites having been with John, to know who he was. The Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions, leave out the word again: John ſtood, and two of his diſciples; one of theſe was Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, as appears from ver. 40. and very likely the other was the Evangeliſt John, the writer of this Goſpel, who always chuſes to conceal himſelf. John the Baptiſt ſtood, and theſe diſciples by him, in ſome certain place near Jordan, where he was preaching and baptizing.

Ver. 36. And looking upon Jeſus as he walked, &c.] Either by them; or as he was going from them to his lodgings; it being toward the cloſe of the day, when John had finiſhed his work for that day, and the people were departing home: John fixed his eyes intently on Chriſt, with great pleaſure and delight, and pointing at him, he ſaith, behold the Lamb of God; as in ver. 29. where 'tis added, which taketh away the ſin of the world; and which the Ethiopic verſion ſubjoins here.

Ver. 37. And the two diſciples heard him ſpeak, &c.] The above words, and took notice of them; faith in Chriſt came by hearing them; they reached their hearts, and they found their affections, and the deſires of their ſouls, to be after Chriſt: and they followed Jeſus; left their maſter, and went after him, in order to get ſome acquaintance with him, and receive ſome inſtructions from him.

Ver. 38. Then Jeſus turned, and ſaw them following, &c.] That is, him, as the Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions add: he ſaw by their walk, and by their countenances, that they were following him; and which he knew before he turned himſelf: he knew what John had ſaid, and what an effect it had upon theſe diſciples, and what was working in their hearts, and how deſirous they were of coming up to him, and converſing with him; and therefore he turned himſelf, that they might have an opportunity of ſpeaking to him; or rather, in order to ſpeak to them firſt, as he did: and ſaith unto them, what ſeek ye? This he ſaid, not as ignorant of whom, and what they were ſeeking, and deſirous; but to encourage them to ſpeak to him, which through fear and baſhfulneſs, they might be backward to; and therefore, he who will not break the bruiſed reed, nor quench the ſmoaking flax, but cheriſhes and encourages the firſt motions of grace, begins firſt with them, and treats them in a free and familiar manner; thereby to animate and engage them to uſe freedom with him, and which end was anſwered: they ſaid unto him, Rabbi; a title which now began to be in much uſe with the Jews, and which they gave to their celebrated doctors; and theſe diſciples of John, obſerving how magnificently their maſter ſpoke of Jeſus, in great reverence to him, addreſſed him under this character; ſee the note on Matt. xxiii. 7. which is to ſay, being interpreted, maſter. Theſe are the words of the Evangeliſt, interpreting the word Rabbi, and not of the diſciples, and are left out in the Syriac and Perſic verſions, who for Rabbi, read our maſter, or our Rabbi; being ſaid by both the diſciples, or by one in the name of both, putting the following queſtion: where dwelleſt thou? ſignifying, that that was not a proper place in the publick way, to enter into a converſation with him, and acquaint him with what they were deſirous of; but ſhould be glad to know where he lodged, that they might wait upon him there, either then, or on the morrow, or at any convenient time.

Ver. 39. He ſaith unto them, come and ſee, &c.] He gave them an invitation, to go along with him directly, and ſee with their own eyes, where he dwelt, and there and then converſe with him, and at any other time; to which they had a hearty welcome: they came and ſaw where he dwelt; they accepted of the invitation, and went along with him immediately, and ſaw, and took notice of the place where he had lodgings, that they might know it, and find it another time; which Dr. Lightfoot conjectures, was at Capernaum, which is very probable; ſince that was his own city, where he paid tribute, where he frequently reſorted, and was on the banks of Jordan, near the lake of Geneſaret; and theſe diſciples were Galileans: and abode with him that day; the remaining part of the day, which they ſpent in delightful converſation with him; by which they knew that he was the Meſſiah; at leaſt they were better inſtructed in this matter, and more confirmed in it. The Arabic verſion renders it, they remained with him that his own day; and Dr. Lightfoot thinks the next day is meant, and that it was the ſabbath-day, which they kept with him in private devotion and conference: for it was about the tenth hour; which, according to the Roman way of reckoning, muſt be ten o'clock in the morning; ſo that there was a conſiderable part of the day before them; but according to the Jewiſh way of reckoning, who reckon twelve hours to a day, it muſt be four o'clock in the afternoon, when there were but two hours to night: and this being about the time when the lamb of the daily ſacrifice of the evening was offered up, very ſeaſonably did John point unto them at this time, Chriſt the Lamb of God, the antitype of that ſacrifice; for the daily evening ſacrifice was ſlain at eight and a half, and was offered at nine and a half [f], or between the ninth and tenth hours of the day. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, they remained with him that day unto the tenth hour.

Ver. 40. One of the two which heard John ſpeak, &c.] The above things, concerning Jeſus being the Lamb of God: and followed him; that is, Jeſus, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions read; and the Perſic verſion, Chriſt; and the Ethiopic verſion, the Lord Jeſus; for not John, but Jeſus they followed: was Andrew, Simon Peter's brother; ſee Matt. iii. 18. the other, as before obſerved, might be the writer of this Goſpel.

Ver. 41. He firſt findeth his own brother Simon, &c.] Either before the other diſciple, or before he found any other perſon: after he and the other diſciple departed from Chriſt, being affected with the grace beſtowed upon him, and his heart warm with the converſation he had had with him, and tranſported with joy at finding the Meſſiah, goes in all haſte in ſearch of his relations, friends, and acquaintance, to communicate what he had ſeen and heard, in order to bring them to the knowledge of the ſame; for ſuch is the nature of grace, 'tis very communicative, and thoſe that have it, are very deſirous that all others ſhould be partakers of it: and the firſt perſon he lighted on was Simon, who was afterwards called Peter, who was his own brother; not a brother-in-law, but his own brother, by father and mother's ſide, and ſo dear unto him by the ties of nature and blood: and ſaith unto him; with all eagerneſs imaginable, and in a rapture of joy: we have found the Meſſias; I, and a fellow diſciple have had the Meſſiah, ſo often foretold by the prophets, and ſo long expected by our fathers, pointed out to us; and we have followed him, and have had converſation with him, and are well aſſured he is that illuſtrious perſon: which is, being interpreted, the Chriſt; which, as in ver. 38. are the words of the Evangeliſt, and not Andrew, and are therefore left out in the Syriac verſion; the word Meſſiah needing no interpretation in that language; and which was the language in which Andrew ſpoke. This name Meſſiah, was well known among the Jews, for that great perſon who was promiſed, and they expected would come, as a Saviour and Redeemer; though it is not very often mentioned in the books of the Old Teſtament, chiefly in the following places, Pſal. ii. 2. xviii. 50. lxxxix. 39, 51. Dan. ix. 25, 26. but is very much uſed in the Chaldee paraphraſes: Elias Levita [g] ſays, he found it in more than fifty verſes; and Buxtorf [h] has added others to them, and the word appears in ſeventy-one places, which he takes notice of, and are worthy of regard; for they ſhew the ſenſe of the ancient ſynagogue, concerning the paſſages of the Old Teſtament, reſpecting the Meſſiah: this Hebrew word, is interpreted by the Greek word, Chriſt; and both ſignify anointed, and well agree with the perſon to whom they belong, to which there is an alluſion in Cant. i. 3. thy name is as ointment poured forth: he is ſo called, becauſe he was anointed from everlaſting, to be prophet, prieſt, and king; ſee Pſal. ii. 6. and lxxxix. 20. Prov. viii. 22, 23. and he was anointed as man, with the oil of gladneſs, with the graces of the Spirit, without meaſure, Pſal. xlv. 7. Acts x. 38. And it is from him the ſaints receive the anointing, or grace in meaſure; and are from him called chriſtians, and are really anointed ones; ſee 1 John ii. 27. Acts xi. 25. 2 Cor. i. 21. hence it is a name precious to the ſaints, and ſavoury to them. Theſe words were delivered by Andrew, in a very exulting ſtrain, expreſſing great joy; as indeed what can be greater joy to a ſenſible ſoul, than to find Chriſt? which in a ſpiritual ſenſe, is to have a clear ſight of him by faith, to go unto him, and lay hold on him, as the only Saviour and Redeemer: who is to be found in the ſcriptures of truth, which teſtify of him; in the promiſes of grace, which are full of him; and in the Goſpel, of which he is the ſum and ſubſtance; and in the ordinances of it, where he ſhows himſelf; for he is not to be found by the light of nature, or by carnal reaſon, nor by the law of Moſes, but by means of the Goſpel, and the Spirit of God attending that, as a ſpirit of wiſdom and revelation, in the knowledge of him: and happy are thoſe ſouls that find Chriſt under his direction; for they find life, ſpiritual and eternal in him; a juſtifying righteouſneſs; free and full pardon of their ſins; ſpiritual food for their ſouls; and peace, comfort, joy, and reſt, and eternal glory: wherefore this muſt needs be matter of joy unto them, ſince ſuch a finding is a rich one, a pearl of great price, riches durable and unſearchable; and which a man that has found, would not part with for all the world; but parts with all he has for it; and is what can never be loſt again; and particularly to two ſorts of perſons, finding Chriſt, muſt give a peculiar pleaſure, and an inexpreſſible joy; to ſuch as are under a ſenſe of ſin and damnation, and to ſuch who have been under deſertion. The phraſe of finding a perſon, twice uſed in this text, and hereafter in ſome following verſes, is frequent in Talmudic and Rabbinic writings; as "he went, "אשכחיה לרב, and found him with Rab [i]."

[i] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 108. 1. Zohar in Lev. fol. 15. 3.

Ver. 42. And he brought him to Jeſus, &c.] That is, Andrew brought his brother Simon to Jeſus; he perſuaded him to go along with him, and ſhewed him where he was; which diſcovered great zeal for Chriſt, being deſirous of gaining ſouls unto him; and great affection to his brother, being heartily concerned that he might know Chriſt, as well as he; nor did he chuſe that he ſhould take up with the bare account that he gave of him, but would have him go to him himſelf, that he might be perſonally acquainted with him, and inſtructed by him: and this alſo ſhows the readineſs and willingneſs of Simon, to ſee and hear Chriſt himſelf, and not ſit down contented with the bare relation his brother gave: no doubt he found his heart ſtirred up within him, and the deſires of his ſoul going after Chriſt; and therefore he at once roſe up and went with Andrew to him; and thus one perſon may be the means of bringing another to Chriſt: and it may be obſerved, that Peter was not the firſt of the Apoſtles that was called by Chriſt, or firſt knew him; Andrew was before him, and the means of bringing him into an acquaintance with him; had it been the reverſe, the Papiſts would have improved it in favour of Peter, as the prince of the Apoſtles: this clauſe is omitted in the Perſic verſion. And when Jeſus beheld him; as he was coming, or come to him: he had beheld him before in the glaſs of his Father's purpoſes and decrees; he had viewed him in his blood, and ſaid unto him live; and he now looked upon him with a look of love, of complacency, and delight: he ſaid, thou art Simon the ſon of Jona; thy name is Simon, and thy father's name is Jona: he knew both their names, tho' he might have never ſeen their faces, nor heard of them: this he ſaid to give Simon a teſtimony of his omniſcience; and which, no doubt, muſt ſtrike him at once. Simon, or Simeon, was a common name among the Jews, being the name of one of the twelve patriarchs; ſee the note on Matt. x. 2. and ſo likewiſe was Jona, being the name of a prophet of theirs; ſee the note on Matt. xvi. 17. and inaſmuch as the prophet Jonah was of Geth Hephar in Zebulon, which was in Galilee; ſee the note on John vii. 52. this might be a common name among the Galileans; ſo that there ſeems no reaſon why it ſhould be thought to be the ſame with John, as the Ethiopic verſion reads it, and by way of interrogation, art thou not Simon the ſon of John? Thou ſhalt be called Cephas, which is, by interpretation, a ſtone; or Peter, as it ſhould rather be rendered; and as it is in the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions: and as Cepha, or Cephas, in the Syriac and Chaldee languages ſignifies a ſtone, or rock [k], ſo does Peter in Greek: hence, the Syriac verſion here gives no interpretation of the word. Chriſt not only calls Simon by his preſent name, at firſt ſight of him, but tells him what his future name ſhould be; and which imports, not only that he ſhould be a lively ſtone in the ſpiritual building, the church, but ſhould have a conſiderable hand in that work, and abide firm and ſtedfaſt to Chriſt, and his intereſt, notwithſtanding his fall; and continue conſtant and immoveable until death, as he did. The Jews alſo, in their writings, call him Simeon Kepha [l].

Ver. 43. The day following, &c.] Not the day after John had pointed out Chriſt, as the lamb of God, to two of his diſciples; but the day after Simon had been with him, being brought by Andrew: Jeſus would go forth into Galilee; from whence he came to Jordan, to John, to be baptized by him; and which being done, and his temptations in the wilderneſs over, it was his will, reſolution, and determination, to return to Galilee, the place of his education and converſation, till this time; and therefore choſe to begin his miniſtry, and miracles, there, both to give honour to it, and to fulfil a prophecy in Iſ. ix. 1, 2. and beſides this, he had doubtleſs another end in going thither; which was to call ſome other diſciples that dwelt there: and findeth Philip; as he was going to Galilee, or rather when in it; not by hap or chance; but knowing where he was, as the ſhepherd and biſhop of ſouls, looked him up and found him out, and called him by his grace, and to be a diſciple of his; ſee the note on Matt. x. 3. and ſaith unto him, follow me; leave thy friends, thy calling, and buſineſs, and become a diſciple of mine: and ſuch power went along with theſe words, that he at once left all, and followed Chriſt; as the other diſciples, Peter, and Andrew, James, and John, and Matthew did, as is recorded of them, tho' not of this; but the following hiſtory makes it appear he did.

Ver. 44. Now Philip was of Bethſaida, &c.] A town on the lake of Geneſareth, afterwards made a city by Philip the Tetrarch, and called Julias, after the name of Cæſar's daughter [m]: it was a fiſhing town, and had its name from thence; and the diſciples that were of it, were of this buſineſs: the city of Andrew and Peter; or Simon, as read the Syriac and Perſic verſions: three apoſtles were called out of this place, as mean, and wicked, as it was; ſee Matt. xi. 21. which was no ſmall honour to it: it is a ſaying of the Jews [n], that "a man's place (his native place) does not honour him, but a man honours his place." This was the caſe here.

Ver. 45. Philip findeth Nathanael, &c.] Who was of Cana of Galilee, John xxi. 2. and where, 'tis very likely, Philip found him; ſince we quickly read of Jeſus, and his diſciples being there. This man is thought, by ſome, to be the ſame with Bartholomew; and ſo he is called Bartholomew, in a Syriac dictionary [o]; and the rather, ſince he and Philip are always mentioned together in the account of the apoſtles, Matt. x. 3. Mark iii. 18. Luke vi. 14. And certain it is, from the above-mentioned place, that Nathanael was among the apoſtles after our Lord's reſurrection; and it is highly probable was one of them: his name might be Nathanael bar Tholmai, the ſon of Tholmai, Ptolomy, or Tholomew. It is the ſame name with Nethaneel, and which is read Nathanael, as here, in 1 Eſdras ix. 22. and by the Septuagint on 1 Chron. ii. 14. and xv. 24. and xxiv. 6. and xxvi. 4. 2 Chron. xxxv. 9. Ezra x. 22. Neh. xii. 36. and ſignifies one given of God; and is the ſame with Theodore in Greek, and Adeodatus in Latin; a doctor of this name, R. Nathaniel, is mentioned in the Jewiſh writings [p]: and ſaith unto him, we have found him of whom Moſes, in the law, and the prophets, did write. He does not ſay, that he, and Andrew, and Simon, had found the Meſſiah; tho' he deſigns him by this circumlocution; Nathanael being, as is generally thought, a perſon well verſed in the law, and the prophets, and ſo would at once know who Philip meant: for Moſes, in the law, or Pentateuch, in the five books written by him, frequently ſpeaks of the Meſſiah as the ſeed of the woman, that ſhould break the ſerpent's head; as the ſeed of Abraham, in whom all nations ſhould be bleſſed; and as the Shiloh to whom the gathering of the people ſhould be; and as the great prophet, like to himſelf, God would raiſe up among the children of Iſrael, to whom they were to hearken: and as for the prophets, they wrote of his birth of a virgin; of the place of his birth, Bethlehem; of his ſufferings, and the glory that ſhould follow; of his reſurrection from the dead, his aſcenſion to heaven, and ſeſſion at the right hand of God; and of many things relating to his perſon, and office, and work. And Philip having given this general account of him, proceeds to name him particularly; and affirms him to be Jeſus of Nazareth, the ſon of Joſeph; that his name was Jeſus, which ſignifies a ſaviour; and anſwers to the promiſes, and prophecies, and character of him in the Old Teſtament; that he was of Nazareth, a place not above three hours walk from Cana, as Adrichomius ſays, where Philip and Nathanael were: Nazareth was the place where Chriſt had lived almoſt all his days hitherto, and therefore is ſaid to be of it; tho' Bethlehem was the place of his birth, which Philip might not as yet know; as Capernaum afterwards was his city, or the more uſual place of his reſidence: and that he was the ſon of Joſeph; this Philip ſays, according to the common opinion of people; for he was ſuppoſed to be the ſon of Joſeph, he having married his mother Mary.

Ver. 46. And Nathanael ſaid unto him, &c.] Taking notice of, and laying hold on what Philip ſaid, that he was of Nazareth, which at once ſtumbled, and prejudiced him againſt Jeſus being the Meſſiah; knowing very well that Bethlehem was to be the place of his birth: can there any good thing come out of Nazareth? The whole country of Galilee was had in contempt with the Jews; but Nazareth was ſo mean a place, that it ſeems it was even deſpiſed by its neighbours, by the Galileans themſelves; for Nathanael was a Galilean, that ſaid theſe words. It was ſo miſerable a place that he could hardly think that any ſort of good thing, even any worldy good thing, could come from thence; and it was ſo wicked, as appears from their murderous deſigns upon our Lord, that he thought no good man could ariſe from hence; and ſtill leſs, any prophet, any perſon of great note; and ſtill leaſt of all, that that good thing, or perſon, the Meſſiah, ſhould ſpring from it: ſo that his objection, and prejudice, proceeded not only upon the oracle in Micah v. 2. which points out Bethlehem as the birth-place of the Meſſiah; but upon the wickedneſs, and meanneſs, and obſcurity of Nazareth. Philip ſaith unto him, come and ſee; who tho' he might not be maſter of this point, and knew not how to ſolve this difficulty, and remove this prejudice from Nathanael's mind, yet perſuades him to go with him to Jeſus; who, he doubted not, would give him full ſatisfaction in this, and all other points; and then it would moſt clearly appear to him, as it had done to him, that he was the true Meſſiah. The phraſe, תא חזי, come, ſee, is often uſed in the book of Zohar[q]: ſo it is, and likewiſe, בא וראה, come and ſee, in the Talmudic writings[r].

Ver. 47. Jeſus ſaw Nathanael coming to him, &c.] For notwithſtanding his prejudices, he was a man of ſo much uprightneſs and honeſty, that he thought Philip's requeſt was very reaſonable; and that it was but right, and fair, that he ſhould ſee, and hear, and judge, for himſelf, whether the perſon Philip ſpoke of was the Meſſiah, or no; and therefore he came along with him; and as he was coming, Jeſus ſaw him, who knew all that had paſſed between him and Philip: and ſaith of him; to thoſe that were ſtanding by him, and in the hearing of Nathanael, behold an Iſraelite indeed! a ſon of Iſrael, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions read; a true ſon of Jacob's; an honeſt, plain-hearted man like him; one that was an Iſraelite at heart; inwardly ſo; not one after the fleſh only, but after the ſpirit; ſee Rom. ii. 28, 29. 1 Cor. x. 18. and which was a rare thing at that time; and therefore a note of admiration is prefixed to it; for all were not Iſrael, that were of Iſrael; and indeed but a very few then: and ſo, בן ישראל, a ſon of Iſrael, and, ישראל גמור, a perfect Iſraelite, are[s] ſaid of ſuch who have regard to the articles of the Jewiſh faith, tho' not even of the ſeed of Iſrael: 'tis added, in whom there is no guile; not that he was without ſin; nor is this ſaid of him; nor was he in ſuch ſenſe without guile, as Chriſt himſelf was; but guile was not a governing ſin in him: the courſe of his life, and converſation, was with great integrity, and uprightneſs, and without any prevailing hypocriſy and deceit, either to God, or men. This Chriſt ſaid to ſhew how much ſuch a character is approved by him; and that he knew the ſecrets of mens hearts, and the inward frames of their minds.

Ver. 48. Nathanael ſaith unto him, whence knoweſt thou me? &c.] This he ſaid as one ſurpriſed, that he, who was a ſtranger to him, ſhould hit upon his general character, and deſcribe the internal ſtate and frame of his ſoul: this was more ſurprizing to him, than if he had called him by his name Nathanael, as he did Simon; or had ſaid what was the place of his abode; Cana of Galilee; ſince this ordinarily was only to be obſerved, and learned, from a long and familiar acquaintance and converſation: by Nathanael's reply, it looks as if he had no doubt, or fears, about the character Chriſt gave him; but rather, that he believed it, as every good man muſt be conſcious to himſelf of his own integrity; only it was amazing to him, how he ſhould know it: Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him; in order to ſatisfy him, how he could know this inward temper of his mind, and to give him ſome undeniable proofs of his omniſcience, which he himſelf muſt acknowledge, being ſuch as none but an all-ſeeing eye could diſcover: before that Philip called thee, when thou waſt under the fig-tree, I ſaw thee; in which words Chriſt gives two inſtances of his omniſcience; the one is, that he knew Philip had called him; he was privy to all that paſſed between them, though they were alone, and the converſation was had in the moſt private manner. Chriſt knew what an account Philip had given of him, and what objection Nathanael had made; and what an invitation Philip had given him to go along with him to Chriſt, and judge for himſelf; which is here meant by calling him, and with which he complied: and the other is, that he ſaw him under the fig-tree before that: he was ſitting under it, as men in thoſe countries uſed to do; ſee Micah iv. 4. where he might be reading, the ſcriptures, and meditating upon them; and if, as ſome obſerve, he was reading, and thinking upon Jacob's dream, concerning the ladder which reached from earth to heaven, and on which he ſaw the angels of God aſcending and deſcending, the words of Chriſt in ver. 51. muſt ſtrike him with freſh ſurprize, and give him another convincing proof of his omniſcience: or he might be praying here in ſecret, and ſo acted a different part from the generality of religious men of that nation, who choſe to pray in ſynagogues, and corners of the ſtreets, that they might be ſeen; and likewiſe proved him to be what Chriſt had ſaid of him, a true and rare Iſraelite, without guile and hypocriſy, which were ſo viſible and prevailing among others. It was uſual with the doctors to read, and ſtudy in the law, under fig-trees, and ſometimes, tho' rarely, to pray there. It is ſaid [t], “ R. Jacob, and his companions, were “ ſitting, ſtudying in the law, תחות חדא תאינה, “ under a certain fig-tree.” And the rule they give about praying, on, or under one, is this [u]: “ he “ that prays on the top of an olive-tree, or on the “ top of a fig-tree, or on any other trees, muſt “ come down, and pray below.” It is ſaid of Nathanael, in the Syriac dictionary [x]; that his mother hid him under a fig-tree, when the infants were ſlain, i. e. at Bethlehem; which, if it could be depended upon, muſt be to Nathanael a ſurprizing and undeniable proof of the deity of Chriſt, and of his being the true Meſſiah; ſince, at that time, he was an infant of days himſelf, and was the perſon Herod was ſeeking to deſtroy, as the Meſſiah, and king of the Jews.

Ver. 49. Nathanael anſwered and ſaith unto him, &c.] Being fully convinced of his omniſcience by theſe inſtances: Rabbi; that is, maſter, as it is interpreted in ver. 38. and is not here, becauſe it is there: thou art the ſon of God; not by creation, for this would be to ſay no more of him, than may be ſaid of every man; nor by adoption, for in that ſenſe Nathanael himſelf was a ſon of God, and many others; nor on account of his wonderful incarnation, which, 'tis very likely, at this time Nathanael knew nothing of; nor by reaſon of his reſurrection from the dead, which, as yet, was not, and ſtill leſs might be known by this perſon; nor becauſe of his office, as mediator, for this is expreſſed in the next clauſe; but by nature, as being of the ſame eſſence, and poſſeſſed of the ſame perfections God is; and of which he was convinced by the inſtances he gave of his omniſcience; for it was from hence, and no other conſideration, that he concludes him to be the ſon of God: wherefore this phraſe muſt be underſtood of him, not as mediator, but as a divine perſon; as the natural, eſſential, and eternal ſon of God; and who is truly and properly God: he adds, thou art the king of Iſrael; having, in view, no doubt, the paſſage in Pſal. ii. 6, 7. where the characters of Son of God, and King of Zion, meet in the ſame perſon: not king of Iſrael, in a literal ſenſe; though he was the ſon of David, and a deſcendant of his in a right line, and was of the royal line, and had a legal right to the throne of Iſrael; and Nathanael might have a view to this being tinctured with the common national prejudice, that the Meſſiah would be a temporal prince: but his kingdom is not of this world; nor with obſervation; but is ſpiritual; and he is a king over Iſrael in a ſpiritual ſenſe, even of ſaints, whether Jews or Gentiles; whom he conquers by his power, and rules in their hearts by his ſpirit, and grace; and protects, and defends them from all their enemies.

Ver. 50. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, &c.] Not as reproving him for his faith, as if he was too credulous, and too eaſily gave into the belief of Chriſt, as the Son of God, and true Meſſiah, upon theſe ſingle expreſſions of his; but as approving of it, and ſurprized at it: becauſe I ſaid unto thee, I ſaw thee under the fig-tree, believeſt thou? ſome read the words, not by way of interrogation, but as an aſſertion; thou believeſt, or haſt believed, as the Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Perſic verſions: thou ſhalt ſee greater things than theſe; meaning that he ſhould have larger diſcoveries of his perſon, nature, and perfections, and ſhould ſee things done by him, much more ſurprizing than any thing he had ſeen yet; referring to the miracles of raiſing the dead, caſting out devils, and healing all manner of diſeaſes.

Ver. 51. And he ſaith unto him, verily, verily, I ſay unto you, &c.] Not only to Nathanael, but to the reſt of the diſciples that were then with him; and to ſhew himſelf to be the Amen, and faithful witneſs, as well as more ſtrongly to aſſeverate what he was about to ſay, he doubles the expreſſion: hereafter you ſhall ſee heaven open; either in a literal ſenſe, as it had been at his baptiſm; or, in a myſtical ſenſe, that there ſhould be a clearer manifeſtation of heavenly truths made by his miniſtry; and that the way into the holieſt of all ſhould be made more manifeſt; and a more familiar intercourſe be opened between God and his people; and alſo between angels and ſaints: and the angels of God aſcending and deſcending upon the Son of man; or to the Son of man, as the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions render it; meaning himſelf in human nature; the ſecond Adam, and ſeed of the woman; and is expreſſive both of the truth, and infirmity of that nature. Reference may here be had to the ladder Jacob dreamed of, in Gen. xxviii. 12. which was a repreſentation of Chriſt, in his perſon, as God-man; who, as God, was in heaven, whilſt he, as man, was on earth; and in his office, as mediator between God and man, making peace between them both; and in the miniſtration of angels to him in perſon, and to his body the church. And it is obſervable, that ſome of the Jewiſh writers [y] underſtand the aſcent, and deſcent of the angels, in Gen. xxviii. 12. to be, not upon the ladder, but upon Jacob; which makes the phraſe there ſtill more agreeable to this; and ſo they render עלין, in ver. 13. not above it, but above him. Or the ſenſe is, that there would be immediately made ſuch clearer diſcoveries of his perſon, and grace by his miniſtry, and ſuch miracles would be wrought by him in confirmation of it, that it would look as if heaven was open, and the angels of God were continually going to and fro, and bringing freſh meſſages, and performing miraculous operations; as if the whole hoſt of them were conſtantly employed in ſuch ſervices: and this the rather ſeems to be the ſenſe, ſince the next account we have, is, of the beginning of Chriſt's miracles to manifeſt forth his glory in Cana of Galilee, where Nathanael lived; and ſince the word, rendered hereafter, ſignifies, from hence forward; or, as the Perſic verſion renders it, from this hour; tho' the word is left out in the Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic verſions.

CHAP. II.

Ver. 1. AND the third day there was a marriage, &c.] Either from the ſecond teſtimony bore by John the Baptiſt concerning Chriſt, and from the call of Simon Peter, which ſeem to be of the ſame date; ſee chap. i. 35, 36, 42, 43. or from Chriſt's coming into Galilee; or from the converſation he had with Nathanael; from either of which the date is taken, it matters not; the firſt is as agreeable and plain, as any. There is much diſpute, and many rules with the Jews about the times, and days of marriage: "a virgin, they ſay [z], marries on the fourth day (of the week,) and a widow on the fifth, becauſe the Sanhedrim ſit in the cities twice in the week, on the ſecond, and on the fifth days; ſo that if there is any diſpute about virginity, he, (the huſband) may come betimes to the Sanhedrim." This was a law that obtained ſince the times of Ezra; for it is ſaid [a], "before the order of Ezra, a woman might be married on any day;" but in after-times, feaſt-days, and ſabbath-days, were particularly excepted. One of their canons is [b], "they don't marry women on a feaſt-day, neither virgins, nor widows:" The reaſon of it was, that they might not mix one joy with another; and leſt a man ſhould leave the joy of the feaſt, for the joy of his wife. The account Maimonides [c] gives of theſe ſeveral things is this; "it is lawful to eſpouſe on any common day, even on the ninth of Ab, whether in the day, or in the night; but they don't marry wives neither on the evening of the ſabbath, nor on the firſt of the week: the decree is, leſt the ſabbath ſhould be prophaned by preparing the feaſt; for the bridegroom is employed about the feaſt: and there is no need to ſay, that it is unlawful to marry a wife on the ſabbath-day; and even on the common day of a feaſt they don't marry wives, as we have explained; becauſe they don't mix one joy with another, as it is ſaid in Gen. xxix. 27. fulfil her week, and we will give thee this alſo: but on the reſt of the days it is lawful to marry a wife, any day a man pleaſes; for he muſt be employed in the marriage-feaſt three days before the marriage. A place in which the Sanhedrim don't ſit, but on the ſecond and fifth days only, a virgin is married on the fourth day; that if there is any objection to her virginity, he, (her huſband) may come betimes to the Sanhedrim: and it is a cuſtom of the wiſe men, that he that marries one that has been married, he may marry her on the fifth day, that ſo he may rejoice with her on the fifth day, and on the evening of the ſabbath, (i. e. the ſixth) and on the ſabbath-day, and may go forth to his work on the firſt day." But elſewhere 'tis ſaid [d], that "now they are uſed to marry on the ſixth day of the week." Yea [e], that "it is lawful to marry, and to make the feaſt on the ſabbath-day." But whether this marriage was of a virgin, or a widow, cannot be known; nor with certainty can it be ſaid, on what day of the week it was: if that day was a ſabbath-day on which the diſciples abode with Chriſt, as Dr. Lightfoot conjectures, then it muſt be on the firſt day that Chriſt went into Galilee, and found Philip, and converſed with Nathanael; and if this third day is reckoned from John's ſecond teſtimony, it muſt be on a Tueſday, the third day of the week; but if from Chriſt's going into Galilee, then it muſt be on a Wedneſday, the fourth day, of the week, the day fixed by the Jewiſh canon for the marriage of a virgin. This marriage was in Cana of Galilee. The Syriac and Perſic verſions read, in Kotne, a city of Galilee; and which, in the Jewiſh map, is called, קטנא בגליל, Katna in Galilee, and is placed in the tribe of Zebulon, which was in Galilee, and not far from Nazareth; and bids fair to be the ſame place with this; tho' it is more generally thought [f], that Cana, in the tribe of Aſher, mentioned in Joſhua xix. 28. which was alſo in Galilee, is here meant; and is ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from another Kanah, in the tribe of Ephraim, Joſhua xvi. 8. and xvii. 9. Joſephus [g] ſpeaks of a town, or village, of Galilee, called Cana, which was a day's march from it to Tiberias, and ſeems to be the ſame place: and another Jewiſh writer [h] ſays, "to me it appears, that Cepher Chanania, is Cepher Cana; or the village of Cana, as is clear in Miſna Sheviith, c. 9. §. 1. for there is the beginning of lower Galilee," which alſo accords with this. Now in the caſe of marriage, there were ſome difference between Judea and Galilee, and certain rules were laid down relating thereunto: and 'tis ſaid [i], "there are three countries, for the celebration of marriages; Judea, the country beyond Jordan, and Galilee;" that is, that were obliged to marry among themſelves; ſo that if any one married a wife out of any of theſe countries, ſhe was not obliged to go along with him from one country to another [k]: hence it follows, "they don't bring them out from city to city, (i. e. oblige them to go with them from city to city) nor from town to town; but in the ſame country they bring them out from city to city, and from town to town.." And it is elſewhere obſerved [l], that "in Judea, at firſt, they joined the bridegroom and bride together an hour before they went into the bride-chamber, that ſo his heart might be lifted up in her; but in Galilee they did not do ſo: in Judea, at firſt, they appointed for them two companions, one for him, and another for her, that they might miniſter to, or wait on the bridegroom, and bride, when they went into the bride-chamber; but in Galilee they did not do ſo: in Judea, at firſt, the companions ſlept in the houſe where the bridegroom and bride ſlept; but in Galilee they did not do ſo." Next we have an account of the perſons that were preſent at this marriage: and the mother of Jeſus was there; who ſeems to have been a principal perſon at this wedding, and was very officious; when wine was wanted, ſhe ſignified it to her ſon, and ordered the ſervants to do whatever he bid them: and ſince ſhe, and Jeſus, and his brethren, were all here, it looks as if it was a relation of hers that was now married: and ſince theſe brethren were the kinſmen of Chriſt, Simon, Judas, and Joſes, the ſons of Cleophas or Alpheus, whoſe wife was ſiſter to the mother of our Lord; and ſince one of them, to diſtinguiſh him from Simon Peter, is called Simon the Canaanite, or an inhabitant of Cana, as ſome have thought; hence it is conjectured by Dr. Lightfoot, that Alpheus had an houſe in Cana, and that his family dwelt there, and that it was for one of his family that this marriage-feaſt was made; ſee ver. 2, 3, 5, 12. and chap. xix. 25. Matt. xiii. 55. and x. 4. Joſeph, the huſband of Mary, perhaps, was now dead, ſince no mention is made of him here, nor any where elſe, as alive, after Chriſt had entered on his public miniſtry.

Ver. 2. And both Jeſus was called, &c.] Or invited, as being a relation, according to the fleſh: and his diſciples, to the marriage; who were bidden, on his account; and they ſeem to be theſe, Andrew, and the other diſciple, that followed Jeſus, and Simon Peter, and Philip, and Nathanael, who was of this place; and accordingly they all went to it. Chriſt, and his five diſciples, made ſix of the ten, which were always neceſſary to be preſent at the benediction of bridegrooms: for ſo runs the canon[m]; "they don't bleſs the bleſſing of bridegrooms, but "with ten principal and free men; and the bride- "groom may be one of the number." To attend a wedding, was reckoned, with the Jews, an act of beneficence and kindneſs[n]. Our Lord, being at this wedding, was acting like himſelf, and his general character, of being free, affable, and courteous; who accepted of every invitation, and refuſed not to be at any entertainment, made by who it would, or on whatever occaſion: and particularly in this inſtance, it ſhews his humility in not diſdaining his poor relations, but giving them his company at ſuch a time; as alſo it was bearing a teſtimony, to the inſtitution of marriage, as honourable; and teaches us to rejoice with them that rejoice: and as this was, at the firſt of Chriſt's miniſtry and miracles, 'tis likely it might give the occaſion of that calumny caſt on him in Matt. xi. 19. The diſciples of Chriſt followed the example of their maſter. According to the Jewiſh canons[o], a diſciple of a wiſe man might not partake of any feaſt, but what was according to the commandment, as the feaſt of eſpouſals, and of marriage; and ſuch a feaſt was this, which Chriſt and his diſciples were at; and ſo not to be condemned for it, according to their own maxims.

Ver. 3. And when they wanted wine, &c.] Or wine was wanting; not thro' the intemperance of the gueſts, rather thro' the poverty of the family, who were not able to provide very largely; and it may be by reaſon of a larger number of gueſts than were expected; however, ſo it was ordered by divine providence, that there might be an opportunity for Chriſt to manifeſt forth his glory: the mother of Jeſus ſaith unto him, they have no wine; being concerned for the family, leſt they ſhould be put to ſhame and diſgrace, and the entertainment ſhould not proceed with becoming credit and honour; and knowing the power of Chriſt to help in this time of neceſſity, ſhe modeſtly moves it to him, perhaps by a whiſper, ſitting next him; or, it may be, might call him out, and juſt drop the hint; being well perſuaded of his power, as ſhe might; not from any miracles wrought by him in her family for the ſupport of it, when in diſtreſs; for as Chriſt wrought no miracle, in the time of his public miniſtry, for the ſupport of himſelf, or his diſciples, but for others, 'tis not likely he ſhould do it for his family in private life; but from the wonderful things told her by the angel that brought the news of her conception, and by the ſhepherds, and by Simeon and Anna, which ſhe had laid up in her heart; and from his being the Meſſiah, who, according to the general belief of the nation, was to work miracles; and particularly from the laſt words of the preceding chapter; ſee the note there: for ſhe might be preſent at the delivery of them; and therefore might hope that as this was the firſt opportunity that offered after, that he would diſplay his power in ſupplying the family with wine in this time of exigence.

Ver. 4. Jeſus ſaith unto her, woman, &c.] Calling her woman, as it was no ways contrary to her being a virgin, Gal. iv. 4. ſo it was no mark of diſreſpect; it being an uſual way of ſpeaking with the Jews, when they ſhewed the greateſt reſpect to the perſon ſpoken to; and was uſed by our Lord when he addreſſed his mother with the greateſt tenderneſs, and ſtrongeſt affection, John xix. 26. The Jews frequently object this paſſage to us Chriſtians: one of their writers forms his objection in this manner[p]; "they (the Chriſtians) ſay, the mother "of Jeſus is never called a woman in their law; "but here her ſon himſelf calls her a woman." Another puts it thus[q]; "it is their (the Chriſtians) "belief, that Mary, even after ſhe brought forth "Jeſus, was a virgin; but if ſhe was, as they ſay, "why does not her ſon call her by the name of "virgin? but he calls her a woman, which ſig- "nifies one known by man, as appears from ch. "iv. 2. and viii. 10." To which may be replied, that the mother of Jeſus is never called a woman in the New Teſtament, is not ſaid by us Chriſtians: it is certain ſhe is ſo called, both here, and elſewhere; but then this is no contradiction to her being a virgin; one, and the ſame perſon, may be a virgin, and a woman: the damſel, Abraham's ſervant, was ſent to take for wife for his ſon Iſaac, is called a woman, though a virgin that had never known any man, Gen. xxiv. 5, 8, 14, 16, 43, 44. Beſides, we don't think ourſelves obliged to maintain the perpetual virginity of Mary, the mother of our Lord; it is enough that ſhe was a virgin when ſhe conceived, and when ſhe brought forth her firſt-born: and as the Jews endeavour to take an advantage of this againſt the character of Mary, the Papiſts are very ſolicitous about the manner in which theſe words are ſaid, leſt they ſhould be thought to contain a reproof, which they can't bear ſhe ſhould be judged worthy of; or ſuggeſt any thing to her diſhonour, whom they magnify as equal to her Son: but certain it is, that the following words, what have I to do with thee? ſhew reſentment and reproof. Some render the words, what is it to thee and me? and give this as the ſenſe; what concern is this of ours? what buſineſs have we with it? let them look to it, who are the principal in the feaſt, and have the management of it. The Jew[r] objects to this ſenſe of the words, but gives a very weak reaſon for it: "but I ſay, ſays "he, who ſhould be concerned but the maſter of "the feaſt? and he was the maſter of the feaſt:" whereas it is a clear caſe that he was one of the gueſts, one that was invited, ver. 2. and that there was a governour or ruler of the feaſt, who might be more properly called the maſter of it than Jeſus, ver. 8, 10. However, ſince Chriſt afterwards did concern himſelf in it, it looks as if this was not his meaning. Others render it to the ſenſe we do, what have I with thee? as the Ethiopic verſion; or what buſineſs haſt thou with me? as the Perſic verſion; and is the ſame with, מה לי ולך, what have I to do with thee? uſed in 1 Kings xvii. 18. and 2 Kings iii. 13. where the Septuagint uſe the ſame phraſe as here; and ſuch a way of ſpeaking is common mon with Jewiſh writers [s]: hereby ſignifying, that though, as man, and a ſon of hers, he had been ſubject to her, in which he had ſet an example of obedience to parents; yet, as God, he had a father in heaven, whoſe buſineſs he came to do; and in that, and in his office, as mediator, ſhe had nothing to do with him; nor was he to be directed by her in that work; or to be told, or the leaſt hint given when a miracle ſhould be wrought by him in confirmation of his miſſion and doctrine. Moreover, he adds, mine hour is not yet come: meaning not the hour of his ſufferings and death, in which ſenſe he ſometimes uſes this phraſe; as if the hint was, that it was not proper for him to work miracles as yet, leſt it ſhould provoke his enemies to ſeek his life before his time; but rather the time of his public miniſtry and miracles, which were to go together, and the one to be a proof of the other; tho' it ſeems to have a particular regard to the following miracle, the time of doing that was not yet come; the proper juncture, when all fit circumſtances meeting together, it would be both the more uſeful, and the more illuſtrious: or his meaning is, that his time of doing miracles in publick was not yet; and therefore, tho' he was willing to do this miracle, yet he choſe to do it in the moſt private manner; ſo that only a few, and not the principal perſons at the feaſt ſhould know it: wherefore the reproof was not ſo much on the account of the motion itſelf, as the unſeaſonableneſs of it; and ſo his mother took it.

Ver. 5. His mother ſaid unto the ſervants, &c.] She took the reproof in good part, and by the words he ſaid, and the manner in which he ſpake them, or by the looks he gave, and the geſtures he might uſe, ſhe hoped, and even believed, that the thing ſhe moved for would be done; and therefore went immediately to the ſervants, and gave them the following inſtructions: whatſoever he ſaith unto you, do it; punctually obſerve and obey his orders in every circumſtance.

Ver. 6. And there were ſet ſix water-pots of ſtone, &c.] To diſtinguiſh them from other veſſels made of different matter: for the Jews had "veſſels made "of duſt, and the dung of beaſts, כלי אבנים, "veſſels of ſtone, veſſels of earth, veſſels made of "ſhells, veſſels of nitre, veſſels made of the bones "and ſkins of fiſhes [t]." And as theſe veſſels were very likely for waſhing of hands, ſuch were uſed for that purpoſe: their rule is [u], "they may put water "for the hands in all ſorts of veſſels; in veſſels of dung, "in ſtone veſſels, and in veſſels of earth." At a wedding were ſet veſſels of various ſizes to waſh hands and feet in; there was one veſſel called משיכלא, which the Gloſs ſays was a large pitcher, or baſon, out of which the whole company waſhed their hands and their feet; and there was another called משיכלתא, which was a leſſer and beautiful baſon, which was ſet alone for the more honourable perſons, as for the bride, and for any gentlewoman [w]; and ſuch might be theſe ſix ſtone jars, or pots: after the manner of the purifying of the Jews; or for the purifying of the Jews, as the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions render it; that is, for the waſhing of them, their hands and feet, and their veſſels, pots, and cups, according to the traditions of the elders; ſee Mark vii. 2, 3, 4. containing two or three firkins a-piece. The Ethiopic verſion reads, ſome held two meaſures, and ſome three: how large the metreta, or meaſure was, which we render a firkin, is not certain; 'tis moſt likely it anſwered to the Hebrew bath, which was a common meaſure of liquids with the Jews, and held four gallons and a half, or more; ſee the note on Luke xvi. 6. ſo that ſuch of theſe veſſels, that held two of theſe meaſures, contained nine gallons, and ſuch as held three of them, thirteen gallons and a half; and ſix of theſe contained a large quantity of wine, one with another: and which makes the following miracle the greater; and ſhows the liberality of Chriſt the more, in providing for the following days of the feaſt, for a marriage was kept ſeven days [x]; and for the family, ſome time after it was over.

Ver. 7. Jeſus ſaith unto them, &c.] To the ſervants that waited at the feaſt, fill the water-pots with water. The Ethiopic verſion adds, to their brims, as they did. Chriſt choſe the water-pots, and not the veſſel, or veſſels, or bottles, now empty, out of which they had drank their wine; that it might not be ſaid that there was any left therein, which gave colour and flavour to the water: and he ordered them to be filled with water by the ſervants, that they might take notice, and be witneſſes, that that, and nothing elſe, was put into them; and up to the brims, ſo that they could not be capable of having any other liquor infuſed into them: and they filled them up to the brim; ſtrictly obſerving the orders of Chriſt, and the inſtructions of his mother.

Ver. 8. And he ſaith unto them, draw out now, &c.] As ſoon as ever the veſſels were filled with water, without any more delay, he ordered the ſervants to draw out of thoſe larger, into leſſer veſſels; he does not ſay what, water or wine: and bear unto the governour of the feaſt; who either had the ordering and management of the feaſt, and the command of the whole affair; hence the Ethiopic verſion calls him, the maſter of the waiters, or ſervants: or he was the chief gueſt, as the word ſeems to import, who ſat, or rather lay, on the chief couch at the table; and ſo a proper perſon to begin with, and put the cup round: or elſe he might be doctor or chaplain; for ſuch an one was neceſſary at a marriage; ſince there were ſix or ſeven benedictions to be pronounced; and particularly a bleſſing was ſaid over the cup of wine: for if there was any wine, a cup of it was brought, and he bleſſed over it firſt, and ordered every thing concerning the cup; and this made up ſeven bleſſings at ſuch a time [y]; and therefore was a very fit perſon to bear the wine to firſt: and they bore it; the ſervants having drawn out of the ſtone veſſels, by cocks, into ſmaller ones, carried the liquor, as they were ordered, to the above perſon.

Ver. 9. When the ruler of the feaſt had taſted the water, &c.] The Perſic verſion reads, taſted of the wine, and adds, what is not in the text, it was of a very grateful ſavour: but the ſenſe is, he taſted of that which was before water, but now was made wine; not in ſuch ſenſe as the Papiſts pretend that the bread and wine, in the Lord's ſupper, are tranſubſtantiated into the body and blood of Chriſt, by the conſecration of the prieſt; after which they appear to have the ſame properties of bread and wine as before; but this water, that was turned into wine, ceaſed to be what it was before, and became what it was not: it had no more the properties, the colour, and taſte of water, but of wine; of which the whole company were judges: and knew not whence it was; from whence it came, where it was had, nor any thing of the miracle that was wrought, and therefore was a proper perſon to have it put into his hands firſt; ſince it can't be thought he ſhould ſay what he does in the following verſe, from any compact with Chriſt, or in favour of him. But the ſervants which drew the water knew; they knew from whence they had it, out of the water-pots; and they knew that they filled them with water; and that that liquor, which the ruler of the feaſt had in his hands, and commended as moſt excellent wine, was drawn out of them; and that there was no juggle, nor deceit in the caſe: and, upon taſting of it, the governour of the feaſt called the bridegroom to him; out of the place where he ſat, and which might not be far from him.

Ver. 10. And ſaith unto him, &c.] The following words; expreſſing the common cuſtom uſed at feaſts: every man at the beginning doth ſet forth good wine; that is, it is uſual with men, when they make entertainments, firſt to give the gueſts the beſt, the moſt generous, and ſtrongeſt bodied wine; as being moſt ſuitable for them, and they being then beter able to bear it, and it being moſt for the credit of the maker of the feaſt: and when men have well drank; not to exceſs, but freely, ſo as that they are exhilarated, and their ſpirits cheerful, but their brains not intoxicated: ſo the word, as anſwering to the Hebrew word, שכר, is uſed by the Septuagint in Gen. xliii. 34. and Cant. v. 1. then that which is worſe; not bad wine, but τον ελασσω, that which is leſſer; a weaker bodied wine, that is lowered, and of leſs ſtrength, and not ſo intoxicating, and which is fitteſt for the gueſts. So Martial [z] adviſes Sextilianus, after he had drank the tenth cup, not to drink the beſt wine, but to aſk his hoſt for wine of Laletania, which was a weaker and lower ſort of wine. But thou haſt kept the good wine until now; which ſhows he knew nothing of the miracle wrought. And as the bridegroom here did, in the apprehenſion of the ruler of the feaſt, at this his marriage, ſo does the Lord, the huſband of the church, in the marriage-feaſt of the Goſpel; and ſo he will do at the marriage-ſupper of the lamb. The Goſpel, which may be compared to wine for its purity, pleaſant taſte, and generous effects in reviving drooping ſpirits, refreſhing weary perſons, and comforting diſtreſſed minds, as alſo for its antiquity, was publiſhed before the coming of Chriſt, in the times of Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moſes, David, and the prophets, but in a lower and weaker way; at ſundry times, here a little, and there a little, by piece-meals, as it were; and in divers manners, by promiſes, propheſies, types, ſhadows, and ſacrifices; and was attended with much darkneſs and bondage: but under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, which is compared to a marriage-feaſt, it is more fully diſpenſed, more clearly publiſhed, and more freely miniſtred. The whole of it is delivered, and with open face beheld; and ſaints are made free by it; it is ſet in the ſtrongeſt and cleareſt light; the beſt wine is reſerved till now; God has provided ſome better thing for us, Heb. xi. 40. And ſo with reſpect to the future ſtate of the ſaints, their beſt things are kept for them till laſt. They have many good things now; as the Goſpel, Goſpel-ordinances, the bleſſings, and promiſes of grace, the love of God ſhed abroad in their hearts, the preſence of God, and communion with Chriſt, at leaſt at times; all which are better than wine: but then there is an alloy to theſe; they are lowered by other things, as the corruptions of the heart, the temptations of ſatan, the hidings of God's face, and a variety of afflictions; but they ſhall have their good and beſt things hereafter, and drink new wine in Chriſt's Father's kingdom, without any thing to lower and weaken it: they'll have full joys, and never-fading pleaſures, and ſhall be without ſin and ſorrow; no more deſerted, nor afflicted, and ſhall be out of the reach of ſatan's temptations, and with Chriſt for evermore. Happy are they that are called to the marriage-ſupper of the lamb!

Ver. 11. This beginning of miracles, &c.] This miracle of turning water into wine, was the firſt miracle Chriſt ever wrought, either in public or private; for, as for what miracles he is ſaid to do in his infancy, there is no reaſon to give credit to them: and this he did in Cana of Galilee; not that this was only the firſt he did in that place; he afterwards working another there, namely, the cure of a nobleman's ſon, John iv. 46, 54. but the firſt he did any where, and it was in this place; and which the Syriac and Perſic verſions again call Kotne of Galilee; ſee the note on ver. 1. and manifeſted forth his glory; the glory of his deity and divine Sonſhip, which was hid by his aſſumption of human nature, but broke forth and ſhewed itſelf in his miraculous operations, and particularly in this: and his diſciples believed on him; the above five diſciples; ſee ver. 2. whom he had called, and who were with him at this marriage, and were made acquainted with this miracle: and tho' they believed in him before, and had declared, and profeſſed him to be the Meſſiah, Moſes and the prophets ſpoke of, and and the Son of God, and king of Iſrael; yet they were, by this miracle, more and more confirmed in the faith of theſe things: beſides, others might be made his diſciples at this time, and be hereby brought to believe in him.

Ver. 12. After this he went down to Capernaum, &c.] After he had been at Cana, and at the wedding there; after he had wrought the miracle of turning water into wine; and after he had manifeſted forth the glory of his deity thereby, and had confirmed the faith of his diſciples, he departed from thence, and went lower into the country of Galilee, to Capernaum, a city near the ſea of Tiberias; and which, from henceforward, he made the more uſual place of his reſidence, and whither he frequently reſorted, and therefore it is called his city, Matt. ix. 1. This refers not to the ſame journey recorded in Matt. iv. 12, 13. for that was after John was caſt into priſon, whereas this was before; ſee John iii. 24. the company that went with him, are as follow, he, and his mother; who had been with him at Cana, and was a principal perſon at the wedding: and ſhe now returning home, he accompanies her, to ſee her to her own habitation; or to ſettle her in Capernaum, whilſt he went about diſcharging his public miniſtry. And his brethren; or near kinſmen, according to the fleſh, the ſons of Alpheus, or Cleophas, and Mary, ſiſter to the mother of our Lord; whoſe names were James, Joſes, Simon, and Judas, three of which afterwards became his Apoſtles: and his diſciples; as many as he had yet called, which were Andrew, and the diſciple that followed Jeſus with him, and Simon Peter, and Philip, and Nathanael: and they continued there not many days; not becauſe of the impenitence, unbelief, and wickedneſs of the place, but for the reaſon following.

Ver. 13. And the Jews paſſover was at hand, &c.] That feaſt which was kept on the fourteenth day of Niſan, in commemoration of the Lord's paſſing over, and by the houſes of the Iſraelites, when he ſlew the firſt-born in Egypt: and it is called the Jews paſſover, becauſe they only were obliged to keep it; nor was it obligatory upon the Gentiles; and beſides, was now aboliſhed when John wrote this Goſpel, tho' ſtill retained by the Jews. And moreover, John was now among the Gentiles, and for whoſe ſake he penn'd this Goſpel; and therefore ſo diſtinguiſhes this feaſt, which was typical of the Chriſtian paſſover, or of Chriſt our paſſover that is ſacrificed for us. This was the firſt paſſover after Chriſt's baptiſm, which is generally thought to have been about half a year before; tho' ſo much time cannot be made out from the ſcriptural account; for from his baptiſm, to his return out of the wilderneſs to John, were forty days; and from thence, to his coming to Cana, four or five days more; and perhaps he might be ſeven days in Cana; for ſo long a wedding was uſually kept; and his ſtay at Capernaum was but a few days; all which don't amount to above eight or nine weeks at moſt: the ſecond paſſover after this, is, by ſome, thought to be the feaſt mentioned in John v. 1. and the third in John vi. 4. and the fourth and laſt, at which he ſuffered, in John xviii. 28. The Evangeliſt John is the only writer that gives an account of the paſſovers after Chriſt entered on his publick miniſtry, by which is known the duration of it, which is generally thought to be about three years and a half. Three years and a half, the Jews ſay [a], the Shekinah ſat upon the mount of Olives, expecting that the Iſraelites would repent, but they did not; and this ſeems to be the term of time for diſciples to learn of their maſters: 'tis ſaid [b], one came from Athens to Jeruſalem, and he ſerved three years and a half to learn the doctrine of wiſdom, and he learned it not. And Jeſus went up to Jeruſalem; not alone, but his diſciples with him, as appears from ver. 17. to keep the paſſover as he had been wont to do, and as the law required; and he being under the law, as a ſon of Abraham, and the ſurety of his people, it became him to fulfil all righteouſneſs, ceremonial, as well as moral, and which he ſtrictly obſerved. He is ſaid to go up to Jeruſalem, becauſe that ſtood on higher ground than the low lands of Galilee, and was the place where only the paſſover might be kept; ſee Deut. xvi. 2.

Ver. 14. And found in the temple, &c.] Not in the holy place itſelf, nor in the court of the prieſts, where the ſacrifices were offered, nor in the court of the women, nor in the court of the Iſraelites, where the people worſhipped; but in the court of the Gentiles, or the outward court, even all that ſpace of ground which was between the wall which divided the whole from common ground, and the buildings of the temple, and which was open to the air; for the whole ſacred incloſure, or all within the wall went by the name of the temple. Into this all ſtrangers might come; and the paſſover now being at hand, here were thoſe that ſold oxen, and ſheep, and doves: the oxen, or bullocks, were for the Chagiga, or feaſt kept on the ſecond day of the paſſover; ſee the note on John xviii. 28. and the ſheep, or lambs, as the Perſic verſion reads, for the paſſover-ſupper; and the doves were for the offerings of the poorer ſort of lying-in women: with theſe they were ſupplied from the mount of Olives. It is ſaid [c], "there were two cedar-trees on the " mount of Olives, and under one of them were " four ſhops of them that ſold things for purification; and out of one of them they brought " forty buſhels of young doves every month; and " out of them the Iſraelites had enough for the " neſts, or the offerings of turtle-doves;" ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 12. and the changers of money ſitting; who changed foreign money into the current coin of the Jews, ſtrangers coming, at this feaſt, from ſeveral parts of the world; and ſometimes there was need of changing ſhekels into half ſhekels, which, at certain times, were paid for the ranſom of Iſraelites; ſee the note on the place above mentioned.

Ver. 15. And when he had made a ſcourge of ſmall cords, &c.] That is, Jeſus, as the Perſic verſion expreſſes it. This ſcourge might be made either of thongs, cut out of the hides of beaſts ſlain in ſacrifice; or of the cords, with which the owners of the cattle had brought them to this place; or with which they had faſtened them in it. And it ſeems to be made, and uſed, not ſo much for force and terror, as to intimate, that theſe perſons, the violators of the holy place, deſerved the ſcourge of divine wrath and puniſhment; as well as to ſhew the miraculous power of Chriſt in driving ſuch a number of men before him, with ſo ſmall and inſignificant a weapon; for the phraſe is diminutive. The reaſon given by Dr. Lightfoot, and others, why Chriſt made uſe of a whip, or ſcourge, rather than a ſtaff, is, becauſe it was contrary to a Jewiſh canon [d] to go into the mountain of the houſe, or temple, with a ſtaff in the hand; and yet the man of the mountain of the houſe, or the maſter of it, who uſed to go about every ward with torches burning before him, if he found a Levite aſleep in his ward [e] ſtruck him, במקלו, with his ſtaff, and had power to burn his clothes. He drove them all out of the temple; that is, he drove out the men, as the Perſic verſion reads; the merchants, the ſellers of oxen, ſheep, and doves, and the money-changers: and the ſheep, and the oxen likewiſe; the Perſic verſion adds, doves; but theſe are after mentioned: and poured out the changers money; off of the tables, or out of the boxes, or diſhes, or drawers, or purſes, in which it was put: and overthrew the tables; at which they ſat, and on which they told their money.

Ver. 16. And ſaid unto them that ſold doves, &c.] For as theſe were kept in coups, or cages, they could not be drove as the ſheep and oxen, nor could they be let out, and fly, without the loſs of the owners: and therefore Chriſt ſaid to them, take theſe things hence; not only the doves, but the pens, coups, or cages, in which they were, and both together: make not my Father's houſe an houſe of merchandize; ſo he calls the temple, which was built an houſe for God, and where he took up his reſidence; where were the ſymbols of his preſence; where his worſhip was kept, and ſacrifices offered to him: and he aſſerts God, whoſe houſe this was, to be his Father, and himſelf to be his Son, as none of the prophets that went before him did; and in ſuch ſenſe as neither men nor angels are; and which carries in it a reaſon why he was ſo much concerned for the honour of God, and ſo much reſented the prophanation of his houſe, becauſe he was his Father. A like action with this done by Chriſt at another time, is recorded in Matt. xxi. 12, 13. This was at the beginning of his miniſtry, that at the cloſe of it, in which he expreſſed himſelf with more warmth and ſeverity than here: here he only only charges them with making his Father's houſe an houſe of merchandize, but there with making it a den of thieves; ſince they had not only ſlighted, and deſpiſed his firſt reproof, but had returned to their evil ways, and might grow more wicked and audacious. This inſtance of Chriſt now coming into the temple as a publick miniſter, and which was the firſt time of his entrance into it, after he had taken this character, was a further accompliſhment of Mal. iii. 1. for he now went into it, as the Lord and proprietor of it; and which this action of his in driving out the merchants, with their cattle, ſhows; and was a ſurprizing inſtance of his divine power; and is equal to other miracles of his, that a ſingle perſon, a ſtranger, one of no power and authority in the government, unaſſiſted and unarmed, with only a ſcourge of ſmall cords, ſhould carry ſuch awe and majeſty with him, and inject ſuch terror into, and drive ſuch a number of men before him, who were ſelling things for religious uſes, and were ſupported in it by the prieſts and Sanhedrim of the nation.

Ver. 17. And his diſciples remembered that it was written, &c.] In Pſ. lxix. 9. which Pſalm belongs to the Meſſiah, as is manifeſt from the citations out of it in the New Teſtament, and the application of them to Chriſt, as in John xv. 25. and xix. 28. Rom. xv. 3. compared with Pſal. lxix. 4, 9, 21. Chriſt is repreſented in it, as ſuffering for the ſins of his people; for he himſelf was innocent; and was hated without a cauſe; but having the ſins of his people imputed to him, he made ſatisfaction for them, and ſo reſtored what he took not away. His ſufferings are ſpoken of in it as very great; and from it we learn, that they are fitly called, by himſelf, a baptiſm, which he deſired to be baptized with, Luke xii. 50. ſince the waters are ſaid to come into his ſoul, and he to be in deep waters, where the floods overflowed him; ſo that he was as one immerſed in them: it is not only propheſied of him in it, that he ſhould be the object of the ſcorn and contempt of the Jewiſh nation, and be rejected by them, and treated with the utmoſt indignity, and loaded with reproaches; but it foretold, that they ſhould give him gall to eat, and vinegar to drink, which were literally fulfilled in him: and even the Jews themſelves ſeem to be under ſome conviction, that the Pſalm has reſpect to him; for Aben Ezra, a noted commentator of theirs, on the laſt words of the Pſalm, has this note; "the ſenſe "is, they and their children ſhall inherit it in the "days of David, or in the days of the Meſſiah." It appears from hence, that the diſciples of Chriſt were acquainted with the ſacred writings, and had diligently read them, and ſearched into them, and had made them their ſtudy; and upon this wonderful action of Chriſt, called to mind, and reflected upon the following paſſage of ſcripture, which they judged very proper and pertinent to him: the zeal of thine houſe hath eaten me up. This paſſage, ſo far as it is cited, agrees exactly, word for word, with the original text in Pſ. lxix. 9. wherefore it is very ſtrange that Surenhuſius[f] ſhould remark a difference, and give himſelf a good deal of trouble to reconcile it: he obſerves, that in the Hebrew text, it is read, קנאת יהוה, the zeal of the Lord, in the third perſon; whereas it is there, קנאת ביתך, the zeal of thine houſe, as here, in the ſecond perſon: indeed, the word כי, for, is left out, as he remarks, there being no need of it in the citation; the Evangeliſt only hiſtorically relating the accommodation of it to Chriſt, by the diſciples; whereas, in the original text, the words contain a reaſon of the reproach and ſhame which Chriſt endured, and was put to by the Jews on account of his zeal for the houſe, honour, and worſhip of God; and the latter part of the text is not produced at all, being not for the preſent purpoſe, tho' very applicable to Chriſt; and is cited, and applied to him by the apoſtle, in Rom. xv. 3. Such was Chriſt's regard to his Father's houſe, and which was typical of the church of God; and ſuch his concern for his honour, ordinances, and worſhip, that when he ſaw the merchandize that was carried on in the temple, his zeal, which was a true and hearty affection for God, and was according to knowledge, was ſtirred up in him, and to ſuch a degree, that it was like a conſuming fire within him, that eat up his ſpirits; ſo that he could not forbear giving it vent, and expreſſing it in the manner he did, by driving thoſe traders out of it. Phinehas and Elias were in their zeal, as well as other things, types of Chriſt; and in the ſpirit and power of the latter he came; and Chriſt not only expreſſed a zeal for the houſe of God, the place of religious worſhip, but for the church and people of God, whoſe ſalvation he moſt earneſtly deſired, and moſt zealouſly purſued: he ſhewed his ſtrong, and affectionate regard to it, by his ſuretyſhip-engagements for them, by his aſſumption of their nature, by his ardent deſire to accompliſh it, and by his voluntary and chearful ſubmiſſion to death on account of it. And ſuch was his zeal for it, that it eat him up, it enflamed his ſpirit and affections, conſumed his time and ſtrength, and, at laſt, his life: and he alſo ſhewed a zeal for the diſcipline of God's houſe, by his ſevere reflections on human traditions; by aſſerting the ſpirituality of worſhip; by commanding a ſtrict regard to divine inſtitutions; and by ſharply inveighing againſt the ſins of profeſſors of religion: and he diſcovered a warm zeal for the truths of the Goſpel, by a lively and powerful preaching of them; by his conſtancy and aſſiduity in it; by the many fatiguing journies he took for that purpoſe; by the dangers he expoſed himſelf to by it; and by the care he took to free the Goſpel from prejudice and calumnies: and it becomes us, in imitation of our great maſter, to be zealous for his truths and ordinances, and for the diſcipline of his houſe, and not bear with either the erroneous principles, or the bad practices of wicked men.

Ver. 18. Then anſwered the Jews, and ſaid unto him, &c.] They did not lay hands on him, or offer any violence to him; they did not, as the inhabitants of Nazareth did, thruſt him out, and lead him to a precipice, to caſt him down headlong; nor did they take up ſtones to ſtone him, as they afterwards did, when he aſſerted his deity; and it is ſurprizing, that they did not riſe up and deſtroy him at once, a ſingle man, unarmed, and without aſſiſtance, having ſo highly provoked them; the reſtraint upon them muſt be his almighty power: nor do they deny what he ſuggeſted, that they had made his Father's houſe an houſe of merchandize; nor do they offer to vindicate their prophanation of the temple, or object to the purging of it; only demand a proof of his right to do it: and which demand was made, not by the common people, or by the ſellers of oxen, ſheep, and doves, and the money-changers, who were drove out, and had not ſpirit to rally again; but by the chief-prieſts and elders, the Sanhedrim of the nation, who had the care and government of the temple, and under whoſe authority the above perſons acted; and whoſe gain and worldly intereſt were promoted hereby, as a like demand was afterwards made by the ſame perſons; ſee Matt. xxi. 23. what ſign ſheweſt thou unto us, ſeeing thou doſt theſe things? they argued, that either he did theſe things of himſelf, by his own authority, and then they muſt be deemed raſh and unjuſtifiable; or he did it by the authority of others: they knew it was not by theirs, who were the great council of the nation, from whom he ſhould have had his inſtructions and orders, if he acted by human authority; and if he pretended to a divine authority, as they ſuppoſed he did, then they inſiſted upon a ſign or miracle to be wrought, to prove that God was his Father, as he ſuggeſted; and that he was the proprietor and owner of the temple, and had a right to purge it, as he had done; ſee 1 Cor. i. 22.

[f] Biblos Katallages, p. 347.

Ver. 19. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] In a dark and enigmatical way, tho' very properly and pertinently; ſince it was with reſpect to the temple, and his power over it, and right to purge it, that a ſign was required of him: deſtroy this temple; pointing, as it were, with his finger to his body; for of that he ſpake, as appears from ver. 21. the diſſolution of which, by death he means, the ſeparation of his ſoul from his body, though not of either from his divine perſon: and it is to be underſtood, not as a command, or a grant, or as an exhortation, and advice to them, to kill his body; but rather as a prophecy of what they would do; or as putting the caſe, that ſhould they, as he knew they would, deſtroy his body, then, ſays he, as a ſign of having a power to do what I have done, in three days I will raiſe it again; by which he would appear to be the Son of God, with power, that had power of laying down his life, and taking it up again; and is the very ſign, namely, his reſurrection from the dead on the third day, he gives the Jews, when they ſought one of him at another time, and upon another occaſion.

Ver. 20. Then ſaid the Jews, &c.] Unto him, as read the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions: forty and ſix years was this temple in building; which can't be underſtood of the temple as built by Solomon, for that was but ſeven years in building, 1 Kings vi. 37, 38. But rather of the temple, as built by Zorobabel, commonly called the ſecond temple, and might be more properly ſaid to be this temple; the calculations of this made by learned men, are various and endleſs to recite. Daniel's ſeven weeks, or forty-nine days, which are ſo many years, can have nothing to do with this account; ſince they regard not the building of the temple, but the city of Jeruſalem; though from the ſecond year of Cyrus, in which the temple began to be built, to the thirty-ſecond of Darius excluſive, were juſt forty-ſix years; Cyrus reigning three years, Artaxerxes Ahaſuerus fourteen years, and Artaxerxes Darius thirty-two; but their account is more likely, which begins at the firſt of Artaxerxes Longimanus, who reigned forty years, and ends in the ſixth year of Darius, his ſucceſſor, in which year the temple was finiſhed, Ezra vi. 15. But to me it ſeems rather, that Herod's temple, or the temple as re-built, or repaired by Herod, is here meant; and which the Jews call, בניין הורדוס, the building of Herod [g]; and ſay of it, that "he who has "not ſeen Herod's building, never ſaw a beautiful "building." And this according to Joſephus [h], was begun in the eighteenth year of his reign, in the thirty-fifth of which Chriſt was born, who was now thirty years of age: ſo that reckoning either the eighteenth year of Herod, or the thirtieth of Chriſt, the preſent year excluſively, juſt forty-ſix years had run out, ſince the re-building or reparations were firſt begun; and which were not yet finiſhed; for ſome years after this, the above writer obſerves [i], the temple was finiſhed, even in the times of Nero and Agrippa: and agreeable to this, the words may be rendered, forty-ſix years has this temple been building; and which ſtill adds more force to the following reaſoning of the Jews: and wilt thou rear it up in three days? the thing is impoſſible and impracticable; 'tis madneſs to the laſt degree, to talk at this rate: thus from the length of time which had run out from Herod's firſt beginning to repair and beautify the temple, till now, and yet not finiſhed, they argue the abſurdity of his pretending to raiſe up ſuch a fabrick, ſhould it be demoliſhed, in three days time; they underſtanding him either ignorantly or wilfully, to ſpeak of the material temple, when his ſenſe was otherwiſe, as appears from the words of the Evangeliſt, in the next verſe. The Jew [k] objects to this account, of the temple being forty-ſix years in building; he obſerves, that "according to the "ſenſe of the Nazarenes, this was the building of "king Herod, that was in the time of Jeſus; and "the whole time of his reign were but ſeven and "thirty years, as is manifeſt from the book of "Joſeph ben Gorion, c. 65. Beſides, that which "Herod built, was built in eight years, as is evi-"dent from the ſame author, c. 55. wherefore the "number of forty-ſix years, in the words of the "writer, (the Evangeliſt) is a palpable error." To which may be replied, that admitting there is an error in this number, it is not the error of the Evangeliſt, but of the Jews, whoſe words the Evangeliſt relates; and ſuppoſing this was a miſtake of theirs, either ignorantly or wilfully made, to aggravate the abſurdity and impoſſibility of Chriſt's re-building the temple; and that even the Evangeliſt knew it to be a miſtake; yet he acts the moſt faithful and upright part, in repeating the words of the Jews, as they delivered them; and it lies upon the Jew to prove, that theſe words were not ſaid by them, or that it is not credible that they ſhould: that this was the building of Herod which is here referred to, and that he reigned but thirty-ſeven years, will be granted; but this is no objection to its being forty-ſix years in building, ſince in this account it is not ſaid that it was forty-ſix years in building by Herod; the ſenſe is only, that ſuch a number of years had paſſed, ſince it firſt began to be built by him: as for what Joſeph ben Gorion ſays, of its being built by him in the ſpace of eight years, it is not to be depended upon, ſince he is not the true Joſephus, that wrote the hiſtory of the Jews, and is to be corrected by the genuine hiſtorian; and from what has been before obſerved, from the time which according to the true Joſephus this building was begun, to this preſent year of Chriſt, when this diſcourſe was had, were juſt forty-ſix years; and admitting, that the main of the building was finiſhed in eight years time, yet additions were continually made to it, ſo that it was not finiſhed entirely, until many years after.

Ver. 21. But he ſpake of the temple of his body.] Which was the antitype of the material temple; and might well be called ſo, ſince the bodies of the ſaints are called temples, 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17. and vi. 19. 2 Cor. vi. 16. and the human nature of Chriſt is called a tabernacle, Heb. viii. 2. and he himſelf in prophecy, is ſaid to be, למקדש, for a ſanctuary, or temple, Iſa. viii. 14. and that becauſe the fulneſs of the Godhead dwelt in him bodily, the train of the divine perfections, filled the temple of his human nature, Col. ii. 9. Iſa. vi. 1. And becauſe here, as in the temple, God grants his preſence, and communes with his ſaints, accepts of their prayers and praiſes, and all their ſpiritual ſacrifices through him; and who is the oracle, the true Urim and Thummim, by whom he delivers his whole mind and will to his people.

Ver. 22. When therefore he was riſen from the dead, &c.] Which was three years after this: his diſciples remembered that he had ſaid this unto them; either to the Jews, or to them the diſciples; though the phraſe to them, is not in the Vulgate Latin, nor in any of the Oriental verſions. The diſciples themſelves, were very dull of underſtanding the doctrine of Chriſt's reſurrection; and ſo they continued, notwithſtanding he gave them afterwards very full hints of it, until that he was actually riſen; and then they called to mind theſe words of his, with others that dropped from him upon the ſame ſubject: and they believed the ſcripture; that ſpoke of his reſurrection, Pſal. xvi. 10. and on the third day, Hoſ. vi. 2. And the word which Jeſus had ſaid; concerning his riſing again the third day at this time, and at others, as in Matt. xvi. 21. and xvii. 23. and xx. 19. and they believed his word equally with the ſcripture, it agreeing to it, and being founded on it.

Ver. 23. Now when he was in Jeruſalem at the paſſover, &c.] Whither he went, in order to keep it, that being at hand, and now come; ſee ver. 13. In the feaſt day; either on the day the Chagigah was eaten, which was ſometimes emphatically called the feaſt, as in Numb. xxviii. 16, 17. and in the fourteenth day of the firſt month, is the paſſover of the Lord; and in the fifteenth day of this month, is the feaſt; the paſſover lamb was eaten on the fourteenth day of the month Niſan, and the Chagigah was on the fifteenth; in the former only a lamb was eaten, in the other, cattle out of the herds; hence mention is made, both of flocks and herds, for the keeping the paſſover, Deut. xvi. 2. Jarchi's note upon the place is, that the herds were for the Chagigah, with which the Talmud [l] agrees; and Jonathan ben Uzziel paraphraſes the words thus, "and ye ſhall ſlay the "paſſover before the Lord your God, between the "evenings, and the ſheep and oxen on the mor-"row, in that very day, for the joy of the feaſt;" for it was obſerved with great joy and mirth: and the rather this is here meant, ſince the Chagigah is not only called the feaſt, but this here is diſtinguiſhed from the paſſover, as that is in the paſſage above cited, Numb. xxviii. 16, 17. For the paſſover here, ſeems to be the general name for the whole ſeven days of the feſtival; and the feaſt to be the particular feaſt of the firſt day of it, which was the fifteenth; to which may be added, that on this day all the males made their appearance in court [m]; and ſo was a very proper time for Chriſt to work his miracles in, when there were ſo many ſpectators: though it may deſign the whole time of the feaſt, all the ſeven days of unleavened bread; during which time Chriſt was at Jeruſalem, and wrought miracles, which had the following effect: many believed in his name; that he was ſome great prophet, or the prophet, or the Meſſiah; they gave an hiſtorical aſſent unto him as ſuch, at leaſt for that time: when they ſaw the miracles which he did; for as miracles, according to the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, were to be performed by the Meſſiah, ſuch as giving ſight to the blind, cauſing the deaf to hear, the dumb to ſpeak, and the lame to walk, Iſa. xxxv. 5, 6. ſo they were expected by the ancient Jews, that they would be wrought by him, when he came; wherefore theſe Jews, ſeeing ſuch like wonderful things wrought by Jeſus, they concluded he muſt be the Meſſiah: though the modern ones, in order to ſhift off the evidence of Jeſus being the Meſſiah, from his miracles, deny that miracles are the characteriſtic of the Meſſiah, or will be performed by him; at leaſt, that there is no neceſſity of them to prove him to be the perſon. What miracles theſe were, which were now wrought by Chriſt, are not recorded by this, or any other Evangeliſt; ſee ch. xx. 30. However, being ſurprized at the marvellous things he did, and upon the evidence of theſe extraordinary works, there were many that concluded he muſt be come from God; among theſe it ſeems, as if Nicodemus was one; ſee ch. iii. 2. great part of theſe, at leaſt ſome of them, were only nominal and temporary believers, who were not to be confided in as true diſciples, and hearty followers of Chriſt; and who continued not long in the ſame mind and profeſſion, as appears by what follows.

Ver. 24. But Jeſus did not commit himſelf unto them, &c.] The ſenſe according to ſome of the ancients is, that he did not commit the whole of the Goſpel to them; he did not make known to them all his mind and will; this he only did to the twelve apoſtles, his ſpecial diſciples and friends; nor was the time come, that he would make known, or have made known, the things concerning his perſon, office, obedience, ſufferings, death, and reſurrection from the dead: but rather the meaning is, that he did not truſt himſelf with theſe perſons, who believed in him, on the foot of his miracles; he did not take them into the number of his aſſociates; he did not admit them to intimacy with him; nor did he freely converſe with them, or make any long ſtay among them; but ſoon withdrew himſelf from hence, and went into other parts of Judea, and into Galilee: becauſe he knew all men; good and bad: all openly profane ſinners, and all their actions; not only their more publick ones, but thoſe that are done in the dark, and which are the moſt ſecretly deviſed, and levelled againſt the ſaints; and he ſo knew them, as to bring them into judgment: and all good men, true believers; he knows their perſons, as they are his Father's choice, his gift of them to him, his own purchaſe, and as called by his grace; and ſo as to diſtinguiſh them at the laſt day, and give up the full account of every one of them to his Father: he knows the worſt of them, the ſin that dwells in them, their daily infirmities, their ſecret perſonal ſins; their family ſins, both of omiſſion and commiſſion; and their church ſins, or which are committed in the houſe of God; and takes notice of them, ſo as to reſent them, and chaſtize them for them; he knows the beſt of them, their graces, their faith, hope, love, patience, humility, ſelf-denial, &c. He knows their good works, and all their weakneſſes and their wants: and he knows all nominal profeſſors, on what foot they take up their profeſſion, and what truſt they place in it; he can diſtinguiſh between grace and mere profeſſion, and diſcern the ſecret luſts which ſuch indulge, and the ſprings and progreſs of their apoſtacy: he knew all theſe men, that upon ſeeing his miracles, profeſſed at this time to believe in him; he knew the hypocriſy and diſſimulation of ſome of them; and he knew the notions they had of a temporal Meſſiah, and the temporal views they had in believing in him; and their deſign to ſet him up as a temporal prince, as ſome afterwards would have done: he knew the flaſhy affections of others, who were like John's hearers, that were pleaſed for a while; he knew what ſort of faith it was they believed in him with, that it would not hold long, nor they continue with him; for he knew not only all perſons, but παντα, all things, as ſome copies read here; ſee John xxi. 17.

[m] Maimon. Hilch. Chagigah, c. 1. §. 1.

Ver. 25. And needed not that any ſhould teſtify of man, &c.] Of this or the other man, that he was a good or a bad man; he needed no proofs to be made, or teſtimonies bore, or evidence given of mens characters and actions; he was of quick underſtanding, and could diſtinguiſh at once between a wicked man and a good man; and ſo had the characteriſtic which the Jews require of the Meſſiah; for they rejected Bar Cozba from being the Meſſiah, and ſlew him, becauſe he could not ſmell, referring to Iſa. xi. 3. or diſcern a bad man from a good man [n]; but this Jeſus could do, without any external evidence: for he knew what was in man; which none but the ſpirit of a man can know; his inward thoughts, the ſecrets of the heart; thus Chriſt knew the thoughts of the Scribes and Phariſees, Matt. ix. 4. being a diſcerner of the thoughts, and intents of the heart, Heb. iv. 12. This Apollonius Tyaneus, the ape of Chriſt, aſcribed to himſelf [o]; but is what is peculiar to God; and Chriſt being God, knows all that is in man; that there is no good in him naturally, nothing but what comes from his Father, is imparted by himſelf, or implanted by his Spirit; he knows the wickedneſs there is in man, that his heart is deceitful and deſperately wicked, and full of all manner of iniquities; he knows in what condition all the powers and faculties of the ſouls of men are; what their affections are ſet upon, on earthly or heavenly things; whether there is any light in their underſtandings or no; whether their wills are ſubdued and reſigned to the will of God, or no; whether their minds and conſciences are defiled, or their hearts are ſprinkled from an evil conſcience; in ſhort, whether the internal good work of grace is begun upon their ſouls, or not; and he knows the ſecret ſprings of all actions, good and bad; all which, prove his true and proper deity, and ſhew him to be a ſuitable Saviour of ſinners, and qualify him to be the judge of the whole earth.

CHAP. III.

Ver. 1. THERE was a man of the Phariſees, &c.] The Syriac verſion adds, there; that is, at Jeruſalem; and who were among thoſe that believed in the name of Chriſt, upon ſeeing the miracles he did at the feaſt of the paſſover, in that place. This man was not a common and ordinary man, but a man of note and eminence, of dignity and figure; and who was of the ſect of the Phariſees, which was the ſtricteſt ſect for religion and holineſs, among the Jews; and which, as corrupt as it was, was alſo the ſoundeſt; as having not only a regard to a Meſſiah, and to all the writings of the Old Teſtament, but alſo believed the doctrines of angels and ſpirits, and the reſurrection of the dead, which the Sadducees denied; but yet they were implacable enemies of Chriſt; and therefore it is the more to be wondered at, that ſuch an one ſhould come to him, and deſire a converſation with him: named Nicodemus; frequent mention is made of, נקדימון בן גוריון, Nicodemon ben Gorion, the brother of Joſephus ben Gorion [p], the writer of the wars and antiquities of the Jews; and there are ſome things which make it probable, that he was the ſame with this Nicodemus; for the Nicodemon the Jews ſpeak ſo much of, lived in this age; as appears, not only from his being the brother of Joſephus, but alſo from his being cotemporary with R. Jochanan ben Zaccai, who lived in this time, and until the deſtruction of the temple; ſince theſe two are ſaid [q] to be together at a feaſt, made for the circumciſion of a child. Moreover, he is repreſented as very rich, and is ſaid to be one of the three rich men in Jeruſalem [r], and who was able to have maintained, מדינה, a city ten years [s]; and they ſpeak of his daughter, as exceeding rich; they ſay, that ſhe had for her dowry a thouſand thouſand golden denarii, or pence; and that her bed was ſtrowed with (i. e. the furniture of it coſt) twelve thouſand golden denarii; and that a Tyrian golden denarius, was ſpent upon her every week, for a certain kind of ſoup [t]; and the wiſe men decreed her four hundred golden denarii, for a box of ſpices every day [u]; and it is elſewhere [w] ſaid, five hundred: and this our Nicodemus was very rich, as appears from his liberality at the funeral of our Lord, John xix. 39. Moreover, the Nicodemon of the Jews, is ſaid to be a counſellor [x] in Jeruſalem; and ſo was this, as ſeems evident from John vii. 32, 50, 51. and it may be further obſerved [y], that the right name of Nicodemon, was Boni [z]; now Boni elſewhere [a], is ſaid to be one of the diſciples of Jeſus, as Nicodemus was ſecretly, and perhaps at, and after his death openly, as his aſſociate Joſeph of Arimathea was; to which may be added, the extreme poverty that his daughter is by them ſaid to be reduced unto; for they report, that R. Jochanan ben Zaccai, ſaw her gathering barley corns from under the horſes hoofs in Aco [b]; or as it is elſewhere ſaid, out of the dung of the beaſts of the Arabians, when ſhe aſked alms of him, and he enquired of her; what was become of her father's ſubſtance. Now to this low eſtate, the family of our Nicodemus might be reduced, through the perſecution of the chriſtians by the Jews. The name is Greek, as at this time many Greek names were in uſe among the Jews, and ſignifies the ſame as Nicolas; but the Jews give an etymology of it, agreeable to the Hebrew language; and ſay, that he was ſo called, becauſe the ſun, נקדרה, ſhone out for his ſake: the occaſion and reaſon of it they tell us, were this [c]; Nicodemon, upon want of water at one of the feaſts, agreed with a certain man for twelve wells of water, to be returned on ſuch a day, or pay twelve talents of ſilver; the day being come, the man demanded the water, or the money; Nicodemon went and prayed, and a plentiful rain fell, and filled the wells with water; but meeting the man, he inſiſted on it that the day was paſt, the ſun being ſet, and therefore required the money; Nicodemon went and prayed again, and the ſun ſhone out; and they add, that there are three perſons for whom the ſun נקדמה, was prevented, detained, or hindered in it's courſe, (a word nearer his name than the former) Moſes, and Joſhua, and Nicodemon ben Gorion; for the two former they produce ſcripture, and for the latter tradition: hence it is elſewhere ſaid [d], that as the ſun ſtood ſtill for Joſhua, ſo it ſtood ſtill for Moſes, and for Nicodemon ben Gorion: but to proceed with the account of our Nicodemus, he was a ruler of the Jews; not a civil magiſtrate; for the civil government was now in the hands of the Romans; but an eccleſiaſtical ruler; he was a member of the Sanhedrim, which conſiſted of the doctors, or wiſe men, and prieſts, Levites, and elders of the people; and ſo was a dignified perſon, and as afterwards called, a maſter in Iſrael.

Ver. 2. The ſame came to Jeſus by night, &c.] Through fear of the Jews, of being reproached or turned out of his place by them; or through ſhame, that ſuch a doctor as he was, ſhould be known to go to Jeſus of Nazareth, to be inſtructed by him; or leſt he ſhould offend any of his brethren of the Sanhedrim: though ſome things may be ſaid in favour of this conduct of Nicodemus; for ſince Chriſt would not truſt himſelf with thoſe that believed in him upon ſeeing his miracles, ch. ii. 23, 24. among whom Nicodemus ſeems to be; or would not admit them into his company, and enter into a free converſation with him; it was neceſſary, that if he would have any diſcourſe with him, that he ſhould take this method; and if it was the ſame night, in which he had ſeen his miracles in the day, as is probable, he took the firſt opportunity he could, and which ſhows great readineſs and reſpect; add to which, that it was very common with the Jewiſh doctors, to meet and converſe together, and ſtudy the law in the night. "R. Aba roſe, בפלגות ליליא, "in the middle of the night, and the reſt of the "companions, to ſtudy in the law [e]." And it is often [f] ſaid of R. Simeon ben Jochai, and Eleazar his ſon, that they ſat in the night, and laboured in the law; and it was reckoned very commendable ſo to do, and highly pleaſing to God: it is ſaid [g], "whoever ſtudies in the law in the night, the holy "bleſſed God draws a thread of mercy upon him "in the day:" and likewiſe [h], that "every one "that ſtudies in the law in the night, the Shekinah "is over againſt him." But it ſeems, the Babylonian Jews did not ſtudy in the law in the night [i]: it might ſeem a needleſs queſtion to aſk, whether Nicodemus came alone, or no, were it not that according to the Jewiſh canon [k], a ſcholar might not go out in the night alone, becauſe of ſuſpicion: and ſaid unto him, Rabbi; a title which now greatly obtained among the Jewiſh doctors, and of which they were very fond; ſee the note on Matt. xxiii. 7. It comes from a word, which ſignifies great and large; and was uſed by them, to ſuggeſt the large compaſs, and great plenty of knowledge they would be thought to have had; and beſt becomes and ſuits with our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, in whom all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge are: ſalutations among the Jews, were forbidden in the night [l]; "ſays R. Jochanan, it is forbidden a "man to ſalute his neighbour in the night, leſt it "ſhould be a demon:" but here was no ſuch danger; nor was this ſalutation made in the ſtreet, and in the dark, which the canon ſeems to reſpect: we know that thou art a teacher come from God; the Jews expected the Meſſiah as a teacher, which they might learn from many prophecies, as from Iſa. ii. 2, 3. and xlviii. 17. and lxi. 1. Upon the firſt of which, and on that paſſage in it, he will teach us of his ways, a noted commentator [m] of theirs has this remark; "המורה, the teacher, he is the king "Meſſiah." And the Targum on Joel ii. 23. paraphraſes the words thus; "O ye children of "Zion, rejoice and be glad in the Word of the "Lord your God, for he will return, ית מלפכון, "your teacher to you." And Nicodemus acknowledges Jeſus as ſuch; and as one that did not come, or was ſent by men, as their doctors were; nor did he come of himſelf, as falſe teachers did; but he came from God, and had his miſſion and commiſſion from him: and this was a known caſe, a clear point, not only to himſelf, but to many of the Jews; and even to ſome of his brethren, the members of the Sanhedrim; who upon hearing of, and ſeeing the miracles done by Chriſt, might meet and converſe freely together about him, and give their ſentiments of him; and might then agree pretty much in this at that time, that he was at leaſt a prophet, and ſome extraordinary teacher, whom God had ſent among them; and Nicodemus coming directly from them, repeats his own ſenſe and theirs, ſupported by the following reaſon: for no man can do theſe miracles that thou doſt, except God be with him; referring to the miracles he had done at the paſſover in Jeruſalem, very lately; ſee ch. ii. 23. And which, though they are not particularly mentioned, may be concluded to be ſuch, as the diſpoſſeſſing of devils, the curing of all manner of diſeaſes by a word, or touch, from what he at other times, and elſewhere did. Miracles were expected by the Jews, to be wrought by the Meſſiah, and many believed in Jeſus on this account; ſee ch. vi. 14. and vii. 31. though the modern Jews deny it to be neceſſary, that miracles ſhould be done by the Meſſiah [n]; but Nicodemus and other Jews, thought otherwiſe, and conſidered the miracles of Chriſt as ſuch, as could never be done by man, nor without the preſence and power of God; and concluded that he was with God, and God with him, and was the true Immanuel, who is God with us.

Ver. 3. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, &c.] Not to any expreſs queſtion put by Nicodemus; unleſs it can be thought, that a queſtion of this kind might be aſked, what is the kingdom of God, ſo much ſpoken of in thy miniſtry? and what is requiſite to the ſeeing and enjoying of it? though not recorded by the Evangeliſt; but rather to the words of Nicodemus, concluding from his miracles, that he was the Meſſiah; and that the kingdom of God was now approaching, or the world to come, the Jews ſo much ſpeak of; and in which all Iſrael, according to their notion, were to have a part [o]; and which notion, our Lord in the following words, ſeems to oppoſe: verily, verily, I ſay unto thee, except a man be born again, he cannot ſee the kingdom of God; Nicodemus, according to the general ſenſe of the nation, thought that when the Meſſiah came, and his kingdom was ſet up, they ſhould all ſhare in it, without any more ado; they being the deſcendants of Abraham, and having him for their father: but Chriſt aſſures him, that he muſt be born again; in diſtinction from, and oppoſition to his firſt birth by nature; in which he was vile, polluted, carnal, and corrupt, being conceived in ſin, and ſhapen in iniquity,] and was a tranſgreſſor from the womb, and by nature a child of wrath; and in oppoſition to his deſcent from Abraham, or being born of him, and of his ſeed; for this would be of no avail to him in this caſe, nor give him any right to the privileges and ordinances of the kingdom of God, or the Goſpel diſpenſation; ſee Matt. iii. 9. as alſo to birth by proſelytiſm; for the Jews have a frequent ſaying [p], that "one that is made a proſe-"lyte, כקטון שנולד דמי, is like a child new born." Which they underſtand, not in a ſpiritual, but in a civil ſenſe; ſuch being free from all natural and civil relations, and from all obligations to parents, maſters [q], &c. And by this phraſe our Lord ſignifies, that no man, either as a man, or as a ſon of Abraham, or as a proſelyte to the Jewiſh religion, can have any true knowledge of, or right unto, the enjoyment of the kingdom of God, unleſs he is born again; or regenerated, and quickened by the Spirit of God; renewed in the ſpirit of his mind; has Chriſt formed in his heart; becomes a partaker of the divine nature; and in all reſpects a new creature; and another in heart, in principle, in practice, and converſation; or unleſs he be born from above, as the word is rendered in ver. 31. that is, by a ſupernatural power, having the heavenly image inſtamped on him; and being called with an heavenly calling, even with the high calling of God in Chriſt Jeſus: if this is not the caſe, a man can have no true knowledge of the kingdom of the Meſſiah, which is not a temporal and carnal one; it is not of this world, nor does it come with obſervation; nor can he have any right to the ordinances of it, which are of a ſpiritual nature; and much leſs can he be thought to have any true notions, or to be poſſeſſed of the kingdom of grace, which lies in righteouſneſs, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghoſt; or to have either a meetneſs for, or a right unto the kingdom of glory: though by the following words it ſeems, that the word is rightly rendered again, or a ſecond time, as it is by Nonnus.

Ver. 4. Nicodemus ſaith unto him, &c.] Underſtanding him of a natural birth, to be repeated: how can a man be born when he is old? as it ſeems by this, he himſelf now was: can he enter the ſecond time into his mother's womb, and be born? The Ethiopic verſion adds, again; and the Arabic verſion, and then be born; this he urges, as abſurd, impracticable, and impoſſible; and which ſhows him to have been as yet a natural man, who could not receive nor diſcern ſpiritual things.

Ver. 5. Jeſus anſwered, verily, verily, I ſay unto thee, &c.] Explaining ſomewhat more clearly, what he had before ſaid: except a man be born of water and of the Spirit; theſe are, מלות שנות, two words, which expreſs the ſame thing, as Kimchi obſerves in many places in his commentaries, and ſignify the grace of the Spirit of God. The Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions read, the holy Spirit, and ſo Nonnus; and who doubtleſs is intended: by water, is not meant material water, or baptiſmal water; for water baptiſm is never expreſſed by water only, without ſome additional word, which ſhows, that the ordinance of water baptiſm is intended: nor has baptiſm any regenerating influence in it; a perſon may be baptized, as Simon Magus was, and yet not born again; and it is ſo far from having any ſuch virtue, that a perſon ought to be born again, before he is admitted to that ordinance: and though ſubmiſſion to it is neceſſary, in order to a perſon's entrance into a Goſpel church-ſtate; yet it is not neceſſary to the kingdom of heaven, or to eternal life and ſalvation: ſuch a miſtaken ſenſe of this text, ſeems to have given the firſt birth and riſe to infant baptiſm in the African churches; who taking the words in this bad ſenſe, concluded their children muſt be baptized, or they could not be ſaved; whereas by water is meant, in a figurative and metaphorical ſenſe, the grace of God, as it is elſewhere; ſee Ezek. xxxvi. 25. John iv. 14. Which is the moving cauſe of this new birth, and according to which God begets men again to a lively hope, and that by which it is effected; for it is by the grace of God, and not by the power of man's free-will, that any are regenerated, or made new creatures: and if Nicodemus was an officer in the temple, that took care to provide water at the feaſts, as Dr. Lightfoot hints, and as it ſhould ſeem Nicodemon ben Gorion was, by the ſtory before related of him; ſee the note on ver. 1. Very pertinently does our Lord make mention of water, it being his own element: regeneration is ſometimes aſcribed to God the Father, as in 1 Pet. i. 3. James i. 18. and ſometimes to the Son, 1 John ii. 29. and here to the Spirit, as in Tit. iii. 5. who convinces of ſin, ſanctifies, renews, works faith, and every other grace; begins and carries on the work of grace, unto perfection; and unleſs a man has this work of his wrought on his ſoul, as he'll never underſtand divine and ſpiritual things, ſo he can have no right to Goſpel ordinances, or things appertaining to the kingdom of God; nor can he be thought to have paſſed from death to life, and to have entered into an open ſtate of grace, and the kingdom of it; or that living and dying ſo, he ſhall ever enter into the kingdom of heaven; for unleſs a man is regenerated, he is not born heir apparent to it; and without internal holineſs, ſhall not enter into it, enjoy it, or ſee God.

Ver. 6. That which is born of the fleſh, is fleſh, &c.] Man by his natural birth, and as he is born according to the fleſh of his natural parents, is a mere natural man; that is, he is carnal and corrupt, and cannot diſcern ſpiritual things; nor can he as ſuch, enter into, and inherit the kingdom of God; ſee 1 Cor. ii. 14. and xv. 50. And therefore there is a neceſſity of his being born again, or of the grace of the Spirit, and of his becoming a ſpiritual man; and if he was to be, or could be born again of the fleſh, or ever ſo many times enter into his mother's womb, and be born, was it poſſible, he would ſtill be but a natural and a carnal man, and ſo unfit for the kingdom of God. By fleſh here, is not meant the fleſhy part of man the body, as generated of another fleſhy ſubſtance; for this is no other than what may be ſaid of brutes; and beſides, if this was the ſenſe, ſpirit in the next clauſe, muſt mean the ſoul, whereas one ſoul is not generated from another: but by fleſh is deſigned, the nature of man; not merely as weak and frail, but as unclean and corrupt, through ſin; and which, being propagated by natural generation from ſinful men, cannot be otherwiſe; for who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? not one, Job xiv. 4. And tho' the ſoul of man is of a ſpiritual nature, and remains a ſpirit, notwithſtanding the pollution of ſin; yet it being defiled with the fleſh, and altogether under the power and influence of the luſts of the fleſh, it may well be ſaid to be carnal or fleſhly: hence fleſh, as it ſtands oppoſed to ſpirit, ſignifies the corruption of nature, Gal. v. 17. and ſuch who are in a ſtate of unregeneracy, are ſaid to be after the fleſh, and in the fleſh, and even the mind itſelf, is ſaid to be carnal, Rom. viii. 5, 6, 7, 8. And that which is born of the Spirit, is ſpirit: a man that is regenerated by the Spirit of God, and the efficacy of his grace, is a ſpiritual man; he can diſcern and judge all things of a ſpiritual nature; he's a fit perſon to be admitted to ſpiritual ordinances and privileges; and appears to be in the ſpiritual kingdom of Chriſt; and has a right to the world of bleſſed ſpirits above; and when his body is raiſed a ſpiritual body, will be admitted in ſoul, body, and ſpirit, into the joy of his Lord. Spirit in the firſt part of this clauſe, ſignifies the Holy Spirit of God, the author of regeneration and ſanctification; whence that work is called the ſanctification of the Spirit, and the renewing of the Holy Ghoſt, 1 Pet. i. 2. Titus iii. 5. And ſpirit in the latter part, intends the internal work of grace upon the ſoul, from whence a man is denominated a ſpiritual man; and as a child bears the ſame name with its parent; ſo this is called by the ſame, as the author and efficient cauſe of it: and beſides, it is of a ſpiritual nature itſelf, and exerts itſelf in ſpiritual acts and exerciſes, and directs to, and engages in ſpiritual things; and has its ſeat alſo in the ſpirit, or ſoul of man.

Ver. 7. Marvel not that I ſaid unto thee, &c.] For Nicodemus was quite aſtoniſhed, at this doctrine of the new birth; it was altogether new to him, and unheard of by him; nor could he underſtand, nor conceive in what manner it could be: ye muſt be born again; in four of Beza's copies, it is read we; but as Chriſt was not begotten in a carnal way, or deſcended not from Adam in the ordinary way of generation, he was not carnal and corrupt, nor in the leaſt tainted with ſin; and ſo ſtood in no need of regeneration; wherefore ſuch a reading muſt be rejected. There is a neceſſity of the regeneration of thoſe, who are the choſen of God, and the redeemed of the Lamb; and of them only, can the words be underſtood; for as for others, they neither can, nor will, nor muſt be born again: but the people of God muſt; partly becauſe it is the will of God; it is his purpoſe and reſolution, that they ſhall be regenerated; he has choſen them, through ſanctification of the Spirit, unto ſalvation by Chriſt: this is the way and method of ſaving ſinners he has fixed upon, namely, not to ſave them by works of righteouſneſs, but by grace, and according to abundant mercy, through the waſhing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghoſt: and partly, becauſe of the caſe and condition of men, which requires it; for whereas the choſen people of God, are predeſtinated to the adoption of children, and are taken into the family of God, and are heirs to an inheritance, it is neceſſary they ſhould have a nature, temper, and diſpoſition of mind, ſuitable to the inheritance they are to enjoy; which they have not in their natural eſtate, and which is conveyed to them in regeneration: beſides, their carnal minds are enmity to God, and it is neceſſary that they ſhould be friendly to him, which can't be without regeneration; nor can they, till they are born again, pleaſe God, or do thoſe things which are pleaſing to him: to which may be added, which Chriſt has before ſuggeſted, and which ſhews the neceſſity of it, that without it, no man can either ſee, or enter into the kingdom of God. To take off the ſurprize of Nicodemus, our Lord inſtances in a common natural caſe, and to which this affair of regeneration may be compared, and by it illuſtrated.

Ver. 8. The wind bloweth where it liſteth, &c.] For ought any mortal can ſay, or do to the contrary: and ſo the Spirit of God is a free-agent in regeneration; he works how, and where, and when he pleaſes; he acts freely in the firſt operation of his grace on the heart, and in all after influences of it; as well as in the donation of his gifts to men, for different purpoſes; ſee 1 Cor. xii. 11. and this grace of the Spirit in regeneration, like the wind, is powerful and irreſiſtable; it carries all before it; there's no withſtanding it; it throws down ſatan's ſtrong holds, demoliſhes the fortifications of ſin; the whole poſſe of hell, and the corruptions of a man's heart, are not a match for it; when the Spirit works, who can let? and thou heareſt the ſound thereof, but canſt not tell whence it cometh, nor whither it goeth; as the wind, though its ſound is heard, and its force felt, it can't be ſeen; nor is it known certainly, from whence it comes, and where are the treaſures of it; from whence it begins, and where it ends; ſo is the grace of the Spirit of God in regeneration to a natural man; it is imperceptible, indiſcernable, and unaccountable by him, 1 Cor. ii. 14. So is every one that is born of the Spirit; he is regenerated by grace, that is, as free and ſovereign, as powerful and irreſiſtible, and as ſecret and imperceptible, as the wind is: and ſeeing ſo ordinary a thing as the blowing of the wind is of ſuch a nature, and ſo little to be accounted for; regeneration by the Spirit of God, who is comparable to the wind, and whoſe name ſo ſignifies, need not be thought ſo marvellous and aſtoniſhing, though the natural man diſcerns it not, and can't account for it. The beauty and propriety of this ſimile will more appear by obſerving, that the ſame Hebrew word, רוח, is uſed both for the wind, and for the Holy Spirit of God; it is uſed for the wind, in Gen. iii. 8. and viii. 1. 1 Kings xix. 11. Eccl. i. 6. and in other places, and for the Spirit of God, in Gen. i. 2. and vi. 3. Job xxxiii. 4. and elſewhere: and ſo likewiſe the Greek word πνευμα, is uſed for them both, for the wind in this place, and often for the Holy Ghoſt: and it may be obſerved, that the Holy Spirit, becauſe of his powerful, comfortable, and quickening influences, is compared to the wind, eſpecially to the ſouth wind, in ſome paſſages of the Old Teſtament, which Chriſt might have in view, Cant. iv. 16. Zech. ix. 14. What our Lord here ſays, concerning the wind, is confirmed by all experience, and philoſophical obſervations; the riſe of winds, from whence they come, and whither they go, cannot be aſcertained; the treaſures of them are only with God, and known to him; ſee Eccl. xi. 5.

Ver. 9. Nicodemus anſwered and ſaid unto him, &c.] Remaining ſtill as ignorant as ever, though Chriſt had explained the phraſe born again, at which he ſtumbled, by a being born of water and of the ſpirit, or of the grace of the Spirit of God; and had illuſtrated this by the free, powerful, and inviſible blowing of the wind: how can theſe things be? The Arabic verſion reads, how can this be? referring either to the laſt thing ſaid, that a man's being born of the Spirit, is like the blowing of the wind; or to the explanation of the firſt expreſſion, that a man ſhould be born of water, and of the Spirit; or to the firſt aſſertion itſelf, that a man ſhould be born again; which, notwithſtanding the explanation and illuſtration, ſeemed as impoſſible, and as impracticable as ever; or rather to them all, and ſo the Perſic verſion reads, how can all theſe things be?

Ver. 10. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, &c.] Upbraiding him with his continued and invincible ignorance, which was aggravated by his dignified character: art thou a maſter in Iſrael? or of Iſrael, as all the Oriental verſions render it, as it literally may be rendered. He was one of the חכמי ישראל, wiſe men, or doctors of Iſrael [r], ſo often mentioned by the Jews. One of the Jewiſh doctors was anſwered, by a boy, juſt in ſuch language as is here uſed; who, not underſtanding the direction he gave him about the way into the city, ſaid to him, אתה הוא חכם של ישראל, art thou he, a doctor, or maſter of Iſrael? did not I ſay to thee ſo? &c. [s] He was not a common teacher; not a teacher of babes, nor a teacher in their ſynagogues, or in their Midraſhim, or divinity ſchools, but in their great Sanhedrim; and the article before the word uſed will admit it to be rendered, that maſter, doctor, or teacher; that famous, and moſt excellent one, who was talked of all over Jeruſalem and Judea, as a ſurpaſſing one: and now, tho' he was not only an Iſraelite, with whom were the laws, ſtatutes, judgments, and oracles of God, the writings of Moſes, and the prophets; but a teacher of Iſraelites, and in the higheſt claſs of teachers, and of the greateſt fame among them, yet was ignorant of the firſt and important things in religion: and knoweſt not theſe things? which were ſo plainly to be ſuggeſted in the ſacred writings, with which he was, or ought to have been converſant: for the ſame things Chriſt had been ſpeaking of, are there expreſſed by a circumciſion of the heart; by a birth, a nation's being born at once; by ſanctification; by the grace of God ſignified under the metaphor of water; and by quickening perſons, comparable to dry bones, thro' the wind blowing, and breathing into them, Deut. xxx. 6. Iſ. xlix. 21. and lxvi. 8. Ezek. xxxvi. 25. and xxxvii. 9, 10.

Ver. 11. Verily, verily I ſay unto thee, we ſpeak that we do know, &c.] Meaning either himſelf, and John the Baptiſt his fore-runner, who preached the ſame doctrine of regeneration, internal ſanctification, and evangelical repentance, as well as outward reformation, as neceſſary to entrance into the kingdom of heaven, or Goſpel-diſpenſation, he declared was juſt at hand; or his diſciples with himſelf, who were now with him, and whom he had called to preach the ſame truths he himſelf did; or the prophets of the Old Teſtament, who agreed with him in theſe things; or the Father that was with him, and never left him alone, and the Holy Spirit that was upon him, by whom he was anointed to preach theſe things, and who ſpoke them in him; or elſe he may uſe the plural number of himſelf alone, as being one in authority, and ſpeaking with it, as he ſometimes did, Mark iv. 30. and the rather this ſeems to be the ſenſe, ſince he immediately, in the next verſe, ſpeaks in the ſingular number, if I have told you earthly things, &c. Now Chriſt muſt needs thoroughly, and certainly know what he ſpoke, ſince he was not only the omniſcient God, but, as mediator, had all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge in him, and the Spirit of wiſdom and knowledge reſted on him: and teſtify that we have ſeen; and therefore ought to have been received as a credible witneſs, as he was a faithful one; ſince ſeeing and knowing are qualifications in a witneſs, Lev. v. 1. and tho' theſe were eminently in Chriſt, the generality of the Jews gave no credit to his teſtimony: and ye received not our witneſs; which was an aggravation of their ſin and unbelief; ſee ver. 32.

Ver. 12. If I have told you earthly things, &c.] Not that the doctrines he delivered were earthly ones; for he was not of the earth, but from heaven, and above all, and ſo ſpake not of the earth, but of heaven, ver. 31. and this doctrine of regeneration was an heavenly doctrine; and the thing itſelf required ſupernatural power, and grace from above: but either they were the more eaſy doctrines of the Goſpel; or were delivered in a plain and eaſy ſtile, and illuſtrated by ſimilies taken from earthly things, as from human birth, from the water, and from the wind: and ye believe not; i. e. thoſe things; ye don't receive them, nor give credit to them; or me, as the Ethiopic verſion adds, who relate them on the beſt evidence, having fully known, and clearly ſeen them: how ſhall ye believe; give credit to me, or receive my teſtimony: if I tell you of heavenly things? of the more ſublime doctrines of the Goſpel, ſuch as the deſcent of the Meſſiah from heaven; the union of the two natures, human and divine, in him; his being the only-begotten Son of God; his crucifixion and death, ſignified by the lifting up of the ſerpent on a pole in the wilderneſs; and the wonderful love of God to the Gentile world in giving Chriſt to, and for them; and the ſalvation, and eternal happineſs of all that believe in him, whether they be Jews or Gentiles; and theſe delivered in language ſuitable to them, without figures, or natural ſimilies, which help the underſtanding, and convey ideas of things more eaſily to it.

Ver. 13. And no man hath aſcended into heaven, &c.] Tho' Enoch and Elias had, yet not by their own power, nor in the ſenſe our Lord deſigns; whoſe meaning is, that no man had, or could go up to heaven, to bring from thence the knowledge of divine and heavenly things; in which ſenſe the phraſe is uſed in Deut. xxx. 12. Rom. x. 6. and which may be illuſtrated by John i. 18. wherefore inaſmuch as Nicodemus had acknowledged Chriſt to be a teacher come from God, our Lord would have him know, that he was the only teacher of heavenly things, as being the only perſon that had been in heaven, and in the boſom of the Father; and therefore if he, and the reſt of the Jews, did not receive inſtructions from him, they muſt for ever remain ignorant; for there never had been, nor was, nor could be, any mere man that could go up to heaven, and learn the myſteries of God, and of the kingdom of heaven, and return and inſtruct men in them: but he that came down from heaven; meaning himſelf, who is the Lord from heaven, and came from thence to do the will of God by preaching the Goſpel, working miracles, obeying the law, and ſuffering death in the room of his people, and thereby obtaining eternal redemption for them. Not that he brought down from heaven with him, either the whole of his human nature, or a part of it; either an human ſoul, or an human body; nor did he deſcend locally, by change of place, he being God omnipreſent, infinite and immenſe, but by aſſumption of the human nature into union with his divine perſon: even the ſon of man which is in heaven; at the ſame time he was then on earth: not that he was in heaven in his human nature, and as he was the Son of man; but in his divine nature, as he was the Son of God; ſee John i. 18. tho' this is predicated of his perſon, as denominated from the human nature, which was proper to him only in his divine nature; for ſuch is omnipreſence, or to be in heaven and earth at the ſame time: just as on the other hand God is ſaid to purchaſe the church with his blood, and the Lord of glory is ſaid to be crucified, Acts xx. 28. 1 Cor. ii. 8. where thoſe things are ſpoken of Chriſt, as denominated from his divine nature, which were proper only to his human nature; and is what divines call a communication of idioms or properties; and which will ſerve as a key to open all ſuch paſſages of ſcripture: and now as a proof of our Lord's having been in heaven, and of his being a teacher come from God, and ſuch an one as never was, or can be, he opens and explains, a type reſpecting himſelf, in the following verſe.

Ver. 14. And as Moſes lifted up the ſerpent in the wilderneſs, &c.] The hiſtory referr'd to is in Numb. xxi. 8. There is, in many things, an agreement between this ſerpent, and Jeſus Chriſt: as in the matter of it, it was a brazen ſerpent; it was made not of gold, nor of ſilver, but of braſs, the meaner metal, and was a very unlikely means, of itſelf, to heal the Iſraelites; and might be deſpiſed by many: this may denote the meanneſs of Chriſt in his human nature, in his birth and parentage, and place of education and converſe; and eſpecially in his crucifixion and death; and which, to an eye of carnal ſenſe and reaſon ſeemed a very improbable means of ſaving ſinners; and therefore were to ſome a ſtumbling block, and to others fooliſhneſs: tho' on the other hand, as braſs is a ſhining metal, and might be choſe for the ſerpent in the wilderneſs to be made of, that by the luſtre of it the eyes of the Iſraelites might be attracted and directed to it, who were at the greateſt diſtance in the camp; ſo it may be expreſſive of the glory of Chriſt, as the only-begotten of the Father, and who is the brightneſs of his Father's glory; and which is the great attractive, motive and inducement to engage ſouls to look unto him, and believe in him, Iſ. xlv. 22. and whereas braſs is both a ſtrong and durable metal, it may ſignify the ſtrength of Chriſt, who is the mighty God, and mighty to ſave; and his duration, as a ſaviour, being the ſame to-day, yeſterday, and for ever: likewiſe, the compariſon between the ſerpent Moſes lifted up, and Chriſt, may be obſerved in the form of it. The brazen ſerpent had the form of a ſerpent, but not the poiſon and venomous nature of one; ſo Chriſt was ſent, in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, and was found in faſhion as a man, as a ſinful man, but was without ſin, and was perfectly holy; and yet being in this form, was made both ſin and a curſe, that he might redeem his people both from ſin, and from the curſe of the law, by dying a death which denominated him accurſed, of which the ſerpent was an emblem: beſides, this ſerpent was a fiery one; at leaſt it looked like one of the fiery ſerpents, being of braſs, which ſhone as tho' it burned in a furnace; and may be an emblem both of Chriſt's Father's wrath, which was poured out like fire upon him, and of his love to his people, which was like burning fire, the coals whereof gave a moſt vehement flame. Moreover, this ſerpent Moſes made, and was ordered to make, was but one, tho' the fiery ſerpents, with which the Iſraelites were bitten, were many; ſo there is but one mediator between God and man; but one ſaviour, in whom alone is ſalvation, and in no other, even Jeſus Chriſt. To which may be added the ſituation in which this ſerpent was put: it was ſet by Moſes on a pole; it was lifted up on high, that every one in the camp of Iſrael might ſee it; and may point out the aſcenſion of Chriſt into heaven, and his exaltation at God's right hand there, as ſome think; or his being ſet up in the miniſtry of the word, and held forth and exalted there as the only ſaviour of loſt ſinners; or rather his crucifixion, which is ſometimes expreſſed by a lifting up, John viii. 28. and xii. 32. Once more, there is an agreement in the effect that followed upon the lifting up of the ſerpent; and which was the deſign of it, viz. the healing of ſuch Iſraelites as were bitten by the fiery ſerpents, who looked to this: for as the Iſraelites were bitten by fiery ſerpents, with the poiſon of which they were infected, and were in danger of death, and to many of them their bitings were mortal; ſo men are poiſoned with the venom of the old ſerpent the devil, by which they are ſubjected to a corporal death, and are brought under a ſpiritual, or moral death, and are liable to an eternal one: and as theſe bitings were ſuch as Moſes could not cure; ſo the wounds of ſin, thro' the old ſerpent, are ſuch as can't be healed by the law, moral or ceremonial, or by obedience to either: and as they were the Iſraelites who were convinced of their ſin, and acknowledged it, and had a cure by looking to the brazen ſerpent; ſo ſuch whom the Spirit of God convinces of ſin, and to whom he gives the ſeeing eye of faith, theſe, through ſeeing the Son, and looking to Jeſus, as crucified and ſlain, receive healing by his ſtripes and wounds: and as thoſe, who were ever ſo much bit and poiſoned by the fiery ſerpents, or were at ever ſo great a diſtance from the pole, or had the weakeſt eye, yet if they could but diſcern the ſerpent on the pole, though it only appeared as a ſhining piece of braſs, had a cure; ſo the greateſt of ſinners, and who are afar off from God, and all that is good, and who have faith but as a grain of muſtard-ſeed, or but a glimmering view of Chriſt, of his glory, fulneſs, and ſuitableneſs, ſhall be ſaved by him. To add no more, this was done in the wilderneſs; which may ſignify this world, Chriſt's coming into it, his crucifixion in it, and his going without the camp, bearing our reproach, or ſuffering without the gates of Jeruſalem. It is certain, that the Jews had a notion that the brazen ſerpent was ſymbolical and figurative: Philo the Jew makes it to be a ſymbol of fortitude and temperance[t]; and the author of the apocryphal book of Wiſdom[u], calls it a ſign of ſalvation. They thought there was ſomething myſterious in it: hence they ſay[w], "in "four places it is ſaid, make thee, &c. In three "places it is explained, viz. Gen. vi. 14. Numb. "x. 2. Joſh. v. 2. and one is not explained, Numb. "xxi. 8. make thee a fiery ſerpent, לא פירש, is "not explained." And elſewhere[x] they aſk, "and "could the ſerpent kill, or make alive? But at "the time that Iſrael looked up, and ſerved with "their hearts their Father which is in heaven, they "were healed; but if not, they were brought low." So that the look was not merely to the brazen ſerpent, but to God in heaven; yea, to the Word of God, his eſſential Logos, as ſay the Targumiſts on Numb. xxi. 9. The Jeruſalem Targum paraphraſes the words thus: "and Moſes made a ſerpent of "braſs, and put it upon a high place, and who“ ever was bitten by the ſerpents, and lift up his “ face, in prayer, to his Father which is in hea- “ ven, and looked upon the ſerpent of braſs, lived.” And Jonathan ben Uzziel paraphraſes them thus: “ and Moſes made a ſerpent of braſs, and put it “ on a high place; and it was, when a ſerpent had “ bitten any man, and he looked to the ſerpent of “ braſs, and directed his heart, לשום מימרא דיי, “ to the name of the word of the Lord, he lived.” And this healing they underſtand not only of bodily healing, but of the healing of the ſoul: for they obſerve [y], that “ as ſoon as they ſaid, we have “ ſinned, immediately their iniquity was expiated; “ and they had the good news brought them of “ the healing of the ſoul, as it is written, make thee “ a ſeraph; and he does not ſay a ſerpent; and “ this is it: and it ſhall come to paſs, that every one “ that is bitten, when he looketh upon it, ſhall live, “ רפואת הנפש, thro' the healing of the ſoul:” yea, they compare the Meſſiah to a ſerpent; for ſo the Targum on Iſ. xiv. 29. paraphraſes that paſſage: “ the Meſſiah ſhall come forth from Jeſſe's chil- “ drens children; and his works ſhall be among “ you as a flying ſerpent.” And who elſe can be deſigned by the other ſerpent of life [z], and the holy ſerpent [a] they ſpeak of, in oppoſition to the evil ſerpent that ſeduced Eve? And it is well known, that נחש, a ſerpent, and משיח, Meſſiah, are numerically, or by gematry, the ſame; a way of interpretation, and explanation, often in uſe with the Jews. Now, as this ſerpent was lifted up on a pole on high, that every one that was bitten with the fiery ſerpent might look to it, and be healed; even ſo muſt the ſon of man be lifted up; upon the croſs, and die: the crucifixion and death of Chriſt were neceſſary, and muſt be, becauſe of the decrees and purpoſes of God, by which he was foreordained thereunto, and by which determinate counſel he was delivered, taken, crucified, and ſlain; and becauſe of his own engagements as a ſurety, laying himſelf under obligations in the council and covenant of peace, to ſuffer, and die, in the room of his people; and becauſe of the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, and his own predictions, that ſo it ſhould be; as alſo, that the antitype might anſwer the type; and particularly, that he might be a ſuitable object of faith for wounded ſinners, ſenſible of ſin to look unto.

Ver. 15. That whoſoever believeth in him, &c.] Whether Jew or Gentile, a greater, or a leſſer ſinner, and of whatſoever ſtate and condition, age or ſex; and though ever ſo weak a believer, provided his faith is of the right kind: not an hiſtorical or temporary one, a mere aſſent to the truth of things reſpecting his perſon, office, and work; but ſuch a faith, by which a ſoul ſees a glory, fulneſs, and ſuitableneſs in him as a Saviour; goes to him, ventures on him, commits itſelf to him, lays hold on him, and receives him, leans and relies upon him, and truſts in him, and lives upon him; and which is the faith of God's elect; a gift of his grace, and the operation of his Spirit; and which works by love, and is attended with the fruits of righteouſneſs: now the end of Chriſt's crucifixion and death is, that ſuch an one ſhould not periſh; tho' he is in a loſt and periſhing condition in Adam, and by nature, and ſees himſelf to be ſo, and comes to Chriſt as ſuch; and tho' his frames and comforts are periſhing, and he ſometimes fears he ſhall be utterly loſt; and tho' he is ſubject to ſlips and falls, and great ſpiritual decays; and ſhall periſh as to the outward man by death; yet he ſhall never periſh eternally, or be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction, as the wicked will: but have eternal life; not by his works, but as the gift of God: and which he that truly believes has already in the covenant of grace, in Chriſt his head, in faith and hope; and has the earneſt and pledge of it, the Spirit of God; and the beginning of it, which is the knowledge of God in Chriſt; and ſhall hereafter poſſeſs it fully, and in perſon, to all eternity: even a life of perfect holineſs and knowledge; a life of never-ending pleaſure; a life free from all the ſorrows, diſtreſſes, and imperfections of this; and which will always continue.

Ver. 16. For God ſo loved the world, &c.] The Perſic verſion reads men; but not every man in the world is here meant, or all the individuals of human nature; for all are not the objects of God's ſpecial love, which is here deſigned, as appears from the inſtance and evidence of it, the gift of his Son: nor is Chriſt God's gift to every one; for to whomſoever he gives his Son, he gives all things freely with him; which is not the caſe of every man. Nor is human nature here intended, in oppoſition to, and diſtinction from the angelic nature; for tho' God has ſhewed a regard to fallen men, and not to fallen angels; and has provided a Saviour for the one, and not for the other; and Chriſt has aſſumed the nature of men, and not angels; yet not for the ſake of all men, but the ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham; and beſides, it will not be eaſily proved, that human nature is ever called the world: nor is the whole body of the choſen ones, as conſiſting of Jews and Gentiles, here deſigned; for tho' theſe are called the world, John vi. 33, 51. and are the objects of God's ſpecial love, and to them Chriſt is given, and they are brought to believe in him, and ſhall never periſh, but ſhall be ſaved with an everlaſting ſalvation; yet rather the Gentiles particularly, and God's elect among them, are meant; who are often called the world, and the whole world, and the nations of the world, as diſtinct from the Jews; ſee Rom. xi. 12, 15. 1 John ii. 2. Luke xii. 30. compared with Matt. vi. 32. The Jews had the ſame diſtinction we have now, the church and the world; the former they took to themſelves, and the latter they gave to all the nations around: hence we often meet with this diſtinction, Iſrael, and the nations of the world; on thoſe words, “ let them bring “ forth their witneſs, that they may be juſtified, Iſ. “ xliii. 9. (ſay [b] the doctors) theſe are Iſrael; or let “ them hear and ſay it is truth, theſe are the nations “ of the world.” And again [c], “ the holy, bleſſed “ God ſaid to Iſrael, when I judge Iſrael, I don't “ judge them as the nations of the world:” and ſo in a multitude of places: and it ſhould be obſerved, that our Lord was now diſcourſing with a Jewiſh Rabbi, and that he is oppoſing a commonly received notion of theirs, that when the Meſſiah came, the Gentiles ſhould have no benefit or advantage by him, only the Iſraelites; ſo far ſhould they be from it, that, according to their ſenſe, the moſt dreadful judgments, calamities, and curſes, ſhould befal them; yea, hell and eternal damnation. There is a place, they ſay [d], the name of “ which is Hadrach, Zech. ix. 1. This is the king “ Meſſiah, who is, חד ורך, ſharp and tender; “ ſharp to the nations, and tender to Iſrael.” And ſo of the ſun of righteouſneſs, in Mal. iv. 2. they ſay, ſay [e], "there is healing for the Iſraelites in it, but "the idolatrous nations ſhall be burnt by it." And that [f] "there is mercy for Iſrael, but judgment for "the reſt of the nations." And on thoſe words, in Iſ. xxi. 12. the morning cometh, and alſo the night, they obſerve [g], "the morning is for the righteous, "and the night for the wicked; the morning is "for Iſrael, and the night for the nations of the "world." And again [h], "in the time to come, "(the times of the Meſſiah) the holy, bleſſed God, "will bring darkneſs upon the nations, and will enlighten Iſrael, as it is ſaid, Iſ. lx. 2." Once "more [i], "in the time to come, the holy, bleſſed "God will bring the nations of the world, and will "caſt them into the midſt of hell under the Iſraelites, "as it is ſaid, Iſ. xliii. 3." To which may be added that denunciation of theirs [k], "wo to the "nations of the world, who periſh, and they know "not that they periſh: in the time that the ſanctuary was ſtanding, the altar atoned for them; "but now, who ſhall atone for them?" Now, in oppoſition to ſuch a notion, our Lord addreſſes this Jew; and it is as if he had ſaid, you Rabbins ſay, that when the Meſſiah comes, only the Iſraelites, the peculiar favourites of God, ſhall ſhare in the bleſſings that come by, and with him; and that the Gentiles ſhall reap no advantage by him, being hated of God, and rejected of him: but I tell you, God has ſo loved the Gentiles, as well as the Jews, that, he gave his only-begotten Son; to, and for them, as well as for the Jews; to be a covenant of the people, the Gentiles, the ſaviour of them, and a ſacrifice for them: a gift which is a ſufficient evidence of his love to them; it being a large and comprehenſive one, an irreverſible and unſpeakable one; no other than his own Son by nature, of the ſame eſſence, perfections, and glory with him; begotten by him in a way unconceivable an inexpreſſible by mortals; and his only-begotten one; the object of his love and delight, and in whom he is ever well pleaſed; and yet, ſuch is his love to the Gentiles, as well as Jews, that he has given him, in human nature, up, into the hands of men, and of juſtice, and to death itſelf: that whoſoever believeth in him, whether Jew or Gentile, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life; ſee the note on the preceding verſe.

Ver. 17. For God ſent not his Son into the world, &c.] God did ſend his Son into the world in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, being made of a woman, and made under the law; and which is an inſtance of his great love, and not of any diſreſpect to his Son, or of any inequality between them: but then this was not to condemn the world; even any part of it, or any in it: not the Gentiles, as the Jews thought he would; for tho' God had ſuffered them to walk in their own ways, and had winked at, or overlooked the times of their ignorance, and had ſent no prophet unto them, nor made any revelation of his will, or any diſcovery of his ſpecial grace unto them; yet he ſent his Son now, not to deſtroy them for their idolatry, and wickedneſs, but to be the Saviour of them: nor the Jews; for as impenitent and unbelieving, and as wicked as they were, he did not accuſe them to the father, nor judge and condemn them; he was to come again in power and great glory, when he would take vengeance on them, and cauſe wrath to come upon them to the uttermoſt, for their diſbelief and rejection of him; but this was not his buſineſs now: nor the wicked of the world in general; to judge, and condemn them, will be his work, when he comes a ſecond time, in the day God has appointed to judge the world in righteouſneſs. But the end of his miſſion, and firſt coming is, that the world thro' him might be ſaved; even the world of the elect in general, whom God determined to ſave, and has choſen, to obtain ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt, and has appointed Chriſt to be the ſalvation of; and who being ſent, came into the world to ſeek and ſave them; and his choſen people among the Gentiles in particular: wherefore he is ſaid to be God's ſalvation to the ends of the earth; and all the ends of the earth are called upon to look unto him, and be ſaved by him, Iſ. xlix. 6. and xlv. 22.

Ver. 18. He that believeth on him is not condemned, &c.] Whether Jew or Gentile, becauſe a believer is openly in Chriſt; and there is no condemnation to thoſe that are in him: and though the ſentence of death paſſed upon all in Adam, and judgment came upon all men to condemnation in him; yet this ſentence being executed on Chriſt, the ſurety of his people, who has been condemned to death, and has ſuffered it in their ſtead, his death is a ſecurity to them from all condemnation; and they are delivered by him from the curſe and condemnation of the law: and having in converſion openly paſſed from death to life, they ſhall never enter into condemnation; and this is the happy caſe of every one that believes in Chriſt: but he that believeth not is condemned already. The Perſic verſion renders it, from the beginning; he remains under the ſentence of condemnation, paſſed in Adam upon him; the law accuſes him, and pronounces him guilty before God; he is under the curſe of it, and it is a miniſtration of condemnation and death to him; nor has he any thing to ſecure him from its charge, curſe, and condemnation: this muſt be underſtood of one that is a final unbeliever, or that lives, and dies, in a ſtate of impenitence, and unbelief: becauſe he hath not believed in the name of the only-begotten Son of God; whom God has ſent to be the ſaviour of loſt ſinners, and to deliver them from wrath to come; and there is no other name but his, whereby men can be ſaved; ſo that ſuch that do not believe in him, muſt be damned.

Ver. 19. And this is the condemnation, &c.] Of him that believes not in Chriſt; that is, this is the matter and cauſe of his condemnation, and by which it is aggravated, and appears to be juſt: that light is come into the world; by which is meant, not natural, or corporal light; tho' natural darkneſs is, by ſome, preferred to this, being more convenient for their evil works; as by thieves, murderers, and adulterers: nor is the light of nature deſigned, with which every man is enlightened that comes into the world; which, tho' but a dim light, might be of more uſe, and ſervice, than it is; and is often rejected, and rebelled againſt, by wicked men, and which will be the condemnation of the heathen world: but rather the light of divine revelation, both in the law of God, and Goſpel of Chriſt; eſpecially the latter is here intended; and which, though ſo great a favour to fallen men, is deſpiſed, and denied by the ſons of darkneſs: tho' it may be beſt of all to underſtand it of Chriſt himſelf, the light of the world, and who is come a light into it; ſee John viii. 12. and xii. 46. who may be called light, becauſe he has ſet revelation in its cleareſt and fulleſt light; he has declared the whole mind, and will of God concerning the affair of divine worſhip, and the buſineſs of ſalvation: grace, and truth, are come by him; the doctrines of grace, and the truths of the Goſpel, are moſt clearly brought to light by him; the types, and ſhadows of the law are removed; and the promiſes, and prophecies of the Old Teſtament, are moſt largely expounded by him, and moſt perfectly fulfilled in him: and beſides, he is the author and giver of the light of grace, by which men ſee themſelves to be what they are, loſt and undone ſinners; and ſee him to be the only able, willing, ſuitable, ſufficient, and compleat Saviour: and he it is that now gives the ſaints the glimpſe of glory they have, and will be the light of the new Jeruſalem, and the everlaſting light of his people hereafter. He, by his incarnation, may be ſaid to come into the world in general, which was made by him, as God; and he was in it, as man; tho' he was not known by it as the God-man, Mediator, and Meſſiah: and particularly he came into the Jewiſh world, where he was born, brought up, converſed, lived, and died; and into the Gentile world, by the miniſtry of his apoſtles, whom he ſent into all the world, to preach the Goſpel to every creature, and ſpread the glorious light of it in every place: and men loved darkneſs rather than light; the Jews, the greater part of them, preferred the darkneſs of the ceremonial law, and the Moſaic diſpenſation, and even the traditions of their elders, before the clear Goſpel-revelation made by Chriſt Jeſus; and the Gentiles alſo, for the moſt part, choſe rather to continue in their heatheniſh ignorance, and idolatry, and to walk in their own ways, and in the vanity of their minds, than to embrace Chriſt, and his Goſpel, and ſubmit to his ordinances, and appointments; and the generality of men, to this day, love their natural darkneſs, and chuſe to walk in it, and to have fellowſhip with the works of darkneſs, and delight in the company of the children of darkneſs, rather than follow Chriſt, the light of the world; receive his Goſpel, and walk in his ways, in fellowſhip with his ſaints: the reaſon of all this is, becauſe their deeds were evil; which they choſe not to relinquiſh; and Chriſt, his Goſpel and Ordinances are contrary to them; for the doctrine of the grace of God, which has appeared, and ſhone out in great luſtre, and ſplendor, in the world, teaches men to deny ungodlineſs, and worldly luſts; and therefore it is hated, and rejected, by men.

Ver. 20. For every one that doth evil, hateth the light, &c.] Every man, the ſeries of whoſe life and converſation is evil, hates Chriſt and his Goſpel, becauſe they make manifeſt his evil deeds, convict him of them, and rebuke him for them: neither cometh to the light; to hear Chriſt preach, or preached; to attend on the Goſpel miniſtration and means of grace: leſt his deeds ſhould be reproved; or diſcovered, and made manifeſt, and he be brought to ſhame, and laid under blame, and adviſed to part with them, which he cares not to do; ſee Eph. v. 11, 12, 13.

Ver. 21. But he that doth truth, &c.] That which is true, right and good: he whoſe work is juſt, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; or, he who does that which is right, ſo the Perſic; that which is according to the will of God, and from a principle of love to him, and with a view to his glory: cometh to the light; to Chriſt, and to his word, and ordinances: that his deeds may be made manifeſt; being brought to the light, to the teſt, and ſtandard, whether they are right, or wrong; and that it may appear, that they are wrought in God; or by God; by his aſſiſtance, and gracious influence, without which men can do nothing; for 'tis God that works in them both to will and to do: or, according to God, as others render it; according to the will of God, both for matter and manner: or for God, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; for the glory of God, which ought to be the aim, and end of every action. The Perſic verſion reads the whole thus, that the work which is between God and him may be known; that ſuch deeds may be diſcovered, which are only known to God and himſelf.

Ver. 22. After theſe things, &c.] After Chriſt's coming to Jeruſalem, at the feaſt of the paſſover, with his diſciples, and driving the buyers and ſellers from the temple, and doing the miracles he did there, upon which many believed on him; and after the long diſcourſe he had with Nicodemus, concerning regeneration, and other things: came Jeſus and his diſciples, into the land of Judea; or into Judea the country, having been in Jeruſalem, the city-part or chief city in Judea; ſo that the country is diſtinguiſhed from, and oppoſed to the city. And thus, a country man, and a Jeruſalemite, or citizen of Jeruſalem, are diſtinguiſhed [l], "if, הקרתני, a "country man, (one that lives in the country any "where in the land of Iſrael, out of Jeruſalem [m]) "receives a field, מירושלמי, from a man of Jeruſalem, the ſecond tithes belong to the Jeruſalemite; "but the wiſe men ſay, the country man may bring "them up, and eat them at Jeruſalem." Or, it may be, becauſe that Jeruſalem was part of it in the tribe of Benjamin, and the other in the tribe of Judah; therefore when Chriſt, and his diſciples, left Jeruſalem, they might more properly be ſaid to come into the land of Judea. Indeed, it is commonly ſaid by the Jews [n], that Jeruſalem was not divided among the tribes, and that it did not belong to any tribe; and if ſo, then with greater propriety ſtill, might Chriſt be ſaid to come into the land of Judea, when he departed from Jeruſalem; unleſs it ſhould be thought, that he went into Galilee, and after that came into the land of Judea; ſo Nonnus: and there he tarried with them; with his diſciples, as Nonnus; and with the inhabitants of thoſe parts: he made a longer ſtay here than at Jeruſalem, having more work to do here, and being more delighted with the plainneſs, and ſimplicity of the country people; or he converſed with them, as the Syriac verſion renders it; he exerciſed, and employed himſelf among them, as the Greek word uſed ſignifies: he went about from village to village, doing good, healing diſeaſes, and preaching the Goſpel, which was made uſeful to many: and baptized; not he himſelf, but his diſciples, by his orders, and in his name; ſee chap. iv. 2. whereby he gave freſh countenance and ſanction to the ordinance of water-baptiſm, adminiſtring it to others, as well as ſubmitting to it himſelf.

Ver. 23. And John alſo was baptizing in Ænon, &c.] The Syriac and Perſic verſions call it Ain, or In-yon, the fountain of the dove; and the Arabic verſion reads it, the fountain of Nun: and whether it was a town, or river, it ſeems to have its name from a fountain near it, or that itſelf was one, where was an abundance of water, as the text ſhows. There's a city of this name in the Septuagint verſion of Joſh. xv. 61. and mention is made of Hazer Enon in Numb. xxxiv. 9. Ezek. xlvii. 17. but neither of them ſeem to be the ſame with this: but be it where, and what it will, it was near to Salim; and where that was, is as difficult to know as the other. Some take it to be Shalem, a city of Shechem, mentioned in Gen. xxxiii. 18. but that is not the ſame name with this; and beſides was in Samaria; and indeed is by ſome there thought not to be the proper name of any place. Others are of opinion, that it is the ſame with Shalim in 1 Sam. ix. 4. tho' it ſeems rather to be the place which Arias Montanus calls [o], Salim juxta torrentem, Salim by the brook; and which he places in the tribe of Iſſachar: and might be ſo called, either becauſe it was near this Ænon, and may be the brook, or river intended, by which it was; or becauſe it was not far from the place where the two rivers, Jaboc and Jordan met; and ſo the Jewiſh maps place near Jordan, in the tribe of Manaſſeh, bordering on the tribe of Iſſachar, a Shalem, and by it Ain-yon. And the Septuagint in Joſh. xix. 22. mention Salim by the ſea, as in the tribe of Iſſachar. There is a paſſage in the Talmud [p], which, whether it has any regard to this Ænon, and Salim, I leave to be conſidered: "the wine of Ogedoth, why is it forbidden? becauſe of the village Pegeſh; and that of Borgetha, becauſe of the Saracene palace; and of Ain-Cuſhith, becauſe of the village Salem." Nonnus here calls Ænon, a place of deep waters; and Salim he reads Salem; and ſo ſome copies. Ænon where John baptized, according to Jerom [q], was eight miles from Scythopolis, to the ſouth, and was near Salim and Jordan; and he makes Salim to be at the ſame diſtance from Scythopolis. However, John was baptizing in theſe parts, at the ſame time that Chriſt was teaching and baptizing: he did not leave off on that account. This was the work he was ſent to do, and which he continued in as long as he had his liberty; and he choſe this place, becauſe there was much water there; or many waters; not little purling ſtreams, and rivulets; but, as Nonnus renders it, abundance of water; or a multitude of it, as in the Arabic verſion; ſee Rev. i. 15. and xvii. 1, 15. Cant. viii. 7. and the Septuagint in Pſal. lxxvii. 19. and cvii. 23. and what was ſufficient to immerſe the whole body in, as Calvin, Aretius, Piſcator, and Grotius, on the place, obſerve; and which was agreeable not only to the practice of the Jews, who uſed dipping in their baptiſms, and purifications, as Muſculus and Lightfoot aſſert; but to John's method and practice elſewhere: and they came, and were baptiſed. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, they came to him, that is, to John, and he baptized them; as the Perſic verſion adds, there, in Ænon, near Salim, in the much water there: it may be underſtood of the people coming both to John and Chriſt, and of their being baptized by them; tho' it ſeems rather to be ſaid of John; and ſo Nonnus paraphraſes it.

Ver. 24. For John was not yet caſt into priſon.] As he afterwards was by Herod, for the ſake of Herodias, becauſe he reproved Herod for taking her to be his wife, when ſhe was wife to his brother Philip; ſee Matt. xiv. 3, 4. and this circumſtance ſhows, that theſe things were done before that journey of Chriſt into Galilee, mentioned in Matt. iv. 12, 13.

Ver. 25. Then there aroſe a queſtion, &c.] A diſpute, or controverſy, occaſioned by the baptiſm of John and Chriſt: between ſome of John's diſciples, and the Jews. The Syriac and Perſic verſions read, between one of John's diſciples, and a certain Jew; and Nonnus renders it, with an Hebrew man; and ſo the Alexandrian manuſcript; many others read, with a Jew: the contention between them was about purifying; either about the ceremonial purifications, and ablutions commanded in the law of Moſes; or concerning the various waſhings of perſons, and veſſels, according to the traditions of the elders, which the Jews in common were very tenacious of; and which they thought were brought into neglect, and contempt, by the baptiſm of John: and this ſeems to have been occaſioned by the baptiſm of Chriſt; which the Jew might improve againſt the diſciple of John, and urge, that ſince another, beſides his maſter, had ſet up baptizing, who could tell which was righteſt and ſafeſt to follow; and therefore it would have been much better, if no ſuch rite at all had been uſed by any, but that the purifications required by the law of Moſes, and by their elders, had been ſtrictly and ſolely attended to.

Ver. 26. And they came unto John, &c.] The Perſic verſion reads, he came unto John; that diſciple that had the controverſy with the Jew about purifying, who not knowing well how to anſwer him, and which might be the caſe of more, applied to John: and ſaid unto him, Rabbi; or maſter; or, our maſter, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions read, which was a title of great reſpect, and reverence, and much in uſe in thoſe times; ſee the notes on Matt. xxiii. 7, 8. The Arabic verſion joins this word to the following clauſe, and applies it to Chriſt, rendring it thus, the maſter that was with thee beyond Jordan; which is making them to ſpeak more honourably of Chriſt than they intended; for tho' they ſpeak very reſpectfully to John, yet with much diſdain and neglect of Chriſt; not ſo much as mentioning his name, or uſing any term of honour and reſpect; only ſaying, he that was with thee; namely, at Bethabara; who came from Galilee to Jordan, unto John, to be baptized by him, and who was baptized by him; and for ſome little time continued with him, and attended on his miniſtry; and as they thought, was a diſciple of John's: to whom thou beareſt witneſs; that he was before him, and to be preferred unto him; and that he was the lamb of God, and even the ſon of God; ſuggeſting, that by this teſtimony of his, Chriſt had gained all the credit and reputation he had; and that therefore he had done a wrong thing in enlarging ſo much in the praiſe, and commendation of him: behold the ſame baptizeth; takes upon him to adminiſter the ordinance of baptiſm; at leaſt gives orders to adminiſter it; which John's diſciples thought was the proper, and peculiar buſineſs of their maſter; and therefore ſpeak of this as an intruſion into his office, and an entering into his province; and an aſſuming that which only belonged to him: and what gave ſtill more uneaſineſs, and increaſed the complaint, was, and all men come to him; that is, many, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions render it, even more than came to John; ſee chap. iv. 1. Large multitudes from all parts flocked to hear Chriſt preach, and great numbers were made diſciples by him, and then baptized. That he ſhould baptize, gave them great offence; and that he was ſo followed, raiſed their envy; and his being ſo near to John, might add to their uneaſineſs. 'Tis a rule with the Jews, that "it is not lawful for a diſciple to teach the conſtitutions, or ſentences of the law, before his maſter; but muſt be twelve miles diſtant from him, as the camp of Iſrael." And they ſay, that "a diſciple that teaches before, or in the preſence of his maſter, is guilty of death [r]."

Ver. 27. John anſwered and ſaid, &c.] The Syriac and Arabic verſions add, to them; the anſwer being made to the diſciples of John, who came to him with their complaint: a man can receive nothing; the Syriac and Perſic verſions add, of his own will: ſome underſtand this of Chriſt, as man, who did not take upon him the character of the Meſſiah, nor the office of a mediator, nor the honour of it of himſelf; and who received the gifts and graces of the Spirit of God, without meaſure, and had his ſucceſs in his work from above: and indeed, it is true of both Chriſt, and John; for as Chriſt, ſo John received his office, and honour, as the harbinger and fore-runner of Chriſt, and all his gifts qualifying for it, and his ſucceſs in it, not of himſelf, but of God: and ſince therefore the ſuperior office, and honour, and uſefulneſs of the one above the other, were according to the ſovereign will of God, there was no room for complaint, murmuring, and envy; but there ought to be contentment and pleaſure in the wiſe diſpoſition of things by God. Yea, this is true of every man, who has nothing of his own; and whatever he has in nature, providence and grace, is a gift to him; and all he enjoys is in a way of receiving: nor can he receive it, except it be given him from heaven; from God who dwells there; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 25. who is the author and donor of every gift, temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal; particularly he cannot perceive, and diſcern ſpiritual things, nor receive Goſpel-truths; as it appeared to John, his diſciples could not, unleſs ſpiritual light is given from above; and ſuch a favour is beſtowed, as to know the myſteries of the kingdom of heaven: and therefore, for every office, whether of a ſuperior, or inferior kind, and for every degree of honour, and for whatſoever bleſſing and gift, whether for ſoul or body, for time, or for eternity, men ought to be thankful, and not glory in them, as tho' they had not received them; nor is there any reaſon to murmur againſt God, or envy one another, as theſe diſciples did.

Ver. 28. Ye your ſelves bear me witneſs, &c.] In what they now ſaid, and referred to, in deſcribing Chriſt, as he to whom John bore witneſs; and he appeals to them for what he ſaid in their preſence, and before all the people in that teſtimony: that I ſaid I am not the Chriſt; ſee chap. i. 19, 20. wherefore, if he, who is the Chriſt, is now come, and teaches, and baptizes, and has the greateſt number of followers, it is not to be wondered at; and much leſs to be envied; but rather to be rejoiced at. For John, by repeating what he had before ſaid, that he was not the Chriſt, ſuggeſts, that Jeſus was; and therefore was ſuperior to him in office, honour, and uſefulneſs, who was only his harbinger and fore-runner, as follows: but I am ſent before him; to prepare his way, to make ſtraight his paths, to proclaim his coming, and kingdom, being at hand; and that the expectations of men may be raiſed, and they may be ready to receive him when come: and hereby the end of John's office, and miniſtry, had its accompliſhment. The Ethiopic verſion adds, to preach him.

Ver. 29. He that hath the bride, &c.] By whom particular perſons ſeem here to be meant, who were called, converted, and brought to Chriſt, and were made his diſciples, and baptized, and ſo were openly eſpouſed unto him; though ſometimes it deſigns a particular church of Chriſt, and even the whole general aſſembly, and church of the firſt-born, whoſe names are written in heaven; all the elect of God, whether among Jews, or Gentiles; ſee 2 Cor. xi. 2. Rev. xxi. 2, 9. Theſe Chriſt has in a conjugal relation; and he came, and comes to have them after this manner: he ſaw them in his father's purpoſes, and decrees, in all the glory he meant to bring them to; and loved them, and deſired them of his father, as his ſpouſe, who gave them to him, as ſuch; and he betrothed them to himſelf for ever; and in time he ſends his miniſtring ſervants with his Goſpel, to engage and betroth them to him; and by the power of his grace, he makes them willing to give up themſelves to him; which is the open eſpouſal of them; and at the laſt day, when the number of the elect are compleated, the marriage of the lamb will be publickly ſolemnized, and a marriage-ſupper will be made; and all that are called, and ready, will enter into the marriage-chamber, and ſhare in the joys, and pleaſures of that day: thus by virtue of the Father's gift, Chriſt has them now as his own property, as his portion, his jewels, his bride, and wife; and by, and thro' his great love to them, he has them not only in his arms, from whence they can never be plucked; but in his heart, where they are ſet as a ſeal; and by virtue of this love, they are united to him, become one with him, are members of his body, fleſh, and bones; and are one ſpirit with him, and nothing can be able to ſeparate them; and he will have them all with him to all eternity, to be where he is, and behold his glory: and now, he that has the bride in this ſenſe, is the bridegroom; and ſuch is Chriſt; ſee Matt. ix. 15. and xxv. 1. and he acts, and behaves, as ſuch; he loves the ſaints, as a bridegroom loves his bride, with a love prior to theirs; with a love of complacency and delight, which is ſingle, chaſte, and inviolable; free, and ſovereign, wonderful, unchangeable, and from everlaſting to everlaſting: he ſympathizes with them in all their adverſities, and afflictions; he nouriſhes, and cheriſhes them, and provides every thing for them, for food, and clothing, for refreſhment, and protection; and intereſts them in all he has: and an amazing inſtance of grace this is, that ſuch who are no better than others, children of wrath by nature; exceeding great ſinners, guilty, and filthy; bankrupts, and beggars on the dunghill; and yet are taken into ſo near a relation to him; who is in the form of God, and equal to him, the brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon, the Son of God, in whom all the fulneſs of the Godhead dwells; the king of kings, and lord of lords. And this being the caſe, John ſuggeſts, that by theſe perſons following Chriſt, and giving up themſelves to him, it appeared that he was the bridegroom; and to whom ſhould they betake themſelves but to him? Nor did it become him, or any other, to ſeek to draw them from him; nor ſhould any envy his enjoyment of them, ſince they were his in ſo peculiar a ſenſe, and in ſo near a relation: but the friend of the bridegroom; meaning himſelf: and ſuch is every true miniſter of the Goſpel; he is a lover of Chriſt, a friend to his intereſt, and ſeeks by all means to promote it, and to bring ſouls unto him. The alluſion is to a cuſtom among the Jews, who, at their marriages, uſed to have perſons both on the ſide of the bride, and of the bridegroom, as companions that attended each, and were called their friends; ſee Judg. xiv. 20. Such an one is called by the Rabbins, שושבין; and this word is interpreted by, אוהב, a lover, or friend, the ſame as here; and by, ריעהו, his, (the bridegroom's) friend in the time of his marriage[s]. There were two of theſe, one for the bride, and another for the bridegroom; for ſo it is ſaid[t], "formerly they appointed two, שושבינין, friends, one for him, (the bridegroom) and one for her, (the bride) that they might miniſter to the bridegroom, and do all things at their entrance into the marriage-chamber.——And formerly, theſe friends ſlept where the bridegroom and bride ſlept." And ſo as John is here repreſented as the friend of Chriſt, the bridegroom of the church; the Jews ſpeak of Moſes as the friend of God, the bridegroom of the people of Iſrael. So one of their writers [u], having delivered a parable concerning a certain king going into a far country, and leaving his eſpouſed wife with his maid-ſervants, who raiſing an evil report on her, his friend tore in pieces the matrimonial contract, thus applies it: "the king, this is the holy, bleſſed God; the "maidens, theſe are the mixed multitude; and "חשושבין, the friend, this is Moſes; and the ſpouſe "of the holy, bleſſed God is Iſrael." The Jews ſay [w], that Michael and Gabriel were the, שושבינין, bridal friends to the firſt Adam. Which ſtandeth; the phraſe may be ſeen in the above parable of the Jewiſh writer [x] referr'd to, עמד שושבינה, his friend ſtandeth: this was the poſture of ſervants, and is fitly applied to John, who was the harbinger of Chriſt, and judged himſelf unworthy to bear his ſhoes; and well agrees with the miniſters of the Goſpel, who ſtand before Chriſt, wait upon him, and miniſter in his name, and are the ſervants of the churches for his ſake: and heareth him; hearkens to his words; obſerves, and obeys them; hears his voice, ſo as to underſtand it, and diſtinguiſh it from another's; and hears it with delight and pleaſure, as every true friend of Chriſt does his Goſpel, which is his voice, and is a joyful ſound; and ſo rejoiceth greatly becauſe of the bridegroom's voice: ſuch an one rejoices at the ſight of his perſon, and in communion with him; he rejoices at the ſound of his voice; and is delighted to hear him in the miniſtry of the word, calling to one, and to another, to come unto him, and cauſing them to believe in him, and give up themſelves to him. This my joy therefore is fulfilled; in Chriſt, he being come in perſon, and his voice heard in the land of Judea, and multitudes of ſouls flocking to him, who believing in him, were baptized; than which, nothing could be a greater pleaſure to John, or to any Goſpel-miniſter. This was the accompliſhment and perfection of his joy, which carried it to its utmoſt height: this was what he wiſhed for; and now he had the deſire of his heart. It was uſual for the friend of the bridegroom to carry proviſions with him, and eat and drink with the bridegroom, and rejoice with him; and this rejoicing was mutual. Hence thoſe words, "give me, שושביני, my friend, "that I may rejoice with him:" the Gloſs upon it is, "and eat at his marriage, even as he alſo re-"joiced, and eat at my marriage [y]." To this rejoicing the alluſion is here.

Ver. 30. He muſt increaſe, &c.] Not in ſtature of body, or in wiſdom and underſtanding of mind, as man, he being come to maturity in theſe things already; but in fame, credit, and reputation among men; as he afterwards did in the land of Judea, by reaſon of his miracles and doctrines; and after that among the Gentiles, through the publication of his Goſpel; and will more and more in the latter day, when he, and he alone, ſhall be exalted: and he muſt increaſe in the miniſtry of his word, which was publiſhed by him, and his diſciples, throughout all the cities of Iſrael; and which, after his reſurrection and aſcenſion, grew and increaſed mightily, notwithſtanding the oppoſition made unto it both by their civil and eccleſiaſtical rulers; and which, by the means of his Apoſtles, was ſpread throughout the Gentile world, and will hereafter cover the earth, as the waters do the ſea: and alſo in his kingdom and intereſt, which at firſt were very ſmall, like a grain of muſtard-ſeed, or like a little ſtone cut out of the mountain without hands; but in proceſs of time grew exceedingly, and will, e'er long, fill the face of the whole earth; for the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Chriſt; and his dominion ſhall be from ſea to ſea, and from the river to the ends of the earth; and of the increaſe of it there ſhall be no end. And ſo likewiſe in the number of his followers, which at firſt were but few in Judea, but afterwards greatly increaſed, and eſpecially among the Gentiles; and will be very numerous in the latter-day glory, when the nation of the Jews will be born at once, and the fulneſs and forces of the Gentiles are brought in: but I muſt decreaſe; as he did in his eſteem among the people; ſee John v. 35. and in his work and office, which were now come to an end, Chriſt, whoſe fore-runner he was, being come; and quickly after this he was put into priſon, and there put to death.

Ver. 31. He that cometh from above, &c.] Meaning Chriſt; not that he brought his human nature with him from heaven, or that that is of a celeſtial nature; but he came from heaven in his divine perſon, not by change of place, he being God immenſe and infinite, but by aſſumption of human nature; which he took upon him, in order to do in it his Father's will, and the work of our ſalvation. Is above all; above John, before whom he was preferr'd, for he was before him; above the prophets of the Old Teſtament, and even above Moſes, the chief of them; yea, above all the angels in heaven, being God over all, bleſſed for ever: wherefore all glory is to be given him; no honour is to be envied him, or detracted from him. He that is of the earth; as John was, and all mankind are, being deſcended from Adam, who was made of the duſt of the earth; and who dwell in houſes of clay, and in earthly tabernacles, which are at laſt reſolved into their original duſt: is earthly; of an earthly nature, frame, temper, and diſpoſition; ſee ver. 6. Men naturally mind earthly things; and it is owing to the Spirit and grace of God, if they mind and ſavour ſpiritual things, or have their affections ſet on things above, or their converſation in heaven; and even ſuch, at times, find that their ſouls cleave unto the duſt, and are hankering after the things of the earth: and ſpeaketh of the earth; of earthly things, as in ver. 12. and indeed of heavenly things, in an earthly manner, in a low way, and by ſimilies and compariſons taken from the things of the earth; not being able to ſpeak of celeſtial things, as in their own nature, and in that ſublime way the ſubject requires: but he that cometh from heaven is above all; men and angels, in the dignity of his perſon; and all prophets and teachers in the excellency of his doctrine, and manner of delivering it: and therefore it is not to be wondered at, that he ſhould be followed as he is; but rather it ſhould ſeem marvellous, that he has no more followers than he has; ſee 2 Eſdras iv. 21.

Ver. 32. And what he hath ſeen and heard, &c.] Of the Father, of his mind and will, of his purpoſes and promiſes, of his love, grace, and mercy, in the council and covenant of peace, lying in his boſom, and being privy to all his ſecrets. The phraſes expreſs the clear and perfect knowledge Chriſt has of all truths and doctrines; he having all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge in him. That he teſtifieth; fully, freely, and faithfully; with-holds nothing, but declares the whole counſel of God; and is deſervedly called the faithful witneſs, Rev. i. 5. And no man receiveth his teſtimony; tho' it was the teſtimony of God, which is greater than that of man; yet few, and which were next to none at all, gave any heed or credit to it; few or none among the Jews, or among the diſciples of John, or even among thoſe that followed Chriſt. John, and his diſciples, widely differed; they thought that all men came to Chriſt, and believed in him; and John thought few or none, in compariſon of the numbers he could have wiſhed, did: and indeed, no one perſon can receive the teſtimony of Chriſt, and believe in him, unleſs it be given him from above, by the grace of God; for the natural man receives not divine and ſpiritual things; ſee ver. 11.

Ver. 33. He that hath received his teſtimony, &c.] For there was here and there one that did, who believed in him as the Meſſiah, and embraced his Goſpel, and ſubmitted to his ordinances, and truly and ſincerely followed him: and for the encouragement of ſuch, 'tis ſaid, hath ſet to his ſeal that God is true; faithful in fulfilling the promiſes he has made concerning the Meſſiah, and his coming: he firmly believes that God is true to every word of his, and will make good every promiſe; and this he ſeals, ratifies, and confirms by his embracing the teſtimony of Chriſt: whereas, on the contrary, he that believeth not makes God a liar, than which, nothing can be more reproachful to him, 1 John v. 10. The Jews have a ſaying [z], that "the ſeal of the bleſſed God is truth." The Arabic verſion renders it, he is already ſealed, becauſe God is true; and the Ethiopic verſion, God hath ſealed him, becauſe he is true; namely, with his holy Spirit; ſee 2 Cor. i. 22. Eph. i. 13. and iv. 30.

Ver. 34. For he whom God hath ſent, &c.] Still meaning Chriſt, who was ſent in human nature, in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, in the fulneſs of time; to be the Saviour of the world, of that which was loſt, of the chief of ſinners; and to preach the glad-tidings of the Goſpel, which is more eſpecially here deſigned; and for which he was abundantly qualified by the Spirit of God, with which he was anointed: ſpeaketh the words of God; the words which God gave unto him; the doctrines of grace; the word of truth; the word of faith; the word of righteouſneſs; the word of reconciliation; the words of ſalvation and eternal life; the whole mind and will of God; and whatever he ſpoke were as true as the oracles of God, and were ſuch. For God giveth not the Spirit by meaſure; unto him, as he did to the prophets of the Old Teſtament, and to the Apoſtles of the New; and to the ordinary miniſters of the word, who have gifts differing one from another; to one is given one gift of the Spirit; and to another, another gift, as the Spirit pleaſeth; and to every one is given grace, or gifts of grace, according to the meaſure of the gift of Chriſt, Eph. iv. 7. To which agree what the Jews ſay [a] of the holy Spirit, and his gifts. "Says R. Joden bar R. Simeon, even the waters which deſcend from above are not given, but, במדה, in meaſure.—Says R. Acha, even the holy Spirit, which dwells upon the prophets, does not dwell, but, במשקל, in weight." But the Lord Jeſus has every gift of the Spirit, and the fulneſs of grace in him: he's anointed with the oil of gladneſs, with the Holy Ghoſt above his fellows; and has an immeaſurable unction of the holy one; which, like the precious oil poured on Aaron, deſcends from him to the members of his body.

Ver. 35. The Father loveth the Son, &c.] There is ſuch a relation as that of Father and Son ſubſiſting between the firſt and ſecond perſons in the Trinity; which is not by conſtitution and appointment; or arbitrary, ariſing from, and depending on the will of the firſt, but is natural and neceſſary; the ſecond perſon being begotten by the firſt, and is of the ſame nature, and equally a divine perſon: and which relation is the foundation of the diſtinction of their perſons; and which exiſted from all eternity, and co-exiſted with their being and eſſence; and is what no other ſtand in, angels or men, in ſuch ſenſe as the ſecond perſon does; and is not to be conceived of, expreſſed and explained by us: and from this relation ariſes love; hence, the Son of the Father is his dear Son, the Son of his love; as he muſt needs be, ſince he is of the ſame nature, has the ſame perfections he has, and is the brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon: and hence he continues to love him in every form and appearance of his; in every office he ſuſtains; in every ſtate and condition into which he comes: he delighted in him as his elect, as choſen and appointed by him to be the Saviour of his people; he took pleaſure in him as the ſurety of them, and when he ſaw him engaging as ſuch, and declaring it was in his heart to do his will, and work out their ſalvation; he loved him when he appeared in human nature, in the form of a ſervant; and in his ſtate of humiliation, more than once he declared, by a voice from heaven, that he was his beloved Son, and particularly at his baptiſm: and indeed, as in that, ſo in every thing elſe, he always did the things that pleaſed him; he loved him when he laid down his life for the ſheep; when he was bruiſed, and his ſoul made an offering for ſin; he loved him when on the croſs, and even when he hid his face from him; when he lay in the grave he left him not, nor would he ſuffer him to ſee corruption; he raiſed him from the dead, and gave him glory; exalted him, and received him into heaven with a welcome, and placed him at his right hand; and now looks with pleaſure upon him, upon his perſon, his ſacrifice, blood, and righteouſneſs: and this love is a love of complacency and delight, and is from everlaſting to everlaſting; the evidence of which follows, and hath given all things into his hand; or by his hand; as the doctrines of the Goſpel, the gifts of the Spirit, grace, and glory: or rather, into his hand; with which he, being the Son of God, a divine perſon, is fit to be entruſted, which otherwiſe he would not be: παντα, all, includes all perſons; all the angels, the good angels which are choſen in him, and he is the head of; and by whom they are confirmed in the ſtate they are; and who are at his command and beck, and miniſter to him and his. The evil angels, tho' they have broke away from God, and rebelled againſt him, yet are, in ſome ſenſe, in the hands of Chriſt, and under his power; as appears by his diſpoſſeſſing them from the bodies of men on earth, his ſpoiling them on the croſs, and triumphing over them in his aſcenſion to heaven, and by his binding ſatan a thouſand years. All men are given to him; the elect, in a ſpecial ſenſe, as his bride and ſpouſe, as his children, and as his ſheep; hence, he died for them, and effectually calls them, and brings them to himſelf; and they ſhall never periſh, or be plucked out of his hands, but ſhall have eternal life. And wicked men are, in a ſenſe, given to him; their wrath he reſtrains, and makes it to praiſe him; he rules them with a rod of iron, and breaks them in pieces as a potter's veſſel. And all things alſo are given into his hands; all temporal things, the things of nature and providence; the light of nature, and all the gifts and attainments of it; all the good things of the world, and which are wiſdom's left-hand bleſſings; and Chriſt diſpoſes of them to his people in mercy, and as covenant ones: all ſpiritual things are in his hands; all the gifts of the Spirit, and the fulneſs of all grace, ſanctifying, juſtifying, pardoning, adopting, and perſevering grace; all the promiſes and bleſſings of the covenant; the government of the church, and the judgment of the world; all power, both in heaven and in earth; the ſalvation of the elect, and their eternal inheritance, happineſs, and glory. For all which, no creature, angels or men, are fit, only the Son of God.

Ver. 36. He that believeth on the Son, &c.] Who is a proper object of faith and truſt; which, if he was not truly and properly God, he would not be: and this is to be underſtood not of any ſort of faith, a temporary, or an hiſtorical one; but of that which is the faith of God's elect, the gift of God, and the operation of his Spirit; by which a man ſees the Son, goes unto him, ventures and relies upon him, and commits himſelf to him, and expects life and ſalvation from him; and who ſhall not be aſhamed and confounded; for ſuch an one hath everlaſting life: he has it in Chriſt his head, in whom he believes; he has a right unto it thro' the juſtifying righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and a meetneſs for it by his grace; he has it in faith and hope; he has the beginning of it in the knowledge of Chriſt, and communion with him; he has ſome foretaſtes of it in his preſent experience; and he has the earneſt and pledge of it in his heart, even the bleſſed Spirit, who works him up for this ſelf-ſame thing: and he that believeth not the Son; that does not believe Chriſt to be the Son of God, or Jeſus to be the Meſſiah; or rejects him as the Saviour; who lives and dies in a ſtate of impenitence and unbelief: ſhall not ſee life; eternal life; he ſhall not enter into it, and enjoy it; he ſhall die the ſecond death. Very remarkable are the following words of the Jews [b] concerning the Meſſiah, whom they call the latter redeemer: "whoſoever believes in him ſhall live; but he that believes not in him ſhall go to the nations of the world, and they ſhall kill him." But the wrath of God abideth on him; as the ſentence of wrath, of condemnation, and death, and the curſe of the law were pronounced upon him in Adam, as on all mankind, it continues, and will continue, and will never be reverſed, but will be executed on him, he not being redeemed from it, as his final unbelief ſhows; and as he was by nature a child of wrath, as others, he remains ſuch; and as the wrath of God is revealed from heaven againſt all unrighteouſneſs and ungodlineſs of men, it comes upon the children of diſobedience and remains there; it hangs over their heads, and lights upon them, and they will be filled with a dreadful ſenſe of it to all eternity. The Syriac and Arabic verſions render it, ſhall abide upon him; ſo ſome copies.

CHAP. IV.

Ver. 1. WHEN therefore the Lord knew, &c.] Or Jeſus, as ſome copies, and the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions read; who is Lord of all, Lord of Lords, the one and only Lord of ſaints: and who knew all things as God; every man, and what is in man; who would believe in him, and who not, and who would betray him; he knew his adverſaries, what they thought, ſaid, or did; what was told them, and how it operated in them; and what were the ſecret motions of their hearts, and their moſt private counſels and deſigns: for this is not merely to be underſtood of his knowledge as man, which he might have by private intelligence from others; though what is here ſaid, might be true alſo in this ſenſe: how the Phariſees; the inveterate and implacable enemies of Chriſt, and particularly thoſe that dwelt at Jeruſalem, and were of the great Sanhedrim, or council of the nation: had heard; either by their ſpies, which they conſtantly kept about Chriſt; or by John's diſciples, who, through envy, might apply to the Sanhedrim, to put a ſtop to, or check upon, the baptiſm and miniſtry of Chriſt; or by common fame: that Jeſus made and baptized more diſciples than John; ſee ch. iii. 26. The method Chriſt took was, he firſt made men diſciples, and then baptized them; and the ſame he directed his apoſtles to, ſaying, go and teach, or diſciple all nations, baptizing them, &c. And this ſhould be a rule of conduct to us, to baptize only ſuch, who appear to have been made the diſciples of Chriſt: now a diſciple of Chriſt, is one that has learned of Chriſt, and has learned Chriſt; the way of life, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation by him; who is a believer in him; who has ſeen a beauty, glory, fulneſs, and ſuitableneſs in him, as a Saviour; and is come to him, and has ventured on him, and truſted in him; and who has been taught to deny himſelf, ſinful ſelf, and righteous ſelf; to part with his ſins, and to renounce his own righteouſneſs, and all dependance on it, for juſtification before God; and who has been made willing to leave and forſake all worldly things and advantages, and to bear all reproach, indignities, and perſecutions, for Chriſt's ſake: and ſuch who are Chriſt's diſciples in this ſenſe, are the only proper perſons to be baptized; theſe are they, that ought to put on this badge, and wear Chriſt's livery: nor can baptiſm be of any uſe to any others; for ſuch only are baptized into him, and into his death, and partake of the ſaving benefits of it; for whatſoever is not of faith, is ſin; and without it alſo, it is impoſſible to pleaſe God.

Ver. 2. Though Jeſus himſelf baptized not, &c.] And therefore as Nonnus obſerves, it was a falſe report that was made to the Phariſees; at leaſt in part, ſo far as concerns the act of baptizing: though it may be this is obſerved, not ſo much to ſhew the falſhood of that report, as to correct what is ſaid of Chriſt's baptizing; leſt it ſhould be underſtood, as if he baptized in his own perſon; whereas he did not, that not ſo well comporting with his greatneſs and majeſty: wherefore the king did not baptize in water, as Nonnus expreſſes it, but left that for his diſciples and ſervants to do; he had other and greater work to perform, as to preach the Goſpel, and work miracles, heal diſeaſes, caſt out devils, &c. And beſides, had another ſort of baptiſm, of a more excellent nature to adminiſter, namely, the baptiſm of the Spirit; and ſince water baptiſm is adminiſtered in his name, as well as in the name of the Father and of the Spirit, it does not ſeem that it would have been adminiſtered with that propriety by himſelf, in his own name; add to which, as is alſo obſerved by others, it might have occaſioned contentions and diſputes among the baptized, had ſome been baptized by Chriſt, and others by his diſciples; the one valuing themſelves on that account, above the others. The Perſic verſion indeed ſuggeſts, as if both Chriſt and his diſciples baptized, rendering the words thus; Jeſus was not alone who baptized, but the diſciples alſo baptized: whereas the truth of the matter is, that Chriſt did not baptize in water at all: but his diſciples; they baptized in his name, and by his orders, ſuch who were firſt made diſciples by him.

Ver. 3. He left Judea, &c.] Where he had been for ſome time: at the feaſt of the paſſover he went up to Jeruſalem, and after a ſhort ſtay there, he came into the country part of Judea, where he tarried longer; and in both about the ſpace of eight months; for it was now but four months to harveſt, which began at the paſſover; ſee ch. ii. 13. and iii. 22. and iv. 35. And now upon the Phariſees being made acquainted with his ſucceſs in theſe parts, he leaves them; not through fear of them, but becauſe he would not irritate and provoke them, and ſtir up their malice and envy againſt him, which might put them upon meaſures to ſeek to take away his life; whereas his time was not yet come, and he had other work to do elſewhere: and departed again into Galilee; where he had ſpent the greateſt part of his time, in private life; from whence he came to Jordan unto John, to be baptized by him; and after that went thither again, where he wrought his firſt miracle: and now having been in Judea ſome time, he removes to Galilee again; and of this journey of his thither, after the impriſonment of John, an account is given, in Matt. iv. 12, 13. The Perſic verſion leaves out the word again, and ſo do the Alexandrian copy, and many copies; but is by others retained, and very juſtly.

Ver. 4. And he muſt needs go through Samaria.] Not the city, but the country of Samaria; for the way to Galilee from Judea, lay through the midſt of Samaria; nor was there any other way, without going a great way about; ſee Luke ix. 51, 52. and xvii. 11. and which is alſo confirmed by Joſephus [c]: and this accounts for his going through Samaria, conſiſtent with his forbidding his apoſtles going in the way of the Gentiles, or into any of the cities of the Samaritans; ſince here was a neceſſity for it, or otherwiſe he himſelf would not have gone, where he forbid his diſciples; though the prohibition may be underſtood, not of bare going into a Samaritan city; for it was lawful for them, notwithſtanding that, to go into one of them, as appears from ver. 8. and Luke ix. 52. but of going to preach there, Matt. x. 5, 6, 7. And beſides this neceſſity, there was another thing that lay upon him, and obliged him to take this tour, and that is, the calling and converſion of a certain woman, and other Samaritans, whom the Father had given to him, and he was to redeem by his blood; and the time of whoſe effectual vocation was now come; and therefore he muſt needs go this way, and at this particular time. The Arabic and Perſic verſions repreſent it, as a purpoſe and determination in his mind to go this way.

Ver. 5. Then cometh he to a city of Samaria, which is called Sychar, &c.] Now called Neapolis [d]; the ſame with Sichem, or Shechem, as appears from its ſituation, near to the parcel of ground that Jacob gave to his ſon Joſeph; ſee Gen. xxxiii. 18, 19. and xlviii. 22. and Joſh. xxiv. 32. and is either the ſame, only its termination is changed from em into ar, as Achan into Achar, 1 Chron. ii. 7. Or it is a new name that was given it, and by which it went in the times of Chriſt; and might be ſo called, either from, סוכר, Socher, which ſignifies a grave; becauſe here, Joſeph and the reſt of the patriarchs were buried, Joſh. xxiv. 32. Acts vii. 16. Or rather, it was a name of reproach, and ſo called, from, שכר, drunken; ſince the Ephraimites, the poſterity of Joſeph, which dwelt in theſe parts, were infamous for the ſin of drunkenneſs; ſee Iſa. xxviii. 1. Hence Sychar Sichem, is drunken Sichem; mention is made in the Talmud [e], of a place called, סיכרא, Sichra. The parcel of ground, or of a field, as in Gen. xxxiii. 19. and Joſh. xxiv. 32. is in the Perſic verſion, called a vineyard; and ſo Nonnus renders it, a field planted with vines; and which may ſerve to confirm the above conjecture, concerning Sychar being a nick name.

Ver. 6. Now Jacob's well was there, &c.] So called, either becauſe it was dug by him; or becauſe he and his family made uſe of it, when in thoſe parts, as in ver. 12. though no mention is made of it elſewhere, unleſs any reference is had to it in the bleſſing of Joſeph, to whom this place belonged, Gen. xlix. 22. as Dr. Lightfoot thinks, or in Deut. xxxiii. 28. as Grotius ſuggeſts: in the Talmud [f] there is mention made, of, עין סוכר, the fountain of Sochar; and may not improperly be rendered, the well of Sychar: but whether the ſame with this, is not certain; that appears to be a great way from Jeruſalem, as this alſo was, even 40 miles: Jeſus therefore being wearied with his journey; having travelled on foot, from Judea thither; and he having a body like to ours, ſubject to wearineſs, and which proves the truth and reality of it, was greatly fatigued; having very probably travelled all that morning, if not a day, or days before: ſat thus on the well; or by it; by the ſide of it, upon the brink of it, as Nonnus paraphraſes it, upon the bare ground. The Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions, leave out, thus; and the Ethiopic verſion reads it, there; but it is rightly retained, and is emphatical; and ſignifies, that he ſat like a weary perſon, glad to ſet himſelf down any where; and not caring how or where, he ſat to reſt his weary limbs: and it was about the ſixth hour; about twelve o'clock at noon. The Ethiopic verſion adds by way of explanation, and it was then noon; and all the Oriental verſions omit ὡσει, about; rendering it, it was the ſixth hour: and now Chriſt had been travelling all the morning, and it was a time of day to take ſome refreſhment, which as yet he had not, the diſciples being gone to buy food; and a time of day alſo, when the ſun, if out, and has any ſtrength, beats with its greateſt vehemence; and all which conſidered, it is no wonder that he ſhould be weary, faint, and thirſty.

Ver. 7. There cometh a woman of Samaria, &c.] Or out of Samaria; not out of the city of Samaria, but out of the country of Samaria; out of Sychar, a city of Samaria: her coming was not by chance, but by the providence of God, and agreeable to his purpoſe, who orders all things according to the counſel of his will; and it is an amazing inſtance of grace, that a woman, a Samaritan woman, a lewd and infamous one, ſhould be a choſen veſſel of ſalvation, ſhould be the object of divine favour, and be effectually called by the grace of God; when ſo many wiſe, learned, and religious men in Judea, were paſſed by; and not only ſo, but ſhe was the happy means of conveying the knowledge of the Saviour, to many of her neighbours: ſhe came indeed, to draw water; for her preſent temporal uſe and ſervice; ſhe little thought of meeting at Jacob's well, with Chriſt the fountain of gardens, and well of living water; ſhe came for natural water, having no notion of water in a ſpiritual ſenſe; or of carrying back with her the water of life, even a well of it, ſpringing up to everlaſting life: Jeſus ſaith unto her, give me to drink; that is, water to drink, out of the pot or pitcher, ſhe brought with her, for he was athirſt; which is another proof of the truth of his human nature, and of his taking it, with the ſinleſs infirmities of it: though indeed this requeſt was made, to introduce a diſcourſe with the woman, he having a more violent thirſt, and a ſtronger deſire, after the welfare of her immortal ſoul.

Ver. 8. For his diſciples were gone away, &c.] This is related, not ſo much to give a reaſon why Chriſt aſked the woman for water, becauſe his diſciples were not preſent, to miniſter to him; but rather to ſhow, that Chriſt took the opportunity, in their abſence, to converſe with her; partly to avoid the ſcandal and offence they might take, at his converſation with her, being a Samaritan; as it appears to have been aſtoniſhing to them, when they found him talking with her, ver. 27. And partly, that he might not put the woman to ſhame and bluſhing before them all; he chuſes to tell her of the ſins of her former life, in a private way. The diſciples were gone unto the city; to the city Sychar, which was hard by; and their buſineſs there, was to buy meat: for though it is ſaid, in the following verſe, that the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans; yet this is not to be underſtood in the ſtricteſt ſenſe; for they had dealings with them in ſome reſpects, as will be ſeen hereafter; particularly their food, eatables, and drinkables, were lawful to be bought of them, and uſed: it is ſaid by R. Juda bar Pazi, in the name of R. Ame [g], "a roaſted egg of the "Cuthites, (or Samaritans) lo, this is lawful: ſays "R. Jacob bar Acha, in the name of R. Lazar, "the boiled victuals of the Cuthites, (Samaritans) "lo, theſe are free; this he ſays concerning boiled "food, becauſe it is not their cuſtom to put wine "and vinegar into it," for theſe were forbidden: hence it is often ſaid [h], that "the unleavened bread "of the Cuthites, (or Samaritans) is lawful, and "that a man is allowed the uſe of it at the paſſover." And there was a time when their wine was lawful; for one of their canons runs thus [i]; "he that buys "wine of the Cuthites, (Samaritans) ſays, the two "logs that I ſhall ſeparate, lo, they are the firſt-"fruits, &c." It is indeed ſaid in one place, by R. Eliezer [k], "that he that eats the bread of the Cuthites, (or Samaritans) is as if he eat ſwines fleſh; "to whom (who reported this) ſays (R. Akiba) be "ſilent, I will not tell you what R. Eliezer thinks "concerning it." Upon which the commentators obſerve [l], that this is not to be underſtood ſtrictly; becauſe he that eats bread of the Samaritans, does not deſerve ſtripes according to the law, but according to the conſtitutions of the wiſe men; but theſe, Chriſt and his diſciples had no regard to.

Ver. 9. Then ſaith the woman of Samaria unto him, &c.] In a ſcoffing, jeering way: how is it, that thou being a Jew; which ſhe might know, by his language and his dreſs: aſkeſt drink of me, which am a woman of Samaria? not that the waters of Samaria were unlawful for a Jew to drink of; for as "the land of the Cuthites, (or Samaritans) was "pure, or clean, ſo, מקויתיה, their collections of "water, and their habitations, and their ways "were clean [m]," and might be uſed; but becauſe the Jews uſed no familiarity with the Samaritans, nor would they receive any courteſy or kindneſs from them, as follows: for the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans; ſome take theſe to be the words of the Evangeliſt, commenting upon, and explaining the words of the woman; but they ſeem rather to be her own words, giving a reaſon why ſhe returned ſuch an anſwer; and which muſt be underſtood, not in the ſtricteſt ſenſe, as if they had no dealings at all with them: indeed in ſome things they had no dealings with them, and at ſome certain times; hence that diſcourſe of the Samaritans with a Jewiſh Rabbi [n]. "The Cuthites, (or Samaritans) enquired of R. Abbu, your fathers, "היו מסתפקין, uſed to deal with us (or miniſter to "us, or ſupply us with neceſſaries) wherefore do "not ye deal with us? (or take a ſupply from us;) "he replied unto them, your fathers did not corrupt their works, you have corrupted your "works." They might not uſe their wine and vinegar, nor admit them to their tables; they ſay of a man [o], "becauſe the Cuthites, (or Samaritans) "eat at his table, it was the reaſon why his children went into captivity——and further add, "that whoever invites a Cuthite, (or Samaritan) "into his houſe, and miniſters to him, is the "cauſe of captivity to his children." And they forbid a man to enter into partnerſhip with a Cuthite, (or Samaritan [p];) and particularly, "three "days before the feaſts of idolaters (for ſuch they "reckoned the Samaritans, as well as others) it is "forbidden to have any commerce with them, to "borrow of them, or lend to them [q], &c." But then at other times, and in other reſpects, they had dealings with them; they might go into their cities and buy food of them, as the diſciples did, ver. 8. they might ſend their wheat to a Samaritan miller, to be ground [r]; and as it appears from the above citations, their houſes and habitations were clean, and might be lodged in, with which compare Luke ix. 52. the poor of the Samaritans, were maintained with the poor of Iſrael [s]: wherefore the ſenſe is, as Dr. Lightfoot obſerves, that the Jews refuſed to receive the leaſt favour or kindneſs, at the hand of a Samaritan; and therefore the woman might juſtly wonder, that Chriſt ſhould aſk ſo ſmall a favour of her, as a little water. The reaſon of this diſtance and averſion, was religion; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion, rather paraphraſing than tranſlating, renders the words, the Jews do not agree in religion, nor do they communicate with the Samaritans, nor mix together: and this was of long ſtanding, and had been occaſioned and increaſed by various incidents; for when the ten tribes revolted in Jeroboam's time, the calves were ſet up in Dan and Bethel, in order to draw off the people from worſhip at Jeruſalem, which gave great umbrage to the tribes of Judah and Benjamin; and when the ten tribes were carried away captive by the king of Aſſyria, he planted the cities of Samaria with colonies in their room, conſiſting of heatheniſh and idolatrous perſons, brought from Babylon, and other places; to whom he ſent a prieſt, to inſtruct them in the manner of the God of the land; but with theſe inſtructions, they ſtill retained their idols, and their idolatrous practices; ſee 2 Kings xvii. 24—41. which muſt render them odious to the Jews: and theſe were the principal adverſaries of the Jews, after their return from captivity; and diſcouraged them, and weakened their hands, in the building of the ſecond temple: but what lateſt, and moſt of all had fixed this averſion and enmity, was this; Manaſſeh, brother to Jaddua the high-prieſt, having married Sanballat's daughter, governour of Samaria, was for it removed from the prieſthood; who applying to his father-in-law, he propoſed building for him a temple on mount Gerizzim, and making him an high-prieſt; for which he obtained leave of Alexander the great, and accordingly built one, and made his ſon-in-law high-prieſt; which drew a great many profligate Jews over to him, who mixing with the Samaritans, ſet up a worſhip, religion, and prieſthood, in diſtinction from the Jews; and this was ever after, a matter of contention and quarrel between theſe people, and the reaſon why they would have no dealings with them.

Ver. 10. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto her, &c.] In a very ſerious manner, in a different way from hers: if thou knewest the gift of God; meaning, not the Holy Spirit with his gifts and graces, as ſome think, but himſelf; for the following clauſe is explanatory of it: and who it is that ſaith to thee, give me to drink; and Chriſt is alſo ſpoken of in the Old Teſtament, as the gift of God, Iſa. ix. 6. and he had lately ſpoken of himſelf as ſuch, ch. iii. 16. and he is, by way of eminency, the gift of God; which is comprehenſive of all others, is exceeding large, and very ſuitable to the wants and caſes of men; and is irrevocable, unchangeable, and unſpeakable: for he is God's gift, as he is his own and only begotten Son; and he is given for a covenant to the people, with all the promiſes and bleſſings of it; and as an head, both of eminence and influence; and to be a Saviour of them, and a ſacrifice for their ſins; and as the bread of life, for them to feed and live upon; of which gift, men are naturally ignorant, as this woman was: they know not the dignity of his perſon; nor the nature and uſefulneſs of his offices; nor the way of peace, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation by him; nor do they ſee any amiableneſs, or lovelineſs in him; and whatever notional knowledge ſome natural men may have of him, they know him not ſpiritually and experimentally, or as the gift of God to them: thou wouldſt have aſked of him; a favour and benefit; for ſuch who truly know Chriſt, the worth and value of him, and their need of him, will apply to him for grace, as they have encouragement to do; ſince all grace is treaſured up in him, and he gives it freely, and upbraideth not; and ſouls are invited to aſk it of him, and take it freely; nor is it to be had any where elſe: but knowledge of Chriſt, is abſolutely neceſſary, to aſking any thing of him; for till he is known, he'll not be applied to; but when he is made known to any, in his fulneſs and ſuitableneſs, they will have recourſe to him, and aſk grace and mercy of him; and which is freely had: the Vulgate Latin very wrongly adds, perhaps; reading it, perhaps thou wouldſt have aſked; whereas our Lord's meaning is, that ſhe would certainly have aſked: and he would have given thee living water; pardoning and juſtifying grace, every branch of ſanctifying grace, and all the ſupplies of it; ſo called, becauſe his grace quickens ſinners dead in ſin, and dead in law, and in their own apprehenſions; and cauſes them to live in themſelves, and before God; and becauſe it refreſhes and comforts, revives and chears, and is like rivers of water in a dry land; and becauſe it maintains and ſupports ſpiritual life in their ſouls; and it ever abides, and continues, and ſprings up unto everlaſting life: for the alluſion is to ſpring water, that bubbles up in a fountain, and is ever running; for ſuch water, the Jews call living water; ſee Gen. xxvi. 19. where in the Hebrew text 'tis living water; which we, and alſo the Chaldee paraphraſe, render ſpringing water. So living waters with them, are ſaid to be always flowing, and never ceaſe [t].

Ver. 11. The woman ſaith unto him, Sir, &c.] Which was an uſual way in thoſe countries, of addreſſing men, and eſpecially ſtrangers; and expreſſes no uncommon reſpect to Chriſt, of whoſe dignity and greatneſs, ſhe was entirely ignorant; and at whom ſhe was now ſcoffing; for ſo the following words are to be underſtood: thou haſt nothing to draw with; no pail, or bucket, or rope, to let it down with, as Nonnus adds; for it ſeems, there was no bucket, or veſſel, faſtened at the well for common uſe, but every one brought one with them, when they came to draw: though it is pretty much there was not one; ſince, according to common uſage, and even of the Jews [u], "a public well had, קול, a bucket, or pitcher; but a "private well had no bucket:" and the well is deep; that which is now called Jacob's well, is by ſome ſaid to be forty cubits deep, and by others thirty-five yards: from whence then haſt thou that living water? this ſhe ſaid, in a ſneering, ſcoffing manner: ſhe reaſoned with him, either that he muſt have it out of this well; but that could not be, ſince he had no veſſel to draw with, and the well was ſo deep, that he could not come at the water without one; or he muſt have it from ſome neighbouring ſpring; upon which ſhe ſcoffs at him in the following manner.

Ver. 12. Art thou greater than our father Jacob, &c.] A perſon of greater worth and character than he, who was content to drink of this water; or wiſer and more knowing than he, who could find out no better fountain of water in all theſe parts? ſhe calls Jacob the father of them, according to the common notion and boaſting of theſe people, when it ſerved their turn; otherwiſe they were not the deſcendants of Jacob; for after the ten tribes were carried away captive by the king of Aſſyria, he placed in their room, in the cities of Samaria, men from Babylon, Cuthah, Ava, Hamath, and Sepharvaim, heatheniſh and idolatrous people; ſee 2 Kings xvii. 24. And from theſe, the then Samaritans ſprung; only upon Sanballat's building a temple on mount Gerizzim, for Manaſſeh his ſon-in-law, when put away from the prieſthood by the Jews, for his marriage of his daughter, ſeveral wicked perſons of the like ſort, came out of Judea, and joined themſelves to the Samaritans: and ſuch a mixed medley of people were they at this time, though they boaſted of Jacob as their father, as this woman did; and ſo to this day, they draw their genealogy from Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob; and particularly call Joſeph their father, and ſay, from whence are we, but from the tribe of Joſeph the juſt, from Ephraim[w]? as they formerly did[x]; "R. Meir ſaw a Samaritan, he ſaid to him, from whence comeſt thou? (that is, from what family) he anſwered, from the (tribe) of Joſeph." Which gave us the well; Jacob gave it indeed to Joſeph and his poſterity, along with the parcel of ground in which it was; ſee ver. 5. but not to this mixed company: and drank thereof himſelf, and his children, and his cattle: which ſhows both the goodneſs and plenty of the water: though our Lord had ſpoken of living water, this woman underſtood him of no other water, but ſpring water; called living water, from its motion, becauſe it is continually ſpringing up, bubbling, and ever running: ſo carnal perſons, when they hear of ſpiritual things under earthly metaphors, think of nothing but carnal things; as Nicodemus, when Chriſt talked of being born again; and the Jews at Capernaum, when he diſcourſed concerning eating his fleſh, and drinking his blood; for ſpiritual things are neither known nor received, by the natural man.

[t] Bartenora in Miſn. Negaim, c. 14. §. 1.

[u] T. Hieroſ. Erubin, fol. 20. 2.

Ver. 13. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto her, &c.] In a mild and gentle manner, patiently bearing all her ſcoffs and flouts, and continuing to inſtruct and inform her, concerning this living water, ſhewing the preferableneſs of it to all others: whoſoever drinketh of this water; meaning in that well called Jacob's well, or any other common water: ſhall thirſt again; as this woman had often done, and would again, as ſhe herſelf knew, ver. 15. and as Jeſus did, who very likely afterwards drank of it, John xix. 28. For though water allays heat, quenches thirſt, and refreſhes and revives the ſpirits for a while, yet in proceſs of time, natural heat increaſes, and thirſt returns, and there's a neceſſity of drinking water again.

Ver. 14. But whoſoever drinketh of the water that I ſhall give him, &c.] Meaning, the Spirit and his grace; ſee ch. vii. 38, 39. and which he more than once ſpeaks of, as his gift here, and in the context: of which, whoever truly partakes, ſhall never thirſt; either after ſinful luſts and pleaſures, and his former vicious way of living, which he now diſreliſhes: not but there are deſires and luſtings after carnal things in regenerate perſons, as there were luſtings in the Iſraelites, after the onions, garlick, and fleſh-pots in Egypt, when they were come out from thence; yet theſe are not ſo ſtrong, prevalent, and predominant; they are checked and reſtrained by the grace of God; ſo that they do not hanker after ſin as they did, nor drink up iniquity like water, or commit ſin with greedineſs, as before: or elſe it means thirſting after the grace of God; thirſty perſons are invited to take and drink of the water of life freely, and are pronounced bleſſed; and 'tis promiſed, that they ſhall be filled, or ſatisfied; yet not ſo in this life, that they ſhall never thirſt after, or deſire more; for as they need more grace, and it is promiſed them, they thirſt after it, and deſire it; and the more they taſte and partake of it, the more they deſire it: but the ſenſe is, either as ſome read the words, they ſhall not thirſt for ever; though they may for a time, and be in a diſtreſſed condition for want of a ſupply of it, yet they ſhall not always; God will open rivers and fountains for them, and give drink to his people, his choſen; and in the other ſtate, they ſhall hunger and thirſt no more; for the Lamb ſhall lead them to fountains of living waters: or rather, they ſhall never thirſt, ſo as to be like the thirſty and parched earth, dried up, and have no moiſture in them; for however this may ſeem ſometimes to be their caſe, God will, and does, pour out water and floods upon them; yea, that grace which is infuſed into their ſouls, is an abundant and an abiding principle, which will preſerve them from languiſhing, ſo as to periſh: but the water that I ſhall give him, ſhall be in him a well of water; which denotes the plenty of it; for the grace of God given at converſion, is exceeding abundant, it ſuper-abounds all the aboundings of ſin; it comes in large flows into the hearts of regenerate perſons, and flows out of them, as rivers of living water: and which alſo abides, for it continues ſpringing up into everlaſting life; it is a ſeed which remains, an immortal and never dying principle; it is inſeparably connected with eternal life; it is the beginning of it, and it iſſues in it; whoever has grace, ſhall have glory; and whoever are called, ſanctified, juſtified, and pardoned, ſhall be glorified: ſuch is the nature, influence, and uſe of this living water, in Chriſt's gift: the words of the law are, in the Targum on Cant. iv. 15. compared to a well of living water.

Ver. 15. The woman ſaith unto him, Sir, &c.] See the note on ver. 11. give me this water, that I thirſt not. The Syriac and Perſic verſions add, again: neither come hither; the Ethiopic verſion adds here, again; to draw. This ſhe ſaid alſo, in the ſame ſneering and ſcoffing way, as her talking of not thirſting and coming thither to draw water, ſhews; and it is as if ſhe had ſaid, pray give me ſome of this fine water you talk of, that I may never thirſt again; and ſo have no occaſion to be at all this fatigue and trouble, to come daily to this well for water: though ſome think, that ſhe now ſpoke ſeriouſly, having ſome little knowledge of what our Lord meant by living water, but with a mixture of much ignorance, and that ſhe heartily deſired it; but the reaſon ſhe gives, ſhews the contrary.

Ver. 16. Jeſus ſaith unto her, &c.] Obſerving that ſhe continued an ignorant ſcoffer at him, and his words, determined to take another method with her; and convince her, that he was not a common and ordinary perſon ſhe was converſing with, as ſhe took him to be; and alſo what a ſinner ſhe was, and what a vicious courſe of life ſhe had lived; ſo that ſhe might ſee that ſhe ſtood in need of him, as the gift of God, and Saviour of men; and of the grace he had been ſpeaking of, under the notion of living water: ſaying to her, go, call thy huſband, and come hither; go directly from hence to the city of Sychar, and call thy huſband, and come back hither along with him again: this Chriſt ſaid, not to have him come to teach and inſtruct him, and as if he would more readily and eaſily underſtand him, and that he might be with her, a partaker of the ſame grace; but to bring on ſome further converſation, by which ſhe would underſtand that he knew her ſtate and condition, and what a courſe of life ſhe now lived, and ſo bring her under a conviction of her ſin and danger, and need of him and his grace.

Ver. 17. The woman anſwered and ſaid, I have no huſband, &c.] Which was a truth ſhe would not have ſpoke at another time and place, or to any of her neighbours; but Chriſt being a ſtranger, and no odium incurring upon her by it; and this ſerving a purpoſe to excuſe her going to call him, ſhe declares the truth of the matter: Jeſus ſaid unto her, thou haſt well ſaid, I have no huſband; this is the truth, it is really fact, and is the true ſtate of the caſe, between thee and him, who goes for thy huſband.

Ver. 18. For thou haſt had five huſbands, &c.] Which ſhe either had had lawfully, and had buried one after another; and which was no crime, and might be: the Sadducees propoſe a caſe to Chriſt, in which a woman is ſaid to have had ſeven huſbands ſucceſſively, in a lawful manner, Matt. xxii. 25—28. Or rather, ſhe had had ſo many, and had been divorced from every one of them, for adultery; for for no other cauſe it ſhould ſeem, did the Samaritans divorce; ſeeing that they only received the law of Moſes, and rejected, at leaſt, many of the traditions of the elders; and ſince they are particularly ſaid [y], “not to be expert in the law of marriages and divorces:” and the rather this may ſeem to be the caſe, as Dr. Lightfoot obſerves; ſince theſe huſbands are mentioned, as well as he with whom ſhe lived in an adulterous manner; and which ſuggeſts, that ſhe had not lived honeſtly with them: and he whom thou now haſt, is not thy huſband; that is, not thy lawful huſband, as the Perſic verſion reads, and Nonnus paraphraſes; being not married to him at all, though they co-habited as man and wife, when there was no ſuch relation between them: in that ſaidſt thou truly; or that which is truth: thus Chriſt the omniſcient God, who knew her full well, and the whole of her paſt infamous converſation, and her preſent lewd and wicked way of living, expoſes all unto her.

Ver. 19. The woman ſaith unto him, Sir, &c.] With another countenance, and a different air and geſture, with another accent and tone of ſpeech, dropping her ſcoffs and jeers: I perceive that thou art a prophet; ſuch an one as Samuel was, who could tell Saul what was in his heart, and that his father's aſſes were found, and where they were, 1 Sam. ix. 19, 20. and as Eliſha, whoſe heart went with his ſervant Gehazi, when Naaman turned to him to meet him, and give him preſents; and who could tell, e'er the king's meſſenger came to him, that the ſon of a murderer had ſent to take away his head, 2 Kings v. 26. and vi. 32. And ſuch a prophet, that had ſuch a ſpirit of diſcerning, this woman took Chriſt to be; and who indeed is greater than a prophet, and is the omniſcient God; who knows all mens hearts, thoughts, words, and actions, and needs not that any ſhould teſtify of them to him; for he knows what is in them, and done by them; and can tell them all that ever they did, as he did this woman, ver. 29. Now in order either to ſhift off the diſcourſe from this ſubject, which touched her to the quick; or elſe being truly ſenſible of her ſin, and willing to reform, and for the future to worſhip God in the place and manner he had directed, ſhe addreſſed Chriſt in the following words.

Ver. 20. Our fathers worſhipped in this mountain, &c.] Mount Gerizzim, which was juſt by, and within ſight; ſo that the woman could point to it; it was ſo near to Shechem, or Sychar, that Jotham's voice was heard from the top of it thither, Judges ix. 6, 7. By the fathers, this woman claims as theirs, are meant, not the immediate anceſtors of the Samaritans, or thoſe only of ſome few generations paſt; but the patriarchs Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, whoſe deſcendants they would be thought to be; and they improved every inſtance of their worſhipping in theſe parts, in favour of this mountain, being a ſacred place. And Abraham did indeed build an altar to the Lord, in the plain of Moreh, Gen. xii. 6, 7. and which the Jews themſelves [z] own, is the ſame with Sichem; but their tradition which Theophylact reports, that Iſaac was offered upon the mount of Gerizzim, is entirely falſe: Jacob 'tis true, came to Shalem, a city of Shechem; and upon this very ſpot of ground, the parcel of a field, he bought of the children of Hammor, and gave to his ſon Joſeph, he built an altar, and called it El-elohe Iſrael, Gen. xxxiii. 18, 19, 20. And alſo upon this very mountain, the tribe of Joſeph, with others ſtood, when they were come over Jordan, and bleſſed the people; all which circumſtances, the Samaritans failed not to make uſe of in vindication of themſelves, and their worſhip in this mountain; and which this woman might be acquainted with, and might refer unto: but as for any temple, or place of worſhip on this mount, there was none till of late years, even after the ſecond temple was built. The occaſion of it, as Joſephus [a] relates, was this; Manaſſeh, brother to Jaddua the high-prieſt, having married Nicaſſo, daughter of Sanballat, governour of Samaria, was on that account driven from the prieſthood; he fled to his father-in-law, and related the caſe to him, expreſſing great love to his daughter, and yet a regard to his office; upon which Sanballat propoſed to build him a temple on mount Gerizzim, for which he did not doubt of obtaining leave of Darius the Perſian monarch, and make him an high-prieſt. Darius being overcome by Alexander the great, Sanballat made his court to him, and petitioned him for the building of this temple, who granted him his requeſt; and accordingly he built one, and Manaſſeh became the high-prieſt; and many of the profligate Jews, that had married ſtrange wives, or violated the ſabbath, or had eat forbidden meat, came over and joined him. This temple we are told [b], was built about forty years after the ſecond temple at Jeruſalem; and ſtood two hundred years, and then was deſtroyed by Jochanan, the ſon of Simeon, the ſon of Mattathiah, who was called Hyrcanus, and ſo ſays Joſephus [c]; it might now be rebuilt: however, this did not put a ſtop to worſhip in this place, about which there were great contentions, between the Jews and the Samaritans; of which we have ſome inſtances, in the writings of the former: it is ſaid [d], that “R. Jonathan went to pray in Jeruſalem, and paſſed by that mountain (the Gloſs ſays, mount Gerizzim) and a certain Samaritan ſaw him, and ſaid to him, whither art thou going? he replied, that he was going to pray at Jeruſalem; he ſaid to him, is it not better for thee to pray in this bleſſed mountain, and not in that dunghill houſe? he replied, why is it bleſſed? he anſwered, becauſe it was not overflowed by the waters of the flood; the thing was hid from the eyes of R. Jonathan, and he could not return an anſwer.” This ſtory is told elſewhere [e], with a little variation, and more plainly as to the place, thus; “it happened to R. Jonathan, that he went to Neapolis, of the Cuthites, or Samaritans, (i. e. to Sichem, for Sichem is now called Naplous) and he was riding upon an aſs, and an herdſman with him; a certain Samaritan joined “ himſelf to them: when they came to mount Gerizzim, the Samaritan ſaid to R. Jonathan, how came it to paſs that we are come to this holy mountain? R. Jonathan replied, whence comes it to be holy? the Samaritan anſwered him, becauſe it was not hurt by the waters of the flood.” Much the ſame ſtory is told of R. Iſhmael bar R. Joſe [f]. It is to be obſerved in this account, that the Samaritans call this mountain the holy mountain, they imagined there was ſomething ſacred in it; and the bleſſed mountain, or the mountain of bleſſing; no doubt, becauſe the bleſſings were pronounced upon it; tho' a very poor reaſon is given by them in the above paſſages. And they not only urged the above inſtances of the worſhip of the patriarchs at, or about this place, which this woman refers to; but even falſified a paſſage in the Pentateuch, as is generally thought, in favour of this mount; for in Deut. xxvii. 4. inſtead of mount Ebal, in the Samaritan Pentateuch mount Gerizzim is inſerted. So ſtood the caſe on one ſide of the queſtion; on the other hand, the Jews pleaded for the temple at Jeruſalem. And ye ſay, that in Jeruſalem is the place where men ought to worſhip; that is, in the temple there; who urged, and very rightly, that God had choſen that place to put his name, and fix his worſhip there; and had ordered them to come thither, and bring their offerings and ſacrifices, and to keep their paſſover and other feaſts; ſee Deut. xii. 5, 6. and xvi. 2. 2 Chron. ix. 12. This was built by Solomon, according to the command and direction of God, ſome hundreds of years before mount Gerizzim was made uſe of for religious worſhip; and they had not only theſe things to plead, but alſo the worſhip which was here given to God in this place before the temple was built upon it, which they failed not to do. So the Targumiſt on 2 Chron. iii. 1. enlarges on this head; “ and Solomon began to build the ſanctuary of the Lord in Jeruſalem, on mount Moriah, in the place where Abraham worſhipped and prayed in the name of the Lord: הוא אתר ארע פולחנא, this place is the land of worſhip; for there all generations worſhipped before the Lord; and there Abraham offered up his ſon Iſaac, for a burnt offering, and the Word of the Lord delivered him, and a ram was appointed in his ſtead; there Jacob prayed when he fled from Eſau his brother; there the angel of the Lord appeared to David, when he diſpoſed the ſacrifice in the place he bought of Ornan, in the floor of Ornan the Jebuſite.” And ſince, now there were ſo many things to be ſaid on each ſide of the queſtion, this woman deſires, that ſeeing Chriſt was a prophet, he would be pleaſed to give her his ſenſe of the matter, and inform her which was the right place of worſhip.

Ver. 21. Jeſus ſaith unto her, woman, believe me, &c.] In what I am now going to ſay, ſince you own me to be a prophet: the hour cometh; the time is at hand; it is very near; it is juſt coming: when ye ſhall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jeruſalem, worſhip the Father; that is, God, whom the Jews, and ſo the Samaritans, knew under the character of the Father of all men, as the creator and preſerver of them; for not God as the Father of Chriſt, or of the ſaints by adopting grace, is here intended, which this ignorant woman at leaſt had no knowledge of: and the reaſon of our Lord's ſpeaking after this manner, ſignifying, that ſhe need not trouble herſelf about the place of worſhip, was, partly, becauſe in a little time Jeruſalem, and the temple in it, would be deſtroyed, and not one ſtone left upon another; and that Samaria, and this mountain of Gerizzim, with whatſoever edifice might be upon it, would be laid deſolate, ſo that neither of them would continue long to be places of religious worſhip; and partly, becauſe all diſtinction of places in religion would entirely ceaſe; and one place would be as lawful, and as proper to worſhip in, as another; and men ſhould lift up holy hands, and pray, and offer up ſpiritual ſacrifices in every place, even from the riſing of the ſun, to the going down of the ſame, Mal. i. 11.

Ver. 22. Ye worſhip ye know not what, &c.] However, as to her queſtion, he more directly replies by condemning the Samaritans, and their ignorance in worſhip, and by approving the Jews; and ſo manifeſtly gives the preference to the Jews, not only with reſpect to the place, and object of worſhip, but with reſpect to knowledge and ſalvation. As for the Samaritans, he ſuggeſts, that they were ignorant, not only of the true object of worſhip, but knew not what they themſelves worſhipped; or, at leaſt, were not agreed in it. The original inhabitants of thoſe parts, from whence theſe Samaritans ſprung, were idolatrous heathens, placed by the king of Aſſyria in the room of the ten tribes he carried away captive; and theſe feared not the Lord, for they knew not the manner of the God of the land: wherefore lions were ſent among them, which ſlew many of them; upon which the king of Aſſyria ordered a prieſt to be ſent to inſtruct them: but notwithſtanding this, they had every one gods of their own, ſome one, and ſome another; and ſo ſerved divers graven images, they and their children, and their childrens children, to the time of the writer of the book of Kings; ſee 2 Kings xvii. 24—41. And tho' after Manaſſeh, and other Jews were come among them, and they had received the law of Moſes, they might have ſome knowledge of the true God, yet they glorified him not as God; and tho' they might in words profeſs him, yet in works they denied him; and even after this they are very highly charged by the Jews with idolatrous practices on this mount. Sometimes they ſay [g] the Cutbites, or Samaritans, worſhipped fire; and at other times, and which chiefly prevails with them, they aſſert [h], that their wiſe men, upon ſearching, found that they worſhipped the image of a dove on mount Gerizzim; and ſometimes they ſay [i], they worſhipped the idols, the ſtrange Gods, or Teraphim, which Jacob hid under the oak in Sichem; which laſt, if true, may ſerve to illuſtrate theſe words of Chriſt, that they worſhipped they knew not what, ſince they worſhipped idols hid in the mount. “ R. Iſhmael bar Joſe, they ſay [k], went to Neapolis, (Sichem, called Naplous) the Cutbites, or Samaritans came to him, (to perſuade him to worſhip with them in their mountain); he ſaid unto them, I will ſhew you that ye don't worſhip at this mountain, but the images which are hid under it; for it is written, Gen. xxxv. 4. and Jacob hid them under the oak which was by Shechem.” And elſewhere [l] it is reported of the ſame Rabbi, that he went to Jeruſalem to pray, as before related on ver. 20. and after what paſſed between him, and the Samaritan he met with at mount Gerizzim, before fore mentioned, he added; “ and ſaid to him, I “ will tell you what ye are like, (ye are like) to a “ dog that luſts after carrion; ſo becauſe ye know “ the idols are hid under it, (the mountain) as it “ is written, Gen. xxxv. 4. and Jacob hid them, “ therefore ye luſt after it: they ſaid—this man “ knows that idols are hid here, and perhaps he'll “ take them away; and they conſulted together to “ kill him: he aroſe, and made his eſcape in the “ night.” But this was not the caſe of the Jews: we know what we worſhip; Chriſt puts himſelf among them, for he was a Jew, as the woman took him to be; and, as man, was a worſhipper of God; he feared, loved, and obeyed God; he truſted in him, and prayed unto him; though, as God, he was the object of worſhip himſelf: and the true worſhippers among the Jews, of which ſort Chriſt was, knew God, whom they worſhipped, ſpiritually and ſavingly; and the generality of that people had right notions of the God of Iſrael, having the oracles, and ſervice of God, and being inſtructed out of Moſes, and the prophets: for ſalvation is of the Jews; the promiſes of ſalvation, and of a Saviour, were made to them, when the Gentiles were ſtrangers to them; the means of ſalvation, and of the knowledge of it, as the word, ſtatutes, and ordinances, were enjoyed by them, when others were ignorant of them; and the Meſſiah, who is ſometimes ſtiled ſalvation, ſee Gen. xlix. 18. Pſ. xiv. 7. Luke ii. 30. was not only propheſied of in their books, and promiſed unto them, but came of them, as well as to them; and the number of the ſaved ones had been for many hundreds of years, and ſtill was among them; the line of election ran among them, and few among the Gentiles were called and ſaved, as yet.

Ver. 23. But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worſhippers, &c.] The worſhippers of the true God, and who worſhip in a right manner, whether Jews or Samaritans, or of whatſoever nation: ſhall worſhip the Father; the one true God, the Father of Spirits, and of all fleſh living: in ſpirit; in oppoſition to all carnal conceptions of him, as if he was a corporeal being, or circumſcribed in ſome certain place, dwelling in temples made with hands, or was to be worſhipped with mens hands; and in diſtinction from the carnal worſhip of the Jews, which lay greatly in the obſervation of carnal ordinances: and this ſhews they ſhould not worſhip with their bodies only, for bodily exerciſe profiteth little; but with their ſouls or ſpirits, with their whole hearts engaged therein; and by, and under the influence and aſſiſtance of the Spirit of God, without whom men cannot perform worſhip, neither prayer, praiſe, preaching, or hearing, aright: and in truth; in oppoſition to hypocriſy, with true hearts, in the ſingleneſs, ſincerity, and integrity of their ſouls; and in diſtinction from Jewiſh ceremonies, which were only ſhadows, and had not the truth and ſubſtance of things in them; and according to the word of truth, the Goſpel of ſalvation; and in Chriſt, who is the truth, the true tabernacle, in, and thro' whom acceſs is had to God, prayer is made to him, and every part of religious worſhip with acceptance: ſo Enoch is ſaid, פלח בקושטא, to worſhip in truth, before the Lord, in the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem, in Gen. v. 24. And it may be that the worſhip of all the three perſons in the Godhead, as more diſtinctly performed under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, is here intended: for the words may be thus read, ſhall worſhip the Father, with the Spirit, and with the truth; ſo the prepoſition εν is rendered in Eph. vi. 2. and elſewhere; and then the ſenſe is, they ſhall worſhip the Father; the firſt perſon in the Trinity, who is the Father of Chriſt, his only-begotten Son, and together and equally with him the Spirit; the holy Spirit, as the Ethiopic verſion reads; and Nonnus calls it the divine Spirit: and the rather he may be thought to be intended, ſince it follows in the next verſe, the Spirit is God; for ſo the words lie in the Greek text; and are ſo rendered in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions; and therefore is the proper object of religious worſhip, whoſe temples the ſaints are, with whom they have communion, to whom they pray, and in whoſe name they are baptized: and alſo together with the truth; with Chriſt the way, the truth, and the life; who is the true God, and eternal life; and who is equally to be worſhipped as the Father and Spirit, as he is by the angels in heaven, and by the ſaints on earth; who pray unto him, truſt in him, and are alſo baptized in his name, as in the name of the other two perſons: and the rather this may be thought to be the ſenſe, ſince Chriſt is ſpeaking, not of the manner, but of the object of worſhip, in the preceding verſe: for the Father ſeeketh ſuch to worſhip him; it being agreeable to him to be worſhipped in the manner, as above related; and his deſire is, that the Son and Spirit ſhould be honoured equally as himſelf; and ſuch worſhippers he has found, having made them ſuch, both among the Jews and Gentiles; and ſuch only are acceptable to him; ſee Phil. iii. 3.

Ver. 24. God is a Spirit, &c.] Or the Spirit is God; a divine perſon, poſſeſſed of all divine perfections, as appears from his names, works, and worſhip aſcribed unto him; ſee the note on the preceding verſe; tho' the Arabic and Perſic verſions, and others, read as we do, God is a Spirit; that is, God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt: for taking the words in this light, not one of the perſons is to be underſtood excluſive of the other; for this deſcription, or definition, agrees with each of them, and they are all the object of worſhip, and to be worſhipped in a true and ſpiritual manner. God is a Spirit, and not a body, or a corporeal ſubſtance: the nature and eſſence of God is like a Spirit, ſimple and uncompounded, not made up of parts; nor is it diviſible; nor does it admit of any change and alteration. God, as a Spirit, is immaterial, immortal, inviſible, and an intelligent, willing, and active being; but differs from other ſpirits, in that he is an increated one, an immenſe and infinite Spirit, and an eternal one, which has neither beginning nor end: he is therefore a ſpirit by way of eminency, as well as effectively, he being the author and former of all ſpirits: whatever excellence is in them, muſt be aſcribed to God in the higheſt manner; and whatever is imperfect in them, muſt be removed from him: and they that worſhip him; worſhip is due to him on account of his nature and perfections, both internal and external; with both the bodies and ſouls of men; and both private and publick; in the cloſet, in the family, and in the church of God; as prayer, praiſe, attendance on the word and ordinances: muſt worſhip him in ſpirit and in truth; in the true and ſpiritual manner before deſcribed, which is ſuitable to his nature, and agreeable to his will.

Ver. 25. The woman ſaith unto him, &c.] Not knowing well what to ſay to theſe things Chriſt had been diſcourſing about, as the place, object, and manner of worſhip; and being indetermined in her judgment of them, by what he had ſaid, was willing to refer them to the Meſſiah's coming; of which ſhe, and the Samaritans, had ſome knowledge. I know that Meſſias cometh which is called Chriſt: the laſt clauſe, which is called Chriſt, are not the words of the woman explaining the Hebrew word Meſſiah; for as, on the one hand, ſhe did not underſtand Greek, ſo, on the other, ſhe could not think that the perſon ſhe was converſing with, who ſhe knew was a Jew, needed that word to be explained to him; but they are the words of the Evangeliſt, interpreting the Hebrew word Meſſiah, by the Greek word Chriſt, in which language he wrote: hence this clauſe is left out in the Syriac verſion, as unneceſſary to a Syriac reader, not needing the word to be explained to him. The Arabic and Ethiopic verſions, and ſome copies, read in the plural number, we know that Meſſias cometh; the knowledge of the coming of the Meſſiah was not peculiar to this woman, but was common to all the Samaritans; for as they received the five books of Moſes, they might learn from thence, that a divine and excellent perſon was to come, who is called the ſeed of the woman, that ſhould bruiſe the ſerpent's head; Shiloh, to whom the gathering of the people ſhould be; and a prophet like unto Moſes: and tho' the word Meſſiah is not found in thoſe books, yet, as it was uſual with the Jews to call the ſame perſon by this name, they might eaſily take it from them, and make uſe of it; and they not only knew that there was a Meſſiah to come, and expected him, but that he was coming, juſt ready to come; and this they might conclude, not only from the general expectation of the Jewiſh nation about this time, but from Gen. xlix. 10. And it is certain, that the Samaritans to this day do expect a Meſſiah, though they know not his name, unleſs it be השחב; the meaning of which they don't underſtand [m]: to me it ſeems to be an abbreviation of השחבא, or הוא אשר הבא, he that is to come; by which circumlocution the Jews underſtand the Meſſiah; ſee Matt. xi. 3. and to which this Samaritan woman ſeems to have ſome reſpect: when he is come he will tell us all things; the whole mind and will of God; all things relating to the worſhip of God, and to the ſalvation of men. This the Samaritans might conclude from his general character as a prophet, like unto Moſes, to whom men were to hearken, Deut. xviii. 15. and from a common prevailing notion among the Jews, that the times of the Meſſiah would be times of great knowledge, founded on ſeveral propheſies, as Iſ. ii. 3. and xi. 2, 9. Jer. xxxi. 34. and which they ſometimes expreſs in the following manner [n]: "in the days of the Meſſiah, even the little children in the world ſhall find out the hidden things of wiſdom, and know in it the ends and computations (of times), and at that time he ſhall be made manifeſt unto all." And again [o], "ſays R. Judah, the holy, bleſſed God will reveal the deep myſteries of the law in the times of the king Meſſiah; for the earth ſhall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, &c. and it is written, they ſhall not teach every man his brother, &c." And elſewhere [p], "the whole world ſhall be filled with the words of the Meſſiah, and with the words of the law, and with the words of the commandments; and theſe things ſhall extend to the iſles afar off; to many people, the uncircumciſed in heart, and the uncircumciſed in fleſh; and they ſhall deal in the ſecrets of the law.——And there ſhall be no buſineſs in the world, but to know the Lord only; wherefore the Iſraelites ſhall be exceeding wiſe, and know ſecret things, and comprehend the knowledge of their creator, as much as is poſſible for a man to do, as it is ſaid, the earth ſhall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, &c." Accordingly, the Meſſiah is come, who lay in the boſom of the Father, and has made known all things to his diſciples, he hath heard of him; he has declared him to them, his love, grace, and mercy. God has ſpoken all he has to ſay that appertains to his own worſhip, and the ſalvation of the children of men by his Son Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 26. Jeſus ſaith unto her, &c.] Upon her making mention of the Meſſiah, of his coming, and of his work, he took the opportunity of making himſelf known unto her: I that ſpeak unto thee am he; the Meſſiah; ſee Iſ. lii. 6. This is a wonderful inſtance of the grace of Chriſt to this woman, that he ſhould make himſelf known in ſo clear and plain a manner, to ſo mean a perſon, and ſo infamous a creature as ſhe had been: we never find that he ever made ſo clear a diſcovery of himſelf, in ſuch expreſs terms, to any, as to her, unleſs it were to his immediate diſciples; and theſe he would ſometimes charge not to tell who he was.

Ver. 27. And upon this came his diſciples, &c.] Juſt as he was ſaying the above words, and making himſelf known in this full manner, his diſciples, who had been into the city to buy food, came up to them: and marvelled that he talked with the woman; or with a woman; for, according to the Jewiſh canons, it was not judged decent, right, and and proper, nor indeed lawful, to enter into a converſation, or hold any long diſcourſe with a woman. Their rule is this, "don't multiply diſcourſe with a woman, with his wife they ſay, much leſs with his neighbour's wife: hence the wiſe men ſay, at whatſoever time a man multiplies diſcourſe with a woman, he is the cauſe of evil to himſelf, and ceaſes from the words of the law, and at laſt ſhall go down into hell [q]." And eſpecially this was thought to be very unſeemly in any publick place, as in an inn, or in the ſtreet; hence that direction [r], "let not a man talk with a woman in the ſtreets, even with his wife; and there is no need to ſay with another man's wife." And particularly it was thought very unbecoming a religious man, a doctor, or ſcholar, or a diſciple of a wiſe man, ſo to do. This is one of the ſix things which are a reproach to a ſcholar, "to talk with a woman in the ſtreet [s]." And it is even ſaid [t], "let him not talk with a woman in the ſtreet, tho' ſhe is his wife, or his ſiſter, or his daughter." And beſides, the diſciples might marvel, not only that he talked with a woman, but that he ſhould talk with that woman, who was a Samaritan; ſince the Jews had no familiar converſation with Samaritans, men or women: and the woman was as much aſtoniſhed that Chriſt ſhould have any thing to ſay to her, and eſpecially to aſk a favour of her; for though they might, and did converſe in a way of trade and buſineſs, yet did not multiply diſcourſe, or enter into a free converſation with one another: and it may be, that the diſciples might over-hear what he ſaid to the woman, juſt as they came up; ſo that their aſtoniſhment was not merely at his talking with a woman, and with a Samaritan woman, but at what he ſaid unto her, that he ſhould ſo plainly tell her that he was the Meſſiah, when he ſo ſtrictly charged them to tell no man. Yet no man ſaid; no, not Peter, as Nonnus obſerves, who was bold and forward to put and aſk queſtions: what ſeekeſt thou? or enquireſt of her about? is it food, or drink, or what? or why talkeſt thou with her? when it is not cuſtomary, ſeemly, and lawful. It may be conſidered, whether or know theſe two queſtions may not relate ſeparately, the one to the woman, the other to Chriſt; as, the firſt, what ſeekeſt thou? to the woman; and the ſenſe be, that no man ſaid to her, what do you want with our maſter? what are you enquiring about of him? what would you have of him? or what do you ſeek for from him? and the latter, why talkeſt thou with her? peculiarly to Chriſt. The Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, and Beza's ancient copy indeed read, no man ſaid to him; which confines both the queſtions to Chriſt. Now this ſhows the reverence the diſciples had for Chriſt, and the great opinion they entertained of him, that whatever he did was well, and wiſely done, though it might ſeem ſtrange to them, and they could not account for it: however, they did not think that he, who was their Lord and Maſter, was accountable to them for what he did; and they doubted not but he had good reaſons for his conduct.

Ver. 28. The woman then left her water-pot, &c.] Her pail, or bucket, ſhe brought with her to the well to draw water in: this ſhe left, either for Chriſt and his diſciples to make uſe of; or rather thro' forgetfulneſs, her mind being greatly impreſſed, and her thoughts much taken up with what Chriſt had ſaid to her, and ſhe being in haſte to acquaint others with it: ſo the diſciples left their nets, their buſineſs, their friends, and all for Chriſt; and ſo the ſaints are brought to quit their earthly and worldly things for the ſake of Chriſt, and his Goſpel. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, ſhe left her diſputation; ſhe left off diſcourſing with Chriſt upon the diſciples coming to him. And went her way into the city; the city of Sychar, to inform her friends, relations, and neighbours what ſhe had met with: ſo Andrew and Philip, when they had found Chriſt themſelves, acquaint others with it, and bring them to him; ſo Levi, the publican, being called himſelf by Chriſt, makes a feaſt for Chriſt, and invites many publicans and ſinners to ſit down with him, that they might know him as well as himſelf; ſo the Apoſtle Paul, when converted, expreſſes a great concern for his brethren and kinſmen according to the fleſh; and ſuch is the nature of true grace, that thoſe that have it would have others partakers of it likewiſe: and ſaith to the men. The Ethiopic verſion adds, of her houſe; no doubt the men of the place in general are meant; not only thoſe of her family, but the inhabitants of the city. The Syriac verſion leaves out the words, to the men. The Jews will not allow the Cuthites, or Samaritans, to be called men; this they peculiarly aſcribe to prieſts, Levites, and Iſraelites [n].

Ver. 29. Come, ſee a man, &c.] An uncommon, an extraordinary man, a prophet, and, who himſelf ſays, he is the Meſſiah, who is now at Jacob's well; come, go along with me, and ſee him, and converſe with him, and judge for yourſelves, who, and what he is: ſhe does not ſay, go and ſee; for ſhe propoſed to go along with them herſelf, that ſhe might have more converſation with him, and knowledge of him, and grace from him: ſo ſuch that have taſted that the Lord is gracious, deſire more grace from him, and communion with him. Which told me all things that ever I did; the more remarkable things that had been done by her in the whole ſeries of her life and converſation; referring more eſpecially to the account he had given her of her having had five huſbands, and what the man was ſhe now lived with; when, no doubt, all the tranſactions of her life were laid before her, and ſhe had, at once, a view of all her iniquities; when her ſins ſtared her in the face, and her conſcience was filled with guilt and remorſe, and her ſoul with ſhame and confuſion; and ſo it is when Chriſt, by his Spirit, convinces of ſin, of righteouſneſs, and of judgment: is not this the Chriſt? that was to come, has been promiſed and propheſied of, and we have expected, who is of quick underſtanding, and even God omniſcient; ſurely this muſt be he, as he himſelf ſays he is.

Ver. 30. Then they went out of the city, &c.] The men, as the Syriac verſion expreſſes it; the inhabitants of Sychar left their buſineſs, and came out of the city: and came unto him; to Chriſt, to ſee him, and converſe with him, that they might know who he was: for tho' the woman had been a woman of ill fame, yet ſuch was the account that ſhe gave of Chriſt, and ſuch power went along with her words; that what with the ſtrangeneſs of the relation, and the curioſity with which they were led, and chiefly thro' the efficacy of divine grace, at leaſt in many of them, they were moved to regard what ſhe ſaid, and to follow her directions and ſolicitations.

Ver. 31. In the mean while, &c.] Whilſt the woman was gone into the city, and had acquainted the inhabitants, that ſuch a wonderful perſon was at Jacob's well, and invited them to come and ſee him: his diſciples prayed him, ſaying, maſter, eat; for they perceived a diſinclination in him to food; and they knew that he was weary with his journey, and that it was the time of day, and high time, that he had had ſome food; and therefore out of great reſpect to him, and in concern for his health and welfare, they intreated him that he would take ſome food: ſo far was Chriſt from indulging his ſenſual appetite; and ſo little reaſon had the Scribes and Phariſees to traduce him as a wine-bibber and glutton.

Ver. 32. But he ſaid unto them, &c.] That is, Jeſus, as the Perſic, or the Lord Jeſus, as the Ethiopic verſions expreſs it: I have meat to eat that ye know not of; meaning the converſion of the Samaritan woman, and of other Samaritans, who were flocking in great numbers to him, which he knew, tho' his diſciples did not; and the harveſt of ſouls he had a proſpect of, ſee ver. 35. was as meat unto him, delightful and refreſhing; and his mind and thoughts were ſo taken up with theſe things, that he had no inclination to any corporal food.

Ver. 33. Therefore ſaid the diſciples one to another, &c.] Privately, among themſelves, tho' in his hearing; at leaſt he knew what they ſaid by his anſwer: hath any man; or any one, any angel from heaven, or any of the inhabitants of the city, or any man or woman, or this woman, they had found him talking with: brought him ought to eat? for they thought of nothing elſe but bodily food; juſt as when he cautioned them againſt the leaven of the Sadducees and Phariſees, they imagined he ſaid it, becauſe they had taken no bread; whereas he meant the doctrine of theſe perſons: ſo dull of underſtanding ſpiritual things were the diſciples themſelves, that it is not ſo much to be wondered at that the Samaritan woman, whilſt in her carnal ſtate, when Chriſt ſpoke of living water, ſhould underſtand him of material water, or ſpring water.

[n] T. Bab. Yebamot, fol. 61. 1. & Toſephot in ib.

Ver. 34. Jeſus ſaith unto them, &c.] His diſciples: my meat is to do the will of him that ſent me. The Ethiopic verſion reads, of my Father that ſent me; and who is undoubtedly intended. Now as food is pleaſant, and delightful, and refreſhing to the body of man, ſo doing the will of God was as delightful and refreſhing to the ſoul of Chriſt: he took as much pleaſure in it, as an hungry man does in eating and drinking. One part of the will of God was to aſſume human nature; this he had done, and with delight and pleaſure: another part of it was to fulfil the law; and this was in his heart, and was his delight, and he was now doing it: and another branch of it was to ſuffer and die, in the room and ſtead of his people; and as diſagreeable as this was in itſelf to the human nature, yet he chearfully agreed to it; and was ſometimes, as it were, impatient till it was accompliſhed; and he voluntarily became obedient to it: no man could, with greater eagerneſs, fall to eating, when hungry, than Chriſt went about his Father's will and work, even that which was moſt ungrateful to him, as man. And to finiſh his work; one part of which was to preach the Goſpel, and for which he was anointed and ſent; and which he did with great aſſiduity and conſtancy: and another part of it was the converſion of ſinners by it, whom he was ſent to call, and with whom he delighted to be; and was the work he was now about, and took the pleaſure in, the text expreſſes: and beſide theſe, miracles were works his Father gave him to finiſh; ſuch as healing diſeaſes, and diſpoſſeſſing of devils, and which he went about doing continually, with great delight: but the chief work of all is, that of the redemption and ſalvation of his choſen ones: this was a work his Father called him to, and ſent him into this world to perform, which he gave unto him, and Chriſt accepted of, and agreed to do; and tho' it was a very toilſome and laborious one, there being a righteous law to be fulfilled, juſtice to be ſatisfied, the ſins of all his people to bear, as well as the wrath of God, and the curſe of the law, and numerous enemies to grapple with, and an accurſed death to undergo; yet with pleaſure he performed this: for the joy of doing his Father's will, accompliſhing his counſels and covenant, and his own engagements, and procuring the ſalvation of his people, he endured the croſs patiently, and deſpiſed the ſhame of it. The whole of the will and work of God was done by him, juſt as the Lord commanded it; exactly, according to the pattern given him, with all faithfulneſs and integrity; with the moſt conſummate wiſdom and prudence; with all application, diligence, and conſtancy, and ſo as to finiſh it, and that without the help of any other; and in ſuch a manner that nothing can be added to it to make it more perfect, or that it can be undone again by men or devils: and that the doing and finiſhing of this were his meat, or as delightful and refreſhing to him as meat is to the body, appears from his ready and chearful engaging in it in eternity; from his early and induſtrious entrance on it in time; from his conſtancy in it, when he had begun, inſomuch that nothing could deter him from it; nor did he ſink and fail under it, nor left it till he had finiſhed it.

Ver. 35. Say not ye, there are yet four months, &c.] Our Lord had been in Jeruſalem and Judea about eight months from the laſt paſſover, and there remained four more to the next paſſover: and then cometh harveſt? barley-harveſt, which began at that time. Now as the paſſover was in the middle of the month Niſan, which was about the latter end of our March; reckoning four months back from thence ſhows, that it was about the latter end of our November, or beginning of December, that Chriſt was in Samaria, and at Jacob's well. Some think, that this does not refer to the then preſent time, as if there were ſo many months from thence to the next harveſt; but to a common way of ſpeaking, that there were four months from ſeed's time to harveſt; during which time there was a comfortable hope, and longing expectation of it: but this will, by no means, agree either with the wheat, or barley harveſt. The wheat was ſown before this time, and the barley a good while after. "Half "Tiſri, Marcheſhvan, and half Ciſleu, were, זרע, "ſeed's time [w]." The earlieſt they ſowed their wheat was in Tiſri, which anſwers to our September and October; i. e. to half one, and half the other. The month of Marcheſhvan, which anſwers to October and November, was the principal month for ſowing it [x]: hence that paraphraſe on Eccl. xi. 2. "give a good part of thy ſeed to thy field in Tiſri, "and do not refrain from ſowing even in Ciſleu." As for the barley, that was ſown in the months of Shebet and Adar, and uſually in the latter [y]; the former of which anſwers to January and February, and the latter to February and March. And we read [z] of their ſowing ſeventy days before the paſſover, which was within ſix weeks of the beginning of barley harveſt. Behold, I ſay unto you, lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; pointing to the lands which lay near the city of Sychar: for they are white already to harveſt; alluding to the corn-fields, which, when ripe, and near harveſt, look white: hence we read [a] of, שדה הלבן, the white field, which the Jews ſay is a field ſown with wheat or barley, and ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from a field planted with trees; tho' it may be rather, that it is ſo called from its white look when ripe. So the three Targums paraphraſe Gen. xlix. 12. "his "hills, (his valleys, or fields, as Onkelos) יחוורן, "are white with corn, and flocks of ſheep." Chriſt here ſpeaks not literally; for the fields could not be white at ſuch a diſtance from harveſt; but ſpiritually, of a harveſt of ſouls; and has regard to the large number of Samaritans that were juſt now coming out of the city, and were within ſight, and covered the adjacent fields: and theſe he calls upon his diſciples to lift up their eyes and behold; and ſuggeſts to them, that it was not a time for eating and drinking, but for working, ſince here was ſuch a number of ſouls to be gathered in: and thus as from corporal food he proceeded to treat of ſpiritual food; ſo from a literal harveſt he goes on to ſpeak of a ſpiritual one, and encourages his diſciples to labour in it, by the following arguments.

Ver. 36. And he that reapeth receiveth wages, &c.] Angels are ſometimes called reapers, and ſo are miniſters of the Goſpel here. The work and miniſtry of the Apoſtles are here expreſſed by reaping: for as in reaping, when the corn is ripe, the ſickle is put in, and the corn is cut down, and laid to the ground, and then bound in ſheaves, and gathered into the barn; ſo when things are ripe in providence, and God's ſet time is come to convert any of his people, he makes uſe of his miniſters for the cutting them down, laying low the loftineſs and haughtineſs of man, ſtripping him of all his goodlineſs, and taking him off of a dependance on his own righteouſneſs and works, and for the gathering them into his churches, which is done with a great deal of joy and pleaſure: and ſuch as are ſo employed, and in this way made uſeful, ſhall receive wages; ſhall not only be taken care of in providence, and have a ſufficient and comfortable maintenance, the labourer being worthy of his hire; but ſhall have pleaſure, delight, and ſatisfaction in their work, that being bleſſed for the good of ſouls, and the glory of Chriſt, and they having the preſence of God in it; and alſo ſhall hereafter receive the crown of righteouſneſs, when they have finiſhed their courſe, and ſhall ſhine like the ſtars for ever and ever. And gathereth fruit unto life eternal: by fruit are meant ſinners converted and turned from the error of their ways; which are the fruit of a Goſpel-miniſtry, of the efficacy and power of divine grace accompanying it; ſee John xv. 16. and theſe are gathered, by the preaching of the Goſpel, out from among the reſt of mankind, unto Chriſt, the Shiloh, or peace-maker, and into his churches, and remain, abide, and perſevere to the end; that grace, which is implanted in their ſouls, being a well of living water, ſpringing up to everlaſting life; ſo that they are at laſt gathered into Chriſt's garner, into heaven, where they ſhall live with him for ever: that both he that ſoweth, and he that reapeth, may rejoice together. The ſowers are the prophets of the Old Teſtament, who ſowed that ſeed in their prophecies, which ſprung up in Goſpel-times, and laid the foundation therein of the great ſucceſs of the Apoſtles of Chriſt in preaching the word; for they ſo clearly deſcribed the Meſſiah, and pointed out Chriſt, his offices, and his work, in ſo diſtinct a manner, that when he was come he was readily known, and chearfully embraced; they greatly facilitated the work of the Apoſtles, who had nothing to do but to preach Chriſt, as come in the fleſh: and hence they reaped and gathered a vaſt harveſt of ſouls every where. John the Baptiſt alſo was one that ſowed; he prepared the way of the Lord, and made ſtraight his paths: and our Lord himſelf was a ſower, that went forth to ſow, and who ſowed good ſeed in the field; all which ſucceeded well, and were ripening apace for a general harveſt, which began on the day of Pentecoſt, after our Lord's aſcenſion to heaven. This was in Judea; and in the Gentile world there was a ſowing in providence, which contributed to make the work of the diſciples more eaſy there, and to bring on, in time, a large harveſt. The books of the Old Teſtament were tranſlated into the Greek language; and the Jews were ſcattered in the ſeveral parts of the world; and the Greek tongue, in which the New Teſtament was to be written, was every where generally ſpoken; and theſe providences were ripening apace to bring on a great work there. And now, as before obſerved, the Apoſtles were the reapers; they were remarkably ſucceſsful in the gathering in of ſouls, even more than the prophets, than John the Baptiſt, or Chriſt himſelf; never was ſuch a harveſt of ſouls, either in Judea, or in the Gentile world, before or ſince; of which the converſion of theſe Samaritans was a pledge or earneſt. Now when the whole harveſt is gathered in, at the end of the world, all theſe will rejoice together; the patriarchs and prophets, the fore-runner of Chriſt, and Chriſt himſelf, and all his Apoſtles and miniſters; the different parts they have had in this work all concurring and agreeing together, and iſſuing in the glory of God, and the good of ſouls.

Ver. 37. And herein is that ſaying true, &c.] This verifies that proverbial expreſſion ſo much in uſe, and which may be applied to different perſons and caſes: one ſoweth, and another reapeth; the prophets ſowed, and the apoſtles reaped.

Ver. 38. I ſent you to reap, &c.] To preach the Goſpel, and gather in ſouls by your miniſtry; referring to the miſſion of them in Matt. x. 6, 7. that whereon ye beſtowed no labour; being ſent to the Jews, who had the writings of the prophets, and were verſed in them; and had learned from them that the Meſſiah was to come, and were now in general expectation of him; ſo that they had nothing more to do, than to declare to thoſe perſons who were cultivated by the prophets, and were like to ground till'd and manured, that the Meſſiah was come, and the kingdom of heaven was at hand. Other men laboured; the prophets, and John the Baptiſt: and ye are entered into their labours; to finiſh the work they had begun, and which was almoſt done to their hands.

Ver. 39. And many of the Samaritans of that city, &c.] Of Sychar, which was a city of Samaria: believed on him; that he was the true Meſſiah he had told the woman he was; and ſhe put it to them whether he was or not: before they ſaw him, had any converſation with him themſelves, they believed in him; ſee John xx. 29. for the ſaying of the woman which teſtified, he told me all that ever I did: the account ſhe gave was ſo plain, and honeſt, and diſintereſted, that they could not but give credit to it; and ſince the perſon was an utter ſtranger to her, and yet had laid before her the whole ſeries of her paſt life and converſation, they concluded he could be no other than the Meſſiah, who ſhould tell all things; and being of quick underſtanding or ſmell, was able to diſcloſe the ſecrets of men.

Ver. 40. So when the Samaritans were come unto him, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion reads, all the Samaritans; they came to him at Jacob's well, upon the woman's ſolicitations, and the account ſhe gave of this extraordinary perſon: and after they had converſed with him, and heard him themſelves, they were taken with his divine diſcourſes, and being thoroughly perſuaded that he was the Meſſiah, they beſought him that he would tarry with them; they were not like the Gergeſenes, who beſought him to depart out of their coaſts as ſoon as he was in them: but theſe men were delighted with his company; and notwithſtanding his being a Jew, deſired a converſation with him, and intreated that he would go along with them to their city, and ſtay with them: and he abode there two days; he went with them to Sychar. He would not deny their requeſt, leſt they ſhould be diſcouraged; and yet would not make any long ſtay with them, that he might give no umbrage to the Jews; though it is very likely from this ſhort ſtay in Samaria they afterwards reproached him as a Samaritan, ch. viii. 48. Our Lord's direction to his diſciples not to enter into any of the cities of the Samaritans, was not a rule to himſelf, or binding upon him, and was only a rule to them pro tempore.

Ver. 41. And many more believed, &c.] The Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions add, on him: when he was come into the city, and had preached to the inhabitants in general, a larger multitude than before believed in him as the Meſſiah, and profeſſed him, and became followers of him. Becauſe of his own word; which came to them, not in word only, but in power, and was the power of God unto ſalvation to them; and was received by them, not as the word of man, but as the word of God; and it wrought effectually in them, and was an hammer to break their rocky hearts in pieces, and to bring them into ſubjection to himſelf, his Goſpel and ordinances: whether his word or doctrine was accompanied with miracles, is not certain; this ſhows, that their faith in him was founded on his own word, which fell with great weight upon them. It ſeems to have an emphaſis laid upon it, his own word, in diſtinction from the woman's ſaying.

Ver. 42. And ſaid unto the woman, &c.] Who, it appears, kept hearing Chriſt, attending on him, and converſing with him; for having taſted of his grace, ſhe could not leave him: now we believe, not becauſe of thy ſaying; not on account of that only: it ſhould ſeem that theſe were the ſame perſons that believed upon her word before they went out of the city; and who, when come to Chriſt, invited him into it; and now, having heard his excellent diſcourſes, were confirmed in the faith of him: for we have heard him ourſelves; not only externally, with their bodily ears, but internally, having ears given them to hear, ſo as to underſtand what he ſaid; to mix it with faith, and receive it in love; to feel the power of it in their hearts, and taſte the ſweetneſs of it, and be nouriſhed by it; and ſo as to diſtinguiſh his voice from another's, as Chriſt's true ſheep are capable of. And know that this is indeed the Chriſt; the true Meſſiah, and not a falſe one; the Meſſiah ſpoken of by Moſes, whoſe books the Samaritans received, as the ſeed of the woman, the Shiloh, and prophet, like to Moſes; the Chriſt of God, who is anointed to be prophet, prieſt, and king. The Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions leave out the word Chriſt, and only read what follows, the ſaviour of the world: they knew him to be the ſaviour, he who was ſpoken of as ſuch; for his work to bruiſe the ſerpent's head implies it, and his name Shiloh imports as much: and beſides, he is called by Jacob God's ſalvation, Gen. xlix. 18. God appointed him as a ſaviour; he ſent him, and he came as ſuch, and is become the author of ſalvation; and his name is called Jeſus, on this account: and a great ſaviour he is; both able, and willing; and he is ſuitable to the caſe of ſinners; and is a complete, and an only one: and theſe Samaritans knew him to be the ſaviour of the world; not of every individual perſon in it, for all are not ſaved by him; nor of the Jewiſh world, for many of them died in their ſins; but of the Gentiles, in diſtinction from the Jews; ſee John iii. 16. 1 John ii. 2. even of all God's elect, whether among Jews or Gentiles; of all that believe in him, of whatſoever nation, and in whatſoever ſtate and condition: ſo that their knowledge of him, and faith in him, were beyond that of the Jews, who looked upon the Meſſiah only as a ſaviour of their nation; and that the Gentiles would have no manner of benefit and advantage by him: tho' the Jews [b] do call the angel in Exod. xxiii. 20. פרוקא דעלמא, the ſaviour, or redeemer of the world. And this the Samaritans might know from the writings of Moſes, as from Gen. xxii. 18. and xlix. 10. their preſent knowledge of Chriſt was not a mere notional, ſpeculative, and general one, but was ſpecial, ſpiritual, and ſaving, which they had from the ſpirit of wiſdom and revelation in the knowledge of Chriſt; they approved of him as their ſaviour; they truſted in him as ſuch; they had an experimental acquaintance with him, and practically owned him; and which they attained to by hearing him.

Ver. 43. Now after two days he departed thence, &c.] When he had ſtaid two days at Sychar converſing with, and diſcourſing to the Samaritans, which were the means of the converſion of many of them; he departed out of that country, and paſſed on his way: and went into Galilee; as he firſt intended; ſee ver. 3.

Ver. 44. For Jeſus himſelf teſtified, &c.] Matt. xiii. 57. that a prophet hath no honour in his own country: all the Oriental verſions read, in his own city; that is, Nazareth: for theſe words muſt not be underſtood as a reaſon why Chriſt left Judea, and went into Galilee, becauſe he had no honour in Judea, in which was Bethlehem, the place of his nativity; but are a reaſon why, when he came into Galilee, he did not go to Nazareth, his own city, where he was educated, and had been brought up, and had lived the greateſt part of his life, becauſe they treated him with great diſreſpect and contempt; ſee the note on Matt. xiii. 57.

Ver. 45. Then when he was come into Galilee, &c.] That part of it in which Cana lay, as appears by what follows: the Galileans received him; willingly, readily, and chearfully, with much delight and pleaſure, and with marks of great eſteem and reſpect; they received him into their houſes, and entertained him, and provided for him and his diſciples: having ſeen all the things that he did at Jeruſalem, at the feaſt of the paſſover; the miracles he wrought there, ſee ch. ii. 23. for they alſo went unto the feaſt; as well as Jeſus and his diſciples: they kept the feaſt of the paſſover, and went yearly to Jeruſalem on that account: ſo Joſephus ſpeaks of the Galileans going to the Jewiſh feſtivals at Jeruſalem, when he ſays [c]; "it was the cuſtom, or "uſual with the Galileans, when they went to the "holy city at the feſtivals, to go thro' the country "of the Samaritans;" which was the way that Chriſt now came from thence to them.

Ver. 46. So Jeſus came again unto Cana of Galilee, &c.] Where he had been once before; ſee ch. ii. 1, 2. The Syriac verſion here, as there, calls it Kotne of Galilee; and the Perſic verſion, Catneh of Galilee: where he made the water wine; ſee ch. ii. 9, 11. there was a certain nobleman; the Vulgate Latin renders it, a petty king; the Arabic verſion, and Nonnus, call him, a royal man; and the Syriac verſion renders it, a king's ſervant; with which agrees the Ethiopic, calling him a miniſter, a ſteward, the king's domeſtic. The Perſic verſion makes it to be his name, reading it, there was a great man, whoſe name was Abdo-lmelic, which ſignifies a king's ſervant: from the whole he ſeems to be one that belonged to the palace of Herod Antipas, and was one of his courtiers; who, tho' he was but tetrarch of Galilee, yet is ſometimes called a king, Mark vi. 14. whoſe ſon was ſick at Capernaum; ſome verſions, as the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic, read the phraſe, in Capernaum, with the former clauſe, there was a nobleman in Capernaum; and others, as we do with this; and both may be true; for he might be an inhabitant of Capernaum, and his houſe be there where his ſon lay ſick. Some think this nobleman was either Chuza, Herod's ſteward, Luke viii. 3. or Manaen, who had been brought up with Herod, Acts xiii. 1.

Ver. 47. When he heard that Jeſus was come out of Judea, &c.] For the fame of Chriſt, for his doctrine and miracles, was ſpread every where; ſo that it was known, and talked, in moſt places where he was, and what courſe he was ſteering: and this nobleman underſtanding that he had left Judea,

Judea, and was come into Galilee; and having enquired in what parts of Galilee he was, he went unto him; though it was many miles from Capernaum, where Jeſus was, at leaſt a day's journey; ſince, when the ſervants met their maſter, the child had been healed at one o'clock the day before; ſee ver. 52. Some reckon it about fifteen miles, but one would think it ſhould be more: and beſought him that he would come down; for Capernaum, tho' it was built on a hill, lay lower down in the country of Galilee than Cana did, near the ſea of Tiberias: a like way of ſpeaking is uſed in chap. ii. 12. and heal his ſon. The nobleman believed that Chriſt had power to do it, by what he had heard concerning him, but thought his corporal preſence was abſolutely neceſſary to it: for he was at the point of death; or would die: he was very near it; there was no likelihood of his recovery; the phyſicians had given him over; and when he left him, he ſeemed to be near his death, and muſt die for any human help that could be obtained, or natural means that could be uſed.

Ver. 48. Then ſaid Jeſus unto him, &c.] With ſome degree of roughneſs in his ſpeech, and ſeverity in his countenance, in a way of reproof for his unbelief, as if he could not heal his ſon without going down to Capernaum along with him: except ye ſee ſigns and wonders, ye will not believe. This was the caſt of the Jews every where, both in Judea and Galilee; they required ſigns and miracles to be wrought, in confirmation of Chriſt's being the Meſſiah, and which indeed was but right; and Chriſt did perform them for that purpoſe: but their ſin of unbelief lay in this, that they wanted ſtill more and more ſigns; they could not be contented with what they had ſeen, but required more, being ſluggiſh and backward to believe. Our Lord ſeems to ſay this chiefly for the ſake of the Galileans, that were about him; who, tho' they might be acquainted with his former miracles, when among them, of turning water into wine, and had ſeen his wondrous works at the feaſt at Jeruſalem, yet were very deſirous of ſeeing more, and perhaps very preſſing for this cure.

Ver. 49. The nobleman ſaith unto him, Sir, &c.] Notwithſtanding this reproof, and ſeeming denial, he preſſes him again, and addreſſing him in a handſome and courteous manner, importunately intreats him ſaying: come down ere my ſon die; here was faith with a mixture of unbelief; he believed that Chriſt was able to heal his ſon, but he ſtill thought that his going down with him was neceſſary; that he muſt be corporally preſent, and muſt lay his hands on him, or touch him, or ſpeak, and command the diſtemper off, or ſomething of this kind, and which muſt be done before he died; for otherwiſe, ſhould he die firſt, all hope was then gone; he had no notion of Chriſt being able to raiſe him from the dead.

Ver. 50. Jeſus ſaith unto him go thy way, &c.] Return home in peace, be not over-much troubled and diſtreſſed about this matter; leave it with me, I'll take care of it; all will be well: ſo the Perſic verſion reads, be not anxious, and go thy way; don't be ſolicitous for my preſence, or urge me to go with thee; depart alone, there's no neceſſity for my being upon the ſpot: thy ſon liveth; he's now recovered of his diſeaſe, and is well, and in perfect health, and lives, and will live: and the man believed the word that Jeſus had ſpoken to him; ſuch power went along with the words of Chriſt, as not only cured the ſon at that diſtance, who lay at the point of death, but alſo the father of his unbelief; and he no more inſiſted on his going down with him, but firmly believed that his ſon was alive, and well, as Chriſt had ſaid he was: and he went his way; he took his leave of Chriſt, and ſet out for Capernaum; very probably, not the ſame day, it being now in the afternoon of the day; but the next morning, as ſhould ſeem from what follows.

Ver. 51. And as he was now going down, &c.] From Cana to Capernaum, the day after he had been with Chriſt: his ſervants met him, and told him, ſaying, thy ſon liveth; as ſoon as this cure was wrought, tho' it was not known in the family how, and by whom it was done, immediately ſome of the ſervants were diſpatched to carry the news to their maſter, that his ſorrow might be removed; and he give himſelf no further trouble in ſeeking for a cure: theſe meeting him on the road, with an air of pleaſure, at once addreſs him with the joyful news, that his ſon was thoroughly recovered of his diſorder, and was alive, and well; news which he was acquainted with, and believed before; tho' it muſt give him an additional pleaſure to have it confirmed.

Ver. 52. Then enquired he of them the hour, &c.] He did not at all heſitate about the truth of it, or was in any ſurprize upon it; but that he might compare things together, he aſked the exact time, when he began to amend; or grow better; for he ſeemed to think, that his recovery might be gradual, and not all at once, as it was: and they ſaid unto him, yeſterday at the ſeventh hour; which was one o'clock in the afternoon: the fever left him; entirely at once, ſo that he was perfectly well immediately.

Ver. 53. So the father knew that it was at the ſame hour, &c.] Preciſely; in that which Jeſus ſaid to him, thy ſon liveth: he had obſerved what time of day it was, in which he converſed with Jeſus; and particularly, when he told him his ſon was alive and well, and when he took his leave of him; and by comparing the account of his ſervants, with that, found that things entirely agreed, and that the cure was wrought exactly at the time, that Jeſus ſpoke the words: and himſelf believed, and his whole houſe; when he came home, he related the whole affair to his family, and he and they, all believed, that Jeſus was the Meſſiah, and became his diſciples and followers: if this nobleman was Chuza, Herod's ſteward, we have an account of his wife, whoſe name was Joanna, that ſhe followed Chriſt, and miniſtred to him of her ſubſtance, with other women, Luke viii. 3. There is a ſtory told by the Jews, and which ſeems ſomewhat like to this[d]; "it is reported concerning R. Chanina "ben Doſa, that when he prayed for the ſick, he "uſed to ſay, זה חי, this liveth, and this dies; it "was ſaid to him, whence knoweſt thou this? he "replied, if my prayer be ready in my mouth, I "know that he is accepted (of God, i. e. the ſick "man for whom he prayed) but if not, I know "that he will be ſnatched away (by the diſeaſe:") upon which the Gemariſts give the following relation[e]; "it happened that the ſon of Rabban Ga"maliel (the apoſtle Paul's maſter) was ſick, he "ſent two diſciples to R. Chanina ben Doſa, to aſk "mercy for him; when he ſaw them, he went up "to a chamber, and ſought mercy for him; and "when he came down, he ſaid unto them, "לכו שחלצתו חמה, go your way, for the fever "has left him; they ſaid unto him, art thou a "prophet? he replied, I am not a prophet, nor "the ſon of a prophet; but ſo I have received,

"that if my prayer is ready in my mouth, I know "that he is accepted; and if not, I know that he "ſhall be ſnatched away; and they ſat and wrote and "obſerved the very hour; and when they came to "Rabban Gamaliel, he ſaid unto them, this ſervice "ye have not been wanting in, nor abounded in; "but ſo the thing was, that in that hour the fever "left him, and he aſked of us water to drink." Which ſtory perhaps is told, to vye with this miracle of Chriſt, and to obſcure the glory of it.

Ver. 54. This is again the ſecond miracle that Jeſus did, &c.] That is, in that place, in Cana of Galilee; for otherwiſe in Jeruſalem and Judea, he had done many miracles, between the former and this; ſee ch. ii. 23. and iii. 2. and ſo the following words explain it: when he was come out of Judea into Galilee; this was the firſt he wrought, after his coming out of Judea into Galilee, this time, and was the ſecond that he wrought in Cana of Galilee; ſee ch. ii. 11.

CHAP. V.

Ver. 1. AFTER this there was a feaſt of the Jews, &c.] After Chriſt had been in Samaria, which was four months ago, ch. iv. 35. and had been in Galilee for that time, and had cured the nobleman's ſon, and had done other mighty works, the time came on for one of the three feſtivals of the Jews; either the feaſt of Pentecoſt, as ſome think; or as others, the feaſt of tabernacles; or rather, the feaſt of the paſſover, ſo called, in ch. iv. 45. ſince John is very particular, in giving an account of the ſeveral paſſovers, in Chriſt's miniſtry: and Jeſus went up to Jeruſalem; according to the law of God, which obliged all the males to appear there at that time; and to ſhew his compliance with it, and obedience to it, whom it became to fulfil all righteouſneſs; and this he did alſo, that he might have an opportunity of diſcourſing, and doing his miracles before all the people, which came at this time, from the ſeveral parts of the land.

Ver. 2. Now there is at Jeruſalem by the ſheep-market, &c.] The word market is not in the text, and of ſuch a market, no account is given in the ſcripture, nor in the Jewiſh writings; and beſides, in our Lord's time, ſheep and oxen were ſold in the temple; rather therefore this ſignifies, the ſheep-gate, of which mention is made, in Nehem. iii. 1, 32. and xii. 39. through which the ſheep were brought into the city, to the temple. The Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions read, there is at Jeruſalem a ſheep-pool; and ſo it is interpreted in the Arabic verſion, and Jerom calls it the cattle-pool [f]. The Targumiſt on Jer. xxxi. 39: ſpeaks of a pool called, בריכה עגלה, the calf, or heifer-pool, as Dr. Lightfoot renders it; though the tranſlations of it, both in the London Polyglott, and in the king of Spain's bible, interpret it the round pool. This pool of Betheſda, is thought by ſome, to be the ſame which the Jews call the great pool in Jeruſalem; they ſay [g], "between Hebron and Jeruſalem, "is the fountain Etham, from whence the waters "come by way of pipes, unto the great pool, "which is in Jeruſalem." And R. Benjamin [h] ſpeaks of a pool, which is to be ſeen to this day, where the ancients ſlew their ſacrifices, and all the Jews write their names on the wall: and ſome think it was ſo called, becauſe the ſheep that were offered in ſacrifice, were there waſhed; which muſt be either before, or after they were ſlain; not before, for it was not required, that what was to be ſlain for ſacrifice, ſhould be waſhed firſt; and afterwards, only the entrails of a beaſt were waſhed; and for this there was a particular place in the temple, called, לשכת המדיחין, the waſhing-room; where they ſay [i], they waſhed the inwards of the holy ſacrifices. This pool here therefore, ſeems rather, as Dr. Lightfoot obſerves, to have been a bath for unclean perſons; and having this miraculous virtue hereafter ſpoken of, diſeaſed perſons only, at certain times, had recourſe to it. The Syriac and Perſic verſions call it, a place of a baptiſtery; and both leave out the clauſe, by the ſheep-market, or gate: it is not eaſy to ſay, where and what it was: which is called in the Hebrew tongue, Betheſda; which ſignifies, according to the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions, an houſe of mercy, or grace, or goodneſs; becauſe many miſerable objects here received mercy, and a cure. Hegeſippus [k] ſpeaks of a Betheſda, which Ceſtius the Roman general entered into, and burnt; and which, according to him, ſeems to be without Jeruſalem, and ſo not the place here ſpoken of; and beſides, this is called a pool, though the buildings about it doubtleſs went by the ſame name. The Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions read Bethſaida, very wrongly; and it is called by Tertullian [l], the pool of Bethſaida. The Hebrew tongue here mentioned, is, כתב של עבר הנהר, the language of thoſe beyond the river [m], i. e. the river Euphrates; which is the Chaldee language, as diſtinct from the Aſſyrian language, which is called the holy and bleſſed language; the former is what the Cuthites, or Samaritans uſed; the latter, that in which the book of the law was written [n]. Having five porches; or cloiſtered walks, which were very convenient for the diſeaſed, which lay here for a cure, ſo Nonnus: Athanaſius [o] ſpeaks of the pool itſelf, as in being, though the buildings round about it, lay in ruins in his time; and [p] Daviler obſerves, there are ſtill remaining five arches of the portico, and part of the baſon. Now this place may be an emblem of the means of grace, the miniſtry of the word, and ordinances: the houſe of God, where the Goſpel is preached, may be called a Betheſda, an houſe of mercy; ſince here the free, ſovereign, rich, and abundant grace and mercy of God, through Chriſt, is proclaimed, as the ground and foundation of a ſinner's hope; the mercy of God, as it is diſplayed in the covenant of grace, in the miſſion of Chriſt, and redemption by him, in regeneration, and in the forgiveneſs of ſin, and indeed, in the whole of ſalvation, from firſt to laſt, is here held forth for the relief of diſtreſſed minds: and this Betheſda being a pool, ſome of the ancients have thought, it was an emblem of, and prefigured the ordinance of baptiſm; and that the miraculous virtue in it, was put into it, to give honour and credit to that ordinance, ſhortly to be adminiſtered: but as that is not the means of regeneration and converſion, or of a cure or cleanſing, but pre-requires them; rather it might be a ſymbol of the fountain of Chriſt's blood, opened for polluted ſinners to waſh in, and which cleanſes from all ſin, and cures all diſeaſes; and this is opened in the houſe of mercy, and by the miniſtry of the word: or rather beſt of all, the Goſpel itſelf, and the miniſtration of it, may be ſignified; which is ſometimes compared to waters, and a fountain of them; ſee Iſa. lv. 1. Zech. xiv. 8. Joel iii. 18. and whereas this pool was in Jeruſalem, and that ſo often deſigns the church of Chriſt under the Goſpel diſpenſation, it may fitly repreſent the miniſtry of the word there: and it being near the ſheep-market, or gate, or a ſheep-pool, may not be without its ſignificancy; and may lead us to obſerve, that near where Chriſt's ſheep are, which the Father has given him, and he has died for, and muſt bring in, he fixes his word and ordinances, in order to gather them in: and inaſmuch as there were five porches, or cloiſtered walks, leading unto, or adjoining to this place, it has been thought by ſome of the ancients, that the law, as lying in the five books of Moſes, may be intended by them; for under the law, and under a work of it, men are, before they come into the light and liberty, and comfort of the Goſpel; and as the people which lay in theſe porches, received no cure there, ſo there are no relief, peace, joy, life, and ſalvation, by the law of works.

Ver. 3. In theſe lay a great multitude of impotent folk, &c.] Sick and weak perſons; who were an emblem of men under the law of works, and in a ſtate of unregeneracy; who are enfeebled by ſin, and are impotent and unable to do any thing of themſelves; as to keep the law of God, to which they have neither will nor power, and to atone for the tranſgreſſions of it; nor to redeem themſelves from the curſe of the law; or to begin and carry on a work of grace upon their ſouls; or to do any thing that is ſpiritually good; no, not to think a good thought, or to do a good action, as is required: of blind; theſe alſo may repreſent men in a ſtate of nature, who are ignorant of, and blind to every thing that is ſpiritual; as to the true knowledge of God in Chriſt, the way of ſalvation by him, the plague of their own hearts, and the exceeding ſinfulneſs of ſin; to the Spirit of God, and his work upon the ſoul; and to the truths of the Goſpel, in the power of them: halt, or lame; this word ſometimes is uſed, of perſons in ſuſpenſe about religious things, heſitating concerning them, halting between two opinions; and ſometimes deſigns the infirmities of the ſaints, and their faultering in religious exerciſes; and here may be expreſſive in a figurative way, of the incapacity of natural men, to go or walk of themſelves; as to come to Chriſt for grace and life, which no man can do, except the Father draw him; or to walk by faith in him: 'tis added, withered; one limb or another of them dried up; their arms or legs were withered, and their ſinews ſhrunk, and were without radical moiſture, or the free uſe of the animal ſpirits; and may point out carnal perſons, ſuch as are ſenſual, not having the Spirit, deſtitute of the grace of God, without faith, hope, love, knowledge, and the fear of God; without God, Chriſt, and the Spirit; and in a lifeleſs, helpleſs, hopeleſs, and periſhing condition: waiting for the moving of the water; hereafter mentioned: and ſo it is in providence, and a wonderful thing it is, that the hearts of ſo many unregenerate perſons, ſhould be inclined to attend upon the outward means of grace, and ſhould be waiting at wiſdoms gates, and watching at the poſts of her door.

Ver. 4. For an angel went down at a certain ſeaſon into the pool, &c.] This angel is not to be underſtood of a meſſenger ſent from the Sanhedrim, or by the prieſts, as Dr. Hammond thinks; who has a ſtrange conceit, that this pool was uſed for the waſhing of the entrails of the ſacrifices; and which at the paſſover being very numerous, the water in it mixed with the blood of the entrails, was poſſeſſed of an healing virtue; and which being ſtirred by a meſſenger ſent from the Sanhedrim for that purpoſe, whoever went in directly received a cure: but this angel was an angel of the Lord, as the Vulgate Latin, and two of Beza's copies read; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion reads, an angel of God; who either in a viſible form came down from heaven, and went into the pool, the Ethiopic verſion very wrongly renders it, was waſhed in the pool; or it was concluded by the people, from the unuſual agitation of the water, and the miraculous virtue which enſued upon it, that an angel did deſcend into it; and this was not at all times, but at a certain time; either once a year, as Tertullian thought, at the time of the feaſt of the paſſover, or every ſabbath, as this was now the ſabbath-day; or it may be there was no fixed period for it, but at ſome times and ſeaſons in the year ſo it was, which kept the people continually waiting for it: and troubled the water; agitated and moved it to and fro, cauſed it to ſwell and riſe, to bubble and boil up, and to roll about, and be as in a ferment. The Jews have a notion of ſpirits troubling waters; they ſpeak of a certain fountain where a ſpirit reſided, and an evil ſpirit attempted to come in his room; upon which a conteſt aroſe, and they ſaw, ערבוביי״א דמיי״א, the waters troubled, and thick drops of blood upon them [q]: the Syriac [r] writers have a tradition, that "because the body of Iſaiah "the prophet was hid in Siloah, therefore an angel "deſcended and moved the waters." Whoſoever then firſt after the troubling of the waters ſtepped in, was made whole of whatſoever diſeaſe he had; from whence it ſeems, that only one perſon at a ſeaſon received a cure, by going in firſt into the water, ſo Tertullian thought [s]: the Jews aſcribe an healing virtue to the well of Miriam; they ſay, "a certain ulcerous perſon, went to dip himſelf in the "ſea of Tiberias, and it happened at that time, "that the well of Miriam flowed, and he waſhed, "ואיתסי, and was healed [t]." Now this angel may repreſent a miniſter of the Goſpel, for ſuch are called angels, Rev. i. 20. being called of God, and ſent by him, with meſſages of grace to the ſons of men; and the preaching of the Goſpel by ſuch, may be aptly ſignified by the troubling of the waters, as it is by the ſhaking of heaven, earth, and ſea; ſee Hagg. ii. 6, 7. compared with Heb. xii. 25, 26. eſpecially when attended with the Spirit of God, who moved upon the face of the waters in the firſt creation; and who, in and by the miniſtry of the word, troubles the minds of men, and whilſt the prophet propheſies, cauſes a ſhaking among the dry bones, which is done at certain ſeaſons; for as there are certain ſeaſons for the preaching of the Goſpel, ſo there is more eſpecially a fixed, ſettled, and appointed one, for the converſion of God's elect; who are called according to purpoſe, and at the time the Lord has appointed: and whoever now, upon the preaching of the Goſpel, are enabled to ſtep forth and come to Chriſt, and believe in him, are cured of all their ſoul-maladies and diſeaſes, be they what they will; all their iniquities are pardoned, their perſons juſtified, and they are ſaved in Chriſt, with an everlaſting ſalvation: and as this cure was not owing to any natural virtue in the water, nor even to the angels troubling it, but to a ſupernatural power; ſo the converſion of a ſinner, is not owing to miniſters, and to the word and ordinances as adminiſtered by them, but to the ſuperior power of the grace of God; and which is exerted in his time, and on whom he pleaſes.

Ver. 5. And a certain man was there, &c.] At Betheſda's pool, in one of the five porches, or cloiſters, that belonged to it: which had an infirmity thirty and eight years; what his infirmity was, is not ſaid; he was one of the weak, or impotent folk, for ſo he is called, ver. 7. Some think his diſtemper was the palſy, and though he had had this infirmity ſo many years, it is not certain that he had waited ſo long in this place for a cure; tho' it may be, for that he had attended ſome time, is clear from ver. 7. Nor indeed can it be known, how long there had been ſuch a preternatural motion in this pool, and ſuch a miraculous virtue in the water; ſome have thought, that it began at the repairing of the ſheep-gate by Eliaſhib, in Nehemiah's time; ſo Tremellius and Junius, on Neh. iii. 1. and others, have thought, that it had been ſome few years before the birth of Chriſt, and about the time that this man was firſt taken with his diſorder. Tertullian ſays [u], that there was in Judea a medicinal lake, before Chriſt's time; and that the pool of Bethſaida, (it ſhould be Betheſda) was uſeful in curing the diſeaſes of the Iſraelites; but ceaſed from yielding any benefit, when the name of the Lord was blaſphemed by them, through their rage and fury, and continuance in it [w]; but in what year it began, and the preciſe time it ceaſed, he ſays not. The Perſic verſion here adds, and was reduced to ſuch a ſtate that he could not move.

Ver. 6. When Jeſus ſaw him lie, &c.] In ſuch a helpleſs condition: and knew that he had been now a long time; in that caſe, or in his diſeaſe, as the Ethiopic verſion ſupplies; even ſeven years before Chriſt was born; which is a proof of his omniſcience: the words may be literally rendered, as they are in the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions, that he had had much time; or as the Arabic verſion, that he had had many years; that is, had lived many years, and was now an old man; he had his diſorder eight and thirty years, and which ſeems from ver. 14. to have ariſen from ſome ſin of his, from a vicious courſe of living, perhaps intemperance; ſo that he might be a middled aged man, when this diſtemper firſt ſeized him, and therefore muſt be now ſtricken in years: he ſaith unto him, wilt thou be made whole? which queſtion is put, not as if it was a doubt, whether he was deſirous of it, or no; for to what purpoſe did he lie and wait there elſe? but partly to raiſe in the man an expectation of a cure, and attention in the people to it: and it may be his ſenſe and meaning is, wilt thou be made whole on this day, which was the ſabbath; or haſt thou faith that thou ſhalt be made whole in this way, or by me?

Ver. 7. The impotent man anſwered him, Sir, &c.] Which was a common and courteous way of ſpeaking, much in uſe with the Jews, eſpecially to ſtrangers. The Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions read, yea Lord, which is a direct anſwer to the queſtion: I have no man; the Ethiopic verſion reads, men; he had no ſervant, ſo Nonnus, or ſervants, to wait upon him, and take him up in their arms, and carry him into the pool; he was a poor man, and ſuch God is pleaſed to chooſe and call by his grace: when the water is troubled, to put me into the pool; that is, as ſoon as it is troubled by the angel, to put him in firſt before any other; for it was the firſt man only that had a cure this way: but while I am coming; in a ſlow way, by the help of his crutches, or in the beſt manner he could: another ſteppeth down before me; not ſo much diſordered, or more active and nimble: ſo among thoſe that wait on the miniſtry of the word, ſome are ſooner in Chriſt, or earlier called by his grace, than others; ſome lie here a long time, and ſee one and another come to Chriſt, believe in him, profeſs his name, and are received into the church; and they ſtill left, in an uncalled and unconverted eſtate.

Ver. 8. Jeſus ſaith to him, riſe, &c.] From thy bed, or couch, on which he lay in one of the porches: and take up thy bed and walk; theſe words were ſpoken by the ſame power, as thoſe to Lazarus, which called him out of his grave; as appears from the effect they had upon the man, who was in himſelf impotent, weak, and helpleſs.

Ver. 9. And immediately the man was made whole, &c.] As ſoon as ever the words were ſpoken by Chriſt, ſuch power went with them, as reſtored the man to perfect health; and he finding himſelf to be quite well, roſe up directly: and took up his bed and walked; which may be expreſſive of a ſinner's riſing from the bed of ſin, and taking up the croſs, or carrying the body of ſin and death with him; and walking by faith in Chriſt, as he has received him: and on the ſame day was the ſabbath; which is remarked, for the ſake of what follows.

Ver. 10. The Jews therefore ſaid unto him that was cured, &c.] When they ſaw him, either at the place, or as he walked through the ſtreets, with his bed on his back: it is the ſabbath-day; don't you know it? ſurely you forget yourſelf, or you would never be guilty of ſuch an action as this; it is not lawful for thee to carry thy bed. It was forbid by the law, to carry any burthen on the ſabbath-day; ſee Neh. xiii. 15, 19. and Jer. xvii. 22. for "carrying out and bringing in any thing, from "one place to another, is ſaid [x] to be work, and "one of the principal works;" and therefore forbid by the law, which ſays, thou ſhalt not do any work; and one of the traditions of the elders is this [y], "whoever carries any thing out (i. e. on "the ſabbath-day) whether in his right-hand, or "in his left, in his boſom, or, על כתיפו, on his ſhoulder, is guilty; for ſo carried the Kohathites." And particularly it is ſaid [z], that "he that rolls up "a bed of the braſiers or tinkers (i. e. on the ſab"bath-day) is bound to a ſin-offering." Which was a fold-up bed, ſuch as tinkers, and thoſe that went from city to city to work had; and who carried their beds with them, as the Gloſs obſerves; and were ſo far from being lawful to be carried by them, on the ſabbath, that they might not fold them up.

Ver. 11. He anſwered them, &c.] That is, the impotent man, who was now made whole, replied to the Jews: he that made me whole, the ſame ſaid unto me, take up thy bed and walk; intimating, that he that had ſuch divine power, as to make him whole, had power to diſpenſe with the ſabbath, and ſuch an action on it; and that his word was warrant and authority ſufficient, to ſupport him in what he did; for he that had wrought this cure for him, he concluded muſt be from God; was at leaſt a great prophet, and to be hearkened to and obeyed, in one thing as well as another.

Ver. 12. Then aſked they him, &c.] Suſpecting who had made him whole, and gave him this order: what man is that which ſaid unto thee, take up thy bed and walk? they take no notice of the cure, being unwilling to give any glory to Chriſt, and ſtill leſs to ſpread it; but choſe rather that it ſhould be obſcured, hid, and unobſerved; but they laid hold on that, which they thought might be improved to his reproach and ſcandal; and they call him a man, as ſuppoſing him to be a mere man, and a wicked man too, for giving orders to tranſgreſs a tradition of the elders, though no mere man could work ſuch a cure as this was. And ſo the Jews ſince, though they can't find fault with the cure, which they put an if upon, yet are highly diſpleaſed with the order, to take up his bed and carry it: "if ſay they[a], he wrought a cure, lo, that is "good, but why did he bid him take up his bed?" the anſwer may be to ſhew, that he was cured.

Ver. 13. And he that was healed, wiſt not who he was, &c.] He had never ſeen, and perhaps had never heard of Chriſt before, and ſo knew him not; and beſides, Chriſt gave him no opportunity of converſing with him, or ſo much as to aſk him who he was: for Jeſus had conveyed himſelf away; had ſlided away, as ſoon as ever he had wrought the miracle: a multitude being in that place; or from the multitude that were in that place; not that he hid himſelf among them, and there remained undiſcovered; but he paſſed through them, and went his way to the temple, where he found the man he had healed, as in the following verſe.

Ver. 14. Afterward Jeſus findeth him in the temple, &c.] Perhaps on the ſame day; for as ſoon as he had been at home, and laid down his bed, it is very likely he went directly to the temple, there to ſhew himſelf, attend the worſhip of the place, and return thanks to God for the great mercy beſtowed on him: and ſaid unto him, behold thou art made whole; cured of the diſeaſe, that had attended him ſo many years; and a wonderful cure it was; well may a behold be prefixed; though this is here not only a note of admiration, but of attention, to what he was about to ſay to him: ſin is a diſeaſe, which is original, natural, and hereditary to men; it is an epidemical one, all are affected with it, and all the powers and faculties of the ſoul; and it is a nauſeous and loathſome one; and what is mortal and incurable in itſelf, and only to be cured by the great phyſician, Jeſus Chriſt: God's elect are attended with it as others, and being made ſenſible thereof, they come to Chriſt for a cure, and receive one, as this man did, to whom he ſaid, ſin no more; intimating, that as all diſeaſes of the body ſpring from ſin, ſo had his; and that the time paſt of his life ſhould ſuffice, for a courſe of ſinning; and that the mercy he had received, laid him under an obligation to guard againſt it, to which there would ſtill be a proneneſs in him; nor did our Lord imagine, that he could hereafter live without ſin, but that he ſhould not indulge himſelf in it, and give up himſelf unto it, and live in it: ſo all the diſeaſes of the ſoul ariſe from ſin; and when a perſon is converted, he ought not to walk as others do, or he himſelf has done; and though there is a propenſity to ſin and backſlide from God after converſion, yet the grace of God teaches men to deny ſin, and to live righteouſly; and though it cannot be thought that they ſhould be, and act without ſin, yet it becomes them not to live in ſin, or go on in a courſe of it, as heretofore: leſt a worſe thing come unto thee; for God could ſend a worſe diſeaſe, or a ſorer affliction, than he had yet done; an heavier puniſhment, either in this world, or that to come: and apply this to a good man, a converted man, one called by grace, and cured by Chriſt, and a worſe thing through ſin may come unto him than a bodily diſorder, namely, the hidings of God's face; for as his preſence is life, his abſence is death, to ſuch perſons; and as for ſuch who only make a profeſſion of religion, and are externally reformed only, ſuch, if they ſin and fall away, their latter end is worſe than the beginning.

Ver. 15. The man departed, &c.] From Chriſt, and from the temple, not thro' diſpleaſure, or as reſenting what was ſaid to him, but as highly delighted that he had found his kind benefactor and phyſician; and went either to Betheſda, where the miracle was wrought, and where a multitude of people were, and where he might expect to find ſome of the perſons that had queſtioned him about carrying his bed, and who it was that bid him do it; or rather to the Sanhedrim; ſee ver. 33. compared with ch. i. 19. and told the Jews; the members of that great council, the chief-prieſts, Scribes, and elders, whoſe buſineſs it was to judge of a prophet, and of any one that ſhould ſet up for the Meſſiah: that it was Jeſus; of Nazareth, of whom ſo much talk was about his doctrines and miracles, and who was thought to be the Meſſiah: which had made him whole; this he did, not out of any ill will to Chriſt, with any bad deſign upon him, to impeach and accuſe him as a violator of the ſabbath, for what he had ſaid and done to him; for this would have been moſt ungrateful, and even barbarous, brutiſh, and diabolical; but with a good intention, that Jeſus might have the glory of the cure, and that others of his fellow-creatures in diſtreſs might know where, and from whom to have relief; and chiefly that the Sanhedrim might be induced hereby to believe that Jeſus was the Meſſiah, and to declare and patronize him as ſuch: and that his end was good, is clear from this, that he does not ſay it was Jeſus that bid him take up his bed and walk, which was what the Jews cavilled at, not caring to hear of the cure; but that made him whole: he obſerves the miracle to them with a grateful ſpirit, to the honour of his phyſician, and that he might be thought to be what he really was.

Ver. 16. And therefore did the Jews perſecute Jeſus, &c.] With their tongues, reproaching and reviling him, as a ſabbath-breaker, a deſtroyer of the law, and a ſinful wicked man: and ſought to ſlay him; either in a violent way, by ſetting the zealots, a ſort of ruffians under the pretence of religion, upon him; or rather in a judicial way, ſummoning him before the Sanhedrim, in order to condemn him to death for the breach of the ſabbath, which by the law of Moſes was puniſhable with death: becauſe he had done theſe things on the ſabbath-day; becauſe he had cured the man of his diſeaſe, under which he had laboured eight and thirty years, and had ordered him to take up his bed, and walk home with it on his back on the ſabbath-day. This drew upon him their reſentment to ſuch a degree, that they not only perſecuted him with their tongues, but ſought to take away his life. Nothing would ſatisfy them but his blood.

[a] Vet. Nizzachon, p. 207.

Ver. 17. But Jeſus anſwered them, &c.] Being convened before them, and charged by them with the violation of the ſabbath, he vindicated himſelf in the following manner, ſaying; my Father worketh hitherto: he who is my Father, not by creation, or adoption, but by nature, tho' he ended all his work on the ſeventh day, and reſted from what he had done; yet he did not ceaſe from working at all, but has continued to work ever ſince, on ſabbath-days, as well as on other days; in upholding and governing the world, in continuing the ſpecies of beings, and all creatures in their being; in providing for them, and in diſpenſing the bounties of his providence to them; in cauſing his ſun to ſhine, and ſhowers of rain to deſcend on the earth; and in taking care of, and protecting even the meaneſt of his creatures; and much more men; and ſtill more his own people: and I work; or alſo I work, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions read; i. e. in conjunction with him, as a co-efficient cauſe in the works of providence, in the government of the world, in upholding all things in it, in bearing up the pillars of the earth, in holding things together, and ſuſtaining all creatures: or I alſo work in imitation of him, in doing good both to the bodies and ſouls of men on the ſabbath-day, being the Lord of it: I do but what my Father does; and therefore, as he is not to be blamed for his works on that day, as none will ſay he is, no more am I. So Philo the Jew ſays[b], "God "never ceaſes to work; but as it is the pro"perty of fire to burn, and of ſnow to cool, ſo "of God to work." And what moſt men call fortune, he calls the divine Logos, or Word, to whom he aſcribes all the affairs of providence[c].

Ver. 18. Therefore the Jews ſought the more to kill him, &c.] They were the more deſirous to take away his life, and were more bent and reſolute upon it, and ſtudied all ways and means how to bring it about: becauſe he had not only broken the ſabbath; as they imagined; for he had not really broken it: and if they had known what that means, that God will have mercy, and not ſacrifice, they would have been convinced that he had not broke it by this act of mercy to a poor diſtreſſed object: but ſaid alſo that God was his Father; his own Father, his proper Father, his Father by nature, and that he was his own Son by nature; and this they gathered from his calling him my Father, and aſſuming a co-operation with him in his divine works: making himſelf to be equal with God; to be of the ſame nature, and have the ſame perfections, and do the ſame works; for by ſaying that God was his Father, and ſo that he was the Son of God, a phraſe, which, with them, ſignified a divine perſon, as they might learn from Pſ. ii. 7, 12. and by aſcribing the ſame operations to himſelf, as to his Father, they rightly underſtood him, that he aſſerted his equality with him; for had he intended no more, and they had imagined that he intended no more by calling God his Father, than that he was ſo by creation, as he is to all men, or by adoption, as he was to the Jews, they would not have been ſo angry with him; for the phraſe, in this ſenſe, they uſed themſelves: but they underſtood him otherwiſe, as aſſerting his proper deity, and perfect equality with the Father; and therefore to the charge of ſabbath-breaking, add that of blaſphemy, and on account of both, ſought to put him to death; for, according to their canons, both the ſabbath-breaker, and the blaſphemer, were to be ſtoned[d].

Ver. 19. Then anſwered Jeſus, and ſaid unto them, &c.] Charging him with blaſphemy for calling God his Father, and making himſelf equal to him: and his anſwer is ſo far from denying the thing, or obſerving any miſtake, or miſrepreſentation of his words, that he allows the whole, and vindicates himſelf in ſo ſaying: verily verily; nothing is more certain; it may be depended on as truth; I who am truth itſelf, the Amen, and faithful witneſs, aver it with the greateſt aſſurance: the Son can do nothing of himſelf; or he does do nothing of himſelf, nor will he do any thing of himſelf; that is, he neither does, nor will, nor can do any thing alone or ſeparate from his Father, or in which he is not concerned; not any thing without his knowledge and conſent, or contrary to his will: he does every thing in conjunction with him; with the ſame power, having the ſame will, being of the ſame nature, and equal to each other: for theſe words do not deſign any weakneſs in the Son, or want of power in him to do any thing of himſelf; that is, by his own power: for he has by his word of power ſpoke all things out of nothing, and by the ſame upholds all things; he has himſelf bore the ſins of his people, and by himſelf purged them away, and has raiſed himſelf from the dead; but they expreſs his perfection, that he does nothing, and can do nothing of himſelf, in oppoſition to his Father, and in contradiction to his will; as ſatan ſpeaks of his own, and evil men alienated from God, act of themſelves, and do that which is contrary to the nature and will of God; but the Son cannot do ſo, being of the ſame nature with God, and therefore never acts ſeparate from him, or contrary to him, but always co-operates and acts with him, and therefore never to be blamed for what he does. The Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions render it, the Son cannot do any thing of his own will; ſo Nonnus; as ſeparate from, or contrary to his Father's will, but always in agreement with it, they being one in nature, and ſo in will and work. He does nothing therefore but what he ſeeth the Father do; not that he ſees the Father actually do a work, and then he does one after him, as the creation of the world, the aſſumption of human nature, and redemption of man, or any particular miracle, as if upon obſerving one done, he did the like; but that he being brought up with him, and lying in his boſom, was privy to the whole plan of his works, and ſaw in his nature and infinite mind, and in his vaſt counſels, purpoſes, and deſigns, all that he was doing, or would do, and ſo did the ſame, or acted agreeable to them; and which ſtill ſhows and proves their unity of nature, and perfect equality, ſince there was nothing in the Father's mind but was known to the Son, ſeen, and obſerved, and acted up to by him: ſo Philo the Jew[e] ſays of the "Father's moſt ancient Son, "whom he otherwiſe calls the firſt-born; that being "begotten, he imitates the Father, and ſeeing, or "looking to his exemplars and archetypes, forms ſpe"cies;" that is, being converſant with the original and eternal ideas of things in the divine mind, acts according to them, which he could not do if he was not of the ſame nature with, and equal to his Father. Moreover, the Son ſees what the Father does by co-operating with him, and ſo does no other than what he ſees the Father do, in conjunction with him: to which may be added, that the phraſe ſhows, that the Son does nothing but in wiſdom, and with knowledge; and that as the Father, ſo he does all things after the counſel of his will: for whatſoever things he doth, theſe alſo doth the Son likewiſe; the Son does the ſelf-ſame works as the Father does, ſuch as the works of creation and providence, the government both of the church, and of the world; and he does theſe things in like manner, with the ſame power, and by the ſame authority, his Father does, and which proves him to be equal with him; the very thing the Jews underſtood him to have aſſerted, and which they charged him with; and this he ſtrongly maintained. The Syriac verſion reads, for the things which the Father does, the ſame alſo does the Son; and the Perſic verſion, whatſover God has done, the Son alſo does like unto it.

[e] De Confuſ. Ling. p. 329.

Ver. 20. For the Father loveth the Son, &c.] As being his Son, his image, the brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon; as being of the ſame nature, and having the ſame perfections, and ſo equal to him; ſee the note on ch. iii. 35. and ſheweth him all things that himſelf doth; not as if he was ignorant of them, ſince he lies in the boſom of his Father, is the wiſdom of God, is the omniſcient God, that knows all things; not only all things in men, but all things in God, even the deep things of God: but this is ſaid of the Father, as conſulting with him, communicating his deſigns to him, as his equal; doing nothing without him, as he never did in the works of nature, or of grace: he drew the plan of peace, reconciliation, and ſalvation in him; he made the worlds by him; and he does nothing in the government of the world without him; and indeed he ſhews him all things he does, by doing all things; and by him he ſhews himſelf, and his works, to men: and he will ſhew him greater works than theſe; or he will do greater works by him than theſe: either than the works of creation; namely, the redemption of the elect, the juſtification of their perſons by his righteouſneſs, and pardon of their ſins thro' his blood, and the regeneration and converſion of them by his Spirit and grace; either of which is a greater work than the making of the world: or greater than he has done under the Old Teſtament diſpenſation; than the redeeming of Iſrael out of Egypt, leading them thro' the wilderneſs, and ſettling them in the land of Canaan; giving them the law, the ſtatutes, and ordinances of God, and working miracles among them; for the redemption of God's people, by Chriſt, from ſin, ſatan, the world, the law, death, and hell, the publiſhing of the Goſpel, the effuſion of the Spirit, and ſetting up of the Goſpel-diſpenſation, are greater works than theſe; and more and greater miracles were wrought by Chriſt than by Moſes, or any prophet under the former diſpenſation. Tho' rather the ſenſe is, that greater miracles would be ſhewn, and done by Chriſt, than theſe he had now done, in curing a man of his diſorder, who had had it eight and thirty years, and bidding him take up his bed and walk; ſuch as raiſing Jairus's daughter to life, when dead, and the widow of Naim's ſon, when he was carrying to the grave, and Lazarus, when he had been dead four days: that ye may marvel; this was not properly the end of theſe greater works ſhewn to, and done by Chriſt, which were to prove his divine Sonſhip, his proper deity, his true Meſſiahſhip, to confirm the faith of his followers in him, and for the glory of God; but this eventually followed upon them: ſome wondered at them, and believed in him; and others were amazed at them, and confounded by them.

Ver. 21. For as the Father raiſeth up the dead, and quickneth them, &c.] Which may be underſtood either ſpiritually of raiſing dead ſinners from the death of ſin, to a life of grace and holineſs; and the rather, becauſe it is expreſſed in the preſent tenſe raiſeth, and not hath raiſed; or naturally of raiſing thoſe that are dead in a corporal ſenſe, and quickning them, as the widow of Sarepta's ſon by Elijah, and the Shunamite's ſon by Eliſha: even ſo the Son quickneth whom he will; both in a ſpiritual ſenſe, being the reſurrection and the life, or the author of the reſurrection from a moral death to a ſpiritual life, whoſe voice, in the Goſpel, the dead in ſin hear and live; and in a natural ſenſe, as in the above inſtances of Jairus's daughter, the widow of Naim's ſon, and Lazarus; and in the general reſurrection, when at his voice, and word of power, all that are in their graves ſhall come forth, ſome to everlaſting life, and ſome to everlaſting damnation; and all this as he wills: he quickens, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, whom he pleaſes, even as many as the Father has given him; and he will raiſe up to everlaſting life, at the laſt day, whom he pleaſes, even as many as were made his care and charge, whom he has redeemed by his blood, and called by his grace. Now as the quickning of the dead is an act of almighty power; and this being exerciſed by the Son in a ſovereign way, as is by his father, it ſhews his proper deity, and full equality with the Father. The reſurrection of the dead is here expreſſed by quickning, as it frequently is by the Jews, who often ſpeak of תחיית המתים, the quickning of the dead, for the reſurrection; ſo the Targumiſt on Zech. iii. 8. in the quickning of the dead, אחינך, I will quicken thee; ſee the Jeruſalem Targum on Gen. xix. 26. and xxv. 34.

Ver. 22. For the Father judgeth no man, &c.] That is, without the Son; which is another proof of their equality: for that he does judge is certain; he is the judge of the whole earth; he is God that judgeth in the earth, or governs the world with his Son, who works together in the affairs of providence: he judged and condemned the old world, but not without his Son, who by his Spirit, or in his divine nature, went and preached to the ſpirits now in priſon, then diſobedient in the times of Noah; he judged and condemned Sodom and Gomorrha, but not without the Son; for Jehovah the Son rained, from Jehovah the Father, fire and brimſtone upon thoſe cities, and conſumed them; he judged the people of Iſrael, and often chaſtized them for their ſins, but not without his Son, the angel of his preſence that went before them; he judges all men, and juſtifies and acquits whom he pleaſes, but not without his Son; but thro' his juſtifying righteouſneſs, which he imputes to them; in doing which he appears to be a juſt judge, and to do right; and he will judge the world in righteouſneſs at the laſt day by his Son, whom he has ordained; ſo as the Son does nothing without the Father, the Father does nothing without the Son, which ſhews perfect equality. The Jews had an officer in their Sanhedrim, whom they called Ab Beth Din, or the father of the houſe of judgment, to whom belonged the trying of cauſes, and of judging and determining them. Hence the Targumiſt on Cant. vii. 4. ſays, "ואב בית דינא, and the father of the houſe of "judgment, who judgeth thy judgments, or deter- "mines thy cauſes, is mighty over thy people, &c."

Whether there may not be ſome alluſion here to this officer, I leave to be conſidered: but hath committed all judgment to the Son; as the judgment, or government of his church and people, eſpecially under the Goſpel-diſpenſation; and which he exerciſes by giving ordinances peculiar to it, ſuch as baptiſm and the Lord's ſupper; and by enacting laws, and preſcribing rules for the diſcipline of his houſe, over which he is as a ſon; and by appointing proper officers under him, over his churches, to adminiſter theſe ordinances, and ſee that theſe laws are put in execution, which he qualifies them for, by beſtowing proper gifts upon them: and he exerciſes this judgment, by protecting and defending his people from all their enemies, ſo that they dwell ſafely under his government: as alſo the general judgment of the world at the laſt day, is committed to him; which affair will be managed by Chriſt, the Son of God, when he comes a ſecond time; he'll then raiſe the dead, that every one may receive for the things done in his body, whether good or evil; he'll gather all nations before him, and all ſhall ſtand before his judgment-ſeat, both great and ſmall; he'll ſeparate one from another, the ſheep from the goats, and ſet the one on his right hand, and the other on his left; he'll bring every work into judgment, with every ſecret thing, and ſhew himſelf to be the ſearcher of the hearts, and the trier of the reins of the children of men, and will paſs a moſt righteous and deciſive ſentence upon all: now for ſuch a truſt, and ſuch a work as this, whether the particular government of the church, or the general judgment of the world, he would not be fit, was he not God equal with the Father; the thing he had ſuggeſted, and which he ſupports and maintains in this vindication of himſelf.

Ver. 23. That all men ſhould honour the Son, &c.] This is the end of all judgment, and the exerciſe of all authority, and power being committed to him; namely, that he might have the honour given him by men that is due unto him: even as they honour the Father; that the ſame honour and glory may be given to the one, as to the other, which muſt never have been done was he not equal with him, ſince he gives not his glory to another, Iſ. xlii. 8. and xlviii. 11. Indeed, all men do not honour the Father as they ſhould; the Gentiles, who had ſome knowledge of God, glorified him not as God; and the Jews, who had an external revelation of the one, true, and living God, which other nations had not, yet were greatly deficient in honouring him, which made him complaining ſay, if then I be a father, where is mine honour? Mal. i. 6. And Chriſtians, who are favoured with a clearer revelation ſtill of the Father of Chriſt, are much wanting in giving him his due glory; but in common he is honoured, tho' in an imperfect manner; nor is there ſo much danger of his loſing his honour, as of the Son's loſing his: the reaſon is this, tho' the Son is in the form of God, and equal with him, yet by taking upon him the form of a ſervant, by becoming man, he has veiled the glory of his divine perſon, and made himſelf of no reputation; and by reaſon of this was reckoned by many, or moſt, as a mere man: wherefore, by agreement, that judgment, power, and authority, which equally belonged to the Father, and the Son, the exerciſe of it is put viſibly and openly into the Son's hands, that he might have his due honour and glory from all men, whether they will or no: from true believers in him he has it willingly, by their aſcribing deity to him, by putting their truſt in him, by attributing the whole of their ſalvation to him, and the glory of it, and by worſhipping him: and he will be honoured by all men at the laſt day; they will be obliged to do it; for all judgment being committed to him, and he being judge of all, every knee ſhall bow to him, and every tongue ſhall confeſs that he is Lord, to his own glory, and to the glory of God the Father; ſee Iſ. xlv. 23. Phil. ii. 10, 11. He that honoureth not the Son; that denies his divine Sonſhip, or his proper deity; that detracts from the dignity of his perſon or office; that ſhews no regard to him in point of ſalvation, or of obedience: honoureth not the Father which hath ſent him; they are ſo the ſame in nature and perfections, in power, will, affections, and operations; and their intereſts and honours are ſo involved together, that whatever diſhonour is done to one reflects on the other: and indeed, whatever is done in a way of diſreſpect to the Son, as incarnate, and in his office-capacity, highly reflects on his Father that ſent him in the fulneſs of time, in human nature, to obtain eternal redemption for his people, according to a rule often expreſſed by the Jews, "a man's meſſenger is as himſelf;" ſee the note on Matt. x. 40.

Ver. 24. Verily verily, I ſay unto you, &c.] Who am the Amen, the true and faithful witneſs: he that heareth my word; by which is meant the Goſpel, and is ſo called, both becauſe it is ſpoken by Chriſt, and firſt began to be ſpoken by him; and becauſe he is ſpoken of in it; his perſon, office, and work, peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation by him, being the ſum and ſubſtance of it: and by hearing it is meant, not a bare external hearing it; for ſo it may be heard, and not underſtood; and it may be underſtood in a notional and ſpeculative way, and yet the conſequences hereafter mentioned may not follow: but an internal hearing it is here deſigned, ſo as to underſtand it ſpiritually, or to have an experimental knowledge of it; ſo as to approve of it, love, and like it; to diſtinguiſh it from that which is not his doctrine, and to feel the power of it on the heart, and yield the obedience of faith unto it: for faith in Chriſt himſelf, the ſum and ſubſtance of the word of the Goſpel, is hereby expreſſed; to which is joined faith in God his Father, they being equally the object of it; and which is introduced as a further proof of the equality in nature which is between them; ſee John xiv. 1. and believeth on him that ſent me; he does not ſay that believes on me, which might have been expected from him; but that believes on him that ſent me, that is, on the Father; for as he that rejects Chriſt, and receives not his words, rejects and receives not him that ſent him; ſo he that hears Chriſt's words, and receives him, and believes in him, receives and believes in him that ſent him; and the ſame effects and conſequences follow upon the one as on the other, upon hearing the word of Chriſt, as upon believing on the Father of Chriſt; and which is no inconſiderable proof of their perfect equality: for ſuch a perſon that hears the one, and believes on the other, hath everlaſting life; not only in the purpoſe of God, and in the covenant of his grace, and in the hands of Chriſt, and in faith and hope; but he has a right unto it, and a claim of it, according to the declaration of the Goſpel; and beſides, has the principle of it in himſelf, the grace of God, which ſprings up into, is the beginning of, and iſſues in eternal life; he has alſo a meetneſs for it, and has the pledge and earneſt of it, the Spirit of God, and ſhall certainly enjoy it: and ſhall not come into condemnation; neither for original ſin, tho' judgment has paſſed upon all men unto condemnation for it; nor for actual ſins and tranſgreſſions; for tho' every one deſerves condemnation, yet were there as many ſentences of condemnation iſſued out as ſins committed, not one of them could be executed on ſuch who are in Chriſt Jeſus, as he that believes in him is openly and manifeſtatively in him: the reaſon is, becauſe the death of Chriſt is a ſecurity againſt all condemnation; and whoever believes in him ſhall not be condemned, but ſaved; and tho' he may come into judgment, yet not into condemnation: he ſhall ſtand in judgment, and be acquitted by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which he, by faith, receives as his juſtifying righteouſneſs. But is paſſed from death unto life; both from a moral death to a ſpiritual life, being quickned, who before was dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; and from under a ſentence of condemnation, and eternal death, which, as a deſcendant of Adam, and according to the tenor of the law of works, he was ſubject to, to an open ſtate of juſtification, according to the tenor of the covenant of grace; the righteouſneſs of Chriſt being revealed to him, and received by faith, and the ſentence of juſtification paſſed upon his conſcience by the Spirit; ſo that he who before, in his own apprehenſion, was a dead man in a law ſenſe, is now alive to God, and ſecure from the ſecond death, and being hurt by it.

Ver. 25. Verily verily I ſay unto you, &c.] With the ſame aſſeveration as before, and for the further illuſtration and confirmation of the ſame thing, occaſioned by the laſt clauſe of the preceding verſe, as well as improving upon the argument in ver. 21. for his equality with the Father, which he is ſtill purſuing: the hour is coming, and now is, when the dead ſhall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear ſhall live; which may be underſtood either of a corporal reſurrection, and of ſome particular inſtances of it, which ſhould ſhortly be; and of ſome perſons who would be in the ſtate of the dead, and to whom the voice of Chriſt would be attended with ſuch power as to cauſe them to hear and live; as did Jairus's daughter upon his ſaying Talitha Cumi, damſel ariſe, and the widow of Naim's ſon upon his ſaying, young man ariſe, and Lazarus, upon his calling to him, Lazarus come forth; and which is a full proof of his being equal to God that quickens the dead: or rather this is to be underſtood of a ſpiritual reſurrection, and the rather, becauſe this ſenſe beſt agrees with the foregoing verſe; and a corporal reſurrection is expreſſed in ſomewhat different words, and ſeems to be diſtinguiſhed from this in ver. 28, 29. And beſides, the hour, or time of the reſurrection of the above particular perſons was not ſtrictly come; nor could they, with propriety, be ſaid to be dead; to which may be added, that the phraſe, they that hear ſhall live, and none but them, beſt agrees with this ſenſe: ſo then by the dead are meant ſuch who are dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; who are ſeparated from God, alienated from the life of God, and in whom the image of God is defaced; who are dead in all the powers and faculties of their ſouls, to that which is ſpiritually good; and are without ſpiritual breath, ſenſe, feeling, and motion. And by the voice of Chriſt is intended his Goſpel, which is a voice of love, grace, and mercy, of life and liberty, of peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation by him; and which being attended with his power, is the means of quickening dead ſinners; who may be ſaid to hear it, when it comes not in word only, but in power, and works effectually in them; and is ſpirit and life, and the power of God unto ſalvation to them; when they receive it, underſtand, believe, and obey it: and ſuch perſons ſhall live; comfortably, pleaſantly, and delightfully, a life of faith on Chriſt, a life of communion with him, and ſhall live eternally with him hereafter.

Ver. 26. For as the Father hath life in himſelf, &c.] Is the living God, the fountain of life, and is the author of life to all living creatures; or rather has eternal life in his mind, his heart, his counſel, and his covenant, and in his hands, for all his choſen ones, which ſeems to be the peculiar ſenſe here: ſo hath he given to the Son to have life in himſelf; he hath not only made the purpoſe of it in him, and given the promiſe of it to him; but even eternal life itſelf, he has put into his hands, and ſecured it in him for them, 1 John v. 11. to give it to as many as he has given him: and he does give it to all his ſheep, ſo that not one of them ſhall periſh; which ſhows that he and his Father are one, tho' not in perſon, yet as in affection, will, and power, ſo in nature and eſſence. The Son has life in himſelf, eſſentially, originally, and inderivatively as the Father has, being equally the living God, the fountain of life, and donor of it, as he; and therefore this is not a life which he gives, or communicates to him; but eternal life is what the one gives, and the other receives, according to the œconomy of ſalvation ſettled between them: and hence it is, that all that hear Chriſt's voice ſpiritually ſhall live eternally; for theſe words are a reaſon of the former, and confirm the truth of them, as well as ſhow the equality of the Son with the Father, in that he is equal to ſuch a truſt, as to have eternal life committed to him.

Ver. 27. And hath given him authority to execute judgment alſo, &c.] Both in his church and kingdom, in the preſent ſtate of things, and at the laſt day, when all ſhall ſtand before his judgment-ſeat: and that becauſe he is the ſon of man; truly and properly man; becauſe, tho' he was in the form of God, and equal to him, yet became man, and was in the form of a ſervant: and ſo reads the Ethiopic verſion, becauſe the Son of God is the ſon of man; and therefore the authority of executing judgment, according to the council and covenant of peace, is committed to him; or that men might have a viſible judge, or be judged by one in their own nature: agreeably the Perſic verſion renders it, becauſe the Son himſelf is he who judges the ſons of men; or rather becauſe he is that ſon of man ſpoken of in prophecy, eſpecially in Dan. vii. 13. by whom is meant the Meſſiah, as the Jews themſelves allow[f], and who was not a mere man, but the man God's fellow; and ſo being both omniſcient and omnipotent, was equal to ſuch a work, which otherwiſe he would not have been; ſee the note on ver. 22. The Syriac verſion joins this clauſe to the beginning of the next verſe, and reads it thus, becauſe he is the ſon of man, marvel not at this; let this be no obſtruction to your faith of his quickning the dead, and having authority to execute judgment on all; ſince, tho' the ſon of man, he is not a mere man, but God over all, as what is next aſcribed to him manifeſtly ſhews.

[f] Zohar in Gen. fol. 85. 4. Bemidbar Rabba, §. 13. fol. 209. 4. Jarchi & Saadiah Gaon in Dan. vii. 13. & R. Jeſhuah in Aben Ezra in ib.

Ver. 28. Marvel not at this, &c.] Either at the cure of the man that had been diſeaſed thirty and eight years, as ſome think; or at the Son of God being alſo the ſon of man, as the Syriac verſion ſuggeſts; or rather at the dead hearing the voice of the Son of God, and living upon it; and at his having authority to execute judgment upon all, to govern and defend his own church and people, and in the laſt day acquit them, and to take vengeance on his and their enemies, both now and hereafter: for the hour is coming, in which all that are in their graves ſhall hear his voice. This reſpects the general reſurrection; for there will be a reſurrection both of the juſt and unjuſt, of all that are in their graves; and tho' all that are dead are not in graves, or interred in the earth, ſome are in the ſea; yet, becauſe the greater part are in graves, this phraſe is choſen to expreſs the univerſality of the reſurrection: and this is alſo a proof of the reſurrection of the ſame body; for what elſe are in the graves but bodies? and what elſe can come forth from them but the ſame bodies? and the time is haſtening on when theſe bodies ſhall be quickned, and hear the voice of the Son of God; which whether the ſame with the voice of the archangel in 1 Theſſ. iv. 16. and whether an articulate voice, or a violent clap of thunder, which is the voice of God, or only the exertion of Chriſt's mighty power is intended, is not eaſy to determine, and may be needleſs to enquire. Certain it is, that this voice of Chriſt will be attended with almighty power, as the effect following upon it will ſhow. The Jews obſerve [g], that "there are three things which don't come into the world but by voices; there's the voice of a living creature, as it it written, Gen. iii. 16. in ſorrow thou ſhalt bring forth children, and as it is written, Gen. xxx. 22. and God hearkened to her; and there is the voice of rains, as it is written, 1 Kings xviii. 4. for there is a voice of abundance of rain, and it is written, Pſ. xxix. 3. the voice of the Lord is upon the waters; and קול תחיית המתים, there is the voice of the reſurrection of the dead, as it is written, Iſ. xl. 3. the voice of him that crieth in the wilderneſs;" but that was the voice of John the Baptiſt. It will be the voice of the Son of God that will quicken and raiſe the dead.

Ver. 29. And ſhall come forth, &c.] Out of their graves, as Lazarus came forth from his at the word of command, and as the bodies of the ſaints did after the reſurrection of Chriſt, when their graves were opened: they that have done good; which none of Adam's poſterity naturally do, or can do of themſelves: ſuch are deſigned here who believe in Chriſt, which to do is the work of God, and the greateſt and beſt of works; and without which it is impoſſible to pleaſe God in any; and indeed, whatever is not of faith is ſin, and cannot be a good work: a good work is that which is done according to the will of God, from love to him, in faith, and with a view to his glory; and thoſe that do ſuch works ſhall come forth unto the reſurrection of life; that is, unto everlaſting life, glory, and happineſs; this is the firſt and better reſurrection; and thoſe that have part in it, over them the ſecond death ſhall have no power. All ſhall riſe to life, to an immortal life, ſo as never to die more; yet only good men ſhall riſe to enjoy an happy and glorious life; which will lie in communion with God, angels, and ſaints, and in conformity to Chriſt, and in the everlaſting viſion of him: and they that have done evil; who give up themſelves to work wickedneſs; whoſe continual employment, and the buſineſs, ſeries, and courſe of whoſe lives it is to commit ſin; who are ſlaves unto it, and vaſſals of it, and are properly workers of iniquity; otherwiſe there's no man but what does that which is evil, and that daily: theſe ſhall come forth unto the reſurrection of damnation; that is, to everlaſting damnation, ſhame, and reproach; they ſhall be condemned by the judge of the whole earth, and ſhall be pronounced curſed; and ſhall be ordered to go into everlaſting fire, and ſhall go into everlaſting puniſhment; which will be a puniſhment both of loſs and ſenſe: they'll loſe, or be deprived of, the preſence of God, and feel his wrath in their conſciences. All will riſe, but with a difference; the dead in Chriſt will riſe firſt, in the morning of the reſurrection, in the beginning of the thouſand years, and therefore are here mentioned firſt; the reſt, the wicked, will not riſe until the evening of that day, till the thouſand years are ended, and therefore are ſpoken of laſt. The former will riſe by virtue of union to Chriſt, the other by his power, and both at hearing his voice; the ſaints will riſe with bodies glorious, powerful, and ſpiritual; and wicked men, tho' with bodies immortal, yet vile, and diſhonourable: the one will riſe to a life of joy and happineſs that will laſt for ever, and which will be properly life; the other, tho' they'll riſe and live for ever, yet in miſery and wo, and which will be the ſecond, or eternal death; ſee a like diſtinction in Dan. xii. 2. to which there ſeems to be ſome reference here. And he at whoſe voice all this ſhall be, muſt be equal to God.

Ver. 30. I can of mine own ſelf do nothing, &c.] This is the concluſion of the matter, the winding up of the ſeveral arguments concerning the Son's equality to the Father, and the application of the whole to Chriſt. He had before been chiefly ſpeaking of the Son, in relation to the Father, as if he was a third perſon; but now he applies what he had ſaid of the Son to himſelf: and it is as if he had ſaid, I am the Son that can do nothing ſeparate from the Father, and contrary to his will, but do all things in conjunction with him; who ſees all that he does, by being in him, and co-operating with him, and do the ſelf-ſame. I am the Son to whom the father ſhews, and by whom he does, all he does; and to whom he'll ſhew, and by whom he'll do, as a co-efficient with him, greater works than what, as yet, he has done: I am the Son that quickens whom he pleaſes, and to whom all judgment is committed, and have the ſame honour the Father has: I am he that quickens dead ſinners now, and will raiſe all the dead at the laſt day; and have authority to execute judgment on all mankind: and, as I hear, I judge; not as he hears men, or, according to the evidence men will give one of another; for it is denied of him, that he will proceed in judgment in this manner, Iſ. xi. 3. but as he hears his Father; for being in his boſom, and one with him, as he ſees, and knows all he does, his whole plan of operations, and acts according to them; ſo he hears, knows, and is perfectly acquainted with all his counſels, purpoſes, and rules of judgment, and never deviates from them. Hearing here ſignifies perfect knowledge, and underſtanding of a cauſe; and ſo it is uſed in the Jewiſh writings, in matters of difficulty, that come before a court of judicature [h]: "there were three courts of judicature; one that ſat at the gate of the “ mountain of the houſe; and one that ſat at the “ gate of the court; and another that ſat in the “ paved chamber: they go (firſt) to that which is “ at the gate of the mountain of the houſe, and ſay, “ ſo have I expounded, and ſo have the companions “ expounded; ſo have I taught, and ſo have the com- “ panions (or collegues) taught: אם שמעו, if they “ bear, they ſay; (i. e. as one of their commentators “ explains it[i], if they know the law, and hear, or “ underſtand the ſenſe of the law; in ſuch a caſe “ they declare what they know) if not, they go to “ them that are at the gate of the court, and ſay “ (as before.)——And, if they bear, they tell them; “ but if not, they go to the great Sanhedrim in the “ paved chamber, from whence goes forth the law “ to all Iſrael.” Chriſt was now before the great Sanhedrim, and ſpeaks to them in their own language, and as a ſuperior judge to them: and my judgment is juſt; in the adminiſtration of the affairs of his church, which are done in the ſtricteſt juſtice; juſt and true are all his ways, as King of ſaints; and in the execution of the laſt judgment, which will be in righteouſneſs and truth: the judgment he paſſes muſt be right, ſince it is according to that perfect knowledge he has of his Father's will, which is an infallible rule of judgment: becauſe I ſeek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath ſent me; that is, he did not ſeek to gratify his own will, as diſtinct from his Father's, or in oppoſition to it; for he had no private end to anſwer, or ſeparate intereſt, or advantage to purſue; and ſeeing therefore he acted according to his Father's will, and not his own, as contrary to that; his judgment muſt be juſt, and the ſentence he paſſes right; ſince the will of God is indiſputably ſuch. The Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions, the Alexandrian copy, and two of Beza's copies, leave out the word father, without altering or hurting the ſenſe at all.

Ver. 31. If I bear witneſs of myſelf, &c.] Which was not allowed any man to do; nor indeed is it proper that a man ſhould be a witneſs in his own cauſe: and, according to the Jewiſh canons, a man might not be a witneſs for his wife, becauſe ſhe was reckoned as himſelf. “ An huſband is not to be “ believed in bearing witneſs for his wife, that had “ been carried captive, that ſhe is not defiled, “ שאין אדם מעיד לעצמו, for no man bears witneſs “ of himſelf[k].” So likewiſe they ſay[l], “ a city “ that is ſubdued by an army, all the prieſteſſes “ (or prieſts daughters) that are found in it are re- “ jected, (from the prieſthood, as defiled;) but if “ they have witneſſes, whether a ſervant, or an “ handmaid, lo, they are to be believed; but no “ man is to be believed for himſelf: ſays R. Zochariah ben Hakatzab, by this habitation (ſwearing “ by the temple) her hand was not removed from “ my hand, from the time the Gentiles entered “ Jeruſalem, 'till they went out: they replied to “ him, no man bears witneſs of himſelf.” Chriſt reaſons here upon their own principles, and according to their ſenſe of things, that ſhould he bear witneſs of himſelf; then, ſays he, my witneſs is not true, לא נאמן, not to be believed, or admitted as an authentic teſtimony: and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, is not credible; not valid in law, or in ſuch a court of judicature in which Chriſt now was; for, as according to the Jewiſh law, no man was admitted a witneſs for himſelf, ſo neither was any thing eſtabliſhed by a ſingle teſtimony, but by the mouth of two or three witneſſes, Deut. xix. 15. Chriſt's meaning is, that his teſtimony alone, his ſingle witneſs, how true ſoever it was, would ſtand for nothing in their court; and therefore he would not inſiſt upon it, but drop it; for true here, is not oppoſed to that which is falſe, but to that which is not valid in law. Chriſt's teſtimony was true in itſelf; nor could it be any other, it coming from him, who is truth itſelf, the Amen, and faithful witneſs; but being conſidered as an human teſtimony, and in his own cauſe, was not to be admitted as ſufficient; and this he allows. From arguments, proving his equality with the Father, he paſſes to teſtimonies; and without making uſe of his own, he had enough to produce, and which were valid and authentic, and are as follow.

Ver. 32. There is another that beareth witneſs of me, &c.] Meaning not his father, who is another, and a diſtinct perſon, from him, as the ſpirit is another comforter; and both diſtinct teſtifiers from him, as well as of him. This is indeed the ſenſe of ſome interpreters; but the Father is particularly mentioned in ver. 37. and the thread of the diſcourſe, and the climax, or gradation, here uſed, ſhew, that it is to be underſtood of another man, as Nonnus paraphraſes it; of John the Baptiſt, who is ſpoken of by name in the next verſe, as a witneſs; and then a greater than he, the works of Chriſt, and then the Father: and I know that the witneſs, which he witneſſeth of me, is true; for John was now alive, tho' in priſon, and continued to bear a teſtimony to Chriſt; and therefore he ſpeaks of him as now bearing witneſs of him, and abiding by that which he had bore; and Chriſt knew not only that what he teſtified of him was true in itſelf, but that his teſtimony was a valid and authentic teſtimony, with the generality of the Jews; who held John to be a prophet, and looked upon him as a man of great probity and integrity, and whoſe word was to be taken: nor indeed could the Sanhedrim, before whom Chriſt now was, object to his character, nor to him as a witneſs; nor ought they, ſince they themſelves had ſo judged of him, as appears by their meſſage to him, which Chriſt next fails not to take notice of.

Ver. 33. Ye ſent unto John, &c.] The Sanhedrim at Jeruſalem made a deputation of prieſts, and Levites to him, to know who he was, whether the Meſſiah, or Elias, or that prophet, John i. 19. Now had they not looked upon him, from what they knew of him, or from the character they had of him, as a faithful witneſs, they would never have ſhewn him ſo much reſpect, and have been at ſo much pains, and charge, as to ſend ſuch a body of men ſo far unto him, as from Jeruſalem to beyond Jordan; which circumſtance our Lord improves in favour of this evidence he produces: and he bare witneſs unto the truth; to Chriſt, who is the truth itſelf; and to the truth of his perſon, and office; to his dignity, and eternity, as being before him, tho' coming after him; and to his divine ſonſhip, the thing now in debate, declaring, that he was the ſon of God; and to his office, as mediator, pointing to him as the lamb of God, who, by his blood, and ſacrifice, takes away the ſins of men. The Ethiopic verſion reads by way of interrogation, did not you ſend unto John? &c.

Ver. 34. But I receive not teſtimony from man, &c.] He ſtood in no need of an human teſtimony, nor did he reſt the truth of his deity, and divine ſonſhip thereon: he had other, and greater teſtimonies to produce; as he needed not that any man ſhould teſtify of man to him, he had no need that any man ſhould teſtify of him; and if the teſtimony of men was received, as this of John could not well be objected to, the teſtimony of God is greater, and which he had; and therefore ſhould not have mentioned John's for his own ſake: but theſe things I ſay, that ye might be ſaved; that is, he produced this teſtimony of John, who was a perſon of ſo great a character among them, that they might be induced by it to believe in him as the Meſſiah; and ſo be ſaved from that ruin and deſtruction, that would come upon their nation, city, and temple, for their rejection and diſbelief of him.

[l] Miſn. Cetubot, c. 2. §. 9. T. Bab. Cetubot, fol. 27. 2. Juchaſin, fol. 56. 1.

Ver. 35. He was a burning and a ſhining light, &c.] He was not that light, the famous light, the Meſſiah, the ſun of righteouſneſs; yet he was the phoſphorus, the fore-runner of that light, and was himſelf a very great one: he had much light himſelf into the perſon and office of the Meſſiah; in the doctrines of faith in Chriſt, and repentance towards God; in the Goſpel-diſpenſation, and in the abolition of the Moſaic œconomy; and gave great light to others, in the buſineſs of ſalvation, and remiſſion of ſins, and was the means of guiding the feet of many in the way of peace. His light of pure doctrine, and of an holy and exemplary converſation, ſhone very viſibly, and brightly before men; and he burned with ſtrong love and affection for Chriſt, and the ſouls of men; and with flaming zeal for the honour of God, and true religion, and againſt all ſin and prophaneneſs, which he was a faithful reprover of, and for which he loſt his life. It was common with the Jews to call their doctors, who were famous for their knowledge, and holineſs of life, lights, burning lights, and ſhining lights; or in words which amount to the ſame. So R. Simeon ben Jochai is often called in the book of Zohar, בוצינא קדישא, the holy light; and particularly it is ſaid of him [m], "R. Simeon, כבוצינא דשרגא דאדליק, "is as the lamp of light which burns above, and "burns below; and by the light which burns below "all the children of the world are enlightned: "woe to the world, when the light below, aſcends "to the light above." So R. Abbu is called, בוצינא דנהורא, the lamp of light [n]: and it is [o] ſaid of Shuah, Judah's father-in-law, that he was, בוצינא דאתרא, the light of the place; that is, where he lived. The Gloſs on the place ſays, he was a man of note in the city, and enlightned their eyes; and it is very frequent with them ſtill, when they are praiſing any of their doctors, to ſay of him, he was, המאור הגדול, a great light, who enlightned the eyes of Iſrael, and in whoſe light the people walked [p]: ſo among the philoſophers, Xenophon, and Plato, are called, duo lumina [q], two lights; ſee the note on Matt. v. 14. and ye were willing for a ſeaſon, or for an hour, to rejoice in his light; or to glory in it, or boaſt of it, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions render it. When John firſt appeared among them, they were fond, and even proud of him; they gloried in him, that a man of ſuch uncommon endowments, and of ſuch exemplary holineſs, was raiſed up among them; and hoped that he was the Meſſiah, or Elias, that was to come before him; and pleaſed themſelves, that times of great outward honour and proſperity were haſtening: wherefore they flocked about him, and many of the Phariſees and Sadducees attended his miniſtry, and would have been baptized by him; but when they found that he was not the Meſſiah, nor Elias, nor that prophet, but bore a teſtimony to Jeſus of Nazareth, that he was the Meſſiah; and ran counter to their notions of a temporal kingdom, and of birth privileges, and their own righteouſneſs; and threatned them with ruin, and deſtruction, both in this world, and that which is to come, in caſe of their impenitence and unbelief; they grew ſick of him, and ſaid he had a devil, and rejected the counſel of God he declared, and deſpiſed his baptiſm. Such was their fickleneſs and inconſtancy, which Chriſt here tacitly charges them with. They were like the ſtony-ground hearers, and like ſome of the apoſtle Paul's admirers among the Galatians, who at firſt could have plucked out their eyes for him, but afterwards became his enemies for telling them the truth.

Ver. 36. But I have greater witneſs than that of John, &c.] The Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic verſions read, greater than John, but wrongly; for the teſtimonies of Chriſt's works, and of his father, are not compared with John himſelf, but with his teſtimony; and the ſenſe is, that Chriſt had a greater witneſs than the witneſs of John; and ſo it is expreſſed in the Perſic verſion: and his meaning is, that he had no need to inſiſt upon John's teſtimony; he had other, and greater witneſſes to produce: for the works which the father hath given me to finiſh; ſuch as the preaching of the Goſpel, the fulfilling of the law, and the redemption of his people; all which were appointed by his father, and given him to do, and which he compleatly finiſhed. The whole Goſpel came, and was publiſhed by Jeſus Chriſt, and the law was entirely fulfilled by him; and the work of man's ſalvation was finiſhed by him, and theſe bear witneſs to the truth of his deity, and divine Sonſhip; for none but the Son of God could have done theſe things. The Ethiopic verſion reads in the ſingular number, this work which my Father hath given me, &c. and if it was a ſingle work that is referred to, the work of redemption bids fair to be it. But, theſe works include not only what Chriſt did on earth, in his ſtate of humiliation, but what he has done ſince, and will do; which his Father has given him to finiſh, and he has finiſhed, or will finiſh them; ſuch as the reſurrection of himſelf from the dead, the effuſion of the gifts and graces of the Spirit, the ſpreading and ſucceeding his Goſpel in the world, the converſion of his redeemed ones, the gathering in the fulneſs of the Gentiles, and the converſion of the Jews, the deſtruction of Antichriſt, the reſurrection of all the dead, and the judgment of the whole world. Tho' more eſpecially his miracles are here intended, and which, and not his mediatorial works, were demonſtrations and proofs to men of his divine Sonſhip; ſee Matt. xiv. 33. and xxvii. 54. the ſame works that I do, bear witneſs of me, that the Father hath ſent me; and that he was in the Father, and the Father in him; or that they were one in nature, and equal in power and glory, John x. 30—37. and xiv. 11.

Ver. 37. And the father himſelf, which hath ſent me, &c.] Not only the works he gave him to do, and which he did, but he himſelf in perſon: hath born witneſs of me; not only in the writings of Moſes, and the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, but by an audible, articulate voice from heaven, at the time of Chriſt's baptiſm, Matt. iii. 17. which was a full teſtimony of the Sonſhip of Chriſt, and of the Father's well-pleaſedneſs in him; and which was repeated at his transfiguration on the mount, Matt. xvii. 5. and the Sonſhip of Chriſt is the grand thing which the three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghoſt teſtify of, 1 John v. 7. ye have neither heard his voice at any time, nor ſeen his ſhape; for the voices that were heard, and the forms that were ſeen under the Old Teſtament diſpenſation, from the firſt of this kind in Eden's garden, to the incarnation of Chriſt, which are aſcribed to God, or to a divine perſon, were either by the miniſtry of angels, or they were voices uttered by the Son of God, or forms aſſumed by him, who often appeared in an human form, as a prelude of his incarnation; ſo that it was unuſual, and wonderful, and remarkable, that the Father ſhould bear a teſtimony to the Sonſhip of Chriſt by a voice from heaven; and which therefore ought to be attended to, and received as a ſufficient and valid teſtimony.

Ver. 38. And ye have not his Word abiding in you, &c.] Which ſome underſtand of Chriſt himſelf, the Logos, or Word; who, tho' he was now with them, being made fleſh, and dwelling among them, yet would not long continue with them; tho' rather this deſigns the written word, or the ſcriptures of truth; and eſpecially that part of them, which contains prophecies concerning the Meſſiah, which did not dwell in them richly, nor they dwell in their meditations on them, as was requiſite. Or rather, it may intend that word of God expreſſed in the teſtimony he bore to the Sonſhip of Chriſt at his baptiſm, by a voice from heaven, which made no laſting impreſſion upon the minds, and hearts of the Jews that heard it; as appears by what follows: for whom he hath ſent him ye believe not; meaning himſelf; for if they had had either a due regard to the ſacred oracles, or to that voice from heaven at his baptiſm, they would have received and embraced him as the Meſſiah, and ſent of God, and not have diſbelieved and rejected him, as now they did.

Ver. 39. Search the ſcriptures, &c.] The writings of Moſes, and the prophets, which were of divine inſpiration and authority, and are often appealed unto by Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, for the truth of what they delivered; and were the ſtandard of faith, and the teſt of doctrines; and therefore to be ſearched diligently into, for finding divine knowledge, and improvement in it, and for the trial of doctrines. The words may be rendered in the indicative, as an aſſertion, ye do ſearch the ſcriptures; the Jews had the ſacred oracles committed to them, and theſe they read, not only their kings, princes, and judges, but the common people, who brought up their children to the reading of them, and inſtructed them in them: and beſides this, theſe writings were read, and expounded publickly in their ſynagogues every ſabbath-day; and at this time eſpecially theſe records were examined, and particularly thoſe of them which reſpected the Meſſiah, ſince there was now a general expectation of him: and certain it is, that the chief-prieſts, Scribes, and elders, or the Sanhedrim, were very much verſed in the ſcriptures, and could readily refer to thoſe which concerned the Meſſiah; ſee an inſtance of this in Matt. ii. 4, 5, 6. for in them ye think ye have eternal life; not the doctrine of eternal life, nor the promiſes of it, nor the way to it; tho' all theſe are contained in them, and pointed out by them: for tho' life and immortality are brought to light by the Goſpel, and the promiſe of eternal life belongs to the covenant of grace, and the way of life and righteouſneſs by Chriſt is manifeſted without the law, and not by it; yet there is much of the Goſpel, and an exhibition of the covenant of grace, and its promiſes, and Chriſt, the way of life, is directed to typically by the tree of life, and the brazen ſerpent, and other things in thoſe writings. But the meaning here is, that they imagined, by having theſe writings in their hands, and by their reading them, and hearing them expounded every ſabbath-day, they ſhould obtain and inherit everlaſting life; hence they call [r] the law eternal life, and ſay [s] concerning the reading of it, that "he that begins to read in the book of the law is "obliged to bleſs after this manner: bleſſed be "he that has choſen us above all nations, and hath "given us his law.——And he that finiſhes bleſſes "after him in this manner: bleſſed is he who hath "given us his law, the law of truth, and has planted "eternal life in the midſt of us." This was an opinion of theirs: ſo the Perſic verſion reads, for ſuch is your opinion; and tho' this was a very vain one, yet it ſhows what a very high opinion they had of the ſcriptures: and now to theſe our Lord appeals as witneſſes for him, and againſt which they could not object, upon their own principles: and they are they which teſtify of me; as they do of his proper deity and divine Sonſhip, calling him Jehovah, God, the mighty God, and the Son of God; and of his offices as prophet, prieſt, and king; and of his incarnation of a virgin; and of the tribe, family, and place of his birth; of the miracles which he ſhould work; of the treatment he ſhould meet with from men; of his ſufferings and death; of the circumſtances leading on to them, and attending them; as his riding on an aſs into Jeruſalem, the betraying him by one of his familiar acquaintance, the ſelling him for thirty pieces of ſilver, the ſpitting upon, and ſcourging him, giving him gall for his meat, and vinegar for his drink, and parting his garments, and caſting lots for his veſture, and the crucifixion of him, and that between two thieves; and of his burial, reſurrection from the dead, aſcenſion to heaven, and ſeſſion at the right hand of God, and of his future coming to judgment.

Ver. 40. And ye will not come to me, &c.] Which is to be underſtood, not of a corporal coming to him; for many of the Jews did come to him in this ſenſe; ſome for one thing, and ſome for another; ſome for the loaves, that they might eat and be filled; ſome to ſee his miracles, and others to partake of the benefit of them; ſome to hear him preach, and others to catch and cavil at what they could: nor is bare coming to hear Chriſt preached, or an outward attendance on, and ſubmiſſion to his ordinances, ſuch a coming to him as is here deſigned; for with theſe eternal life is not connected: bodily exerciſe profiteth not in this way; but a ſpiritual coming to Chriſt, or a coming to him by faith is here meant; in which ſenſe the phraſe is frequently uſed in this Goſpel, eſpecially in the next chapter; ſee ver. 35, 37, 44, 45, 65. and thoſe who come aright to Chriſt, come to him as the alone, able, ſuitable, and ſufficient Saviour; and in themſelves as ſinners, and ready to periſh; and as ſuch they are received by him with a welcome: but theſe men did not ſee themſelves as ſuch; nor did they ſee any need they had of coming to Chriſt; for they thought they had eternal life elſewhere: and ſuch were their ignorance of themſelves and Chriſt; and ſuch their prejudices againſt him; and ſuch the depravity, perverſeneſs, and ſtubbornneſs of their wills, that they had no inclination, deſire, and will to come to Chriſt, any more than power; which is an argument againſt, and not for the free-will of man, unleſs it be to that which is evil: and this perverſeneſs of their wills to come to Chriſt, when revealed in the external miniſtry of the word, was blame-worthy in them, ſince this was not owing to any decree of God, but to the corruption and vitioſity of nature; which being blame-worthy in them, that which follows upon it muſt be ſo too; and it was the greater aggravation of their ſin, that they had the ſcriptures which teſtified of Chriſt, and pointed at him as the way of life, and yet would not come to him for it: that ye might have life; that is, eternal life, as is expreſſed in the foregoing verſe, and is ſo read here in Beza's old copy, in the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions. This is in Chriſt, not only the purpoſe and promiſe of it, but that itſelf: he has the diſpoſal of it, gives the right unto it, and a meetneſs for it, with all the comforts ariſing from it, and all the promiſes and bleſſings relating to it; and all that come to Chriſt by faith may, and ſhall have it: this is the will of the Father, the end of his giving of Chriſt, and of his miſſion, and coming into the world, and is inſeparably connected with believing in him.

[s] Maimon. in Miſn. Megilla, c. 4. §. 1.

Ver. 41. I receive not honour from men.] Not but that honour from men was due to Chriſt; and it becomes all men to honour him, as they do the Father; and he does receive honour and glory, and bleſſing from his ſaints, by their praying to him, praiſing him, believing in him, and ſerving him; but his ſenſe is, that in aſſerting his equality with the Father, and in producing the teſtimonies he did, in proof of it, his view was not to obtain honour and applauſe among men, but to vindicate himſelf, and glorify his Father: nor did he ſay what he had juſt now ſaid, about mens coming to him, with any ſuch intention, to gather a party to him, to ſet up himſelf as a temporal king, in great pomp and ſplendor, and receive worldly homage and honour from them, as his ſubjects; for his kingdom was not of this world, and coming and ſubjection to him, were things of a ſpiritual nature.

Ver. 42. But I know you, &c.] Being the omniſcient God, he knew not only their perſons, but their hearts, the thoughts of their hearts; what was in them, and what was wanting in them: particularly, that ye have not the love of God in you; and which is not in any man's heart naturally; for the carnal mind is enmity to God; and men by nature, are haters of him, and enemies in their minds to him, till this grace, which is a fruit of the Spirit, is implanted in them, in regeneration: love to God, is one of the weightier matters of the law, the Jews paſſed over; without which, all the actions of men ſignify nothing: this they made great pretenſions to, and would have had it thought, that it was from love to God, that they ſought to kill Jeſus, for his violation of the ſabbath, and making himſelf equal with God; but it was not from a delight in the ſabbath, or from love to the Lord of it, but out of ill-will to Chriſt, that they expreſſed ſuch diſſembled piety and falſe zeal: they were lovers of themſelves, and not God; they were covetous men, and loved the world, and the things in it, which is inconſiſtent with the love of the Father; and beſides, if they had loved him, they would have loved him that was begotten of him, and not ſought to have killed him.

Ver. 43. I am come in my Father's name, &c.] Power and authority; by his conſent, with his will, and according to a covenant with him: Chriſt came not of himſelf, of his own accord, by a ſeparate power and will of his own, but was called, and ſent, and came by mutual agreement; and brought his credentials with him, doing the works and miracles which his Father gave him to finiſh: and ye receive me not; notwithſtanding this they rejected him as the Meſſiah, and would not receive him as ſuch; yea, traduced him as an impoſtor, and a deceiver: if another ſhall come in his own name; which ſome underſtand of Simon Magus, others of antichriſt; rather the falſe Chriſts are intended, of whom our Lord ſpeaks, in Matt. xxiv. 24. who would riſe up of themſelves, and not be able to give any proof of their miſſion; or do any thing which might entitle them to the character of the Meſſiah, or Chriſt, a name they would take to themſelves: and ſo the Ethiopic verſion reads, if another ſhall come in my name; ſaying he is Chriſt, or the Meſſiah: him ye will receive; as thouſands of them did receive Barchocab, the falſe Chriſt, who roſe up ſome years after in Adrian's time; and even ſome of their greateſt Rabbins, as particularly the famous R. Akiba, who was his armour-bearer: and it is eaſy to obſerve, that though they were ſo backward to receive, and ſo much prejudiced againſt the true Meſſiah, they were always forward enough to embrace a falſe one; and indeed to follow any, that ſet up himſelf for a temporal deliverer of them; as the inſtances of Theudas, and Judas of Galilee, with others, ſhow; ſee Acts v. 36, 37. And the true reaſon why they rejected Chriſt was, becauſe he did not appear in outward pomp and glory, nor ſet up a temporal kingdom, or give out that he would deliver them from the Roman yoke.

Ver. 44. How can ye believe, which receive honour one of another? &c.] As the Scribes and Phariſees did, who were ambitious of honour and reſpect from one another, as well as from the common people; doing all they did to be ſeen of men, and to gain applauſe among them; chuſing the uppermoſt rooms at feaſts, and chief places in the ſynagogues, and delighting in the pompous title of Rabbi, Rabbi; and were in expectation of the temporal kingdom of the Meſſiah, when they hoped to be advanced to places of great honour and profit: and all this was an hindrance to them from believing in Chriſt, who appeared in ſuch an abject form, and made ſo mean a figure; whoſe doctrine was ſo unſuitable to their carnal minds, and whoſe followers were ſo poor and contemptible; and beſides, it was made a law among them, that thoſe who profeſſed him to be the Meſſiah, ſhould be caſt out of the ſynagogue: hence many who were convinced that he was the Meſſiah, durſt not confeſs him, leſt they ſhould loſe their honour and reſpect among men, which they preferred to the praiſe of God: and ſeek not the honour that cometh from God only; or from the only God, as the Vulgate Latin; or from the one God, as the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions render it: the honour that comes from him is, that of being born of him; of being a ſon or daughter of his, having that new name, which is better than that of ſons and daughters of the greateſt princes on earth; of being made all glorious within, and clothed with gold of Ophir, with raiment of needle work, with the robe of righteouſneſs, and garments of ſalvation; of being tranſlated into the ſpiritual kingdom of Chriſt, and made kings and prieſts unto God by him; of being ſet on the ſame throne with Chriſt, having on a crown of life and righteouſneſs, and enjoying a kingdom and glory; being heirs of God, and joint heirs with Chriſt; which honour all the ſaints have, or ſhall have, and which theſe men cared not for.

Ver. 45. Do not think that I will accuſe you to the Father, &c.] To God the Father, as the Ethiopic verſion reads. The Syriac and Perſic verſions read by way of interrogation, do ye think that I will, &c.? Chriſt is no accuſer of men; no, not of the worſt of men; ſee John viii. 10, 11. he came not into the world, to bring charges againſt men and condemn them, but to ſave them; to be an accuſer is not agreeable to his characters of a ſurety, a ſaviour, an advocate, and judge: there were enough to accuſe theſe perſons of; as their perverſeneſs and ſtubborneſs, in not coming to Chriſt for life; their want of love to God; their rejection of him, tho' he came in his Father's name; their reception of another, that ſhould come in his own name; their taking honour one of another, and not ſeeking the true ſpiritual and eternal honour, which God gives; but though he hints theſe things to them, he would not have them think that he accuſed them of them to the Father: the Jews have a notion, that when the Meſſiah comes, there will be accuſations lodged againſt their doctors and wiſe men [t]. " R. Zeira " ſays, that R. Jeremiah bar Aba ſaid, that in the " generation in which the ſon of David ſhall come, " there will be, קטגוריא בתלמידי חכמים, ac- " cuſations againſt the diſciples of the wiſe men." And one of their writers [u] thus interprets, Dan. xii. 1. " and at that time ſhall Michael ſtand up; " he ſhall be as ſilent as a dumb man, when he " ſhall ſee the holy bleſſed God contending with " him, and ſaying, how ſhall I deſtroy a nation " ſo great as this, for the ſake of Iſrael? and there " ſhall be a time of trouble in the family above, and " there ſhall be accuſations againſt the diſciples of " the wiſe men." However, there was no need for Chriſt to accuſe them; for as it follows, there is one that accuſeth you, even Moſes, in whom ye truſt; by whom is meant, not Moſes perſonally; for when on earth, he was a mediator between God and the people of Iſrael, and an interceſſor for them; and ſince he has been in heaven, as the dead know not any thing, he knew nothing of their affairs; and when he was on the mount with Chriſt, his diſcourſe with him turned upon another ſubject: but either the writings of Moſes, as in Luke xvi. 29, 31. and xxiv. 27. or the doctrine of Moſes, as 1 Cor. x. 2. John ix. 28. or rather the law of Moſes, Matt. xxii. 24. Mark vii. 10. Acts vi. 11. and xxi. 21. And in this the Jews truſted; they reſted in it, and made their boaſt of it; and expected eternal life and ſalvation on account of their having it, and through their hearing it read every ſabbath-day, and by their obedience to it: and now ſin being a tranſgreſſion of the law, this ſame law brings charges againſt them, and accuſes them of the breach of the ſeveral precepts of it, and pronounces them guilty before God; it curſes and paſſes a ſentence of condemnation on them, and according to it, will they periſh eternally, without an intereſt in Chriſt; for their own righteouſneſs by the law of works, will be of no avail to them; the law in which they truſt for life, will riſe up in judgment, and be a ſwift witneſs againſt them: ſo the Jews ſometimes ſpeak of the law, as witneſſing againſt the people of Iſrael [w].

Ver. 46. For had ye believed Moſes, &c.] The doctrine of Moſes, and what he ſays in his writings: ye would have believed me; for there is an agreement between Moſes and Chriſt; Chriſt is the end of the law of Moſes, and in him is the accompliſhment of his writings: for he wrote of me; in the books written by him, Chriſt is ſpoken of, as the ſeed of the woman, that ſhould bruiſe the ſerpent's head; as the ſeed of Abraham, in whom all nations of the earth ſhould be bleſſed; as the Shiloh, to whom the gathering of the people ſhould be; and as that prophet, who ſhould be like unto himſelf, to whom the people of Iſrael ſhould hearken; and he wrote many things typically of Chriſt; and indeed, the whole Moſaic œconomy was typical of Chriſt, as the epiſtle to the Hebrews ſhows: and therefore diſbelieving Chriſt, was diſbelieving Moſes; who therefore would be an accuſer of them, and a witneſs againſt them.

Ver. 47. But if ye believe not his writings, &c.] They believed them to be his writings, and that they were the word of God, and yet did not believe the things contained in them, reſpecting Chriſt; or did not ſee, and could not believe that they belonged unto, and were applicable to Jeſus of Nazareth; and therefore it could not be ſuppoſed, they would give credit to him, or his words: how ſhall ye believe my words? not that Moſes was greater than Chriſt, or rather to be credited than he; Moſes indeed was faithful, but Chriſt was worthy of more honour and credit than he was; Moſes was but a ſervant, but Chriſt was a ſon in his own houſe: but this is ſaid with reſpect to the Jews, with whom Moſes was in great veneration and eſteem; and it was more likely they ſhould regard what he ſhould ſay, than what Jeſus of Nazareth ſhould, whom they deſpiſed.

CHAP. VI.

Ver. 1. AFTER theſe things, &c.] After Chriſt's curing the man at Betheſda's pool, and the vindication of himſelf for doing it on the ſabbath-day, and for aſſerting his equality with God; near a year after theſe things: for theſe were done at the feaſt of the paſſover, and now it was near another; and what is related here, was after the death of John the Baptiſt, and when the diſciples had returned from preaching in the ſeveral cities and towns, where Chriſt afterwards went, and had given an account of their ſucceſs; ſee Matt. xiv. 12, 13. Mark vi. 30, 31. Luke ix. 10. Quickly after the paſſover was ended, Chriſt departed from Jeruſalem, and went into Galilee, and preached in the ſeveral cities and towns in thoſe parts, and wrought many miracles: and after theſe things, in proceſs of time, Jeſus went over the ſea of Galilee; the ſame with the lake of Genneſareth, Luke v. 1. which is the ſea of Tiberias; and is frequently ſo called by the Jewiſh writers [x], who often make mention of, ימה של טבריה, the ſea of Tiberias; and by other writers, it is called the lake of Tiberias [y]; Pliny, who calls it the lake of Geneſara [z], ſays, " it " was ſixteen miles long, and ſix broad, and was beſet " with very pleaſant towns; on the eaſt were Julias " and Hippo, and on the ſouth Taricbea, by which " name ſome call the lake, and on the weſt Tiberias, " wholeſome for the hot waters." And theſe are the waters which the Jews call, דימוסין דטבריא, or, חמי, the hot baths of Tiberias [a]; and from the city of Tiberias built by Herod, and called ſo in honour of Tiberius Cæſar, the ſea took its name.

Ver. 2. And a great multitude followed him, &c.] From ſeveral cities and towns in Galilee, where he had been preaching and working miracles: becauſe they ſaw his miracles which he did on them that were diſeaſed; ſo that it was not for the ſake of his doctrine, or for the good of their ſouls, they followed him; but either to gratify their curioſity in ſeeing his miracles, or to be healed in their bodies, as others had been.

Ver. 3. And Jeſus went up into a mountain, &c.] In a deſert place near Bethſaida, Luke ix. 10. and there he ſat with his diſciples; partly for ſecurity from the cruelty of Herod, having juſt heard of the beheading of John; and partly for privacy, that he might have ſome converſation alone with his diſciples, upon their return from off their journey; as alſo for the ſake of reſt and refreſhment; and according to the cuſtom of the Jewiſh doctors, which now prevailed, ſee the note on Matt. v. 1. he ſat with his diſciples, in order to teach and inſtruct them.

Ver. 4. And the paſſover, a feaſt of the Jews was nigh.] This was the third paſſover, ſince our Lord's baptiſm, and entrance on his publick miniſtry; ſee ch. ii. 13. and v. 1. Whether Chriſt went up to this feaſt, is not certain; ſome think he did not; but from what is ſaid in ch. vii. 1. it looks as if he did: how nigh it was to the feaſt, cannot well be ſaid. Thirty days before the feaſt, they began to talk about it; and eſpecially in the laſt fifteen days, they made preparations for it, as being at hand [b]; and if there was now ſo long time to it, there was time enough for Jeſus to go to it.

Ver. 5. When Jeſus then lift up his eyes, &c.] Being before engaged in cloſe converſation with his diſciples, and looking wiſhly and intently on them, whilſt he was diſcourſing with them: and ſaw a great company come unto him; who came on foot, over the bridge at Chammath, from Capernaum, and other cities of Galilee: he ſaith unto Philip; he directed his diſcourſe to him particularly, becauſe he was of Bethſaida, near to which place Chriſt now was, and therefore might be beſt able to anſwer the following queſtion: whence ſhall we buy bread, that theſe may eat? This, according to the other Evangeliſts, muſt be ſaid after Chriſt came from the mountain, and the people were come to him, and he had received them kindly, and had inſtructed them about the kingdom of God, and had healed the diſeaſed among them, and expreſſed great compaſſion for them; and after the diſciples had deſired him to diſmiſs them, that they might go to the adjacent towns, and provide food for themſelves; which Chriſt would not admit of, and declared it unneceſſary, and then put this queſtion, with the following view.

Ver. 6. And this he ſaid to prove him, &c.] Or tempting him, trying his faith, and not only his, but the reſt of the diſciples; not as ignorant of it himſelf, but in order to diſcover it to him and them, and to prepare them for the following miracle; and that it might appear the more illuſtrious and marvellous: for he himſelf knew what he would do; Chriſt had determined to work a miracle, and feed the large number of people that were with him, with that ſmall proviſion they had among them; and being God omniſcient, he knew that he was able to do it, and that he was determined to do it, and it would be done; but he was willing firſt to try the faith of his apoſtles.

Ver. 7. Philip anſwered him, &c.] Very quick and ſhort, and in a carnal and unbelieving way: two hundred penny worth of bread is not ſufficient for them. Two hundred pence, or Roman denarii, which may be here meant, amount to ſix pound five ſhillings of our money; and this ſum is mentioned, becauſe it might be the whole ſtock that was in the bag, or that Chriſt and his diſciples had; or becauſe this was a round ſum, much in uſe among the Jews; ſee the note on Mark vi. 37. Or this may be ſaid by Philip, to ſhow how impracticable it was to provide for ſuch a company; that ſuppoſing they had two hundred pence to lay out in this way; though where ſhould they have that, he ſuggeſts? yet if they had it, as much bread as that would purchaſe, would not be ſufficient: that every one of them might take a little; it would be ſo far from giving them a meal, or proper refreſhment, that every one could not have a ſmall bit to taſte of, or in the leaſt to ſtay or blunt his appetite: a penny with the Jews, would buy as much bread as would ſerve ten men; ſo that two hundred pence, would buy bread enough for two thouſand men; but here were three thouſand more, beſides women and children, who could not have been provided for with ſuch a ſum of money.

Ver. 8. One of his diſciples, Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, &c.] Who alſo, and his brother Peter, were of Bethſaida, as well as Philip, and was a diſciple of Chriſt's; he hearing what Chriſt ſaid to Philip, and what anſwer he returned, ſaith unto him; to Chriſt, with but little more faith than Philip, if any.

Ver. 9. There is a lad here, &c.] Who either belonged to Chriſt and his diſciples, and was employed to carry their proviſions for them; which if ſo, ſhews how meanly Chriſt and his diſciples lived; or he belonged to ſome in the multitude; or rather he came here to ſell what he had got: which hath five barley loaves. The land of Canaan was a land of barley, as well as wheat, Deut. viii. 8. this ſort of grain, grew there in plenty, and was in much uſe; the Jews had a barley harveſt, Ruth i. 22. which was at the time of the paſſover; for on the ſecond day after the paſſover, the ſheaf of the firſtfruits was waved before the Lord, which was of barley; hence the Targumiſt on the place juſt cited, paraphraſes it thus; "they came to Bethlehem in the beginning of the paſſover, and on the day the children of Iſrael began to reap the ſheaf of the wave-offering, which was of barley." And it was now about the time of the paſſover, as appears from ver. 4. and had it been quite the time, and the barley ſheaf had been waved, it might have been thought that theſe loaves were made of the new barley; but though barley was in uſe for bread among the Jews, as is evident, from the mention that is made of barley loaves and cakes, 2 Kings iv. 42. Judges vii. 13. yet it was bread of the coarſeſt ſort, and what the meaner ſort of people eat; ſee Ezek. iv. 12. Yea, barley was uſed for food for horſes and dromedaries, 1 Kings iv. 28. and ſince therefore theſe loaves were, if not deſigned for the uſe of Chriſt and his twelve apoſtles, yet for ſome of his followers, and which they all eat of; it is an inſtance of the meanneſs and poverty of them: but however, they had better bread than this, even the bread of life, which is afterwards largely treated of in this chapter, which ſome of them at leaſt eat of; and as our countryman Mr. Dod uſed to ſay, "brown bread and the Goſpel, are good fare:" and it may be further obſerved, that the number of theſe loaves were but few; there were but five of them, for five thouſand perſons; and theſe don't ſeem to be very large ones, ſince one lad was able to carry them; and indeed, theſe loaves were no other than cakes, in which form they uſed to be made: and two ſmall fiſhes; there were but two, and theſe ſmall; it is amazing, that five thouſand perſons ſhould every one have ſomething of them, and enough: theſe fiſhes, ſeem to be what the Jews [5] call, מוניני, and which the Gloſs interprets ſmall fiſhes; and by the word which is uſed of them, they ſeem to be ſalted, or pickled fiſhes, and ſuch it is very probable theſe were; Nonnus calls them, ἰχθυας ὀπταλέας, fiſhes which were broiled; or perhaps dried in the ſun; ſee Luke xxiv. 43. But what are they among ſo many? every one cannot poſſibly have a taſte, much leſs any refreſhment, ſtill leſs a meal.

[b] T. Bab. Peſach. fol. 6. 1. Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Shekalim, c. 3. §. 1.

Ver. 10. Jeſus ſaid, make the men ſit down, &c.] The Syriac verſion reads, all the men; and the Perſic verſion, all the people; men, women, and children: Chriſt, without reproving his diſciples for their unbelief, ordered them directly to place the people upon the ground, and ſeat them in rows by hundreds and by fifties, in a rank and company, as perſons about to take a meal: now there was much graſs in the place; at the bottom of the mountain; and it was green, as one of the Evangeliſts obſerves, it being the ſpring of the year, and was very commodious to ſit down upon: ſo the men ſat down, in number about five thouſand; beſides women and children, Matt. xiv. 21. ſo that there was but one loaf for more than a thouſand perſons.

Ver. 11. And Jeſus took the loaves, &c.] Into his hands, as alſo the fiſhes, in order to feed the multitude with them: and when he had given thanks; for them, and bleſſed them, or implored a bleſſing on them, that they might be nouriſhing to the bodies of men, as was his uſual manner, and which is an example to us; he diſtributed to the diſciples, and the diſciples to them that were ſat down. The Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions, only read, he diſtributed to them that were ſat down; but it was not by his own hands, but by the means of the diſciples, who received from him, and gave it to them; ſo that the ſenſe is the ſame: and likewiſe of the fiſhes, as much as they would; that is, they had as much, both of the bread and of the fiſhes, diſtributed to them, and which they took and eat, as they choſe: in ſome printed copies it is read, as much as he would, and ſo the Perſic verſion; that is, as much as Jeſus would; but the former is the true reading, and makes the miracle more illuſtrious.

Ver. 12. When they were filled, &c.] Had not only eaten, but had made a full meal; and were thoroughly ſatisfied, having eat as much as they could, or choſe to eat: he ſaid unto his diſciples, gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be loſt; this he ſaid, partly that the truth, reality, and greatneſs of the miracle might be clearly diſcerned; and partly, to teach frugality, that in the midſt of abundance, care be taken that nothing be loſt, of the good things which God gives; and which may be uſeful to other perſons, or at another time.

Ver. 13. Therefore they gathered them together, &c.] The ſeveral broken bits of bread, which lay about upon the graſs, which the people had left, after they had been ſufficiently refreſhed: and filled twelve baſkets; every diſciple had a baſket filled: with the fragments of the five barley loaves; and it may be of the fiſhes alſo: which remained over and above unto them that had eaten; ſuch a marvellous increaſe were there, through the power of Chriſt going along with them; inſomuch that they multiplied to ſuch a degree, either in the hands of the diſtributers, or of the eaters.

Ver. 14. Then thoſe men, &c.] The five thouſand men, who had been fed with the loaves and fiſhes: when they had ſeen the miracle that Jeſus did; in feeding ſo many of them, with ſo ſmall a quantity of food; in multiplying the proviſion in ſuch a prodigious manner, that after they had eat to the full, ſo many baſkets of fragments were taken up: ſaid, this is of a truth that prophet that ſhould come into the world; meaning that prophet, that Moſes ſpoke of, in Deut. xviii. 15. for the ancient Jews underſtood this paſſage of the Meſſiah, though the modern ones apply it to others; ſee the note on Acts iii. 22. And theſe men concluded that Jeſus was that prophet, or the true Meſſiah, from the miracle he wrought; in which he appeared, not only to be like to Moſes, but greater than he.

Ver. 15. When Jeſus therefore perceived, &c.] As being the omniſcient God, who knew their hearts, and the ſecret thoughts and purpoſes of them; or as man, underſtood by their words and geſtures: that they would come and take him by force, and make him a king; that they had determined, as the Arabic verſion renders it; or had it in their mind, as the Perſic; to gather about him as one man, and ſeize him in a violent manner, whether he would or no; and proclaim him the king Meſſiah; place him at the head of them, to deliver the nation from the Roman yoke, and ſet up a temporal kingdom, in which they might hope for great ſecular advantages: and they might the rather be induced to take ſuch a ſtep, ſince by this miracle, they could not doubt of his being able to ſupport ſuch an army of men, and to ſucceed in the enterprize; for he that could do this, what was it he could not do? but, he departed again into a mountain, himſelf alone; he left the company directly, upon this reſolution of theirs, and even took not his diſciples with him, who were in the ſame way of thinking about a temporal kingdom, as the people, and might encourage them in this undertaking: the mountain Chriſt went into, very probably was the ſame he went up to before; the reaſons of his departure, were to prevent the attempt; to ſhow that his kingdom was not of this world; to teach his followers to forſake the honours and riches of this world, for his ſake; and to let them know, that thoſe who ſought only for a temporal redeemer, were unworthy of his preſence: and alſo he went away alone, for the ſake of ſecret retirement, and private prayer; and it may be chiefly, that he prayed that God would open the minds of theſe men, and particularly the diſciples; that they might be convinced of their miſtaken notions of him as a temporal prince: ſome copies add, and he prayed there; the Syriac, Ethiopic, and Perſic verſions leave out the word again; and the latter, contrary to all others renders it, Chriſt departed from the mountain alone.

Ver. 16. And when even was now come, &c.] The laſt of the evenings, when night was coming on; for the firſt of the evenings took place, before they ſat down to eat, when the above miracle was wrought; ſee Matt. xiv. 15, 23. His diſciples went down unto the ſea; of Galilee, or Tiberias, to the ſea-ſide; and this was by the order, and even conſtraint of Chriſt, who would have them go before him, that he might be clear of the multitude, and have an opportunity for ſolitary prayer, Matt. xiv. 24. Mark vi. 45. ſee the notes there.

[5] T. Bab. Cetubot, fol. 60. 2. & Sanhedrin, fol. 49. 1.

Ver. 17. And entered into a ſhip, &c.] In which they came, and was waiting for them; or into another: and went over the ſea towards Capernaum; ſteered their courſe from Bethſaida, where they took ſhipping over the ſea of Galilee; at leaſt over one part of it, a creek or bay of it, as they intended, towards the city of Capernaum, which lay over-againſt Bethſaida: and it was now dark; quite night, which made their voyage more uncomfortable, eſpecially as it afterwards was tempeſtuous: but the worſt of all was, and Jeſus was not come to them; as they expected, and therefore were obliged to ſet ſail and go without him.

Ver. 18. And the ſea aroſe, &c.] Swelled, and was tumultuous and raging; the waves mounted up, and toſſed the ſhip to and fro: by reaſon of a great wind that blew; which agitated the waters of the ſea, and lifted up the waves; which ſtorm ſeems to have aroſe after they had ſet ſail, and were got into the midſt of the ſea.

Ver. 19. So when they had rowed, &c.] For the wind being contrary, they could not make uſe of their ſails, but betook themſelves to their oars, and by that means got about five and twenty, or thirty furlongs; which were three or four miles, or little more than a league; no farther had they got, though they had been rowing from the time it was dark, to the fourth watch, which was after three o'clock in the morning; all this while they had been toſſed in the ſea: they ſaw Jeſus walking on the ſea; ſee the notes on Matt. xiv. 25, 26, 29. And drawing nigh unto the ſhip; though Mark ſays, he would have paſſed by them; that is, he ſeemed as if he would, but his intention was to come to them, and ſave them from periſhing, as he did: and they were afraid; that he was a ſpirit, ſome nocturnal apparition, or dæmon, in an human form; ſee the note on Matt. xiv. 26.

Ver. 20. But he ſaith to them, it is I, be not afraid.] See the note on Matt. xiv. 27.

Ver. 21. Then they willingly received him into the ſhip, &c.] When they knew who he was; and eſpecially he was the more welcome, as they were in diſtreſs; and he able, as they well knew, to help them: and immediately the ſhip was at the land whither they went; which was done, as Nonnus obſerves, by a divine motion; for not only the wind ceaſed, but another miracle was wrought; the ſhip was in an inſtant at the place, whither they intended to go.

Ver. 22. The day following, &c.] The day after that, in which the miracle of feeding five thouſand men with five loaves and two fiſhes; the morning after the diſciples had had ſuch a bad voyage: when the people which ſtood on the other ſide of the ſea; from that in which the diſciples now were, being landed at Capernaum; that is, they ſtood on that ſide, or ſhore, where they took ſhipping, near Bethſaida and Tiberias: here, after they were diſmiſſed by Chriſt, they ſtood all night, waiting for boats to carry them over; or rather, knowing that Chriſt was not gone with his diſciples, they continued, hoping to meet with him in the morning, and enjoy ſome more advantage by him: for they ſaw that there was none other boat there, ſave that one whereinto his diſciples were entered, and that Jeſus went not with his diſciples into the boat, but that his diſciples were gone away alone; from whence they concluded, that ſince there was only that boat, and Jeſus did not go into it, but that the diſciples went off without him, that he muſt be therefore ſomewhere on ſhore, and not far off, and they hoped to find him in the morning; wherefore it was very ſurprizing to them, when they found him at Capernaum, when, and how he got there.

Ver. 23. Howbeit there came other boats from Tiberias, &c.] A city by the ſea-ſide, built by Herod, and called ſo in honour of Tiberius Cæſar; though the Jews give a different etymology of it; they ſay, it is the ſame with Rakkath, Joſh. xix. 35. and that it was a fortified place from the days of Joſhua, and that on one ſide, ימה חומתה, the ſea was its wall[d]: and ſo Jonathan the Targumiſt on Deut. iii. 17. ſays, that Tiberias was near the ſea of ſalt: this place became famous, for many of the wiſe men that lived here; here was a famous univerſity, and here the Miſna and Jeruſalem Talmud were written; and here the Sanhedrim ſat, after it removed from Jeruſalem: nigh unto the place where they did eat bread; where the day before they had been fed in ſo miraculous a manner: the meaning is, either that Tiberias was near to the place where the miracle was wrought, or the boats from Tiberias came near that place, and both were true; ſo that theſe men that were waiting by the ſea-ſide, had an opportunity of going over in theſe boats in queſt of Chriſt, to whom they were now become greatly attached, by feeding them in ſo wonderful a manner: after that the Lord had given thanks; which clauſe is added to ſhew, that the multiplication of the bread, and the refreſhment the men had by it, were owing to the power of Chriſt, and his bleſſing it; though this is wanting in Beza's moſt ancient copy, and in ſome others.

Ver. 24. When the people therefore ſaw that Jeſus was not there, &c.] At the ſea-ſide, at the uſual place of taking boat; and having reaſon to think he was not on that ſide of the lake, but was gone from thence: neither his diſciples; when they found that there were neither of them there, but both were gone, and conſidering that it was to no purpoſe for them to ſtay there: they alſo took ſhipping, and came to Capernaum ſeeking Jeſus; they might obſerve, that the diſciples ſteered their courſe towards this place; and they knew that was a place of general reſort with Chriſt and his diſciples; therefore they took boat and came directly thither, and ſought for him in the ſynagogue, it being on a day in which the people uſed to go thither; and where Chriſt, as often as he had opportunity, attended.

Ver. 25. And when they had found him on the other ſide of the ſea, &c.] At Capernaum, and in the ſynagogue there; ſee ver. 59. They ſaid unto him, Rabbi; or maſter, a name now much in uſe with the Jewiſh doctors, and by which they delighted to be called; and theſe men being convinced by the miracle, that Chriſt was that prophet that ſhould come, honour him with this title, ſaying, when cameſt thou hither? ſince he did not go with his diſciples, and there was no other boat that went off the night before, but that in which they went; and they came over in the firſt that came out that morning, and he did not come in any of them; and therefore it was amazing to them, both when and how he came, ſince they could not deviſe how he ſhould get there by ſhipping, and alſo how he ſhould ſo ſoon get there a foot.

Ver. 26. Jeſus anſwered them and ſaid, &c.] Not by replying to their queſtion, or giving a direct anſwer to that, which he could have done, by telling them that he walked upon the water, and found his diſciples in great diſtreſs, and delivered them, and came early that morning with them to the land of Geneſaret, and ſo to Capernaum: but not willing to gratify their curioſity; and knowing from what principles, and with what views they ſought after him, and followed him; and willing to let them know that he knew them, being the ſearcher of hearts, and to reprove them for them, thus addreſſed them: verily verily I ſay unto you; this is a certain truth, and was full well known to Chriſt, and what their own conſciences muſt atteſt: ye ſeek me not becauſe ye ſaw the miracles; of feeding ſo large a number with ſo ſmall a quantity of food, and of healing them that needed it, Luke ix. 11. Not but that they did regard the miracles of Chriſt, and concluded from thence he muſt be that prophet that was to come, and were for taking him by force, and proclaiming him king; but then they had a greater reſpect to their own worldly intereſt, and their carnal appetites, than to theſe, as follows: but becauſe ye did eat of the loaves, and were filled; they regarded their own bellies more than the honour and glory of Chriſt, and even than the good of their immortal ſouls, and the ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation of them: and it is to be feared that this is the caſe of too many who make a profeſſion of religion; their view being their own worldly advantages, and not the ſpiritual and everlaſting good of their ſouls, and the real intereſt of a redeemer: hence the following advice,

Ver. 27. Labour not for the meat which periſheth, &c.] Meaning either food for the body, which is periſhing; its virtue is periſhing; man cannot live by it alone, nor does it laſt long; its ſubſtance is periſhing; it is received into the ſtomach, and there digeſted; it goes into the belly, and is caſt out into the draught; and that which it ſupports, for a while, is periſhing; and both the one, and the other, ſhall be deſtroyed; even meats for the belly, and the belly for meats: now, though it becomes men to work for their bread, to provide it for themſelves and families; yet they ſhould not be anxiouſly ſolicitous about it, or labour only for that, and prefer it to ſpiritual food: or elſe food for the mind is meant, and that either in a ſenſual way, as ſinful luſt and pleaſures, the honours of this world, and the riches of it; which are ſweet morſels, tho' bread of deceit, to carnal minds, and which they labour hard for: or, in a religious way, as ſuperſtition, will worſhip, external works of righteouſneſs, in order to pleaſe God, and obtain eternal life and ſalvation; which to labour for in ſuch a way, is to ſpend money for that which is not bread, and labour for that which profiteth not; and in each of theſe ways were theſe Jews labouring for periſhing food, from which Chriſt diſſuades them: but for that which endureth unto everlaſting life; either the grace of Chriſt, which, as meat, is quickning and refreſhing, ſtrengthening and ſupporting, and which cauſes nouriſhment and growth, and by virtue of which work is done; and this ſprings up unto everlaſting life, and is inſeparately connected with it; and particularly the bleſſings of grace, ſuch as ſanctification, adoption, pardon, and juſtification: or the Goſpel, and the ordinances of it, which are refreſhing, and ſtrengthening, and by which the ſaints are nouriſhed up unto everlaſting life; or rather the fleſh of Chriſt eaten, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, by faith, of which Chriſt ſo largely diſcourſes in the following part of the chapter: which the Son of man ſhall give unto you; meaning either everlaſting life, which is in Chriſt's gift, and is a free-grace gift of his; or elſe the meat which endures unto it: for tho' it is to be laboured for, not ſo as to prepare it, or to purchaſe it, but by aſking for it in prayer, and by attending on Ordinances, and exerciſing faith on Chriſt; yet it is his gift, and he gives it freely; grace, and the bleſſings of it, are freely given by him, and ſo are the Goſpel and its Ordinances; and alſo his own fleſh, which is firſt given by him, by way of ſacrifice, in the room, and ſtead of his people, and for the life of them, ver. 51. and then it is given unto them to feed upon ſpiritually by faith, and which is here deſigned: for him hath God the father ſealed; deſignated and appointed to be the Saviour, and redeemer of his people, and has ſent, authorized, and commiſſioned him as ſuch; and has made him known, and approved of him, by the deſcent of the Spirit on him, and by a voice from heaven, declaring him his beloved Son; and has confirmed him to be the Meſſiah by the miraculous works he gave him to finiſh; for all which ſeveral uſes ſeals are, as to diſtinguiſh one thing from another, to render any thing authentic, to point it out, or to confirm it.

Ver. 28. Then ſaid they unto him, &c.] Underſtanding by what he ſaid, that they muſt labour and work, tho' not for periſhing food, yet for durable food; and as they imagined, in order to obtain eternal life by working: what ſhall we do that we might work the works of God? Such as are agreeable to his will, are acceptable to him, and well-pleaſing in his ſight: they ſeem to intimate, as if they deſired to know whether there were any other works of this kind, than what Moſes had directed them to, or than they had done; and if there were, they ſuggeſt they would gladly do them; for this was the general caſt and complexion of this people; they were ſeeking for righteouſneſs, and life, not by faith, but, as it were, by the works of the law.

Ver. 29. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, this is the work of God, &c.] The main and principal one, and which is well-pleaſing in his ſight; and without which it is impoſſible to pleaſe him; and without which no work whatever is a good work; and this is of the operation of God, which he himſelf works in men; it is not of themſelves, it is the pure gift of God: that ye believe on him whom he hath ſent; there are other works which are well-pleaſing to God, when rightly performed, but faith is the chief work, and others are only acceptable when done in the faith of Chriſt. This, as a principle, is purely God's work; as it is an act, or as it is exerciſed under the influence of divine grace, it is man's act: that ye believe; the object of it is Chriſt, as ſent by the father, as the mediator between God and men, as appointed by him to be the ſaviour and redeemer; and believing in Chriſt, is believing in God that ſent him. The Jews reduce all the ſix hundred and thirteen precepts of the law, for ſo many they ſay there are, to this one, the juſt ſhall live by his faith, Hab. ii. 4.[e]

Ver. 30. They ſaid therefore unto him, &c.] Seeing he propoſed believing in him as the grand work of God to be done, and what is moſt acceptable in his ſight: what ſign ſheweſt thou then, that we may ſee and believe thee? The people of the Jews were always requiring ſigns and wonders, and when they had one and another ſhewn them, they ſtill ſought for more, and were never ſatisfied; ſee Matt. xii. 39. and xvi. 1. Theſe men had lately ſeen various ſigns and miracles of Chriſt, as healing the ſick, and feeding five thouſand of them, and more, with five loaves, and two fiſhes; and tho' for the time preſent, theſe had ſome influence upon them, and they were ready to believe he was that prophet; yet now, at leaſt ſome of them, begin to retract, and ſignify, that unleſs ſome other, and greater ſigns were ſhewn, they ſhould not believe in him as the Meſſiah: what doſt thou work? more than others, or Moſes. They ſeem to make light of the miracle of the loaves, or at leaſt require ſome greater ſign and miracle, to engage their belief in him as the Meſſiah; and as they were lovers of their bellies, and expected dainties in the times of the Meſſiah, they ſeem to move for, and deſire miracles of that kind to be wrought; and which ſenſe the following words confirm.

Ver. 31. Our fathers did eat manna in the wilderneſs, &c.] Which was a ſort of food prepared by angels in the air, and rained down from thence about the tents of the Iſraelites; it was a ſmall round thing, as ſmall as the hoar-froſt on the ground; it was like a coriander ſeed, and the colour of it was the colour of bdellium: it was ſo called, either from מנה, to prepare, becauſe it was prepared, and got ready for the Iſraelites; or from the firſt words that were ſpoken upon ſight of it, מן הו, what is it? for they knew not what it was: and this the Jewiſh fathers fed upon all the while they were in the wilderneſs, 'till they came to Canaan's land, and they only; it was food peculiar to them: our fathers did eat; and ſo the Jews[f] obſerve on thoſe words in Exod. xvi. 35. "and the children of "Iſrael did eat manna forty years; the children of "Iſrael, ולא אחרא, and not another. And the "children of Iſrael ſaw, and ſaid, what is it? and "not the reſt of the mixt multitude." Now theſe Jews object this miracle to Chriſt, and intimate, that he indeed had fed five thouſand of them with barley loaves, and fiſhes, for one meal; but their fathers, in the times of Moſes, to the number of ſix hundred thouſand, and more, were fed, and that with manna, very ſweet and delightful food, and for the ſpace of forty years; even all the while they were in the wilderneſs: and therefore, unleſs he wrought as great a miracle, or a greater than this, and that of the like kind, they ſhould not think fit to relinquiſh Moſes, and follow him; and in proof of what they ſaid, they produce ſcripture, as it is written in Pſal. lxxviii. 24, 25. or rather in Exod. xvi. 15. and perhaps both places may be reſpected: he gave them bread from heaven to eat; they leave out the word Lord, being willing it ſhould be underſtood of Moſes, to whom they aſcribed it, as appears from the following words of Chriſt, who denies that Moſes gave it; and add the phraſe from heaven, to ſet forth the excellent nature of it, which is taken from Exod. xvi. 4. where the manna, as here, is called bread from heaven.

Ver. 32. Then Jeſus ſaid unto them, verily verily I ſay unto you, &c.] It is truth, and may be depended on, whether it will be believed or no: Moſes gave you not that bread from heaven; in which Chriſt denies that that bread, or manna, did come from heaven; that is, from the higheſt heavens, only from the air, and was not ſuch celeſtial bread he after ſpeaks of, and which came down from the heaven of heavens: and moreover, he denies that Moſes gave them that bread; it was the Lord that gave them it, as is expreſly ſaid in the paſſage referred to, in the above citation. Moſes had no hand in it; he did not ſo much as pray for it, much leſs procure it, or prepare it: it was promiſed and prepared by God, and rained by him, and who directed to the gathering and uſe of it. This ſtands oppoſed to a notion of the Jews, that the manna was given by means of Moſes, for his ſake, and on account of his merits: for they ſay[g], "there aroſe up "three good providers, or paſtors for Iſrael, and they "are theſe, Moſes, and Aaron, and Miriam; and three "good gifts were given by their means, and they "are theſe, the well, the cloud, and the manna; "the well by the merits of Miriam; the pillar of "cloud by the merits of Aaron; מן בזכות משה, "the manna, by the merits of Moſes." This our Lord denies; and affirms, but my Father giveth you the true bread from heaven: he not only gave the manna to the Jewiſh fathers, and not Moſes; but he alſo gives that bread which the manna was typical of, by which he means himſelf; who may be compared to bread, becauſe of the original of it, or the matter of it, of which it is made, wheat, he is called a corn of wheat, John xii. 24. and from its preparation for food, being threſhed, and winnowed, and ground, and kneaded, and baked; all which may expreſs the ſufferings and death of Chriſt, by which he becomes fit food for faith; and from its being the main part of human ſuſtenance, and from its nouriſhing and ſtrengthening nature, and from its being a means of maintaining and ſupporting life: and he may be called the true bread, becauſe he is the truth and ſubſtance of the types of him; the unleavened bread, eat at the paſſover, was typical of him, as he was free from ſin in nature and life, and from all error in doctrine; and ſo was the ſhew-bread a type of his interceſſion, and ſet forth the continuance of it, its efficacy and acceptance, of which the prieſts only ſhared; and ſo were the meat-offerings in the ſacrifices, which were offered up day by day; and particularly the manna, the bread from heaven, the Jews were now ſpeaking of: Chriſt was the truth of that type; that was but ſhadowy bread, Chriſt is the true bread, or the antitype of it in its name; whether it be derived from manah, to prepare, Chriſt being the bread of life, and ſalvation of God, prepared in the council and covenant of grace, and by his ſufferings and death before the face of all people; or from the words man hu, what is it? Chriſt being as little known by carnal men, as the manna was at firſt to the Iſraelites: and in its nature, kind, form, and quality; it was round in form, which might be expreſſive of the perfections of Chriſt, and particularly his eternity, being without beginning or end; it was white in colour, which may denote the purity and innocence of him; it was ſweet in taſte, as he, his fruits, his word, and ordinances, are to them that are born again; it was ſmall in quantity, which may ſet forth the meanneſs of Chriſt in his ſtate of humiliation: it was alſo typical of Chriſt in its uſefulneſs; it was ſufficient to ſupply a great multitude, and that for many years, as the fulneſs of grace in Chriſt is ſufficient for the whole family in heaven, and in earth, in time, and to all eternity; the Iſraelites all ſhared in it, and had all an equal portion of it; ſo all the people of God have an intereſt in Chriſt, and equally participate of the bleſſings of his grace, and ſhall enjoy the ſame eternal life and glory by him: one has neither more nor leſs than another; Chriſt is all in all, and made alike all things to them: and he may be called the bread from heaven, becauſe he came from thence, not by change of place, but by aſſumption of nature, even from the higheſt heavens, the third heaven, ven, from whence the manna came not; he is the Lord from heaven, and is ſuch bread as has a virtue and tendency in it to nouriſh men for heaven, and is truly of a heavenly nature: and this is Chriſt's Father's gift, and is of pure grace, without any conſideration of works and merits in men. Philo the Jew ſays [h], the heavenly food of the ſoul, which is called manna, the divine Word diſtributes alike to all that aſk.

Ver. 33. For the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, &c.] In the way and manner juſt now mentioned: and which clearly points out Chriſt himſelf, who may be called the bread of God; to diſtinguiſh him from common bread, and to ſhew the excellency of him, and that he is of God's providing and giving, and which he would have his children feed upon: and giveth life unto the world; a ſpiritual life, which he is the author, ſupporter, and maintainer of; and eternal life, which he gives a right unto, and meetneſs for, and nouriſhes up unto; and this not to a few only, or to the Iſraelites only, but to the Gentiles alſo, and even to the whole world of God's elect: not indeed to every individual in the world, for all are not quickened now, nor ſhall inherit eternal life hereafter; but to all the people of God, in all parts of the world, and in all ages of time; of ſuch extenſive virtue and efficacy is Chriſt, the bread of God, in which he appears greatly ſuperior to that manna the Jews inſtance in.

Ver. 34. Then ſaid they unto him, &c.] At leaſt ſome of them: Lord, evermore give us this bread; that is ſo divine and heavenly, and has ſuch a quickening virtue in it: theſe words are ſaid by them either ſeriouſly, and to be underſtood of bread for their bodies, of which they imagined Chriſt was ſpeaking; and ſo ſprung from ignorance of his ſenſe; and from ſenſuality in them who followed him for the loaves; and from a covetous diſpoſition, being deſirous of being ſupplied with ſuch excellent food without charge; and from idleneſs, to ſave labour and pains in working for it; and from a vain deſire of the continuance of this earthly life, being willing to live for ever, and therefore would have this bread evermore; and from a groſs opinion of plenty and delicacy, of corporal food in the times of the Meſſiah; ſee the note on Luke xiv. 15. or elſe theſe words are ſpoken ironically, by way of deriſion, as if there was no ſuch bread; and if there was, that Chriſt could not give it. However, the words may be improved, when conſidered as a petition coming from, and ſuitable, to a ſenſible and enlightened ſoul; for ſuch who are ſenſible of their famiſhing condition by nature, and of their need of Chriſt, the bread of life, and whoſe taſte is changed, and have taſted how good this bread is, will earneſtly deſire always to be ſupplied with it, and to live upon it; for nothing is more grateful to them, and more nouriſhing and ſatiſfying to their ſouls; they are never weary of it; it is always new and delightful to them, and they always ſtand in need of it, and wait in the uſe of means and ordinances for it; and this has always an abiding, laſting virtue in it to feed their ſouls, and nouriſh them up to everlaſting life. Joſephus [i] ſays of the manna, which was a type of this bread, that there was ſuch a divine quality in it, that whoever taſted of it needed nothing elſe: and the Jews alſo ſay [k], that "in the manna were "all kinds of taſtes, and every one of the Iſraelites "taſted all that he deſired; for ſo it is written in "Deut. ii. 7. theſe forty years the Lord thy God hath "been with thee, thou haſt lacked nothing, or not "wanted any thing; what is any thing? when he "deſired to eat any thing, and ſaid with his mouth, "O that I had fat to eat, immediately there was "in his mouth the taſte of fat.——Young men "taſted the taſte of bread, old men the taſte of "honey, and children the taſte of oil." Yea, they ſay [l], "whoever deſired fleſh, he taſted it, and who"ever deſired fiſh, he taſted it, and whoever deſired "fowl, chicken, pheaſant, or pea-hen, ſo he taſted "whatever he deſired." And to this agrees what is ſaid in the apocryphal book of Wiſdom, ch. xvi. ver. 20, 21.——"Thou feddeſt thine own people "with angels food, and didſt ſend them from "heaven bread, prepared without their labour, "able to content every man's delight, and agree"ing to every taſte; for thy ſuſtenance (or manna) "declared thy ſweetneſs unto thy children, and "ſerving to the appetite of the eater, tempered "itſelf to every man's liking." All which muſt be underſtood of that pleaſure, ſatisfaction, and contentment which they had in it; for it was a very uncommon caſe to eat it, and live upon it as their common food for forty years together: and no doubt but there was ſomething remarkable in ſuiting it to their appetites, or in giving them appetites ſuitable to that, to feed upon it, and reliſh it for ſo long a time: twice indeed in that length of time we read they complained of it, ſaying, that they had nothing but this manna before their eyes, and their ſouls loathed it as light bread, Numb. xi. 6. and xxi. 5. and luſted after the fleſh, and the fiſh they had eat in Egypt. And ſo it is with ſome profeſſors of Chriſt, and his Goſpel; for there is a mixed multitude among them, as there was among the Iſraelites, who diſreliſh the preaching of Chriſt, and the truths of the Goſpel reſpecting his perſon, blood, and righteouſneſs, and ſalvation by him; they can't bear to have theſe things frequently inculcated and inſiſted upon; their ſouls are ready to loath them as light bread, and want to have ſomething elſe ſet before them more ſuitable to their carnal appetites: but to ſuch who are true believers in Chriſt, who have taſted that the Lord is gracious, Chriſt, the true manna, and bread of God, is all things to them; nor do they deſire any other: they taſte every thing that is delightful, and find every thing that is nouriſhing in him.

Ver. 35. And Jeſus ſaid unto them, I am the bread of life, &c.] Chriſt is ſo called, becauſe he gives life to dead ſinners: men in a ſtate of nature are dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; and whatever they feed upon tends to death; Chriſt, the true bread, only gives life, which is conveyed by the word, and made effectual by the Spirit: and becauſe he ſupports and maintains the life he gives; it is not in the power of a believer to ſupport the ſpiritual life he has; nor can he live on any thing ſhort of Chriſt; and there's enough in Chriſt for him to live upon: and becauſe he quickens, and makes the ſaints lively in the exerciſe of grace, and diſcharge of duty, and renews their ſpiritual ſtrength, and ſecures for them eternal life. He that cometh to me; not corporally to hear him preach, or preached, or merely to his ordinances, to baptiſm, or the Lord's table; but ſo as to believe in him, feed, and live upon him, as the next clauſe explains it: and he that believeth on me ſhall never thirſt; and which is owing, not to the power and will of man, but to divine teachings, and the powerful drawings of the efficacious grace of God; ſee ver. 44, 45. Now of ſuch it is ſaid, that they ſhall never hunger and thirſt; which is true of them in this life, tho' not to be underſtood as if there were no ſinful deſires in them; much leſs, that there are no ſpiritual hungerings and thirſtings after they are come to Chriſt; but that they ſhall not deſire any other food but Chriſt; they ſhall be ſatisfied with him; nor ſhall they hereafter be in a ſtarving and famiſhing condition, or want any good thing: and in the other world there will be no deſires after that which is ſinful, nor indeed after outward ordinances, in order to enjoy communion with God in them, as now, for they will then be needleſs; nor ſhall they have any uneaſy deſires after Chriſt, and his grace, and the enjoyment of him, ſince he will be all in all to them.

Ver. 36. But I ſaid unto you, &c.] The ſubſtance of what follows in ver. 26. tho' the Perſic and Ethiopic verſions render it, I ſay unto you; and ſo refers not to any thing before ſaid, but to what he was about to ſay: that ye alſo have ſeen me, and believe not; that is, they had not only ſeen him in perſon, which many kings, prophets, and righteous men had deſired, but not enjoyed, yet nevertheleſs believed; but they had ſeen his miracles, and had ſhared in the advantages of them, being healed, and fed corporally by him, and yet believed not in him as the ſpiritual ſaviour and redeemer of their ſouls; nor did they come to him in a ſpiritual way, for eternal life and ſalvation.

Ver. 37. All that the Father giveth me, &c.] The all deſign not the apoſtles only, who were given to Chriſt as ſuch; for theſe did not all, in a ſpiritual manner, come to him, and believe in him; one of them was a devil, and the ſon of perdition; much leſs every individual of mankind: theſe are, in ſome ſenſe, given to Chriſt to ſubſerve ſome ends of his mediatorial kingdom, and are ſubject to his power and controul, but do not come to him, and believe in him: but the whole body of the elect are here meant, who, when they were choſen by God the Father, were given and put into the hands of Chriſt, as his ſeed, his ſpouſe, his ſheep, his portion, and inheritance, and to be ſaved by him with an everlaſting ſalvation; which is an inſtance of love and care on the Father's part, to give them to Chriſt; and of grace and condeſcenſion in him to receive them, and take the care of them; and of diſtinguiſhing goodneſs to them: and tho' Chriſt here expreſſes this act of his Father's in the preſent tenſe, giveth, perhaps to ſignify the continuance and unchangeableneſs of it; yet he delivers it in the paſt tenſe, in ver. 39. hath given; and ſo all the Oriental verſions render it here. And it certainly reſpects an act of God, antecedent to coming to Chriſt, and believing in him, which is a fruit and effect of electing love, as is clear from what follows: ſhall come unto me; ſuch who are given to Chriſt in eternal election, and in the everlaſting covenant of grace, ſhall, and do, in time, come to Chriſt, and believe in him to the ſaving of their ſouls; which is not to be aſcribed to any power and will in them, but to the power and grace of God. It is not here ſaid, that ſuch who are given to Chriſt have a power to come to him, or may come if they will, but they ſhall come; efficacious grace will bring them to Chriſt, as poor periſhing ſinners, to venture on him for life and ſalvation: and him that cometh to me I will in no wiſe caſt out; ſuch who come to Chriſt in a ſpiritual manner, and are brought to believe in him truly and really, he not only receives kindly, but keeps and preſerves them by his power, and will not caſt them out, or thruſt them from him into perdition: the words are very ſtrongly and emphatically expreſſed in the original, I will not, not, or never, never, caſt out without; or caſt out of doors. Chriſt will never caſt them out of his affections; nor out of his arms; nor out of that family that is named of him; nor out of, and from his church, which is his body, and of which they are members; nor out of a ſtate of juſtification and ſalvation; and therefore they ſhall never periſh, but have everlaſting life. The three glorious doctrines of grace, of eternal election, efficacious grace in converſion, and the final perſeverance of the ſaints, are clearly contained in theſe words.

Ver. 38. For I came down from heaven, &c.] Not by change of place, or local motion; for Chriſt is the immenſe, infinite, and omnipreſent God, and can't be ſaid properly to move from place to place; for he fills all places, even heaven and earth with his preſence, and was in heaven as the Son of God, at the ſame time he was here on earth as the ſon of man: wherefore this muſt be underſtood in a manner becoming his proper deity, his divine Sonſhip, and perſonality: this deſcent was by the aſſumption of the human nature into union with his divine perſon, which was an inſtance of amazing grace and condeſcenſion. The Jew [m] objects to this, and ſays, "if this reſpects the deſcent " of the ſoul, the ſoul of every man deſcended " from thence; but if it reſpects the body, the " reſt of the Evangeliſts contradict his words, particularly Luke, when he ſays, ch. ii. 7. that his " mother brought him forth at Bethlehem." But this deſcent regards neither his ſoul nor body, but his divine perſon, which always was in heaven, and not any local deſcent of that; but, as before obſerved, an aſſumption of human nature, which he took of the virgin on earth; and ſo there is no contradiction between the Evangeliſts; nor is deſcent from heaven unſuitable to Chriſt as a divine perſon, ſince it is aſcribed to God, Gen. xi. 7. and xviii. 21. and if God may be ſaid to go down from heaven by ſome diſplay of his power, and intimation of his preſence, Chriſt may be ſaid to deſcend from heaven by that marvellous work of his, taking upon him our nature, and walking up and down on earth in the form of a ſervant; and which was done with this view, as he ſays, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that ſent me; that is, not to do his own will, as ſeparate from his Father's, and much leſs as contrary to it; otherwiſe he did come to do his own will, which, as God, was the ſame with his Father's, he being one with him in nature, and ſo in power and will; and tho' his will, as man, was diſtinct from his Father's, yet not repugnant, but reſigned unto it: and this will he came to do, was to preach the Goſpel, fulfil the law, work miracles, and obtain the eternal redemption and ſalvation of his people. What the above Jewiſh writer [n] objects to this part of the text is of very little moment: whoſe words are; "moreover, what he ſays, not to do mine own will, but " the will of him that ſent me, ſhews, that he that " ſent, is not one, and the ſame, with him that is " ſent, ſeeing the will of him that is ſent, is not " as the will of him that ſends." It is readily granted that they are not one and the ſame perſon; they are two diſtinct perſons, which ſending, and being ſent, do clearly ſhew; but then they are one in nature, tho' diſtinct in perſon, and they agree in will and work. Chriſt came not to do any will of his own different from that of his Father's; nor do theſe words imply a difference of wills in them, much leſs a contrariety in them, but rather the ſameneſs of them.

[m] R. Iſaac Chizzuk Emuna, par. 2. c. 44. p. 434.

[n] Ib.

Ver. 39. And this is the Father's will which hath ſent me, &c.] This explains both who he was that ſent him; the Father of him, and of his people; whoſe ſending of him does not ſuppoſe any change of place, or inequality between them, or diſreſpect unto him, or compulſion of him, but agreement between them, and love to the perſons on whoſe account he was ſent; and alſo what is the will he came to do, and is what was declared by him to Chriſt, when he gave the elect to him: for this expreſſes his ſecret will in the council and covenant of grace, that of all which he hath given me, I ſhould loſe nothing; that is, that of all the elect which were given to Chriſt by his Father, in eternal election, he ſhould not loſe any one of them, not the meaneſt among them, nor any thing of theirs, their grace, or glory, or any thing belonging to them, either to their ſouls or bodies, and particularly the latter: but ſhould raiſe it up again at the laſt day; even every part of their bodies, and every duſt belonging to them; their bodies being given to Chriſt, and redeemed by his blood, as well as their ſouls: ſo the Jews [o], ſpeaking of the reſurrection, and making mention of that paſſage in Numb. xxiii. 10. who ſhall count the duſt of Jacob? add, "and he (i. e. "God) ſhall order it all, ולא יתאביד כלום, and "not any thing ſhall be loſt, but all ſhall riſe again; "for, lo, it is ſaid, Dan. xii. 2. and many of them "that ſleep in the duſt, &c."

Ver. 40. And this is the will of him that ſent me, &c.] The Vulgate Latin adds, of my Father; and all the Oriental verſions read only, and this is the will of my Father; this is his declared, his revealed will in the Goſpel, which the ſons of men are made acquainted with, as the other was his ſecret will, which was only known to the Son till he diſcovered it. That every one which ſeeth the Son, and believeth on him; who ſo ſees him as to believe in him; for this is not to be underſtood of a corporal ſight of Chriſt, or of a mere ſpeculative knowledge of him, or hiſtorical faith in him; for it is not ſo to ſee him, as merely to believe what he is, the Son of God, the Meſſiah and Saviour of the world, or what he ſays, but to truſt in him for righteouſneſs, life, and happineſs. Men are by nature blind, their eyes are ſhut to all that is ſpiritually good: it is the Spirit of God that opens blind eyes, and illuminates the underſtanding; and in his light men ſee not only themſelves, their ſin, and want of righteouſneſs, and their loſt ſtate and condition, but Chriſt, and a beauty, glory, and excellency in him, ability and willingneſs to ſave, a ſuitableneſs in him for them, and a fulneſs of all grace; they ſee righteouſneſs, peace, pardon, cleanſing, wiſdom, ſtrength, grace, life, and ſalvation, and go out of themſelves to him for all: and ſuch a ſight, tho' it may be but glimmering, is ſaving, and is ſelf-abaſing, ſoul-rejoicing, ſurprizing, and transforming; is attended with certainty, reality, and evidence, and is a foretaſte of glory; for it is the will of God, and not man, of a gracious Father, of an unchangeable and eternal being, whoſe will cannot be reſiſted, and made void, that ſuch may have everlaſting life; which will be a life of glory, and will conſiſt in poſſeſſing glory both in ſoul and body; in beholding glory, the glory of one another, the glory of angels, the glory of divine truths, and myſterious providences, the glory of the divine perfections, and of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and it will be a life of perfection, of perfect knowledge, holineſs, obedience, love, peace, and joy; a life free from all the miſeries and inconveniencies of this, both in a natural and ſpiritual ſenſe; a life of pleaſure, and which will laſt for ever: to which Chriſt adds, and I will raiſe him up at the laſt day; Chriſt will be the efficient cauſe, as well as he is the exemplar, the earneſt, and firſt-fruits of the reſurrection of the dead: he will indeed raiſe all the dead by his power, but the ſaints particularly, by virtue of union to him, as the members of his body, and in the firſt place; and the very ſame ſhall riſe, and with the ſame numerical body, that were given to him, and believe in him: and this will be at the laſt of the laſt days, at the end of all things; and is mentioned to ſhow, that length of time will not hinder the reſurrection of the dead, and in oppoſition to a Jewiſh notion, that the reſurrection of the dead would be at the Meſſiah's coming: it will be at his ſecond coming, but was not to be at his firſt; there was indeed then a reſurrection of ſome particular perſons, but not a general one of all the ſaints: that the Jews expect the reſurrection of the dead when the Meſſiah comes, appears from their Targums, Talmuds, and other writers; ſo the Targumiſt on Hoſ. xiv. 8. "They ſhall be gathered "from their captivity, they ſhall ſit under the "ſhadow of their Meſſiah, and the dead ſhall live, "and good ſhall be multiplied in the land." And in the Talmud [p] it is ſaid, "the holy, bleſſed God "will quicken the righteous, and they ſhall not "return to their duſt." The Gloſs upon it is, "the holy, bleſſed God will quicken them in the "days of the Meſſiah." And ſo the land of the living is ſaid to be, "the land, whoſe dead live "firſt in the days of the Meſſiah [q]." And hence R. Jeremiah deſired to be buried with his clothes, and ſhoes on, and ſtaff in his hand, that when the Meſſiah came, he might be ready [r]; with which agree others of the more modern writers: ſo Kimchi on Iſ. lxvi. 5. "They ſhall live at the reſurrec-"tion of the dead, in the days of the Meſſiah." And the ſame writer on Jer. xxiii. 20. obſerves it is ſaid, "ye ſhall conſider, and not they ſhall con-"ſider; which intimates the "reſurrection of the "dead in the days of the Meſſiah." And ſays Aben Ezra on Dan. xii. 2. "The righteous which "die in captivity ſhall live, when the redeemer "comes;" tho' ſome of their writers differ in this point, and will not allow the days of the Meſſiah, and the reſurrection of the dead, to be one and the ſame [s].

Ver. 41. The Jews then murmured at him, &c.] When they found that he ſpoke of himſelf as the true bread, the bread of God, and bread of life, and as deſcending from heaven; and which was to be fed upon in a ſpiritual manner by faith, which they were ignorant of, and had no deſire unto: and thus being diſappointed of the delicious corporal food they expected, they grew uneaſy and diſpleaſed, becauſe he ſaid I am the bread which came down from heaven; for though, as yet, he had not ſaid this in ſo many words, and in this direct form, as afterwards, in ver. 51. yet he had ſaid what amounted to it, and which might be eaſily gathered from ver. 35, 38. The Vulgate Latin reads, I am the living bread; and the Perſic verſion, I am the bread of life. And this laſt renders the firſt clauſe mocked at him.

Ver. 42. And they ſaid, is not this Jeſus the ſon of Joſeph? &c.] From murmuring they go to mocking and ſcoffing at his parentage and deſcent, and object this to his coming down from heaven; and intend by it to upbraid him with the meanneſs of his birth, being the ſon of Joſeph, a poor carpenter; and ſuggeſt, that it was great arrogance in him to claim an heavenly original, and to aſcribe ſuch things to himſelf that he was the bread of God, and the bread of life, and came from heaven: whoſe father and mother we know? for Capernaum and Nazareth were not at a great diſtance from each other; ſo that Joſeph and Mary might be perſonally known by the inhabitants of Capernaum, and they might be intimately acquainted with them. How is it then that he ſaith, I came down from heaven? they could not tell how to reconcile theſe things, not knowing either his miraculous conception and incarnation, nor his divine Sonſhip; otherwiſe his being made of a woman, or born of a virgin on earth, is conſiſtent with his being the Lord from heaven.

Ver. 43. Jeſus therefore anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] Either over-hearing what they ſaid, or knowing, as God, their ſecret murmurs, and private cavils among themſelves, thus addreſſed them, murmur not among yourſelves: meaning neither about his deſcent from heaven, nor about coming to him, and believing in him; for it follows,

Ver. 44. No man can come to me, &c.] That is, by faith, as in ver. 35. for otherwiſe they could corporally come to him, but not ſpiritually; becauſe they had neither power nor will of themſelves; being dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, and impotent to every thing that is ſpiritual: and whilſt men are in a ſtate of unregeneracy, blindneſs, and darkneſs, they ſee no need of coming to Chriſt, nor any thing in him worth coming for; they are prejudiced againſt him, and their hearts are ſet on other things; and beſides, coming to Chriſt, and believing in Chriſt being the ſame thing, it is certain faith is not of a man's ſelf, it is the gift of God, and the operation of his Spirit; and therefore efficacious grace muſt be exerted to enable a ſoul to come to Chriſt; which is expreſſed in the following words, except the Father which hath ſent me, draw him: which is not to be underſtood of moral ſuaſion, or a being perſuaded and prevailed upon to come to Chriſt by the conſideration of the mighty works which God had done to juſtify that he was the true Meſſiah, but of the internal and powerful influence of the grace of God; for this act of drawing is ſomething diſtinct from, and ſuperior to both doctrine and miracles. The Capernaites had heard the doctrine of Chriſt, which was taught with authority, and had ſeen his miracles, which were full proofs of his being the Meſſiah, and yet believed not, but murmured at his perſon and parentage. This gave occaſion to Chriſt to obſerve to them, that ſomething more than theſe was neceſſary to their coming to him, or ſavingly believing in him; even the powerful and efficacious grace of the Father in drawing: and if it be conſidered what men in converſion are drawn off from and to, from their beloved luſts and darling righteouſneſs; to look unto, and rely upon Chriſt alone for ſalvation; from that which was before ſo very agreeable, to that which, previous to this work, was ſo very diſagreeable; to what elſe can this be aſcribed, but to unfruſtrable and inſuperable grace? but tho' this act of drawing is an act of power, yet not of force; God in drawing of unwilling, makes willing in the day of his power: he enlightens the underſtanding, bends the will, gives an heart of fleſh, ſweetly allures by the power of his grace, and engages the ſoul to come to Chriſt, and give up itſelf to him; he draws with the bands of love. Drawing, tho' it ſuppoſes power and influence, yet not always coaction and force: muſic draws the ear, love the heart, and pleaſure the mind. Trahit ſua quemque voluptas, ſays the poet. The Jews have a ſaying [t], that the proſelytes, in the days of the Meſſiah, ſhall be all of them, גרים גרורים, proſelytes drawn; that is, ſuch as ſhall freely and voluntarily become proſelytes, as thoſe who are drawn by the Father are. And I will raiſe him up at the laſt day; ſee the note on ver. 40. compare with this verſe Judg. iv. 7.

Ver. 45. It is written in the prophets, &c.] In the book of the prophets, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it: the Jews divided the books of the Old Teſtament into three parts, the law, the prophets, and the hagiographa; now in that diviſion which was called the prophets, are the following words: or in one of the prophets, namely, in Iſ. liv. 13. ſo the Syriac verſion reads, in the prophet; tho' ſome think reference is had to more prophets, and more paſſages than one, as beſides the above mentioned, Jer. xxxi. 34. Mic. iv. 2. and they ſhall be all taught of God; by his Spirit to know themſelves, and Jeſus Chriſt; that is, all that are ordained to eternal life, all that are given to Chriſt, and are choſen in him; all the children of Zion, and who are the children of God; theſe are all, ſooner or later, in a ſpecial manner, taught of God: and which does not intend mere external inſtructions, and objective teachings by the miniſtry of the word, for many are ſo taught, who never come to Chriſt; but ſpecial teachings, ſuch as are attended with the energy of divine grace, and the power of the Spirit of God, who guides into all truth, ſavingly and ſpiritually: for this is to be underſtood of their being taught, in the Goſpel of Chriſt, and not in the law, as the Targum paraphraſes it, "all thy children ſhall learn in the law of the Lord." And that this prophecy refers to Goſpel-times, is clear from the citation and application of the firſt verſe of it, to the church in the times of the Apoſtles, Gal. iv. 27. The Jews themſelves acknowledge the prophecy belongs to the times of the Meſſiah, to which they expreſly apply [u] the words in the fifth verſe, thy maker is thy huſband, &c. And one of their modern commentators allows [w], that this very paſſage, all thy children ſhall be taught of God, refers, לעתיד, to the time to come; that is, to the times of the Meſſiah: in this citation, thoſe words, thy children, are left out, to ſhew that the words are not to be reſtrained to the people of the Jews, as they might ſeem by that clauſe, and to whom the Jews would limit them: for ſo they ſay [x], "they are truly taught of God from whom prophecy comes, which does not to all the world, but to Iſrael only, of whom it is written, and all thy children are taught of God." But our Lord, by theſe words, inſtructs us, and would have us obſerve, that all that the Father hath given him, whether Jews or Gentiles, of whom he had been ſpeaking in the preceding verſes, ſhould be taught of God; and ſo taught, as to be drawn and brought to him, and believe in him, and have everlaſting life: wherefore he infers from hence, that every man, whether a Jew or a Gentile, that is taught of God, will come to him in a ſpiritual way, and truſt in him for eternal life and happineſs, as follows: every man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me; every one that has heard the voice of the Father's love, grace, and mercy in the Goſpel, and has learned of him the way of peace, life, and ſalvation by Chriſt, under the influence of his grace, comes unto Chriſt; being encouraged by the declarations and promiſes of grace he has heard and learned, and ventures his ſoul on Chriſt, and commits it to him; truſting and relying on his perſon, blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, for juſtification, pardon, atonement, acceptance with God, and eternal life.

Ver. 46. Not that any man hath ſeen the Father, &c.] This is ſaid, leſt it ſhould be thought from the above words, that our Lord meant that men ſhould be ſo taught of God, as that they ſhould viſibly ſee the Father, and vocally hear his voice, and be perſonally inſtructed by him; for his voice is not heard, nor his ſhape ſeen; ſee ch. i. 18. and v. 37. ſave he which is of God; who is begotten of him, and of the ſame nature and perfections with him, tho' a diſtinct perſon from him, and who was always with him, and lay in his boſom: he hath ſeen the Father; has perfect knowledge of him, perſonal communion with him; has ſeen the perfections and glory of his perſon, and the thoughts, purpoſes, and counſels of his heart, his whole mind, and will, and all the grace, goodneſs, and mercy which is in him, and has declared it; ſee John i. 18.

Ver. 47. Verily verily I ſay unto you, &c.] This is a certain truth, and to be depended on: he that believeth on me hath everlaſting life; not only he may have it, as in ver. 40. and ſhall have it, but he has it; he has it in Chriſt his head and repreſentative; he has it in the covenant of grace; he has it in faith and hope; he has a right unto it, and a meetneſs for it; he has the earneſt of it, the grace and Spirit of God; and he has the beginning and foretaſtes of it in his ſoul, and ſhall certainly enjoy it.

Ver. 48. I am that bread of life.] See the note on ver. 35.

Ver. 49. Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderneſs, &c.] All the while they were in the wilderneſs, for the ſpace of forty years, till they came to the borders of the land of Canaan; this was their only food on which they lived, during their travels thro' the wilderneſs. It is obſervable, that Chriſt ſays, not our fathers, but your fathers; for tho' Chriſt, as concerning the fleſh, came of theſe fathers, yet in every ſenſe they were rather theirs than his; becauſe regard may be had to ſuch of them more eſpecially who eat the manna as common food, and not as ſpiritual meat, as typical of the Meſſiah, as others did; and whom, theſe their offspring, did very much reſemble. Tho' perhaps the reaſon of the uſe of this phraſe may be, becauſe the Jews themſelves had uſed it in ver. 31. and Chriſt takes it up from them. And are dead. This food, though it ſupported them in life for a while, could not preſerve them from a corporal death, and ſtill leſs from an eternal one; for ſome of them not only died the firſt, but the ſecond death.

Ver. 50. This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, &c.] Namely, that of which he had ſpoken ver. 32, 33, 35, 48. meaning himſelf: that a man may eat thereof, and not die; for this heavenly bread is ſoul-quickening, ſoul-ſtrengthening, and ſoul-ſatiſfying food; nor can there be any want where this is: eating of it is not to be underſtood corporally, as theſe Capernaites took it; nor ſacramentally, as if it was confined to the ordinance of the Lord's ſupper, which was not, as yet, inſtituted; but more largely of eating and feeding upon Chriſt ſpiritually by faith: he is, by the believer, to be fed upon wholly, and only; all of him, and none but him, and that daily; for there is the ſame need of daily bread for our ſouls, as for our bodies; and alſo largely and freely, as ſuch may do; and likewiſe joyfully, with gladneſs and ſingleneſs of heart: ſuch as are Chriſt's beloved, and his friends, may eat; they have liberty, a hearty welcome to eat; and ſo have every one that have a will, an inclination, a deſire to eat, and all overcomers, whom Chriſt makes more than conquerors, Cant. v. 1. Rev. ii. 7, 17. and xxii. 17. which liberty is owing to Chriſt's gracious invitation, and to his, and the Father's free gift; and to the openneſs and eaſe of acceſs of all ſenſible ſinners to him: and the conſequence and effect of ſuch eating is, that it ſecures from dying, not from a corporal death, to which men are appointed, and ſaints themſelves are ſubject; though it is indeed aboliſhed by Chriſt as a penal evil; nor ſhall his people continue under the power of it, but ſhall riſe again to everlaſting life; but then they are, thro' eating this bread, ſecured from a ſpiritual death; for tho' there may be a decline, as to the exerciſe of grace, and a want of livelineſs, and they may fear they are ready to die, and conclude they are free among the dead, and that their ſtrength and hope are periſhed; yet he that lives and believes in Chriſt, the reſurrection, and the life, ſhall never die; and ſuch are alſo ſecure from an eternal death, on them the ſecond death ſhall have no power, nor ſhall they ever be hurt by it.

Ver. 51. I am the living bread which came down from heaven, &c.] This is the ſame with what is ſaid in ver. 33, 35, 48. which is true of Chriſt, as he has life in him; and is the author and giver of life to others; and is of an heavenly original, and came from heaven to give life to men: and ſuch is the virtue of this living and heavenly bread, that if any man eat of this bread he ſhall live for ever; not a natural, but a ſpiritual life; a life of ſanctification, which is begun here, and will be perfected hereafter; and a life of glory, which will never end: and the bread that I will give is my fleſh; or body, as all the Oriental verſions render it. Here our Lord explains more clearly and fully what he means, under the notion of bread; and which ſhows, that by bread he did not deſign merely his doctrine, but his fleſh, his human nature; though not as abſtracted from his deity, but as in union with it: which I will give for the life of the world; and which he did by the offering up of his body, and making his ſoul, or giving himſelf an offering, a propitiatory ſacrifice for ſin; which was done in the moſt free and voluntary manner, in the room and ſtead of his people, to procure eternal life for them, even for the whole world of his elect, whether among Jews or Gentiles; particularly the latter are here meant, in oppoſition to a notion of the Jews, that the world, or the Gentiles, would receive no benefit by the Meſſiah when he came; ſee the note on ch. iii. 16.

Ver. 52. The Jews therefore ſtrove among themſelves, &c.] Fell to cavilling and diſputing one among another; ſome underſtanding Chriſt, and others not; ſome being for him, and vindicated what he ſaid; and others being againſt him, and who were the majority, objected, ſaying, how can this man give us his fleſh to eat? which is to be underſtood, not phyſically, but as morally impoſſible and unlawful; ſince, with the Jews, it was not lawful to eat the fleſh of any creature alive, and much leſs the fleſh of man; for the Jews underſtood Chriſt of a corporal eating of his fleſh, being ſtrangers to a figurative or ſpiritual eating of it by faith, in which ſenſe he meant it.

Ver. 53. Then Jeſus ſaid unto them, &c.] The Jews, who were litigating this point among themſelves: verily verily I ſay unto you; or you may aſſure yourſelves of the truth of what follows, except ye eat the fleſh of the ſon of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you: by the ſon of man, Chriſt means himſelf; under which title he often ſpeaks of himſelf; becauſe it was a title of the Meſſiah under the Old Teſtament; and was expreſſive of the truth of his human nature, tho' as attended with weakneſs and infirmities. The fleſh and blood of Chriſt do not deſign thoſe diſtinct parts of his body; much leſs as ſeparate from each other; nor the whole body of Chriſt, but his whole human nature; or Chriſt, as having united a perfect human nature to him, in order to ſhed his blood for the remiſſion of ſin, and to offer up his ſoul and body a ſacrifice for it: and the eating of theſe is not to be underſtood of a corporal eating of them, as the Capernaites underſtood them; and ſince them the Papiſts, who affirm, that the bread and wine in the Lord's ſupper are tranſubſtantiated into the very body and blood of Chriſt, and ſo eaten: but this is not to be underſtood of eating and drinking in the Lord's ſupper, which, as yet, was not inſtituted; and ſome, without participating of this, have ſpiritual life in them now, and will enjoy eternal life hereafter; and all that partake of that ordinance have not the one, nor ſhall have the other: and beſides, having a principle of ſpiritual life in the ſoul, is previouſly neceſſary to a right eating of the ſupper of the Lord. Theſe words, underſtood in this ſenſe, once introduced infants to the Lord's ſupper; as a miſinterpretation of John iii. 5. brought in the baptiſm of them. But the words deſign a ſpiritual eating of Chriſt by faith. To eat the fleſh, and drink the blood of Chriſt, is to believe that Chriſt is come in the fleſh, and is truly and really man; that his fleſh is given for the life of his people, and his blood is ſhed for their ſins, and this with ſome view and application to themſelves: it is to partake of, and enjoy the ſeveral bleſſings of grace procured by him, ſuch as redemption, pardon, peace, juſtification, &c. and ſuch a feeding upon him as is attended with growth in grace, and in the knowledge of him, and is daily to be repeated, as our corporal food is, otherwiſe perſons have no life in them; without this there is no evidence of life in them; not ſuch live as feed on ſinful pleaſures, or on their own righteouſneſs; only ſuch that believe in Chriſt are living ſouls; and without this there's nothing to ſupport life; every thing elſe that a man eats tends to death; but this is what will maintain and preſerve a ſpiritual life; and without this there is no juſt expectation of eternal life; but where there is this, there is good reaſon to expect it, and ſuch ſhall enjoy it: ſome copies and verſions read, ye ſhall not have life in you; eternal life. Now, tho' the acts of eating and drinking do not give the right to eternal life, but the fleſh, blood, and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which faith lays hold, and feeds upon; yet it is by faith the right is claimed; and between theſe acts of faith, and eternal life, there is an inſeparable connexion.

Ver. 54. Whoſo eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my blood, &c.] Spiritually by faith, as explained in the preceding verſe: hath eternal life; the principle of ſpiritual life, which is evidently implanted in him, as appears from his eating and drinking; and is a durable and laſting principle: grace is an incorruptible ſeed; every part of it is abiding and permanent; and it is itſelf the beginning, pledge, and earneſt of everlaſting life, and is inſeparably connected with it: moreover, ſuch have eternal life itſelf, not only in Chriſt their head, but in themſelves; they have a right unto it, and a meetneſs for it: and may be aſſured of it, as if they were perſonally poſſeſſed of it, from their election to it; the ſecurity of it in Chriſt; from the grace they have received, which is the beginning of glory; and the earneſt of it in themſelves: and I will raiſe him up at the laſt day; to enjoy it in ſoul and body; ſee the notes on ver. 39, 40.

Ver. 55. For my fleſh is meat indeed, &c.] Not in a corporal, but in a ſpiritual ſenſe; and the ſame is ſaid of his blood: and my blood is drink indeed; that is, they are both truly meat and drink, as the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions render it; or are true meat and drink, as the Arabic verſion: in oppoſition to what was typical meat and drink; as the manna in the wilderneſs, the water out of the rock, the fleſh and wine at the paſſover, the meat and drink-offerings under the law, or any other meats and drinks under that diſpenſation; and which, tho' not when Chriſt ſaid theſe words, yet now are aboliſhed, being unprofitable, and not to be fed upon. Moreover, theſe phraſes may denote the reality, ſubſtance, and ſolidity of that ſpiritual food believers have in Chriſt, in oppoſition to the imaginary food of ſenſual ſinners, who feed on aſhes and bread of deceit; and to that of ſelf-righteous perſons, who ſpend their labour and money for, and live upon that which is not bread, even upon their works of righteouſneſs; and to the ſuperficial taſtes of hypocrites and formal profeſſors; and to the charge of enthuſiaſm; and even to the outward elements of bread, and wine, in the Lord's ſupper, ſince inſtituted; and as it may be attended upon by perſons deſtitute of the grace of God. And theſe words may alſo be expreſſive of the virtue, efficacy, and excellency of this food, it being ſoul-quickning, nouriſhing, ſtrengthening, ſatisfying, and delightful food, as well as ſpiritual and ſavory; not to carnal perſons, or outward profeſſors, but to new-born babes, and true believers; and which, by them, may be had, and to the full, and that in due ſeaſon, even every day, and is what will abide for ever.

Ver. 56. He that eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my blood, &c.] In the ſenſe above given; ſee the note on ver. 53. dwelleth in me, and I in him. There is a mutual indwelling of Chriſt, and believers; Chriſt is the habitation, or dwelling-place of his people: there is a ſecret dwelling in Chriſt; ſo the elect of God dwelt in the heart, and in the hands, and arms of Chriſt from everlaſting; and as members in their head in election grace, and repreſentatively in him, as the mediator of the covenant; and they ſecretly and ſafely dwelt in him, when all mankind fell in Adam; and when he was on the croſs, in the grave, and now he is in heaven; all which is owing to his own love, his father's gift, and to ſecret union to him. But there is an open dwelling in him in time, which is here meant: God's elect, as in their nature ſtate, are without Chriſt, and and lie open to the law, and juſtice of God; the ſpirit of God convinces them of this ſtate, and directs them to flee to Chriſt, as a city of refuge; when they find him a ſtrong hold, a place of defence, and a proper dwelling for them, where they reſolve to abide, and do abide; and where they dwell ſafely, peaceably, comfortably, and pleaſantly; and from which dwelling-place they will never be turned out. Likewiſe, the ſaints are the habitation or dwelling-place of Chriſt; he dwells not in their heads and tongues, but in their hearts, and by faith; which is here expreſſed, by eating his fleſh, and drinking his blood; and which, tho' it is not the cauſe of Chriſt's dwelling here, yet is the means or inſtrument by which men receive him into their hearts, and retain him, and have communion with him: for he dwells in believers, not in ſuch ſenſe as he dwells in the world, by his omnipreſence, and power; or in the human nature, by hypoſtatical union to it; but by his ſpirit, and by faith, which is an inſtance of wonderful condeſcending grace, and is owing to union to him, and is expreſſive of communion with him, and is what will continue for ever.

Ver. 57. As the living Father hath ſent me, &c.] Into the world, to be the Saviour of it; not by local motion, but by aſſumption of human nature; and not againſt his will, or as having ſuperiority over him, but by joint conſent and agreement: the firſt perſon in the Godhead is here ſtiled, the living Father; not becauſe he is the Father of ſpirits, of angels, and the ſouls of men; and the Father of all men by creation, and of ſaints by adoption; and the Father, or author of all mercies, ſpiritual and temporal; but becauſe he is the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and this character is peculiar to him: he is indeed the living God, and has life in himſelf, and is the fountain of life to others; but not in diſtinction from, and to the excluſion of the Son, or Spirit; but then none but he is the living Father, who ever did, and ever will, live as the Father of Chriſt: and I live by the Father; which is to be underſtood of Chriſt, not as God, but as mediator, and as man. As mediator he was ſet up by his Father, as the head of life to the elect; and was entruſted by him with a fulneſs of life for them; and was ſent to open the way of life unto them, and beſtow it on them. As man, he had his human life from God, and was preſerved and upheld in it by him; and he laid it down at his command, and at his death committed his ſoul or ſpirit to him; and which was reſtored unto him, and is continued with him. The Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions, read, for the Father, or becauſe of him; and may deſign either that near union and conjunction of Chriſt with him, by virtue of which they live the ſame life; or elſe his living to the glory and honour of his Father, as he did, and does: ſo he that eateth me; in a ſpiritual ſenſe, by faith. The phraſe of eating the Meſſiah was a familiar one, and well known to the Jews; though theſe Capernaites cavilled at it, and called it an hard ſaying. "Says Rab, the Iſraelites ſhall eat the "years of the Meſſiah: (the Gloſs on it is, the "fulneſs which the Iſraelites ſhall have in thoſe "days) ſays R. Joſeph, it is certainly ſo; but who "ſhall eat him? ſhall Chillek and Billek (two judges "in Sodom) אכלי לה, eat him? contrary to the "words of R. Hillell, who ſays, Iſrael ſhall have "no Meſſiah, for, אכלוהו, they eat him in the "days of Hezekiah [y];" that is, they enjoyed him then; for he thought that Hezekiah was the Meſſiah; but that was the doctor's miſtake. The Meſſiah now was, and to be enjoyed and eaten by faith in a ſpiritual ſenſe, and every one that does ſo, even he ſhall live by me: ſuch have their life from Chriſt; he is their food, on which they lived; and by him they are continued, upheld, and preſerved in their ſpiritual life, and are by him brought to the life of glory: or they live for, or becauſe of him, as the above verſions render it; they derive their life from him, and becauſe he lives, they live alſo; and they live to his glory, and will do ſo to all eternity.

Ver. 58. This is that bread which came down from heaven, &c.] That true bread, the bread of God, the bread of life, living bread; meaning himſelf, as in ver. 32, 33, 35, 48, 50, 51. not as your Fathers did eat manna, and are dead: this is bread of a quite different nature from that; that was only typical bread, this true; that was the bread of angels, but this is the bread of God; that came but from the air, this from the third heaven; that men eat of, and died; but whoever eats of this, lives for ever; ſee ver. 49. as follows: he that eateth of this bread ſhall live for ever; ſee the note on ver. 51.

Ver. 59. Theſe things ſaid he in the ſynagogue, &c.] Openly and publickly, in the place of divine worſhip, where the Jews reſorted for that purpoſe: as he taught in Capernaum; his own city, and where there was a ſynagogue, into which he often went and taught his doctrines, and wrought miracles; ſee Matt. iii. 13. and viii. 5, 14. and ix. 1, 2. and xii. 9.

Ver. 60. Many therefore of his diſciples, &c.] Not of the twelve, nor of the ſeventy, but of the multitude of the diſciples, who followed him from place to place, attended on his miniſtry, and might be baptized in his name; ſee John iv. 1. when they had heard this; that his fleſh and blood were truly and really meat and drink, and that none had life in them, or ſhould have eternal life, but ſuch as eat and drink the ſame: ſaid, this is an hard ſaying; or it is to be objected to; ſo קשיא, an hard thing, the word here uſed in the Syriac verſion, and קשה הוא עלי, it is to me a hard thing, are phraſes uſed to expreſs an objection in the Talmudic writings, where they are often met with: or it is difficult to be underſtood and received; ſo הדבר הקשה, an hard ſaying, or an hard cauſe, is a cauſe difficult to be tried and determined, Exod. xviii. 26. and is uſed of that which ſeems incredible and abſurd, and is ſurprizing and unaccountable: ſo it is ſaid [z], that "it happened to a certain woman, that "ſhe came before R. Akiba; ſhe ſaid to him, I "have ſeen a ſpot; he ſaid to her, perhaps there "is a wound in thee; ſhe anſwered him, yes, and "it is healed; he replied, perhaps it may be "opened, and the blood brought out; ſhe an"ſwered him, yes; and he pronounced her clean. "R. Akiba ſaw his diſciples look upon one an"other; and he ſaid unto them, מה הדבר קשה, "is this an hard ſaying with you?" is it a difficult thing with you? does it ſeem abſurd to you? or are you ſurprized at it? any thing difficult, or which ſeems irreconcilable, is ſo called: ſo the ſlaying the paſſover between the two evenings is called by Aben Ezra, in Exod. xii. 6. מלה קשה, an hard ſaying. In like ſenſe the phraſe is uſed here; and the alluſion may be to food that is hard of digeſtion, ſince Chriſt had been ſpeaking of himſelf under the metaphors of bread and meat. As ſome of the doctrines of Chriſt are comparable to milk, which is eaſy of digeſtion; others are like to ſtrong meat, which belongs to thoſe of full age, and cannot be digeſted by children, by babes in Chriſt, and much leſs be received, eat, and digeſted, with eaſe and pleaſure, by carnal minds; who therefore ſay, as theſe Capernaites did, who can hear it? this ſaying, or doctrine, concerning eating the fleſh, and drinking the blood of Chriſt; or him Chriſt, who delivered this doctrine: ſuch preaching, and ſuch a preacher, are intolerable; there's no hearing, nor bearing them: hence we afterwards read, that theſe withdrew from the miniſtry of Chriſt, ver. 66.

[y] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 98. 2. & 99. 1.

[z] Miſn. Nidda, c. 8. §. 3.

Ver. 61. When Jeſus knew in himſelf, &c.] And of himſelf, without any intelligence from others, or hearing what was ſaid, being the omniſcient God: that his diſciples murmured at it; at the doctrine he had delivered, looking upon it as abſurd, incredible, and contrary to ſenſe and reaſon: he ſaid unto them, does this offend you? or trouble you? can't you get over this? can't you underſtand it? or account for it? if not, how will you be able to digeſt ſome other things, or reconcile them to your minds, which are leſs known, and more unexpected, and will appear at firſt ſight more ſurprizing?

Ver. 62. What and if ye ſhall ſee the ſon of man, &c.] Meaning himſelf then in a ſtate of humiliation, and was taken for a mere man, tho' the true Meſſiah, and Son of God: aſcend up where he was before? for Chriſt was, he exiſted before his incarnation, and he was in heaven before; not in his human nature, but as the Word and Son of God: and he intimates, that when he had done his work, and the will of his Father, for which he came down from heaven, by the aſſumption of the human nature, he ſhould aſcend up thither again; and which would be ſeen, as it was, by his Apoſtles; and which would prove that he came down from heaven, as he had aſſerted; ſee Eph. iv. 9, 10. and that his fleſh and blood were not to be eaten in a corporal ſenſe; in which ſenſe they underſtood him: and he hereby ſuggeſts, that if it was difficult to receive, and hard to be underſtood, and was ſurprizing and incredible, that he ſhould come down from heaven, as bread, to be eat and fed upon; it would be much more ſo to them to be told, that he who was in ſo mean and lowly a form, ſhould aſcend up into heaven.

Ver. 63. It is the Spirit that quickeneth, &c.] It is the ſpirit of man that quickens him; or which being breathed into him, he becomes a living ſoul; for the body, without the ſpirit, is dead; it is a lifeleſs lump: and it is the Spirit of God that quickens dead ſinners, by entering into them as the Spirit of life, and cauſing them to live: and it is ſpiritual eating, or eating the fleſh, and drinking the blood of Chriſt in a ſpiritual ſenſe, which quickens, refreſhes, and comforts the minds of believers; 'tis that by, and on which they live, and by which their ſpiritual ſtrength is renewed: unleſs, by Spirit, is meant the divine nature of Chriſt, by which he was quickened and raiſed from the dead, and aſcended up into heaven, and was declared to be the Son of God with power: the fleſh profiteth nothing; the human nature of Chriſt, tho' profitable, as in union with the Son of God, to be given for the life of his people, and to be an offering, and a ſacrifice for their ſins, yet not as alone, or as abſtracted from the divine nature; nor would his fleſh and blood, corporally eaten, could, or ſhould it be done, be of any avail to eternal life; nor is any other fleſh literally underſtood, profitable of itſelf for life; for man lives not by bread, or meat, or fleſh alone, but by the word and bleſſing of God upon it, and along with it; nor fleſh, in a figurative ſenſe, as creature acts and performances, ſelf-righteouſneſs, obedience to the ceremonial law, carnal deſcent, and birth privileges: the words that I ſpeak unto you, they are ſpirit, and they are life; the doctrines which Chriſt had then been delivering concerning himſelf, his fleſh and blood, being ſpiritually underſtood, are the means of quickening ſouls. The Goſpel, and the truths of it, which are the wholeſome words of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, are the means of conveying the Spirit of God, as a Spirit of illumination and ſanctification, into the hearts of men, and of quickening ſinners dead in treſpaſſes and ſins: the Goſpel is the Spirit that giveth life, and is the ſavour of life unto life, when it comes not in word only, or in the bare miniſtry of it, but with the energy of the Holy Ghoſt, and the power of divine grace.

Ver. 64. But there are ſome of you that believe not, &c.] Notwithſtanding the miniſtry they ſat under, and the words they heard; for tho' they profeſſed to believe in Jeſus, as the Meſſiah, yet they did not truly believe in him; their faith was not a living faith, or of a ſpiritual kind, but a mere hiſtorical and temporary one, and was feigned and hypocritical: for Jeſus knew from the beginning; of his miniſtry, and of their profeſſion of him, being God omniſcient, and the ſearcher of hearts: who they were that believed not; i. e. in him, as the Arabic verſion reads: notwithſtanding their following him, and profeſſing to believe in him, and the great outward reſpect and eſteem they ſhewed to him, he could ſee thro' all thoſe maſks they put on, and knew they had no true faith of him in them; and the ſame knowledge he has of every profeſſor of his name: he knows whether their faith is of the right kind or no; whether they have obtained the like precious faith with God's elect; or whether their profeſſion is only a verbal one. In ſome copies it is read, who they were that believed; who were true believers, as well as who were hypocrites. And who ſhould betray him: he not only knew how it was with the multitude of the diſciples that profeſſed love to him, and faith in him; but he alſo particularly knew the caſe of the twelve Apoſtles, and that one of them ſhould betray him, and who he was. This was determined in the decrees of God, and was foretold in the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, and was predicted by Chriſt; and the perſon was pointed at by him before it was done.

Ver. 65. And he ſaid, therefore ſaid I unto you, &c.] Referring to ver. 44. where the ſubſtance of what is here ſaid, is there delivered; though the Ethiopic verſion reads, therefore I ſay unto you, what follows: that no man can come to me, except it be given him of my Father; which is the ſame, as to be drawn by the Father; for faith in Chriſt is the gift of God, and coming to him, is owing to efficacious grace, and is not the produce of man's power and free-will; ſee the note on ver. 44.

Ver. 66. From that time many of his diſciples went back, &c.] Not any of the twelve apoſtles, for they are diſtinguiſhed from theſe in the next verſe; nor any of the ſeventy diſciples, for their names were written in heaven, and could not apoſtatize totally and finally, as theſe did; but ſome of the multitude of the diſciples, who followed Chriſt, heard him, and profeſſed to believe in him, and were baptized in his name, but were not true diſciples, only nominal ones: they had never heard and learned of the Father, otherwiſe they would have known what it was to come to Chriſt, as the Father's gift, and under the drawings of his grace; and would not have been offended at the words of our Lord, juſt now ſpoken by him, concerning that ſort of coming to him: but from the time he ſpoke thoſe words; becauſe of this word, as the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions render it; they withdrew themſelves from his miniſtry, they dropped their profeſſion of faith in him, and relinquiſhed him as a ſaviour and redeemer: for finding that he would not be made king, nor ſet up for a temporal redeemer; and talking of himſelf as the bread of life, and of coming to him, in a ſenſe they did not underſtand; they turned their backs on him; and as the words may be literally read, returned to the things that were behind; to the world, and to their old companions, to ſatan and their own hearts luſts; like the dog to its vomit, and the ſwine to its wallowing in the mire: their true picture is drawn, in the parable of the unclean ſpirit going out of the man, and returning, Matt. xii. 43. And they returned to their quondam teachers, the Scribes and Phariſees, and to the law of works, and to ſeek for righteouſneſs by it; ſetting up their own righteouſneſs, and not ſubmitting to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; and thus to look back and draw back, is a ſad caſe indeed: and walked no more with him; never returned to him more, or went with him from place to place as before; never more attended on his miniſtry, or had any intimacy and fellowſhip with him: and ſo it commonly is with apoſtates from the profeſſion of Chriſt; they ſeldom or ever return, or are recovered; it is difficult, if not impoſſible, which is ſometimes the caſe, to renew them again to repentance.

Ver. 67. Then ſaid Jeſus unto the twelve, &c.] To his own twelve, as the Perſic verſion reads; that is, to his twelve apoſtles, whom he had choſen to that office; Chriſt takes no notice of thoſe that went away from him, he ſhewed no concern about them; he knew what they were, that the truth of grace was not in them, and that they did not belong to him, and therefore was not uneaſy about their departure; but turns himſelf to his apoſtles, whom he dearly loved, and in a very tender manner thus ſaid to them, will ye alſo go away? this he ſaid, not as ignorant of what they were, or of what they would do in this caſe; he knew full well their faith in him, their love to him, and eſteem of him, and cloſe attachment to him, at leaſt in eleven of them; nor did he ſay this, as having any fears or jealouſies concerning them, by obſerving any thing in their countenances or geſtures, which looked like a departure from him; but it was ſaid out of a tender regard and ſtrong affection for them: and 'tis as if he ſhould have ſaid, as for theſe men that have walked with me for ſome time, and have now turned their backs upon me, it gives me no concern; but ſhould you, my dear friends and companions, go alſo, it would give me, as man, real pain and great uneaſineſs; or he might ſay this to ſhew, that as they were not preſſed into his ſervice, but willingly followed him, and became his diſciples, being made a willing people by him, in the day of his power on them; ſo they willingly continued with him, and abode by him; as alſo to ſtrengthen their faith in him, and cauſe them the more to cleave to him, with full purpoſe of heart, when others left him; as well as to draw out from them, expreſſions of their regard for him, and faith in him, which end was anſwered.

Ver. 68. Then Simon Peter anſwered him, &c.] Who was ſtrong in the faith of Chriſt, and full of zeal for him, and love to him; and who was the mouth of the apoſtles, and always forward to ſpeak out of the abundance and ſincerity of his heart, in their name; believing, that they all of them, for he had now no ſuſpicion of Judas, no more than of the reſt, had the ſame faith in Chriſt, love to him, and eſteem of him, as he himſelf had; wherefore out of a good opinion of them, and love to Chriſt, he thus addreſſed him: Lord; or my Lord, as the Syriac verſion renders it; which was either a title of reſpect, and the ſame with Sir with us; or elſe, as acknowledging the dominion and authority of Chriſt, as Lord of all, and eſpecially of the ſaints, and as claiming his intereſt in him; and which carries in it a reaſon, why he ſhould abide by him; to whom ſhall we go? as a teacher, whoſe miniſtry we can attend upon, to greater profit and advantage? not to the Scribes and Phariſees, whoſe leaven, or doctrine, Chriſt had bid them beware of; who taught for doctrines, the commandments of men, and were blind leaders of the blind; nor to John the Baptiſt, who had declared he was not the Meſſiah; but had pointed him out to them in his perſon, as the Son of God; and in his office as the Lamb of God, that takes away the ſins of men; and perhaps, he might not be now living; and if he was, he would have encouraged them not to follow him, but abide with their maſter; ſo that there was no other, that was better, as Nonnus expreſſes it, that they could go unto; and therefore it would be folly and madneſs in them, to leave him: and as it was with Peter and the reſt of the diſciples, ſo it is with all ſenſible ſinners, and true believers, who ſee there is no other to go to for life and ſalvation, but Chriſt; not to the law of Moſes, which accuſes, curſes, and condemns, and by which, there is neither life nor righteouſneſs; nor to any creature, or creature performance; for there is a curſe on him that truſts in man, and makes fleſh his arm; nor to their own righteouſneſs, which is impure and imperfect, and cannot juſtify before God, nor anſwer for them in a time to come; nor to their tears of repentance, which will not ſatisfy the law, atone for ſins, or waſh them away; nor to carnal deſcent, birth-privileges, a religious education, ſobriety, and civility, to truſt to which, is to have confidence in the fleſh, which will be of no avail; nor to ceremonial ſervices, or moral duties, or even evangelical ordinances, neither of which can take away ſin. There is no other Saviour, but Chriſt, to look to; no other Mediator between God and man, to make uſe of; no other phyſician of value, for diſeaſed and ſin-ſick ſouls to apply unto; no other fountain but his blood, for polluted ſouls to waſh in, and be cleanſed; no other city of refuge, or ſtrong-hold, for ſouls ſenſible of danger, to flee unto and be ſafe; no other to come to as the bread of life, where hungry ſouls may be fed; no other place of reſt, for thoſe that are weary and heavy laden; nor is there any other, where there is plenty of all grace, and ſecurity from every enemy, as in him: and therefore, to whom can they have recourſe, but unto him? and that for the following reaſon, thou haſt the words of eternal life: meaning, either the promiſes of eternal life, which were made before the world began, and were put into Chriſt's hands, for his people, and are yea and amen in him; or the doctrines of eternal life; for ſo the Goſpel, and the truths of it, are called, Acts v. 20. and that becauſe the Goſpel brings life and immortality to light, gives an account of eternal life; of the nature of it, that it is a glorious life, a life free from all the ſorrows of the preſent one; a life of pleaſure, and of perfect knowledge and holineſs, and which will laſt for ever: and becauſe it points out the way to it, that it is not by the works of the law, but by the grace of God; that it is his free-gift, through Chriſt; and that Chriſt is the way, the truth, and the life, or the true way to eternal life: and becauſe it is a means of quickening dead ſinners, and of reviving true believers, and of nouriſhing them up unto everlaſting life: or this phraſe may deſign the power and authority which Chriſt has, to diſpoſe of, and diſpenſe eternal life; for he has the thing itſelf in his hands, and a power to give it to as many as the Father has given him; and to them he does give it: and each of theſe ſenſes carry in them a reaſon, why ſouls ſhould go to Chriſt, and to him only, for life and ſalvation.

Ver. 69. And we believe and are ſure, &c.] Or know of a certainty: they believed upon the firſt call of them by Chriſt, and their following of him, that he was the true Meſſiah; and they came to an aſſurance of it, by the miracles he wrought, and by the doctrines which he taught; their faith, how weak ſoever it might be at firſt, roſe up to a full aſſurance of faith, and of underſtanding; there was a reality and a certainty in it, as there is in all true faith, with reſpect to the object, though not always with reſpect to intereſt in it; which former was the caſe here, as appears by what follows: that thou art that Chriſt; or Meſſiah, that was promiſed by God of old, ſpoken of by the prophets, and expected by the Jews; that anointed prophet Moſes had ſpoken of, that ſhould ariſe out of Iſrael, like unto him; that anointed prieſt, who, according to the oath of God, was to be a prieſt for ever, after the order of Melchizedeck; and that anointed king, whom God has ſet over his holy hill of Zion: the Son of the living God; this they knew, and were ſure of, both by John's teſtimony, and by the Father's voice from heaven; which three of them heard, at Chriſt's transfiguration on the mount: God the Father is called the living God, though the Vulgate Latin verſion leaves out the word living; not to diſtinguiſh him from his Son; for he alſo is the living God; and is ſo called, Heb. iii. 12. but to diſtinguiſh him from the idols of the Gentiles, who have no life nor breath in them: and Chriſt is called the Son of the living God, as he is a divine perſon, as he is truly God; and to ſhow that he has the ſame life his Father has; being a partaker of the ſame nature, and divine perfections: and this is another reaſon, why ſenſible ſouls will go to Chriſt, and no other; becauſe he is the Meſſiah, the Saviour, and Redeemer, and an able one; and becauſe he is God, and there is none elſe.

Ver. 70. Jeſus anſwered them, &c.] The diſciples, taking Peter's anſwer to his queſtion, as delivered in the name of them all, and as expreſſing their mind and ſenſe: have not I choſen you twelve; not to grace and glory, to holineſs and happineſs; though this was true of eleven of them, but to be apoſtles: and one of you is a devil? or like to one, is a deceiver, a liar, and a murderer, as the devil is from the beginning; all which Judas was, and appeared to be, in the betraying of his maſter. The Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read, is ſatan; which name, if given to Peter, as it once was on a certain occaſion, Matt. xvi. 23. might very well be given to Judas; who, notwithſtanding his profeſſion of faith in Chriſt, was in the hands and kingdom of ſatan, and under his influence and power: and this our Lord ſaid, partly that they might not too much preſume upon their faith and love, and ſteady attachment, and be over confident of their ſtanding; and partly, to prepare them for the apoſtacy of one from among them.

Ver. 71. He ſpake of Judas Iſcariot, the ſon of Simon, &c.] Theſe are the words of the Evangeliſt, pointing out the perſon Chriſt intended, leſt any other ſhould be ſuſpected: for he it was that ſhould betray him; as it was determined and foretold, and which Chriſt knew full well, and therefore ſaid the above words: being one of the twelve; apoſtles, whom Chriſt had choſen, and which was an aggravation of his crime.

CHAP. VII.

Ver. 1. AFTER theſe things Jeſus walked in Galilee, &c.] That is, after he had fed the five thouſand with five loaves and two fiſhes, near Bethſaida; and had had that long diſcourſe with the Jews at Capernaum, concerning himſelf, as the bread of life, and about eating his fleſh, and drinking his blood; and had been up to the feaſt of the paſſover at Jeruſalem, ſaid to be nigh, when he went over the ſea of Galilee, ch. vi. 4. otherwiſe the above places were in Galilee: but the caſe ſeems to be this, that after he had been at Capernaum, he went to Jeruſalem, to keep the paſſover; and finding that the Jews ſtill ſought to take away his life, he returned to Galilee, and walked there; he did not ſit ſtill, or lie at home, and live an inactive indolent life, but went about from place to place, preaching the Goſpel, and healing diſeaſes; he walked, and walked about; but not as the enemy of ſouls, ſeeking to do all miſchief, but to do all good, to the bodies and ſouls of men: for he would not walk in Jewry; in the land of Judea, where he had been, and tarried, and made diſciples; but being rejected and ill-treated, he left them; which was a prelude of the Goſpel being taken from them, and carried to another people; which afterwards took place, in the times of the apoſtles: his reaſon for it was, becauſe the Jews ſought to kill him; for healing a man on the ſabbath-day, and for aſſerting his equality with God: not that he was afraid to die, but his time was not come; and he had work to do for the glory of God, and the good of men; and therefore it was both juſt and prudent, to withdraw and preſerve his life; for like reaſons he adviſed his diſciples, when perſecuted in one city, to flee to another: and very lawful and adviſeable it is for good men, when their lives are in danger, to make uſe of proper means to preſerve them, for further uſefulneſs in the cauſe of God, and for the benefit of men.

Ver. 2. Now the Jews feaſt of tabernacles was at hand.] Which began on the fifteenth day of the month Tiſri, which anſwers to part of our September; when the Jews erected tents or booths, in which they dwelt, and eat their meals during this feſtival; and which was done, in commemoration of the Iſraelites dwelling in booths in the wilderneſs; and was typical of Chriſt's tabernacling in human nature; and an emblem of the ſaints dwelling in the earthly houſes and tabernacles of their bodies, in this their wilderneſs and pilgrimage ſtate. Some aſſign other reaſons of this feaſt, as that it was appointed in commemoration of the divine command, for building the tabernacle; and others, that it was inſtituted in memory of the protection of the people of Iſrael under the cloud, as they travelled through the wilderneſs; by which they were preſerved, as in a tent or booth; and to this inclines the Targum of Onkelos, on Levit. xxiii. 43. which paraphraſes the words thus, That your generations may know, that in the ſhadow of the clouds, I cauſed the children of Iſrael to dwell, when I brought them out of the land of Egypt: and one of the Jewiſh commentators[a] ſuggeſts, that the reaſon why the firſt place the Iſraelites pitched at, when they came out of Egypt, was called Succoth, which ſignifies tents, or tabernacles, is, becauſe there they were covered with the clouds of glory: but the true reaſon of this feaſt is, that which is firſt given, as is clear from Levit. xxiii. 43. and becauſe they were obliged to dwell in tents, as ſoon as they came out of Egypt, therefore the firſt place they encamped at, was called Succoth, or tabernacles, Exod. xii. 37. Numb. xxxiii. 5. This feaſt was not kept at the time of year the people came out of Egypt; for that was at the time of the paſſover; but was put off, as it ſeems, to a colder ſeaſon of the year; and which was not ſo convenient for dwelling in booths; leſt it ſhould be thought they obſerved this feaſt for the ſake of pleaſure and recreation, under the ſhade of theſe bowers; which, as appears from Neh. viii. 15, 16. were made of olive, pine, myrtle, and palm-branches, and branches of thick trees; and were fixed, ſome on the roofs of their houſes, others in their courts, and in the courts of the houſe of God; and others in the ſtreets: an account of the ſacrifices offered at this feaſt, is given in Numb. xxix. 13—38. in which may be obſerved, that on the firſt day thirteen young bullocks were offered; on the ſecond, twelve; on the third, eleven; on the fourth, ten; on the fifth, nine; on the ſixth, eight; and on the ſeventh, ſeven; and on the eighth, but one. The Jews, in their Miſna, have a treatiſe called Succa, or the Tabernacle, in which they treat of this feaſt; and which contains various traditions, concerning their booths, their manner of living in them, and other rites and uſages obſerved by them, during this feſtival: they are very particular about the meaſure and form, and covering of their booths; a booth might not be higher than twenty cubits, nor lower than ten hands breadth; and its breadth, might not be leſs than ſeven hands breadth by ſeven; but it might be carried out as wide as they pleaſed[b], provided it had three ſides: they might not cover their booths with any thing, but what grew out of the earth, or was rooted up from thence; nor with any thing that received uncleanneſs, or was of an ill ſmell, or any thing that was fallen and faded[c]: into theſe booths they brought their beſt goods, their beſt bedding, and all their drinking veſſels, &c. and left their houſes empty; for here was their fixed dwelling; they only occaſionally went into their houſes[d]; for here they were obliged to dwell day and night, and eat all their meals, during the ſeven days of the feaſt; and however, it was reckoned praiſe-worthy, and he was accounted the moſt religious, who eat nothing out of his booth[e]: they were indeed excuſed when it was rainy weather, but as ſoon as the rain was over, they were obliged to return again[f]: and beſides, their dwelling and ſleeping, and eating and drinking in their booths, there were various other rites which were performed by them; as particularly, the carrying of palm-tree branches in their hands, or what they call the Lulab; which was made up of branches of palm-tree, myrtle, and willow, bound up together in a bundle, which was carried in the right-hand, and a pomecitron in the left; and as they carried them, they waved them three times towards the ſeveral quarters of the world; and every day they went about the altar once, with theſe in their hands, ſaying the words in Pſal. cxviii. 25. Save now I beſeech thee, O Lord, O Lord I beſeech thee, ſend now proſperity: and on the ſeventh day, they went about the altar ſeven times[g]: alſo there were great illuminations in the temple; at the going out of the firſt day of the feaſt, they went down to the court of the women; they made a great preparation, (i. e. as Bartenora explains it, they ſet benches round it, and ſet the women above, and the men below;) and there were golden candleſticks there, and at the head of them four golden baſons, and four ladders to every candleſtick; and four young prieſts had four pitchers of oil, that held a hundred and twenty logs, which they put into each baſon; and of the old breeches and girdles of the prieſts, they made wicks, and with them lighted them; and there was not a court in Jeruſalem, which was not lighted with that light; and religious men, and men of good works, danced before them, with lighted torches in their hands, ſinging ſongs and hymns of praiſe[h]; and this continued the ſix nights following[i]: there was alſo on every one of theſe days, another cuſtom obſerved; which was that of fetching water from the pool of Siloah, and pouring it with wine upon the altar, which was attended with great rejoicing; of which, ſee the note on ver. 37. of this chapter: to which may be added, the muſic that was uſed during the performance of theſe rites; at the illumination in the court of the women, there were harps, pſalteries, cymbals, and other inſtruments of muſic, playing all the while; and two prieſts with trumpets, who ſounded, when they had the ſignal; and on every day, as they brought water from Siloah to the altar, they ſounded with trumpets, and ſhouted; the great Hallel, or hymn, was ſung all the eight days, and the pipe was blown, ſometimes five days, and ſometimes ſix[k]; and even on all the eight days; and the whole was a feaſt of rejoicing, according to Levit. xxiii. 40.

Ver. 3. His brethren therefore ſaid unto him, &c.] That is, the brethren of Jeſus, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions expreſs it; who were not James and Joſes, and Simon and Judas, the ſons of Alpheus, the brother of Joſeph, the huſband of Mary, ſo called, Matt. xiii. 55. for ſome of theſe were of the number of the twelve; and all of them believers in Chriſt; whereas theſe his brethren were not. The Jew[l] therefore is miſtaken, who ſuppoſed the above perſons are here intended; and objects this their unbelief to Jeſus, as if they knew him too well, to give him any credit; whereas they did believe in him, and abode by him to the laſt; and ſome of them, if not all, ſuffered death for his ſake. They therefore are to be underſtood of ſome diſtant relations of Mary or Joſeph, that dwelt at Nazareth, or Capernaum, or in ſome of thoſe parts; and the feaſt of tabernacles being at hand, they put him upon going up to it, being willing to be rid of him: ſaying, depart hence; which is the language of carnal men, who deſire not the company of Chriſt, nor the knowledge of his ways; and like the Gergeſenes, who preferred their ſwine to Chriſt, and deſired him to depart out of their coaſts: and go into Judea; among his moſt inveterate enemies, who ſought to take away his life; and which doubtleſs they knew; which ſhowed a quite different regard to him, from that of his true diſciples, ch. xi. 7, 8. for which they give ſome plauſible reaſons: that thy diſciples alſo may ſee the works that thou doeſt; meaning not his twelve diſciples, who were now with him, but the diſciples he had made, and baptized in Judea, ch. iv. 1, 2. Or his diſciples in the ſeveral parts of the land, who would all be at Jeruſalem, at the feaſt of tabernacles; and ſo ſhould he go, would have an opportunity of ſeeing his miracles, and thereby be the more confirmed in the faith of him.

Ver. 4. For there is no man that doeth any thing in ſecret, &c.] For ſo they reckoned his doing miracles in ſuch a corner of the land, and in ſo obſcure a place as Galilee: and he himſelf ſeeketh to be known openly; ſuggeſting hereby, that Chriſt was an ambitious perſon, and ſought popular applauſe, and honour and glory from men; when nothing was more foreign from him; ſee ch. v. 41. and viii. 50. If thou do theſe things; for they queſtion whether the miracles he wrought were real; and ſuſpected, that they were deceptions of the ſight, and deluſions; or at leaſt they queſtioned their being done by him; and rather thought that they were done by diabolical influence, by Beelzebub the prince of devils: but if they were real ones, they adviſe him, ſaying, ſhew thyſelf to the world; or do theſe openly, and in the preſence of the great men of the world; the princes of it, the rulers of the people, the chief prieſts and Sanhedrim; and before all the males of Iſrael; who at this feaſt would come up from all parts of the land, and are for their multitude called the world: the reaſon of this their advice was, that if his miracles were real, and he was the perſon he would be thought to be, the doing of them before ſuch, would gain him great credit and eſteem; and if not, he might be detected by ſuch numbers, and by men of ſuch penetration as were among them.

Ver. 5. For neither did his brethren believe in him.] At firſt they might take to him, and embrace him as the Meſſiah, and expect he would ſet up a temporal kingdom; in which they might hope, on account of their relation to him, according to the fleſh, to enjoy great honours and privileges; but finding that he was not inclined to any thing of that nature, and talked in a quite different way, they grew ſick of him, and rejected him, as the Meſſiah: ſo, little regard is to be had, or confidence placed, in carnal deſcent from, or alliance to the beſt of men; as to Abraham, or any other true believer, if they have not the ſame grace, or the ſame faith as ſuch have; and which comes not by blood, or natural generation, but by the free favour of God; for it matters not, if men have known Chriſt, or have been allied to him after the fleſh, unleſs they are new creatures in him; they may be the one, and not the other; even the carnal brethren of Chriſt, and yet not believers in him; and 'tis only ſuch who are ſo in a ſpiritual ſenſe, that are regarded by him, Matt. xii. 49, 50.

Ver. 6. Then Jeſus ſaid unto them, &c.] In anſwer to their ſolicitations and arguments uſed with him, to go up to the feaſt: my time is not yet come; meaning, not the time of his death, or of his exaltation and glorification, or of the ſhewing of himſelf forth unto the world; though all this was true; but of his going up to this feaſt; as appears from ver. 8. but your time is always ready; intimating, they might go at any time; their lives were not in any danger, as his was, and had nothing to conſult about the preſervation of them; it was all one to them when they went up, whether before the feaſt, that they might be ready for it, or at the beginning, middle, or end of it, as to any notice that would be taken of them, unleſs they ſhould be guilty of an omiſſion of their duty; but not on any other account; which was not his caſe.

Ver. 7. The world cannot hate you, &c.] Becauſe they were of the world, belonged to it; they were like unto it, and every like loves its like; and they were the world's own, and therefore inſtead of being hated, were loved by it; and they walked according to the courſe of it; and wicked men not only take pleaſure in ſin, but in them that do it: but me it hateth; though without a cauſe; that is, without a juſt cauſe, or reaſon; a cauſe there was, and it follows: becauſe I teſtify of it, that the works thereof are evil; even thoſe works of it, which were reckoned good works; Chriſt bore his teſtimony of theſe, that they were evil; being done either not according to the command of God, but the traditions of the elders; or not from a right principle, as of faith and love; nor to a right end, as the glory of God; but only to be ſeen of men: and very ſeverely did he inveigh againſt the pride, covetouſneſs, hypocriſy, and uncleanneſs of the Scribes and Phariſees; and ſo he continued to do, and this drew upon him their hatred and ill-will.

Ver. 8. Go ye up unto this feaſt, &c.] Suggeſting, that he would not have them ſtay for him, or hinder themſelves on his account: he encourages them to go up, and obſerve this feſtival; for the ceremonial law was not yet aboliſhed; and though they were carnal men, and did not underſtand what it typified: and ſo unregenerate perſons ought to attend on the outward means, as the hearing of the word, &c. though they do not underſtand it; it may be God may make uſe of it, for the enlightning of their minds; and bleſſed are they that wait at wiſdom's gates, and there find Chriſt, and life and ſalvation by him: I go not up yet unto this feaſt; this clauſe, in one of Beza's copies, is wholly left out; and in ſome, the word this is not read; and in others it is read, I go not up unto this feaſt, leaving out the word yet; and ſo read the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions; and the Perſic verſion only, I do not go up; which occaſioned Porphyry, that great enemy of Chriſtianity, to reproach Chriſt, as guilty of inconſtancy, or of an untruth, ſince he afterwards did go up: but in almoſt all the ancient copies the word is read; and ſo it is by Chryſoſtom and Nonnus; and to the ſame ſenſe the Syriac and Arabic verſions render it, I do not go up now to this feaſt; that is, juſt at that very time, that very day or hour: which is entirely conſiſtent with what is afterwards ſaid, for my time is not yet full come; not to die, or to be glorified, but to go up to the feaſt.

Ver. 9. When he had ſaid theſe words unto them, &c.] Had exhorted them to go up to the feaſt, and told them that he ſhould not go yet, and the reaſon of it: he abode ſtill in Galilee; and went not up with his brethren, nor at all at preſent; ſhowing hereby a firmneſs and reſolution of mind, not uſing lightneſs of ſpeech; and his words being not yea and nay, but all of a-piece, and by which he abode.

Ver. 10. But when his brethren were gone up, &c.] To the feaſt, as all the Oriental verſions read, from the next clauſe: then went he alſo up unto the feaſt; the Ethiopic verſion reads, he went up that day; which is very likely, and no ways contrary to what is ſaid, in ver. 14. for though he did not go up to the temple to teach, till the middle of the feaſt, he might be up at the feaſt ſooner: and according to the law, it was neceſſary that he ſhould be there on the firſt and ſecond days, and keep the Chagigah, and make his appearance in the court; though there was a proviſion made for ſuch that failed, the canon runs thus [m]; "he that "does not make his feſtival ſacrifice, on the firſt "good day of the feaſt, may make it throughout "the whole feaſt, and on the laſt good day of the "feaſt; and if the feaſt paſſes, and he has not "made the feſtival ſacrifice, he is not obliged to a "compenſation; and of this it is ſaid, Eccl. i. 15. "That which is crooked cannot be made ſtraight, "&c." But however, whatever day he went on, he went up not openly, but as it were in ſecret: as he was made under the law, and came to fulfil all righteouſneſs, it was neceſſary that he ſhould obſerve every precept, and fulfil the whole law; and therefore he went up to this feaſt; yet in the moſt private manner, that he might eſcape thoſe who would lie in wait for him, and ſought to kill him: and this he did, not through fear of death, but becauſe his hour was not yet come; this was not the feaſt he was to ſuffer at, but the paſſover following; which when near at hand, he went up to it, and entered Jeruſalem in the moſt publick manner.

Ver. 11. Then the Jews ſought him at the feaſt, &c.] Some to take him and kill him, and others to hear his doctrine, and ſee his miracles; for all expected him at the feaſt, knowing it was always his cuſtom, as it was his duty, as an Iſraelite, to attend at it: and ſaid, where is he? not naming his name; either through contempt, which might be the caſe of the far greater part; or through fear of the Jews; or becauſe that he was ſo well known.

Ver. 12. And there was much murmuring among the people concerning him, &c.] There was a general whiſper, and a private controverſy and contention among the people about him, upon enquiry being made after him: for ſome ſaid he is a good man; a man of a good principle, of a good life and converſation; and who is good, kind, and beneficent, both to the bodies and ſouls of men; preaches good doctrine, and does many good things: others ſaid, nay; or denied him to be a good man: but he deceiveth the people; drawing them off from the law of Moſes, teaching them to break the ſabbath, ſetting himſelf up for the Meſſiah, and aſſerting himſelf to be the Son of God.

Ver. 13. Howbeit, no man ſpoke openly of him, &c.] So loud as to be overheard, at leaſt by many, but in a ſecret and whiſpering way; or did not ſpeak with freedom, or all their mind, what they really thought of him, nor with courage and boldneſs: for fear of the Jews; for fear of being mobbed by them, or taken up and proſecuted, or turned out of the ſynagogue; for a law was made, that whoever confeſſed him, ſhould be ſo uſed; and this deterred perſons, from expreſſing the true ſentiments of their minds about him.

Ver. 14. Now about the midſt of the feaſt, &c.] About the fourth day of it, for it laſted eight days; this might be on the ſabbath-day, which ſometimes was, בתוך החג, in the middle of the feaſt [n]; and the rather, ſince it follows, Jeſus went up into the temple; as the Lord and proprietor of it, and as was his uſual method; he had for ſome reaſons kept himſelf retired till now, and now he appeared publickly: and taught; the people his doctrine; he expounded the ſcriptures, gave the true ſenſe of them, and inſtructed the people out of them.

Ver. 15. And the Jews marvelled, &c.] Both at the matter, and manner of his doctrine; it was ſuch, as never man ſpake; his words were ſo gracious, and there were ſuch truth and evidence in them, and they were delivered with ſuch power and authority, that they were aſtoniſhed at them: ſaying, how knoweth this man letters? or the ſcriptures, as the Arabic and Perſic verſions render it; which are called holy letters, 2 Tim. iii. 15. according to which, the ſenſe is; that they were ſurprized at his knowledge of the ſcriptures, that he ſhould be converſant with them, and be able to interpret them, and give the ſenſe and meaning of them, in ſo full and clear a manner, as he did: or elſe the ſenſe is, how came this man to be ſuch a learned man? whence has he this wiſdom, and all this learning which he ſhows? as in Matt. xiii. 54. So a learned man is in Iſa. xxix. 11. ſaid to be one that, יודע הספר, επιςαμενος γραμματα, knows letters, as the Septuagint there tranſlate the Hebrew text; but how Chriſt ſhould know them, or be a learned man, having never learned, was ſurprizing to them: that is, he had not had a liberal education, but was brought up to a trade; he was not trained up at the feet of any of their Rabbins, in any of their univerſities, or ſchools of learning; and in which they were certainly right. Modern Jews pretend to ſay he had a maſter, whom they ſometimes call Elchanan [o], but moſt commonly they make him to be R. Joſhua ben Perachiah [p]; with whom they ſay, he fled into Alexandria in Egypt, for fear of Jannai the king; and one of their writers [q], on this account, charges the Evangeliſt with a falſhood: but who are we to believe, the Jews who lived at the ſame time with Jeſus, and knew his education and manner of life, or thoſe that have lived ages ſince?

Ver. 16. Jeſus anſwered them and ſaid, &c.] Having heard them expreſs their ſurprize, and ſtate their objection: my doctrine is not mine; it was his, as he was God; as ſuch, he was the author of it, it was from him, by the revelation of him; and it was of him, or he was the ſubject of it, as Mediator; it reſpected his perſon as God man, his offices, as prophet, prieſt, and king, and his grace, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation; and it was his, as preached by him as man; it came by him, and firſt began to be ſpoken by him; and was ſo ſpoken by him, as it never was before, or ſince: but it was not human; it was not acquired by him, as man; he did not learn it of man; he needed no human teachings; he increaſed in wiſdom without them, from his infancy: they ſaid right, in ſaying he had never learned; the ſpirit of wiſdom and knowledge reſted on him, and the treaſures of them were hid in him; nor was it a device or invention of his, as man; it was not from himſelf as ſuch, but it was from heaven, from his Father: wherefore he adds, but his that ſent me; thereby intimating, that it was of God, and was communicated to him by his Father; from whom he received it, and from whom he had a commiſſion to preach it; ſo that his doctrine was that wiſdom which comes from above, and is pure and peaceable, divine and heavenly, and ought to be received by men.

Ver. 17. If any man will do his will, &c.] Meaning, not one that perfectly fulfils the law, which is the good, and perfect, and acceptable will of God; for there is no man that does this, or can do it; nor is it ſo ſaid here, if any man do his will, but if any man will do it; that is, is deſirous of doing it; who has it wrought in him both to will and do, of the good pleaſure of God, by his grace and Spirit; with whom to will is preſent, though he has not power to perform, and ſo is a ſpiritual man; and who believes in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which is one branch of the will of God; and who depends upon the Spirit and grace of God, and acts from a principle of love to God, and in the exerciſe of faith on Chriſt: he ſhall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I ſpeak of myſelf; not a man of mere natural knowledge and learning, or a man of theory and ſpeculation, is a judge of doctrine; but he that leans not to his own underſtanding, and implores the aſſiſtance of the divine Spirit, and who is for reducing doctrine into practice: he knows by the efficacy of the doctrine upon his heart, and the influence it has on his life and converſation; by its coming not in word only, but in power; and by its working effectually in him, whether it is divine or human, of God or of man.

Ver. 18. He that ſpeaketh of himſelf, &c.] What he himſelf has deviſed, and is a ſcheme of his own; for which he has no divine warrant and commiſſion: ſeeketh his own glory; honour and applauſe from men; as did the Scribes and Phariſees, who taught for doctrines the commandments of men, the traditions of the elders, their own gloſſes upon the law, and their own deciſions and determinations; and as did the falſe teachers, who had nothing elſe in view but themſelves, their worldly intereſt, or vain glory; theſe ſuited their doctrines to the minds and luſts of men, in order to gain their point: but he that ſeeketh his glory that ſent him; that gave him in commiſſion what he ſhould ſay and ſpeak, and his only; as did Chriſt, and ſo his apoſtles after him: the ſame is true, and no unrighteouſneſs is in him; he is an upright and faithful man, and what he ſays is truth; he brings true doctrine along with him, and there is no fraud or impoſture in him; nor any inſincerity in his heart, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions render it; nor any diſhoneſty in his conduct; he is no cheat or deceiver; was he, he would ſeek his own glory and intereſt; but as he appears to be a man of no deſign, his doctrine is to be depended on and received; and ſuch was Chriſt.

Ver. 19. Did not Moſes give you the law, &c.] After Chriſt had vindicated himſelf and his doctrine, he proceeds to reprove the Jews for their breaking the law, which contained the will of God; by which it appeared, that they were no proper judges of his doctrine, though they cavilled at it: the queſtion he puts, could not be denied by them; for though properly ſpeaking, God was the law-giver, yet inaſmuch as it was delivered by Moſes, it is aſcribed to him, and ſaid to come by him; and it was put into his hands, to be delivered by him, peculiarly to the people of Iſrael; and being given to the Jewiſh fathers, not only for themſelves, but for their poſterity in ages to come, is ſaid to be given to the then preſent generation; and may be underſtood, either of the whole ſyſtem of laws, moral, ceremonial, and judicial, belonging to that people; or elſe of the particular law, concerning the keeping of the ſabbath, which was a peculiar law of Moſes, and proper to the children of Iſrael only: and yet none of you keepeth the law; though they boaſted of it as a ſingular privilege, and reſted in it, and their obedience to it for life and ſalvation, yet daily broke it in various inſtances, in thought, word, or deed; yea, thoſe that ſat in Moſes's chair, and taught it, did not obſerve and do what they taught; nor could the moſt holy and righteous man among them, perfectly keep it; and many of them, who were moſt forward to cenſure others, for the violation of it, paid the leaſt regard to it; and particularly to the law of the ſabbath, which both prieſts and people tranſgreſſed, in one point or another, every ſabbath-day: wherefore our Lord reaſons with them, why go ye about to kill me? an harmleſs and innocent man, who never injured you in your perſons and properties; and which is a proof of their not keeping that body of laws Moſes gave them, ſince thou ſhalt not kill is one of them: though rather this may refer to the law of the ſabbath, and the ſenſe be, that ſince Moſes had given them the law of the ſabbath, and they did not keep it themſelves, why ſhould they ſeek to take away his life, for what they pretended was a breach of it? for our Lord here, as appears by what follows, refers to what they ſought to do, above a year and a half ago, and ſtill continued to ſeek after; namely, to kill him, becauſe he had healed a man on the ſabbath-day, ch. v. 16, 18. and vii. 1.

Ver. 20. The people anſwered and ſaid, &c.] Theſe ſeem to be the country people, who came from Galilee and other parts, who knew nothing of the deſigns of the Jeruſalem Jews upon him; nor were they his downright enemies at leaſt, but rather ſeemed to favour him, and were on his ſide, though greatly provoked to hear him talk after this manner: thou haſt a devil; or art poſſeſſed with one; thou talkeſt like one of the demoniacks, like a mad man, one beſide thyſelf; whom the devil has ſo much power over, and has ſo deprived of thy ſenſes, that thou knoweſt not what thou ſayeſt: who goeth about to kill thee? no man; for they could not believe that any man, or body of men, would be ſo wicked, as to attempt to take away the life of ſo harmleſs a perſon, and who did ſo much good both to the bodies and ſouls of men.

Ver. 21. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] Taking no notice of their paſſion, reproach, and blaſphemy; but proceeding upon the thing he had in view, and which he was determined to reaſſume, and vindicate himſelf in: I have done one work; that is, on the ſabbath-day; meaning, his cure of the man that had had a diſorder eight and thirty years, who lay at Betheſda's pool; which ſingle action, they charged with being a breach of the ſabbath, he mentions with a view to their many, and daily violations of it: and ye all marvel; at it, as a thing unheard of, as a moſt ſhocking piece of iniquity, as an intolerable evil; wondring that any man ſhould have the front, to bid another take up his bed and walk, on the ſabbath-day: they did not marvel at the miracle that was wrought; but were amazed, offended, and diſturbed, at its being done on the ſabbath day.

Ver. 22. Moſes therefore gave unto you circumciſion, &c.] The command of circumciſion, which he renewed and eſtabliſhed, Lev. xii. 3. (not becauſe, or that it is of Moſes; originally, or that he was the firſt giver of it, for it was enjoined before his time; this is a correction of what is before ſaid, giving a more accurate account of the riſe of circumciſion: but of the fathers;) Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, to whom it was enjoined by God, and who practiſed it before the times of Moſes; ſo that this command was in force before him, and obligatory upon the deſcendants of Abraham, before he delivered it; and would have been, if he had never mentioned it; though the Jews ſay [r], “we don't circumciſe becauſe Abraham our father, on whom be peace, circumciſed himſelf and his houſhold, but becauſe the holy bleſſed God commanded us by Moſes, that we ſhould be circumciſed, as Abraham our father was circumciſed.” But no doubt it would have been binding on them, if Moſes had ſaid nothing about it; the command to Abraham is ſo expreſs, for the circumciſion of his male offspring, Gen. xvii. 10, 11, 12. however, it being both of Moſes and of the fathers, laid a very great obligation on the Jews to obſerve it: and ye on the ſabbath-day circumciſe a man; a male child, as they did, when the eighth day fell on a ſabbath-day; for the law of circumciſion, was before the law of the ſabbath, and therefore was not to be made void by it, nor was it made void by it; and ſo much is intimated by our Lord's obſerving, that it was not of Moſes, but of the fathers; and this is the reaſon which the Karaite Jews give, for circumciſion on the ſabbath-day: for [s] “ſay they, becauſe it is a former command, from the time of Abraham our father, on whom be peace, before the giving of the law of the ſabbath, היו מלים בשבת, they circumciſe on the ſabbath-day; and when the command of the ſabbath afterwards took place, it was not poſſible it ſhould diſannul circumciſion on the ſabbath-day; and for the ſame reaſon, they alſo allow the ſacrifice of the paſſover to be done on the ſabbath-day, becauſe it is a command which went before the command of the ſabbath.” And this was alſo the ſenſe and practice of the other Jews: thus citing the law of Moſes in Lev. xii. 3. And in the eighth day, the fleſh of his foreſkin ſhall be circumciſed, by way of Gloſs upon it add, ואפילו בשבת, and even on the ſabbath-day [t]; and on the ſame text another writer obſerves [u], that by Gematry, every day is fit for circumciſion. R. Joſe ſays [w], “they do all things neceſſary to circumciſion, on the ſabbath-day.” R. Akiba ſays [x], “all work that can be done on the evening of the ſabbath, does not drive away the ſabbath; but circumciſion, which cannot be done on the evening of the ſabbath, drives away the ſabbath: they do all things neceſſary to circumciſion; they circumciſe, and make bare, and ſuck, and put (on the wound) a plaiſter and cummin; and which, if not bruiſed on the evening of the ſabbath, they may chew with their teeth.”—Alſo it is allowed of [y], to “waſh the infant on the third day of circumciſion, which happens to be on the ſabbath.” Moreover, a caſe is put after this manner [z]; “if a man has two infants, one to be circumciſed after the ſabbath, and the other to be circumciſed on the ſabbath, and forgets, and circumciſes that, that was to be after the ſabbath, on the ſabbath, he is guilty of ſin; if one is to be circumciſed in the evening of the ſabbath, and the other on the ſabbath, and he forgets, and circumciſes that which ſhould be on the evening of the ſabbath, on the ſabbath, R. Eliezer pronounces him guilty, but R. Joſhua abſolves him.” And we have an inſtance [a] of “R. Sheſhana, the ſon of R. Samuel bar Abdimo, that when he was to be circumciſed, it was the ſabbath-day, and they forgot the razor; and they enquired of R. Meni and R. Iſaac ben Eleazar, and it was drove off to another day.” From all which it appears, that circumciſion on the ſabbath-day, was a common practice, and which confirms the aſſertion of Chriſt.

Ver. 23. If a man on the ſabbath-day receive circumciſion, &c.] As it was certain in many inſtances he did: that the law of Moſes might not be broken; either the law concerning circumciſion, which confirmed the law given to Abraham, and required it ſhould be on the eighth day, let it fall when it would, even on a ſabbath-day; and therefore on that day, male children received circumciſion, that that law might be kept, and not be broken: or elſe the law concerning the ſabbath; and the ſenſe be, if circumciſion was adminiſtered on the ſabbath-day, without breaking the law of Moſes, as ſome render the words, which commanded the obſervation of the ſabbath, are ye angry at me; and purſue me with ſo much wrath and bitterneſs, becauſe I have made a man every whit whole on the ſabbath-day? or a man that was whole ſound on the ſabbath-day; who was wholly, or all over diſordered, every limb of whom ſhook with the palſy: or as ſome think the ſenſe is, he was made every whit whole, both in ſoul and body; and then the argument is, if it was no breach of the ſabbath to make a wound, and lay a plaiſter on it, as in circumciſion; it would be no violation of it, nor ought any to be offended with it, that Chriſt ſhould heal a diſeaſed man, who was ſo in every part of his body, and reſtore health to his ſoul likewiſe: and nothing is more common with the Jews than to ſay, the danger of life, and, פיקוח נפש, the preſervation of the ſoul, or life, drive away the ſabbath [b].

Ver. 24. Judge not according to the appearance, &c.] Or through reſpect of perſons, and ſo as to pleaſe men, the Scribes and Phariſees; who had condemned the action of Chriſt, in curing the diſeaſed man on the ſabbath-day, and ſought to kill him for it: but judge righteous judgment; give your ſenſe and judgment of things, according to the truth and evidence of them; and don't find fault with that, which you yourſelves allow of, and which Moſes and his law, and your own practices juſtify.

Ver. 25. Then ſaid ſome of them of Jeruſalem, &c.] Who were inhabitants of Jeruſalem, and ſo are diſtinguiſhed from the people, ver. 20. who came up out of the country to the feaſt; ſo Joſe ben Jochanan is called, איש ירושלים, a man of Jeruſalem [c]; that is, an inhabitant of it: now theſe men living in the city, knew more of the temper and diſpoſition, the deſigns and attempts, of the chief prieſts, Scribes, and elders, to take away the life of Chriſt; and therefore ſay, is not this he whom they ſeek to kill? they knew that they had formed a deſign to kill him, ever ſince the paſſover before the laſt; when he wrought the miracle referred to in the text, and that they had been ever ſince plotting againſt his life, and were now at this feaſt ſeeking an opportunity to lay hold on him and kill him.

Ver. 26. But lo, he ſpeaketh boldly, &c.] And with great freedom, and openly and publickly in the temple, as if he had a licence from the chief prieſts for ſo doing: and they ſay nothing to him; don't contradict him, or forbid him ſpeaking; he goes on without controul; tho' he takes great liberty in charging the Jews with an intention to kill him, in arguing from their practices in vindication of himſelf, and in ſuggeſting that they judged in favour of men, and not according to the truth of things. Do the rulers know indeed that this is the very Chriſt? have they changed their minds concerning him, and ſo their conduct towards him? are they convinced, and do they know by plain demonſtrations, and full proof, that he is really the Meſſiah that has been promiſed of old, and long expected?

Ver. 27. Howbeit, we know this man whence he is, &c.] They ſignify, that if the rulers had altered their minds, and had gone into the belief of Jeſus of Nazareth being the Meſſiah, they ſhould not follow them in it, for this reaſon; becauſe they knew from whence he came; meaning not ſo much the place of his birth, which they ſuppoſed was Galilee, and Nazareth in Galilee, in which they were miſtaken as the manner of his birth, which they could account for: they pretended to know his extract, that he was the ſon of Joſeph and Mary, that he was begotten in wedlock, and was born as other perſons are; there was no difficulty with them in accounting for his coming into the world, no more than any other ordinary perſon; his deſcent from Joſeph and Mary was well known to them, and to be accounted for in a rational way, and therefore concluded he could not be the Meſſiah: but when Chriſt cometh, no man knoweth whence he is; they knew the place from whence he was to come; ſo the chief-prieſts and Scribes did, Matt. ii. 4, 5. and ſo did theſe Jews, ver. 42. They knew he would come from Bethlehem, and they knew that he would come out of the ſeed of David; but then he was to be born of a virgin, according to Iſ. vii. 14. and ſuch a coming into the world was not to be known, reaſoned upon, and accounted for: wherefore ſince Jeſus, according to the notion of theſe men, came into the world in the common and ordinary way, they thought they had an invincible argument againſt his being the Meſſiah; and therefore, let their rulers do what they would, for their parts, they were determined to reject him: and becauſe it could not be known from whence the Meſſiah ſhould come; hence the ancient Jews uſed to call him the ſeed which comes from another place; not from the place from whence ſeed ordinarily comes, from the loins of men, but from ſome other place they knew not where: their words are very remarkable on that paſſage in Gen. iv. 25. and ſhe called his name Seth, for God hath appointed me another ſeed, &c. This obſervation is made by R. Tanchuma, in the name of R. Samuel [d]; ſays he, "ſhe has reſpect to that ſeed, which is he that comes, ממקום אחר, from another place, and what is this? this is the king Meſſiah." And elſewhere [e], the ſame Rabbi obſerves on thoſe words in Gen. xix. 32. that we may preſerve ſeed of our father: it is not written, that we may preſerve a ſon of our father, but that we may preſerve ſeed of our father; that ſeed which is he that comes from another place; and what is this? this is the king Meſſiah. The modern Jews [f] endeavour to explain away the ſenſe of this phraſe, another ſeed, as if it regarded ſtrange ſeed; and that the ſenſe of the expreſſion is only, that the Meſſiah ſhould ſpring from the family of Moab, and from Ruth the Moabiteſs: nor is their ſenſe what Aquinas [g] attributes to the Jewiſh Rabbins, "that the more noble part of that maſs, of which Adam was made, remained untouched (by ſin) and was afterwards transfuſed into Seth; and ſo thro' all deſcending from him, unto Joakim, or Eliakim, or Heli, the father of the virgin, out of which the body of the bleſſed virgin was made:" which is no other than a Popiſh device, fathered upon the Jews, and made for the ſake of the virgin Mary, rather than for the ſake of Chriſt. But their meaning is, that Chriſt ſhould not be begotten of man, or come into the world in the ordinary way of generation, but ſhould be born of a virgin; and ſo it could not be known, and accounted for from whence he was, or from whence that ſeed was of which he was made. The Angel gives the beſt account of this in Luke i. 35. a body was prepared for Chriſt by the Lord; it was conceived by the power of the Holy Ghoſt; his birth of a virgin was miraculous; it is beyond the comprehenſion of men, and can't be explain'd by any mortal; from whence he is it can't be ſaid; no man can be pointed to as his father; all that can be ſaid is, he was made of a woman, a virgin.

Ver. 28. Then cried Jeſus in the temple as he taught, &c.] Over-hearing the reaſonings of theſe men, or however knowing what they ſaid; ſo the Perſic verſion adds, having ſecretly known this; exalted his voice as he was teaching in the temple, and in the midſt of his diſcourſe, publickly before all the people, in the temple, ſpoke out with a loud voice, that all might hear: ſaying, ye both know me, and ye know whence I am; ſome, as the Ethiopic verſion read theſe words by way of interrogation, do ye both know me, and do ye know from whence I am? no; you do not. Or they may be conſidered as an ironical conceſſion; yes, you know me, and you know whence I am; you know me to be Jeſus of Nazareth, but you are wrong, I am not of Nazareth; you ſuppoſe I come from Galilee, but that is your ignorance; you take me to be the real ſon of Joſeph, to be begotten by him on Mary, but that is your miſtake: ſuch is your knowledge of me; you know me indeed who I am, and from whence I come. And I am not come of myſelf; into this world, by incarnation, or the aſſumption of human nature, to work out the ſalvation of men: the Father called him to it, and he agreeing to do it, was in the fulneſs of time ſent about it; this was not a device of his own, or an honour he took to himſelf; he was not alone in it; it was a mutual agreement between him and his Father, in conſequence of which he was ſent, and came. But he that ſent me is true; to the covenant he made with Chriſt, and to the promiſes he made to the Fathers of the Old Teſtament, concerning the miſſion of his ſon; and he is true to be believed, in the teſtimonies he gave of him, particularly by a voice from heaven, declaring him his beloved ſon. Whom ye know not; ſo that notwithſtanding all their boaſted knowledge of him, they knew not his Father, from whence he came, and by whom he was ſent; and notwithſtanding alſo their boaſted knowledge of the one, only, true, and living God, ſee Rom. ii. 17. yet they knew him not in a ſpiritual ſenſe; they knew him not in Chriſt, nor as the Father of Chriſt; they knew neither the Father nor the Son; and this their ignorance of both was the reaſon of their hatred of Chriſt, and of his followers, John xv. 21. and xvi. 3.

Ver. 29. But I know him, &c.] His nature and perfections, his purpoſes and promiſes, his council and covenant, his mind and will; and indeed none knows him but he, and thoſe to whom he pleaſes to reveal him; and there is good reaſon why he ſhould have intimate and perfect knowledge of him: for I am from him; being the only-begotten of him, and as ſuch lay in his boſom, and knew him, and his whole heart, and was privy to all of him, and that that is within him: and he hath ſent me; in an office-capacity to redeem his people. This is the original deſcent of Chriſt, which the Jews knew not, tho' they pretended to know him, and whence he was.

Ver. 30. Then they ſought to take him, &c.] By force, and carry him before the Sanhedrim, in order to be tried and condemned as a blaſphemer, being enraged to hear him claim a deſcent from God, whom they took to be a mere man, the ſon of Joſeph the carpenter: but no man laid hands on him; tho' they had a good will to it, they had no power to do it, being reſtrained by the ſecret providence of God from it, and awed by the majeſty of Chriſt, which ſhewed itſelf in his looks and words; and perhaps alſo they might be afraid of the people, leſt they ſhould riſe in his favour; and ſo every man being fearful of being the firſt that ſhould ſeize him, no man did: however, ſo it was ordered by divine providence, that he ſhould not be apprehended at this time, becauſe his hour was not yet come; to ſuffer and die, to depart out of this world, and go to the Father: there was a preciſe time fixed for this in the council and covenant of God, by mutual compact, called due time; as his coming into the world is called the fulneſs of time: nor could he die before that time, and therefore no man was ſuffered to lay hands on him, whatever good will he had to it. And there is a time for every man's death; nor can any man die before that time, or live beyond it; ſee Eccl. iii. 2. Job xiv. 5. and this is the ſenſe of the ancient Jews; for they ſay [h], "a man before his years, or his "time, does not die;" that is, before he comes to the years appointed for him: and they aſk [i], "who is there that goes before his time? i. e. dies "before his time?" And it is ſaid [k] of a certain perſon who was in his houſe, and מטא זמניה, his time was come, and he died without ſickneſs: tho' it muſt be owned ſome of them were otherwiſe minded, and ſay [l], that death, by the hand of heaven, or God, ſhortens a man's years; and that there are ſome reaſons for which righteous men depart out of this world before their time is come; and particularly of Enoch they ſay, God took him before his time was come [m].

Ver. 31. And many of the people believed on him, &c.] Whilſt ſome were diſpleaſed at his doctrine, others were induced by his miracles to believe on him, as an extraordinary perſon, if not the Meſſiah; and theſe were the common people, eſpecially thoſe that came out of the country; for the city Jews, and above all the rulers, were very averſe to him: and it is eaſy to obſerve, that faith in Chriſt, and true religion, ſpread and flouriſh moſt among the meaner ſort of people. And ſaid, when Chriſt cometh, will he do more miracles than theſe which this man hath done? referring not ſo much to the miracles, many of them might have ſeen done by him in other parts of Judea, and in Galilee; nor only to thoſe he had done in the preceding feaſts at Jeruſalem, but to thoſe that were done by him now, tho' not recorded by the Evangeliſt. The Jews expected many miracles to be wrought by the Meſſiah when he came, and they had good reaſon for it from Iſ. xxxv. 5, 6. To theſe Chriſt ſends John the Baptiſt, and the Jews, for proofs of his being the Meſſiah, Matt. xi. 4. John x. 37, 38. and by theſe he was approved of God as ſuch, Acts ii. 23. And it is certain that the ancient Jews expected miracles in the days of the Meſſiah. "Says R. Simeon to "Eleazar his ſon, Eleazar, at the time that the "king Meſſiah is raiſed up, how many ſigns and "other wonders will be done in the world? a little "after, from that day all the ſigns, and wonders, "and mighty works, which the holy bleſſed God "did in Egypt, he will do to the Iſraelites, as it is "ſaid, Mic. vii. 15. according to the days of thy "coming out of the land of Egypt, will I ſhew unto him "marvellous things [n]." So the Targumiſt on Iſ. liii. 8. paraphraſes thus, "from afflictions and puniſhment "he will deliver our captivity, and the wonderful "things which ſhall be done for us in his days, "who can tell?" It is true indeed that the modern Jews have laid aſide ſuch expectations, and pretend they were not looked for formerly. Maimonides ſays [o], "let it not enter into thy heart, that "the king Meſſiah hath need to do ſigns and won-"ders, (as that he ſhall renew things in the world, "or raiſe the dead, and the like; theſe are things "which fools ſpeak of); the thing is not ſo." And he inſtances, in Ben Coziba, who ſet up for the Meſſiah, of whom R. Akiba, and the reſt of the wiſe men of that age, did not require a ſign or miracle; yet this ſame writer elſewhere ſays [p], that "all nations ſhall make peace with the Meſſiah, "and ſerve him, becauſe of his great righteouſ-"neſs, and the miracles which ſhall be done by "him."

Ver. 32. The Phariſees heard that the people murmured, &c.] Or whiſpered, privately talked among themſelves: ſuch things concerning him; as that ſurely he muſt be the Meſſiah, ſince ſuch wonderful things were done by him, and might alſo expreſs ſome uneaſineſs and ſurprize, that the rulers did not receive him as ſuch: and the Phariſees, and the chief-prieſts, ſent officers to take him; and bring him before the Sanhedrim, by them to be condemned, and ſo a ſtop be put to the peoples receiving him, and believing in him as the Meſſiah; fearing, that ſhould things go on at this rate, their principles and practices would be rejected, and their perſons and authority be brought into contempt.

Ver. 33. Then ſaid Jeſus unto them, &c.] To the officers that were ſent to take him, and other unbelieving Jews that were about him: yet a little while am I with you; no longer than till the next paſſover, which was but about half a year at moſt: this he might ſay, partly to quicken the attention of the people to him, to make the beſt uſe and improvement of his miniſtry whilſt they had it, ſince in a little time he would be removed from them; and partly to ſuggeſt to the officers that were ſent to take him, that they, and their maſters, need not have given themſelves that trouble, for in a ſhort time he ſhould be gone from them, and till that time he ſhould continue in ſpite of them. And then I go unto him that ſent me; ſtill confirming his miſſion from God, expreſſing his death by going, and as being voluntary, and ſignifying his glory and happineſs after it.

Ver. 34. Ye ſhall ſeek me, &c.] That is, the Meſſiah, who he was; meaning, that after his departure they ſhould be in great diſtreſs, and be very much on the enquiry after, and ſolicitous for the coming of the Meſſiah, to be a redeemer and deliverer of them out of their troubles: and ſhall not find me; no Meſſiah will appear, no Saviour will be ſent, no Redeemer will come to relieve them; they ſhall enquire, and look for one in vain, as they did. And where I am, thither ye cannot come; intimating hereby, that not only their temporal eſtate and condition would be very diſtreſſed and miſerable, but alſo their eternal eſtate; ſince they ſhould not be able to come where he would be in his human nature, and where he now was, as a divine perſon, namely, in heaven.

Ver. 35. Then ſaid the Jews among themſelves, &c.] That is, the unbelieving, ſcoffing Jews; it may be the officers, at leaſt ſome of them, that were ſent to take him: whither will he go that we ſhall not find him? what diſtant, or obſcure part of the world will he betake himſelf to, and there hide himſelf, that ſo he cannot be found? will he go unto the diſperſed among the Gentiles? or Greeks; and ſo may deſign the Jews, who were ſcattered abroad in the times of the Grecian monarchy, under the ſucceſſors of Alexander, and particularly Antiochus, in diſtinction from the Babyloniſh diſperſion; or the ſtrangers ſcattered through Pontus Galatia, &c. to whom Peter writes, 1 Pet. i. 1. The Arabic verſion renders it, the ſect of the Greeks; by which the Helleniſtic Jews ſeem to be meant: or the Jews in general, wherever, and by whomſoever ſcattered, who might be thought to be more ignorant than the Jews in Judea, and therefore more eaſily to be impoſed upon: hence, in a flouting manner, they enquire, whether he'll go to thoſe when he is rejected by them. The Syriac and Ethiopic verſions read, will he go into the countries, or country of the Gentiles; into heathen countries, not to the Jews there, but to the Gentiles themſelves: and teach the Gentiles? ſuggeſting, that he was more fit to be a teacher of them, than of the Jews, and might meet with more encouragement and ſucceſs among them, who would not be able to detect him.

Ver. 36. What manner of ſaying is this that he ſaid, &c.] It is not eaſy to be underſtood; and if that is not meant, which is ſuggeſted, what ſhould he mean by ſaying, ye ſhall ſeek me, and ſhall not find me, and where I am, thither ye cannot come? repeating the words of Chriſt juſt now expreſſed by him.

Ver. 37. In the laſt day, that great day of the feaſt, &c.] That is, of tabernacles, as appears from ver. 2. which was uſually called, חג, the feaſt, in diſtinction from the paſſover and pentecoſt [q]; and the eighth day of it was called, הרגל האחרון, the laſt day of the feaſt [r], as here: and it was a great day, being, as is ſaid in Lev. xxiii. 36. an holy convocation, a ſolemn aſſembly, in which no ſervile work was done, and in which an offering was made by fire unto the Lord. According to the traditions of the Jews, fewer ſacrifices were offered on this day than on the reſt; for on the firſt day they offered thirteen bullocks, and leſſened one every day; ſo that on the ſeventh day, there was but ſeven offered, and on the eighth day but one, when the prieſts returned to their lots, as at other feaſts [s]: but nothwithſtanding the Jews make out this to be the greater day for them, ſince the ſeventy bullocks offered on the other ſeven days, were for the ſeventy nations of the world; but the one bullock, on the eighth day, was peculiarly for the people of Iſrael [t]: and beſides, they obſerve, that there were ſeveral things peculiar on this day, as different from the reſt; as the caſting of lots, the benediction by itſelf, a feaſt by itſelf, an offering by itſelf, a ſong by itſelf, and a bleſſing by itſelf [u]: and on this day they had alſo the ceremony of drawing and pouring water, attended with the uſual rejoicings as on other days; the account of which is this [w]: "the pouring out of water was "after this manner; a golden pot, which held "three logs, was filled out of Siloah, and when "they came to the water-gate, they blowed (their "trumpets) and ſhouted, and blowed; (then a "prieſt) went up by the aſcent of the altar, and "turned to the left hand, (where) were two ſilver "baſons——that on the weſt ſide was filled with "water, and that on the eaſt with wine; he poured the baſon of water into that of wine, and that "of wine into that of water." At which time there were great rejoicing, piping, and dancing, by the moſt religious and ſober people among the Jews; inſomuch that it is ſaid [x], that "he that never ſaw the "rejoicing of the place of drawing of water, never "ſaw any rejoicing in his life." And this ceremony, they ſay [y], is a tradition of Moſes from mount Sinai, and refers to ſome ſecret and myſterious things; yea, they plainly ſay, that it has reſpect to the pouring forth of the Holy Ghoſt [z]. "Says R. Joſhua ben Levi, why is its name called "the place of drawing water? becauſe, from "thence, שואבים רוח הקודש, they draw the Holy "Ghoſt, as it is ſaid, and ye ſhall draw water with "joy out of the wells of ſalvation, Iſ. xii. 3." Moreover, it was on this day they prayed for the rains for the year enſuing: it is aſked [a], "from "what time do they make mention of the powers "of the rains (which deſcend by the power of "God)? R. Eliezer ſays, from the firſt good day "of the feaſt (of tabernacles); R. Joſhua ſays, "from the laſt good day of the feaſt.——They "don't pray for the rains, but near the rains;" that is, the time of rains; and which, one of their commentators ſays [b], is the eighth day of the feaſt of tabernacles; for from the feaſt of tabernacles, thenceforward is the time of rains. The Jews have a notion, that at this feaſt the rains of the enſuing year were fixed: hence they ſay [c], that "at the "feaſt of tabernacles judgment is made concerning "the waters;" or a decree or determination is made concerning them by God. Upon which the Gemara [d] has theſe words, "wherefore does the law "ſay pour out water on the feaſt of tabernacles? "Says the holy, bleſſed God, pour out water before me, that the rains of the year may be bleſſed "unto you." Now when all theſe things are conſidered, it will eaſily be ſeen with what pertinency our Lord expreſſes himſelf on this day, with reſpect to the effuſion of the gifts and graces of the Spirit of God, as follows: Jeſus ſtood and cried; he now ſtood up, whereas at other times he uſed to ſit, and ſpoke with a loud voice, both to ſhow his fervour and earneſtneſs, and that all might hear: ſaying, if any man thirſt, let him come to me and drink. This is to be underſtood not of a natural thirſt, tho' the alluſion is to it, which is very painful and diſtreſſing; as the inſtances of the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, Sampſon after he had ſlain the Philiſtines, and our Lord upon the croſs, ſhow; much leſs a ſinful thirſt, a thirſt after the riches, honours, and pleaſures of this life; but a ſpiritual thirſt, or a thirſt after ſpiritual things, after ſalvation by Chriſt, and a view of intereſt in it, free and full pardon of ſin thro' him, juſtification by his righteouſneſs, a greater degree of knowledge of him, more communion with him, and conformity to him, and after the ſincere milk of the word, and the breaſts of Goſpel-ordinances: and ſuch that thirſt after theſe things, and eagerly deſire them, and are in pain and uneaſineſs without them, as a man is, who has a violent thirſt upon him, are ſuch as are regenerated and quickened by the Spirit of God, and are made ſenſible of themſelves, and of their ſtate and condition by nature. Now theſe Chriſt invites to come unto him, not to Moſes and his law, moral or ceremonial, and to obedience to them, and works of righteouſneſs done by them, to any creature, or creature acts; for theſe are ciſterns without water, where there no true peace, joy, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation are to be had; but to himſelf, who is the fountain of gardens, the well of living waters, and who is as rivers of water in a dry land, to thirſty ſouls: and when come to him, which is by believing in him, they are encouraged to drink; that is, to take of the water of life freely, or to take of his grace freely; ſalvation by him is of free grace, and the pardon of ſin is according the riches of grace, and juſtification is freely by his grace, and ſo all other bleſſings; and of this they may drink abundantly, or they may partake of it largely: there is a fulneſs of grace in Chriſt, and there is an abundance of it communicated to his people; it is exceeding abundant; it flows, and overflows, and may be drank of to ſatisfaction, till their ſouls are as a watered garden, and they are ſatisfied with the goodneſs of the Lord.

Ver. 38. He that believeth on me, &c.] Which explains what is meant by coming to Chriſt, and drinking; for theſe acts are no other than for a man to go out of himſelf to Chriſt, and live by faith on him, and his grace. To which, what follows is a great encouragement; as the ſcripture hath ſaid: ſome refer theſe words to the preceding clauſe concerning believing in Chriſt, which the writings of the Old Teſtament ſpeak of, as in Deut. xviii. 15. Iſ. xxviii. 16. Hab. ii. 4. and the ſenſe is, that he that believes on Chriſt, the object of faith, the ſcripture points at, and in him, as that directs and requires; that believes in him as the mighty God, and as the prophet, prieſt, and king, and as the only foundation of the church, and lives by faith upon him, as juſt men do, then out of his belly ſhall flow, &c. tho' rather they belong to what follows; and do not deſign any particular place of ſcripture; for no ſuch one is to be found, where the following paſſage is expreſſed in ſo many words; but all thoſe ſcriptures which ſpeak of grace, under the metaphors of water, and abundance of water, as rivers and floods of water, and of the effuſion of the holy Spirit, under ſuch figurative expreſſions, ſuch as Iſ. xli. 17, 18. and xliii. 20. and xliv. 3. and lviii. 11. Joel ii. 28. Hence the Syriac verſion reads in the plural number, as the ſcriptures hath ſaid; referring to more than one: out of his belly ſhall flow rivers of living water; the grace of the Spirit of God is ſignified by water, becauſe it is of a cleanſing and purifying nature, as faith and hope are, having to do with the blood of Chriſt, which cleanſes from all ſin; and becauſe it fructifies and cauſes the ſaints, as trees of righteouſneſs, to grow, and bring forth fruit; and eſpecially becauſe it is cooling to thoſe who are ſcorched with the heat of a fiery law, and very refreſhing to thirſty ſouls: and it is called living water, becauſe by it dead ſinners are quickened, drooping ſaints are revived, and comforted; ſpiritual life in them is maintained and ſupported, and it ſprings up to, and iſſues in eternal life: and it is expreſſed by rivers of living water, becauſe of the abundance of it in regeneration, juſtification, and pardon; it is grace for grace, abundance of grace believers receive from Chriſt; and from him, in whom thoſe large meaſures of grace are, they flow out again, even out of his belly: from within him, out of his heart, the ſeat of it, by his lips, both in prayer to God, and in converſation with the ſaints, to whom he communicates his rich experiences of grace, to their comfort, and the glory of God; for grace is of a diffuſive and communicative nature; out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth ſpeaketh: and alſo it flows out by his life and converſation, which is ſober, righteous, and godly; and this the grace of God teaches and influences: and this grace, as it is permanent and laſting itſelf, even perpetual, and always abiding; ſo it continues to flow, and to ſhow itſelf in its acts and effects, in one way or another. The Jews ought not to find fault with Chriſt's uſing ſuch expreſſions, myſtically underſtood, ſince they, comparing Moſes and the Meſſiah together, ſay, “as “the firſt redeemer cauſed a well to ſpring up, “ſo the laſt redeemer ſhall cauſe waters to ſpring “up, according to Joel iii. 18[e].”

Ver. 39. But this ſpake he of the Spirit, &c.] Theſe are the words of the Evangeliſt, explaining the figurative expreſſions of Chriſt; ſhewing, that by rivers of living water, he meant the Spirit in his gifts and graces; and which is the plain ſenſe of the paſſages referr'd to by him, particularly Iſ. xliv. 3. Joel ii. 28. and which, as before obſerved, the Jews ſuppoſed were intimated by their drawing and pouring water at the feaſt of tabernacles. Which they that believe on him ſhould receive; the apoſtles, and others, that had believed in Chriſt, and had received the Spirit, as a Spirit of regeneration and ſanctification; as a Spirit of illumination and converſion; as a Spirit of faith and adoption; but on the day of Pentecoſt they were to receive a larger, even an extraordinary meaſure of his gifts and grace, to qualify them for greater work and ſervice: for the Holy Ghoſt was not yet given; the word given is not in the original text, but is very properly ſupplied, as it is in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Perſic verſions. The Arabic verſion renders it, for the Holy Ghoſt was not yet come: he was; he was in being as a divine perſon, equal with the Father and Son, ſo he was from everlaſting; and he had been beſtowed in his grace upon the Old Teſtament ſaints, and reſted in his gifts upon the prophets of that diſpenſation; but, as the Jews themſelves confeſs[f], “after the death of the latter “prophets, Haggai, Zachariah, and Malachi, the “Holy Ghoſt removed from Iſrael.” And they expreſly ſay, he was not there in the time of the ſecond temple. Maimonides ſays[g], “they made “the Urim and Thummim in the ſecond temple, to “compleat the eight garments (of the prieſts), tho' “they did not enquire by them; and why did “ they not enquire by them? becauſe the Holy “ Ghoſt was not there; and every prieſt that does “ not ſpeak by the Holy Ghoſt, and the Shekinah, “ does not dwell upon him, they don't enquire “ by him.” They obſerve [h] there were five things in the firſt temple which were not in the ſecond, and they are theſe, “ the ark with the mercy- “ ſeat, and cherubim, the fire (from heaven), and “ the Shekinah, ורוח הקודש, and the Holy Ghoſt, “ and the Urim and Thummim.” Now, tho' he had removed, he was to return again; but as yet the time was not come, at leaſt for the more plentiful donation of him: the reaſon of which was, becauſe that Jeſus was not yet glorified; he had not as yet gone thro' his ſtate of humiliation; he had not yet ſuffered, and died, and roſe again, and aſcended, and ſat down at the right hand of God; for the holy Spirit was to come upon his departure, and in conſequence of his ſufferings and death, and being made ſin, and a curſe for his people; and thro' his mediation and interceſſion, and upon his exaltation at the Father's right hand; when being made, and declared Lord and Chriſt, this ſhould be notified by the effuſion of his ſpirit; ſee Acts ii. 33, 36.

Ver. 40. Many of the people therefore, &c.] Of the common people, and it may be chiefly thoſe that came out of the country: when they heard this ſaying; or diſcourſe of Chriſt, on the laſt and great day of the feaſt, relating to the large meaſure of grace, and the effuſion of the Spirit on him, that believed: ſaid, of a truth this is the prophet; ſpoken of in Deut. xviii. 15. which ſome underſtood not of the Meſſiah, but of ſome extraordinary prophet diſtinct from him, who ſhould come before him, or about the ſame time; or they imagined he was one of the old prophets raiſed from the dead, whom they alſo expected about the times of the Meſſiah: or their ſenſe might only be, that he was a prophet, which was true, tho' not all the truth; they had ſome knowledge, tho' but ſmall; and they ſpake of him, though but as children in underſtanding.

Ver. 41. Others ſaid this is the Chriſt, &c.] The true Meſſiah, which they concluded, not only from the miracles, ver. 31. but from his ſpeaking of rivers of living water flowing from him that believes in him; for the ſame prophecy that ſpeaks of miracles to be performed in the times of the Meſſiah, ſpeaks alſo of waters breaking out in the wilderneſs, and ſtreams in the deſert, of the parched ground becoming a pool, and the thirſty land ſprings of water, Iſ. xxxv. 5, 6, 7. But ſome ſaid, ſhall Chriſt come out of Galilee? as they ſuppoſed Jeſus did; and becauſe he was educated at Nazareth, and Capernaum was his city, and he chiefly converſed, preached, and wrought his miracles in theſe parts, they concluded that he was born there; and therefore object this to his being the true Meſſiah. For if they did not mean this, according to their own accounts, the Meſſiah was to be in Galilee, and to be firſt revealed there; for they affirm [i] this in ſo many words, that יתגלי מלכא משיחא בארעא דגליל, the king Meſſiah ſhall be revealed in the land of Galilee; accordingly Jeſus, the true Meſſiah, as he was brought up in Galilee, tho' not born there, ſo he firſt preached there, and there wrought his firſt miracle; here he chiefly was, unleſs at the public feaſts; and here he manifeſted himſelf to his diſciples after his reſurrection.

Ver. 42. Hath not the ſcripture ſaid, &c.] Theſe objectors were thoſe who were accounted the more wiſe and knowing; who were converſant with the ſcriptures, and pretended at leaſt to a large knowledge of them: that Chriſt cometh out of the ſeed of David; that he ſhould be a rod out of the ſtem of Jeſſe, and a branch out of his roots; that he ſhould be one of David's loins, and of the fruit of his body, referring to Iſ. xi. 1. Pſ. cxxxii. 11, 17. which was very true, and what was commonly known, and expected among the Jews, that the Meſſiah ſhould be David's ſon, as Jeſus of Nazareth was, Acts xiii. 23. and out of the town of Bethlehem where David was? where his parents lived, and he was born; and, according to Jerom [k], he was buried here. The account he gives of this city, where he himſelf for ſome time lived, is; “ Bethlehem, the city of David, in the lot of the “ tribe of Judah, in which our Lord and Saviour “ was born, is ſix miles from Ælia, (i. e. Jeruſalem) to the ſouth, by the way which leads to “ Hebron, where alſo is ſhewed the ſepulchre of “ Jeſſe and David.” In which may be obſerved likewiſe the exact diſtance of this place from Jeruſalem; which, according to Joſephus [l], at leaſt as he is generally underſtood, was but twenty furlongs; and, according to Juſtin [m], thirty-five: but that this is the true diſtance, is clear from the old Jeruſalem itinerary [n], and which agrees with Jerom about the ſepulchre of David; for not far from it is the monument of Ezekiel, Aſaph, Job, Jeſſe, David, and Solomon: however, it is certain that David was born here, and therefore it is called his city; and from hence the Meſſiah was to come; and here Jeſus, the true Meſſiah, was born, and which the Jews themſelves own; ſee the notes on Matt. ii. 1. and Luke ii. 4. and in vain it is for them to expect the Meſſiah from thence, where none of their nation live, nor have lived, for many hundreds of years; being particularly forbid by Adrian, after he had ſubdued them, living in or near Jeruſalem, and alſo Bethlehem. Tertullian [o] refers to this when he thus argues with them, and very juſtly, and ſtrongly; “ if he is not yet born, who, 'tis ſaid, “ ſhall come forth a ruler out of Bethlehem, of the “ tribe of Judah, he muſt come, ſays he, out of “ the tribe of Judah, and from Bethlehem; but we “ now obſerve, that no one of the ſtock of Iſrael “ remains in Bethlehem, becauſe it is forbidden that “ any one of the Jews ſhould continue on the bor- “ der of that country——how ſhall the gover- “ nour be born in Judea, come forth from Bethle- “ hem, as the divine books of the prophets de- “ clare, when there is none of Iſrael left there at “ this day, of whoſe lineage Chriſt can be born?— “ how ſhall he come out of Bethlehem, when there “ is none in Bethlehem of the ſtock of Iſrael?” And the paſſage they had in view, is Mic. v. 2. Now theſe very things they object to Jeſus, being the Meſſiah, were what were fulfilled in him, and proved him to be the perſon; for his ſuppoſed father, and real mother Mary, were of the houſe and lineage of David; and tho' he was conceived at Nazareth, and brought up there, yet by a remarkable providence, which brought Joſeph and Mary to Bethlehem, he was born there, Luke ii. 4, 5, 6, 7.

Ver. 43. So there was a diviſion among the people concerning him.] Some, tho' they did not go ſo far as to believe him to be the Meſſiah, yet took him to be a prophet, and a very extraordinary one: others made no difficulty to aſſert him to be the Chriſt; and others objected to it on account of the country from whence he came, and ſo fulfilled the words of Chriſt, Luke xii. 51.

Ver. 44. And ſome of them would have taken him, &c.] Some of the latter ſort, who did not believe he was the Meſſiah; who were the moſt averſe to him, and hot and furious againſt him; theſe were for ſeizing him at once in a violent manner, and for carrying him before the Sanhedrim, as an impoſtor and blaſphemer, to be examined, and tried, and judged by them, to whom it belonged to judge and determine concerning ſuch perſons: but no man laid hands on him; tho' they had a good will to it, no man had power to do it; they were held back and reſtrained by the providence of God; and were diverted from it upon one conſideration or another; either fearing the people, or being awed by the majeſty of Chriſt's countenance, or words; the true reaſon of which was, that which is before given, that his hour was not yet come.

Ver. 45. Then came the officers to the chief-prieſts and Phariſees, &c.] Who were aſſembled together in council, as the great Sanhedrim of the nation; who were ſitting and expecting Jeſus to be brought before them. The ſame officers they ſent to take him, ver. 32. returned to them without him; for tho' they were ſent on that errand which they intended to have performed, yet they were not on the ſide of thoſe who were for ſeizing him by force, nor of thoſe who objected to his being the Meſſiah; but rather took part with thoſe who affirmed he was the Meſſiah; or at leaſt looked upon him to be ſome extraordinary prophet: and they ſaid unto them; that is, the chief-prieſts and Phariſees ſaid to the officers; the Syriac verſion reads, the prieſts ſaid unto them: why have ye not brought him? They mention not the name of Jeſus by way of contempt, and knowing that the officers would eaſily underſtand them; tho' the Perſic verſion expreſſes it, reading the words thus, why have ye not brought Jeſus? ſeeing them returned without him, they were tranſported with rage and fury, and fell upon them in a fierce and furious manner, for diſobeying their orders, who had ſat there waiting ſome time, and hoping, and not doubting, but they ſhould have him in their hands, whoſe blood they were thirſting after: wherefore it was a great diſappointment to them, and much enraged them to ſee them come without him.

Ver. 46. The officers anſwered, &c.] Very honeſtly and uprightly, making uſe of no ſhifts and excuſes; as that they could not find him, or could not come at him, becauſe of the multitude about him, or that they were afraid of the people, leſt they ſhould riſe upon them, and ſtone them, and reſcue Jeſus; which would have carried a ſhew of probability, and have brought them off; but they tell the naked truth, ſaying, never man ſpake like this man; not Moſes, the ſpokeſman of the people of Iſrael; nor David, the anointed of the God of Jacob, the ſweet Pſalmiſt of Iſrael; nor Solomon, the wiſeſt of men; nor that ſublime and evangelical prophet Iſaiah; nor any of the other prophets; nor John Baptiſt his fore-runner, the voice of one crying in the wilderneſs: never man ſpoke words for matter like him; ſuch gracious words, or words, and doctrines of grace, which ſo fully expreſs the grace of God, and are ſo grateful to men; ſuch as free juſtification by his righteouſneſs, full pardon by his blood, peace and reconciliation by his ſacrifice, the liberty of captives from the bondage of ſin, ſatan, and the law, and ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation by him: never man ſpoke ſuch words of truth, as he who is full of truth, and truth itſelf did: or ſuch words of wiſdom, who is the wiſdom of God, on whom the ſpirit of wiſdom reſted, and in whom are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge; nor ſuch wholeſome and ſalutary words, which nouriſh up unto eternal life. Nor did ever any ſpeak words for form and manner, as he did; words ſo apt and pertinent, with ſuch propriety, beauty, and gracefulneſs, with ſuch majeſty and authority, and with ſuch power and efficacy; which at once charmed the ear, affected the heart, carried evidence and conviction with them, enlightened the underſtanding, and faſtened attention to them; which was the caſe with theſe men, ſo that they had not power to execute their commiſſion. He delivered ſuch excellent things, and in ſuch a charming manner, they could not find in their hearts to uſe any violence towards him; or be the means of bringing him into any trouble or danger. The Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions read, never man ſpake as this man ſpeaks.

Ver. 47. Then anſwered them the Phariſees, are ye alſo deceived?] As well as the common people; you that have been ſo long in our ſervice, and ſhould know better; or who, at leaſt, ſhould have taken the ſenſe of your ſuperiors, and ſhould have waited to have had their opinion and judgment of him, and been determined by that, and not ſo haſtily have joined with a deluded ſett of people. It was the common character of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, and ſo of all his faithful miniſters in all ſucceeding ages, that they were deceivers, and the people that followed them deceived, a parcel of poor deluded creatures, carried aſide by their teachers; when, on the other hand, they are the deceived ones, who live in ſin, and indulge themſelves in it; or who truſt in themſelves that they are righteous; who think they are ſomething, when they are nothing; who imagine, that touching the righteouſneſs of the law, they are blameleſs, are free from ſin, and need no repentance; who follow the traditions and commandments of men: whereas theſe cannot be deceived, who follow Chriſt, the way, the truth, and the life, and his faithful miniſters, who ſhew unto men the way of ſalvation.

Ver. 48. Have any of the rulers, &c.] In the Sanhedrim, or of the ſynagogues; or the civil magiſtrates, the noble, rich, and wealthy: or of the Phariſees, believed on him? men famous for wiſdom, learning, and holineſs. It muſt be owned, there were but very few of this ſort, and perhaps not an inſtance of this kind had as yet occured to them; there was Nicodemus, who is mentioned in the context, who was both a ruler and a Phariſee; and Joſeph of Arimathea, a rich counſellor; but they neither of them openly ſhowed themſelves to be the diſciples of Chriſt till his death: and beſides theſe, there were ſome women, as Joanna, the wife of Chuza, Herod's ſteward, Suſanna, and ſome other women, who miniſtred to him of their ſubſtance; but the far greater part of his followers were poor and illiterate: and this has been the common caſe of thoſe that have believed in Jeſus, for the moſt part, ever ſince, and therefore ſhould not be a ſtumbling to any. God is pleaſed to hide the great things of the Goſpel from the wiſe and prudent, the rich and noble, and preach and reveal them to the poor and fooliſh: nor is a doctrine a whit the truer for being eſpouſed by the rich, and wiſe men of this world, but rather to be ſuſpected on that account.

Ver. 49. But this people who knoweth not the law are curſed.] With great contempt they ſtile the followers of Jeſus this people; the common people, the dregs of them, the refuſe of the earth; and whom they call, עם הארץ, the people of the earth, in diſtinction from the wiſe men, and their diſciples: and when they ſpeak the beſt of them, their account is this [p]; "one of the people of the "earth is one that has moral excellencies, but not "intellectual ones; that is, there is in him com"mon civility, but the law is not in him;" as here, who knoweth not the law: they always reckon them very ignorant. Says one [q] of their writers, "they that are without knowledge are the multi"tude." And elſewhere 'tis ſaid [r], "the old men "of the people of the earth, when they grow old "their knowledge is diſturbed, (or is loſt) as it is "ſaid, Job xii. 20. but ſo it is not with the old men "of the law, when they grow old, their knowledge "reſts upon them, as it is ſaid, Job xii. 12. with "the ancient is wiſdom." Upon which one of the commentators [s] has this Gloſs; "theſe are the diſ"ciples of the wiſe men; for the people of the "earth, what wiſdom is there in them?" By the law here, is meant either the written law of Moſes, which the Phariſees boaſted of, and of their knowledge of it, as having the key of knowledge to open it; as underſtanding the true ſenſe, and capable of giving a right interpretation of it, to the people; tho' they themſelves were wretchedly ignorant of it, as appears by their falſe Gloſſes on it, refuted by our Lord in Matt. v. or elſe the oral law is here intended, which they pretended was given by word of mouth to Moſes, and handed down to poſterity from one to another; and this lay among the doctors: they tell us [t], that Moſes received it at Sinai, and delivered it to Joſhua, and Joſhua to the elders, and the elders to the prophets, and the prophets to the men of the great ſynagogue (Ezra's) the laſt of which was Simeon the juſt; Antigonus, a man of Socho, received it from him; and Joſe ben Joezer, and Joſe ben Jochanan, received it from him; and Joſhua ben Perachia, (whom they ſometimes ſay was the maſter of Jeſus of Nazareth) and Nittai the Arbelite, received it from them; by whom it was delivered to Judah ben Tabai, and Simeon ben Shetach; and from them it was received by Shemaiah, and Abtalion, who delivered it to Hillell, and Shammai; who, or whoſe ſcholars were, at this time, when theſe words were ſpoken, the preſent poſſeſſors of it, and taught it their diſciples in their ſchools: and thus it was handed down from one to another, until the times of R. Judah, who collected the whole of the traditions of the elders together, and publiſhed it under the title of the Miſna; and then, as Maimonides ſays [u], it was revealed to all Iſrael; whereas before it was but in a few hands, who inſtructed others in it: but as for the common people, they knew little of it, eſpecially of the nice diſtinctions and deciſions of it; and theſe people were always had in great contempt by the wiſe men: they would not receive a teſtimony from them, nor give one for them, nor deliver a ſecret to them, nor proclaim any thing of theirs that was loſt, nor walk with them in the way, nor make a guardian of any of them [w]. The people of the earth were not reckoned holy or religious [x], but generally profane and wicked; that they were abandoned to ſin, rejected of God, and to be caſt off by men; yea, they will not allow that they ſhall riſe again at the laſt day, unleſs it be for the ſake of ſome wiſe men they are allied unto, or have done ſome ſervice for. They ſay [y], "whoever miniſters in the "light of the law, the light of the law will quicken "him; but whoever does not miniſter in the light "of the law, the light of the law will not quicken "him.—tho' it is poſſible for ſuch an one to cleave "to the Shekinah—for every one that marries his "daughter to a ſcholar of a wiſe man, or makes "merchandize for the diſciples of the wiſe men, "and they receive any advantage from his goods, "this brings on him what is written, as if he "cleaved to the Shekinah." Thus we ſee in what contempt the common people were with the learned doctors, and what an opinion theſe men had of the followers of Chriſt; though, in truth, they were not ſo ignorant of the law as themſelves: they knew the ſpirituality of it, that it reached to the thoughts of the heart, as well as to external actions; they knew what it required, and their own impotence to anſwer its demands; they knew the wrath, terror, and curſes of it, and that Chriſt only was the fulfilling end of it, for righteouſneſs to thoſe that believed in him: and they were far from being curſed perſons; they were bleſſed with all ſpiritual bleſſings; with the pardon of their ſins, and the juſtification of their perſons; with grace and peace in their ſouls, and would be introduced as the bleſſed of the Father into his kingdom and glory.

Ver. 50. Nicodemus ſaith unto them, &c?] To the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, who were running down Chriſt, and his followers, in great wrath and fury: he that came to Jeſus by night; ſee John iii. 1, 2. being one of them; a member of the Sanhedrim.

Ver. 51. Doth our law judge any man, &c.] Or condemn any man; or can any man be lawfully condemned: before it hear him; what he has to ſay for himſelf; is this the uſual proceſs in our courts? or is this a legal one to condemn a man unheard? and know what he doth? what his crimes are. This he ſaid, having a ſecret reſpect for Chriſt, though he had not courage enough openly to appear for him.

Ver. 52. They anſwered and ſaid unto him, &c.] Being diſpleaſed with him, and as reproaching him, tho' they could not deny, or refute what he ſaid: art thou alſo of Galilee? a follower of Jeſus of Galilee, whom, by way of contempt, they called the Galilean, and his followers Galileans, as Julian the apoſtate after them did; for otherwiſe they knew that Nicodemus was not of the country of Galilee: ſearch and look; into the hiſtories of former times, and eſpecially the ſcriptures: for out of Galilee ariſeth no prophet; but this is falſe, for Jonah the prophet was of Gath Hepher, which was in the tribe of Zebulun, which tribe was in Galilee; ſee 2 Kings xiv. 25. Joſh. xix. 10, 13, 16. And the Jews [z] themſelves ſay, that Jonah, the ſon of Amittai, was, מזבולן, of Zebulun, and that his father was of Zebulun, and his mother was of Aſher [a]; both which tribes were in Galilee: and if no prophet had, as yet, ariſe from thence, it did not follow that no one ſhould ariſe: beſides, there is a prophecy in which it was foretold, that a prophet, and even the Meſſiah, the great light, ſhould ariſe in Galilee; ſee Iſ. ix. 1, 2. and they themſelves ſay, that the Meſſiah ſhould be revealed in Galilee; ſee the note on ver. 41.

Ver. 53. And every man went unto his own houſe.] The officers not bringing Jeſus with them, and the Sanhedrim being poſed with Nicodemus, broke up without doing any buſineſs, and every member of it went home: this we may ſuppoſe was about the time of the evening ſacrifice; for "the great Sanhedrim ſat from the time of the morning daily ſacrifice, to the time of the evening daily ſacrifice [b]:" and it is ſaid [c], that "after the evening daily ſacrifice, the Sanhedrim went, לביתם, to their own houſes;" as they now did, and not to their booths, the feaſt of tabernacles being now over.

CHAP. VIII.

Ver. 1. JESUS went unto the mount of Olives.] Which lay eaſtward of Jeruſalem, about a mile from it; hither Chriſt went on the evening of the laſt day of the feaſt of tabernacles; partly to decline the danger, and avoid the ſnares the Jews might lay for him in the night-ſeaſon, having been diſappointed and confounded in the day-time; and it may be for the ſake of recreation and diverſion, to ſup with his dear friends Lazarus, Martha, and Mary, who lived at Bethany, not far from this mount; and chiefly for private prayer to God, on account of himſelf as man, and for his diſciples, and for the ſpread of his Goſpel, and for the enlargement of his intereſt; this being his common and uſual method, Luke xxi. 37.

Ver. 2. And early in the morning he came again into the temple, &c.] Which ſhows his diligence, conſtancy, and aſſiduity, in his miniſterial work, as well as his courage and intrepidity; being fearleſs of his enemies, though careful to give them no advantage againſt him, before his time: and all the people came unto him; which alſo commends the induſtry and diligence of his hearers, who were forward to hear him, and were early at the temple for that purpoſe, and that in great numbers: and he ſat down and taught them; he ſat, as his manner was; ſee the note on Matt. v. 1. and taught them as one having authority, and ſuch doctrine, and in ſuch a manner, as never man did; with all plainneſs, boldneſs, and freedom.

Ver. 3. And the Scribes and Phariſees, &c.] The members of the Sanhedrim, who had been ſo miſerably diſappointed the day before, were no leſs diligent and induſtrious in their wicked way, ſeeking all opportunities, and taking all advantages againſt Chriſt; and fancying they had got ſomething whereby to enſnare him, and bring him into diſgrace or danger, they purſue it; and brought unto him a woman taken in adultery; who, as ſome conjecture, might have been taken in it the day before, in one of their booths; being drawn into it through intemperance and carnal mirth, which at this feaſt they greatly indulged themſelves in; which ſhows, that they were far from drawing the Holy Ghoſt at this time upon them; that on the contrary, they fell into the hands, and under the power of the unclean ſpirit: who this woman was, is not material to know; what is pretended to be taken out of the annals of the Spaniſh Jews, is no doubt a fable; that ſhe was the wife of one Manaſſeh of Jeruſalem, an old man, whoſe name was Suſanna [d]: and when they had ſet her in the midſt; of the company, as the Perſic verſion reads, to be ſeen by all the people. This hiſtory of the woman taken in adultery, is wanting in the Alexandrian copy, and in other ancient copies; nor is it in Nonnus, Chryſoſtom, and Theophylact; nor in any of the editions of the Syriac verſion, until it was reſtored by De Dieu, from a copy of Archbiſhop Uſher's; but was in the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions, and in the Harmonies of Tatian and Ammonius; the former of which, lived about the year 160, and ſo within 60 years, or thereabouts, of the death of the Evangeliſt John, and the other about the year 230; it was alſo in Stephens's ſixteen ancient Greek copies, and in all Beza's ſeventeen, excepting one; nor need the authenticneſs of it be doubted of; Euſebius [e] ſays, it is in the Goſpel according to the Hebrews; nor ſhould its authority be called in queſtion.

Ver. 4. They ſay unto him, Maſter, &c.] They applied to him in a handſome and reſpectful manner, the better to cover their ill deſign: this woman was taken in adultery; by two perſons at leaſt, who could be witneſſes of it; otherwiſe the accuſation was not legal; ſee Deut. xix. 15. though in the caſe of a wife ſuſpected of adultery, they admitted a ſingle witneſs as valid [f]: in the very act; or in the theft itſelf, for adultery is a theft; it is an unlawful uſe of another's property; ſee this word uſed in the ſame ſenſe, in Heliodor. l. 1. §. 11.

Ver. 5. Now Moſes in the law commanded us, that ſuch ſhould be ſtoned, &c.] Not in Lev. xx. 10. for though according to the law there, an adultereſs, one that was a married woman, and ſo an adulterer, that was a married man, were to be put to death; yet the death was not ſtoning, but ſtrangling; for it is a rule with the Jews [g], that where death is ſimply mentioned (without reſtraining it to any particular kind) ſtrangling is intended, and which rule they apply to this law: and accordingly in their Miſna, or oral law, one that lies with another man's wife, is reckoned among thoſe that are to be ſtrangled [h]: Kimchi indeed ſays [i], that adultereſſes, according to the law, are to be ſtoned with ſtones; but then this muſt be underſtood of ſuch as are betrothed, but not married; and ſuch a perſon, Moſes has commanded in the law, to be ſtoned, Deut. xxii. 23, 24. And with this agree the traditions of the Jews [k]; "a daughter of Iſrael muſt be ſtoned, who is, ארוסה ולא נשואה, betrothed, but not married." And ſuch an one we muſt believe this woman was; ſhe was betrothd to a man, but not married to him, and therefore to be ſtoned: the Jews [l] have alſo a ſaying, that "if all adulterers were puniſhed with ſtoning, according to the law, the ſtones would be conſumed, but they would not be conſumed;" adultery was ſo common with that people: but what ſayeſt thou? doſt thou agree with Moſes, or not?

Ver. 6. This they ſaid, tempting him, &c.] For they brought this woman, and expoſed her in this manner, not becauſe of their abhorrence and deteſtation of the ſin; nor did they put the above queſtion to Chriſt, out of their great reſpect to the law of Moſes; which in many inſtances, and ſo in this, they in a great meaſure made void, by their traditions; tions; for they ſay, that for ſuch an offence as adultery, they did not put to death, nor beat, unleſs there was a previous admonition; the uſe of which was, to diſtinguiſh between preſumptuous ſins, and wilful ones [m]; but if there was no admonition, and the woman, even a married woman, if ſhe confeſſed the crime, all her puniſhment was to have her dowry taken from her, or to go away without it [n]: now theſe maſters ſay nothing about the admonition, nor do they put the queſtion, whether this woman was to be dealt with according to their traditions, or according to the law of Moſes? but what was the ſenſe of Chriſt, whether Moſes's law was to be attended to, or whether he would propoſe another rule to go by? and their view in this was, that they might have to accuſe him; that ſhould he agree with Moſes, then they would accuſe him to the Roman governour, for taking upon him to condemn a perſon to death, which belonged to him to do; or they would charge him with ſeverity, and acting inconſiſtently with himſelf, who received ſuch ſort of ſinners, and eat with them; and had declared, that publicans and harlots would enter into the kingdom of heaven, when the Scribes and Phariſees would not; and if he ſhould diſagree with Moſes, then they would traduce him among the people, as an enemy to Moſes and his law, and as a patron of the moſt ſcandalous enormities: but Jeſus ſtooped down, and with his finger wrote on the ground; ſome think [o], he wrote in legible characters the ſins of the woman's accuſers; and the learned Wagenſeil [p] makes mention of an ancient Greek manuſcript he had ſeen, in which were the following words, the ſins of every one of them: Dr. Lightfoot is of opinion, that this action of Chriſt, tallies with, and has ſome reference to, the action of the prieſt at the trial of the ſuſpected wife; who took of the duſt of the floor of the tabernacle, and infuſed it in the bitter waters for her to drink; but it is moſt likely, that Chriſt on purpoſe put himſelf into this poſture, as if he was buſy about ſomething elſe, and did not attend to what they ſaid; and hereby caſt ſome contempt upon them, as if they and their queſtion were unworthy of his notice: and this ſenſe is confirmed by what follows, as though he heard them not; though this clauſe is not in many copies, nor in the Vulgate Latin, nor in any of the Oriental verſions, but is in five of Beza's copies, and in the Complutenſian edition.

Ver. 7. So when they continued aſking him, &c.] For obſerving that he put himſelf in ſuch a poſture, they concluded that they had puzzled and perplexed him, and that he knew not what to ſay; and therefore they were more urgent for a ſpeedy anſwer, hoping they ſhould get an advantage of him; and that they ſhould be able to expoſe him, and that his confuſion would appear to all the people: he lift up himſelf and ſaid unto them; having raiſed up himſelf, he looked wiſhly at them, and returned them this wiſe anſwer to their confuſion: he that is without ſin among you; meaning, not that was entirely free from ſin, in heart, in lip, and life; for there is no ſuch perſon; the moſt holy man in life, is not in ſuch ſenſe, free from ſin; but that was without any notorious ſin, or was not guilty of ſome ſcandalous ſin, and particularly this of adultery; which was in this age a prevailing ſin, and even among their doctors; hence our Lord calls that generation, an adulterous one, Matt. xii. 39. and which was literally true of them; with this compare, Rom. ii. 22. Adultery increaſed to ſuch a degree in this age, that they were obliged to leave off the trial of ſuſpected wives, becauſe their huſbands were generally guilty this way; and the waters would have no effect, if the huſband was criminal alſo: ſo the Jews ſay [q], “when adulterers increaſed, the “bitter waters ceaſed; and Rabban Jochanan ben “Zaccai (who was now living) cauſed them to “ceaſe.” In vindication of which, he cited the paſſage in Hoſ. iv. 14. and this agrees with their own account of the times of the Meſſiah, and the ſigns thereof, among which ſtands this [r]; “in the age “in which the Son of David comes, the houſe of “aſſembly (the Gloſs interprets it the place where “the diſciples of the wiſe men meet to learn the “law) ſhall become, לזונות, a brothel houſe.” And that this ſin ſo greatly prevailed, our Lord well knew; and perhaps none of thoſe Scribes and Phariſees were free from it, in one ſhape or another; and therefore bids him that was, firſt caſt a ſtone at her; alluding to the law in Deut. xvii. 7. which required the hands of the witneſſes to be upon a perſon firſt, to put him to death; and as Dr. Lightfoot thinks, referring to their own ſenſe and opinion, in trying a wife ſuſpected of adultery; that if the huſband was guilty the ſame way, the waters would have no effect: by this anſwer of our Lord, he at once wrought himſelf out of the dilemma, they thought to diſtreſs him with; for though he paſſed no ſentence upon the woman, and ſo took not upon him the judiciary power, with which they could accuſe him to the Roman governour, yet he manifeſtly appeared to agree with Moſes, that ſuch an one deſerved to be ſtoned; wherefore they could not charge him with being contrary to Moſes; and by putting him that was without ſin, to caſt the firſt ſtone at her, he ſhewed himſelf merciful to the woman, and to them, to be the ſearcher of hearts.

Ver. 8. And again he ſtooped down, and wrote on the ground.] As before, having ſaid enough to confound them; and yet unwilling to purſue the matter any further, or publickly expoſe them in any other way; and that they might have an opportunity of withdrawing themſelves without any further notice of his, he took this method.

Ver. 9. And they which heard it, &c.] Not all, not the diſciples of Chriſt, nor the multitude, but the Scribes and Phariſees: being convicted by their own conſcience; that they were not without ſin, nor free from this; they had a beam in their own eye, who were ſo forward to obſerve the mote in another's; and oftentimes ſo it is, that thoſe who are moſt forward to reprove, and bare hardeſt on others for their ſins, are as culpable in another way, if not in the ſame; when ſin lies at the door, and conſcience is awakened and open, it is as good as a thouſand witneſſes; and lets in, and owns the ſin which lies heavy, and makes ſad work; and fills with anguiſh, confuſion, and ſhame, as it did theſe men: who went out one by one; from the temple, in as private a manner, and as unobſerved as they could: beginning at the eldeſt; who might have been moſt culpable, or however ſooneſt took the hint, being more wiſe and ſagacious: unto the laſt; this is wanting in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Perſic verſions, and in two of Beza's copies, and the Baſil edition: and Jeſus was left alone; not by his diſciples, nor the multitude, but his antagoniſts, who came to tempt and enſnare him: for it follows, and the woman ſtanding in the midſt; that is, of the company as before.

[q] Miſn. Sota, c. 9. §. 9.

[r] Miſn. ib. c. 9. §. 15. T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 97. 1.

Ver. 10. When Jeſus had lift himſelf up, &c.] From the earth, towards which he ſtooped, and on which he had been writing: and ſaw none but the woman; that is, none of thoſe that had brought her there, and had accuſed her to him: he ſaid unto her, woman, where are thoſe thine accuſers? the Syriac and Arabic verſions read only, where are theſe? theſe men, that brought thee here, and charged thee with this crime: hath no man condemned thee? has no one offered to do unto thee, what I propoſed? what, not one that could take up a ſtone, and caſt at thee? was there not one of them free from this ſin? could no man take upon him to execute this ſentence?

Ver. 11. She ſaith, no man, Lord, &c.] No man ſaid a word to me, or lift up his hand againſt me, or moved a ſtone at me: and Jeſus ſaid unto her, neither do I condemn thee; Chriſt came not into the world to act the part of a civil magiſtrate, and therefore refuſed to arbitrate a caſe, or be concerned in dividing an inheritance between two brethren, Luke xii. 13, 14. Nor did he come into the world to condemn it, but that the world through him, might be ſaved, John iii. 17. nor would he paſs any other ſentence on this woman, than what he had done; nor would he inflict any puniſhment on her himſelf; but ſuitable and agreeable to his office, as a prophet, he declares againſt her ſin, calls her to repentance, and bids her go and ſin no more; leſt as he ſaid to the man he cured at Betheſda's pool, a worſe thing ſhould come unto her. Wherefore the Jew [s] has no reaſon to object to this conduct of Chriſt, as if he acted contrary to the law, in Deut. xiii. 5. Thou ſhalt put the evil away from the midſt of thee; and alſo to the ſanctions of all civil laws among men, which order the removal of evil, by putting delinquents to death; and he obſerves, that thoſe that believe in him, don't follow him in this, but put adulterers and adultereſſes to death; and that indeed, ſhould his example and inſtructions take place, all courts of judicature muſt ceaſe, and order be ſubverted among men: but it ſhould be obſerved, that our Lord manifeſted a regard, even to the law of Moſes, when he bid this woman's accuſers that were without ſin, to caſt the firſt ſtone at her; though as for the law in Deut. xiii. 5. that reſpects a falſe prophet, and not an adulterer or an adultereſs; nor do the civil laws of all nations, require death in the caſe of adultery; and did they, Chriſt here neither by his words or actions, contradicts and ſets aſide any ſuch laws of God or man; he left this fact to be enquired into, examined, and judged, and ſentence paſſed by proper perſons, whoſe buſineſs it was: as for himſelf, his office was not that of a civil magiſtrate, but of a ſaviour and redeemer; and ſuitable to that, he acted in this caſe; he did not connive at the ſin, he reproved for it; nor did he deny that ſhe ought to ſuffer according to the law of Moſes, but rather ſuggeſts ſhe ought; but as this was not his province, he did not take upon him to pronounce any ſentence of condemnation on her; but called her to repentance, and as the merciful and compaſſionate Saviour, gave her reaſon to hope for pardon and eternal life.

Ver. 12. Then ſpake Jeſus again unto them, &c.] The Syriac fragment of Biſhop Uſher's, publiſhed by De Dieu, prefaces this verſe thus, when they were gathered together, Jeſus ſaid, &c. that is, the Scribes and Phariſees, who went out and returned again; or ſome others of them, who came after this, to whom Chriſt addreſſed himſelf thus: I am the light of the world; which he might ſay, on occaſion of the riſing ſun, which was now up, and might ſhine brightly in their faces; ſee ver. 2. which is, אור העולם, the light of the world, as Aben Ezra in Pſal. xix. 8. rightly calls it: thus on occaſion of the water in Jacob's well, he diſcourſed of living water; and upon the Jews at Capernaum mentioning the manna, he treated at large concerning himſelf as the bread of life: and he might alſo make uſe of this character, and apply it to himſelf, with a view to ſome paſſages in the Old Teſtament, which ſpeak of him under the metaphor of the ſun, as Pſal. lxxxiv. 11. Mal. iv. 2. and repreſent him as the light; and the Jews [t] themſelves ſay, that light is one of the names of the Meſſiah; and God himſelf is called by them, the light of the world [u]: and likewiſe he may have regard to thoſe pompous titles and characters, which the Jewiſh doctors aſſumed arrogantly to themſelves, and oppoſe himſelf to them; for they not only called Moſes their maſter, אור העולם, the light of the world [w], and alſo the law of Moſes [x], but their Rabbins and doctors; ſee the note on Matt. v. 14. By the world here is meant, not the whole world, and all the individuals of it; for though Chriſt, as the creator of all things, is the light of men, and does lighten every individual man, with the light of nature and reaſon, yet not in a ſpiritual and ſaving manner, as is here intended; nor the whole body of the elect of God, though they are ſometimes called the world, being the better part of it, and are made light in the Lord, in a ſpecial ſenſe; nor the Jews only, and the choſen of God among them, though Chriſt was a great light to many of them, that ſat in darkneſs, and in the ſhadow of death; but the Gentiles are here deſigned, who were uſually called by the Jews, the world; ſee the note on John iii. 16. And theſe were in groſs darkneſs before the coming of Chriſt, about the divine being, concerning the object, nature, and manner of worſhip; the ſcriptures, the law, and Goſpel; the Meſſiah, and his office and work; the Spirit of God, and his operations of grace; the reſurrection of the dead, and a future ſtate; now Chriſt came to be a light of the Gentiles, as well as the glory of his people Iſrael: our Lord ſeems to have reſpect to the prophecy of him, in Iſa. xlii. 6. as well as alludes to the ſun in the firmament; whoſe light is diffuſed to all the nations of the earth, and not confined to one ſpot of land only: but ſince Chriſt was the miniſter of the circumciſion, and was ſent only to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael, it may be aſked, how could he be the light of the Gentiles? to which it may be replied, that he was ſo by his apoſtles, who were ſent by him with the light of the Goſpel, into all the world; and by his Spirit, who enlightens the minds of men, who were darkneſs itſelf, with the light of Chriſt: for he is not only the author and giver of the light of nature to all men, but alſo of the light of grace to all his choſen ones, Gentiles as well as Jews; who in his light, ſee light; ſee themſelves loſt and undone, and him to be the only willing, able, ſuitable, and compleat Saviour; and behold wondrous things in the doctrines of the Goſpel, and have ſome glimpſe of glory: and he is likewiſe the author of all the light of glory, the ſaints enjoy in the other world; the Lamb is the light of that ſtate; he is their everlaſting light, and their glory; and happy are they who are his followers now: he that followeth me; not corporally, but ſpiritually, by faith; for as believing is expreſſed by coming to Chriſt, ſo by following after him; compare with this, John xii. 46. and with love and affection to him, the deſires of the ſoul being unto him, and to the remembrance of him; and in the exerciſe of every grace, and diſcharge of every duty, in imitation of him; and through a variety of ſufferings and tribulations, preſſing after him as the guide, captain, and fore-runner: and ſuch ſhall not walk in darkneſs; in the darkneſs of unregeneracy, not knowing what they are, and where they are, and whither they are going; for ſuch know they are in the light; and though they were blind, now they ſee; they know in whom they have believed, and that they are in Chriſt, in the covenant of grace, and in the love of God, and are going to heaven and eternal happineſs; ſuch ſhall not walk in the darkneſs of unbelief, but walk by faith on Chriſt; nor in the darkneſs of error, but in the truth of the Goſpel, and as becomes it; and though they may ſometimes walk without the light of God's countenance, yet light ſhall ariſe to them; and ſuch ſhall not go into darkneſs, as the Ethiopic verſion renders the words, into outer darkneſs, or the darkneſs of eternal death: but ſhall have the light of life; the grace of God abiding in them now; which as it is a well of living water, ſpringing up to eternal life, ſo it is a ſhining light, which increaſes to the perfect day: as darkneſs and death, ſo light and life go together; grace, which is enlightning, is alſo quickening and comforting, and iſſues in eternal light and life; a light that will never be extinguiſhed, and a life that will continue for ever, with never fading joys and pleaſures; ſee Job xxxiii. 30.

Ver. 13. The Phariſees therefore ſaid unto him, &c.] On account of his declaring himſelf the light of the world: theſe were either the ſame who went out of the temple, filled with remorſe of conſcience, and were now returned, and bearing him a grudge, came to take ſome advantage againſt him, if they could; or they were others of the ſame complexion, ſent by them, to make their obſervations on him: thou beareſt record of thyſelf. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, doſt thou praiſe thyſelf? which does not ſeem ſo decent and comely; ſee Prov. xxvii. 2. though it does not follow, that what a man ſays of himſelf is not truth, as theſe ſuggeſt: thy record is not true; for John teſtified of himſelf, that he was not the Chriſt, nor Elias, nor that prophet; but the voice of one crying in the wilderneſs; and this teſtimony he bore of himſelf, at the importunity of the Jews themſelves, John i. 19—23. and his teſtimony was true; ſo was that which Chriſt bore of himſelf; but their ſenſe rather ſeems to be, that it was not firm and authentic, and would not paſs in any court of judicature, ſince no man can be a witneſs in his own cauſe.

Ver. 14. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] In vindication of himſelf, and his teſtimony: though I bear record of myſelf, yet my record is true; which ſeems contradictory to what he ſays, in ch. v. 31. and may be reconciled thus; there he ſpeaks of himſelf as man, and in the opinion of the Jews, who took him to be a mere man; and alſo as alone, and ſeparate from his Father, as the context ſhows; therefore his ſingle teſtimony, and eſpecially concerning himſelf, could not be admitted as authentic among men; but here he ſpeaks of himſelf as a divine perſon, and in conjunction with his Father, with whom he was equal; and therefore his teſtimony ought to be looked upon, and received as firm and good, giving this as a reaſon for it: for I know whence I came, and whither I go; that he was truly the Son of God, the only-begotten of the Father, and had his miſſion and commiſſion from him into this world; and which, as he knew himſelf, he was able to make known, and make appear to others, by his credentials, the doctrines taught, and the miracles wrought by him; which proved him to be what he ſaid he was, the light of the world; and he knew that when he had done his work he came about, he ſhould go to his God and Father, and take his place at his right-hand: but ye cannot tell whence I come, and whither I go; they took him to be the ſon of Joſeph, and that he came out of Galilee; in which they were miſtaken; and when he talked of going away, they did not underſtand him, nor know whither he was going; they aſk if he was going to the diſperſed among the Gentiles, and teach them? and at another time, whether he would kill himſelf? they knew not, that through a train of ſufferings and death, he muſt, and would enter into his glory: the Perſic verſion inſerts another clauſe without any foundation; but ye know not from whence ye come, and whither ye go, and then follows the former; there might be a truth in this, they did not know their true original, that they were from beneath; nor whither they were going, to what diſmal abode, when they expected to enter, and enjoy the kingdom of heaven.

Ver. 15. Ye judge after the fleſh, &c.] According to their carnal affections and prejudices; taking the Meſſiah to be a temporal prince, and his kingdom to be of this world, they judged that Jeſus could not be he; they looked upon him as a mere man, and ſeeing him in much outward meanneſs, in his human nature, they judged of him according to this outward appearance: or ye that are after the fleſh judge; to which ſenſe the Perſic verſion agrees, for ye are carnal; and ſo judged as carnal men, who are very improper perſons to judge of ſpiritual things: I judge no man; in the ſame way, after the fleſh, or in a carnal manner, nor according to outward appearances, according to the ſight of the eyes, or the hearing of the ears: Chriſt did not take upon him to judge and determine in civil affairs, or in things pertaining to a court of judicature among men; this was not his province; an inſtance of this there is in the context, in not condemning the woman brought to him; nor did he judge the perſons and ſtates of men, or proceed to paſs any ſentence of condemnation on them; he came not to condemn, but ſave the world; this was not his buſineſs now; otherwiſe, all judgment is committed to him, and which he will exerciſe another day.

Ver. 16. And yet if I judge, my judgment is true, &c.] Becauſe he ſaw not as man did, nor looked unto, and judged according to the outward appearance of things; but looked into the heart, and knew what was in it, being the ſearcher and trier of it; to whom all things are naked and open, and therefore cannot be deceived or impoſed upon; his judgment muſt be ſure and infallible: for I am not alone, but I and the Father that ſent me; he was not ſeparate from the Father, or at a diſtance from him, when he was here on earth; he was in his boſom, and in heaven, as the Son of God, when as the Son of man; he was below; nor was he alone in his teſtimony and judgment, the Father joined with him therein; and which is a farther proof of the truth of his teſtimony, and the certainty of his judgment.

Ver. 17. It is alſo written in your law, &c.] The law of Moſes, which was given unto them, and they boaſted of; the paſſage referred to, is in Deut. xix. 15. ſee alſo Deut. xvii. 6. where though what follows, is not to be found in ſo many words, yet the ſenſe is there expreſſed: that the teſtimony of two men is true; concerning which the Jewiſh writers ſay [y], "they uſed not to determine any judiciary matter by the mouth of one witneſs, neither pecuniary cauſes, nor cauſes of life and death, as it is ſaid, Deut. xvii. 6." It is aſked [z] in their oral law, "if the teſtimony of two men ſtand, why does the ſcripture particularly mention three? (for no other reaſon) but to compare or equal three with two, that as three convict two of a falſhood, two may alſo convict three." On which one of their commentators [a] has this obſervation, taking notice of Deut. xix. 18. which ſpeaks of a ſingle witneſs; "Mar (a doctor) ſays, wherever it is ſaid a witneſs, it is to be underſtood of two, unleſs the ſcripture particularly ſpecifies one." In the caſe of a wife ſuſpected of adultery, and in the buſineſs of ſtriking off the neck of the heifer in caſe of murder, they admitted of one witneſs [b].

Ver. 18. I am one that bear witneſs of myſelf, &c.] As he does of his ſonſhip, in 1 John v. 7. And the Father that ſent me, beareth witneſs of me; as he did, by the deſcent of the Spirit upon him at his baptiſm, and by a voice from heaven, both at that time, and at his tranſfiguration, and by the miracles which he wrought; and particularly he bore teſtimony of him, long before in prophecy, that he was the light of the world, he now ſaid he was, Iſa. xlii. 6. ſo that here were two teſtifiers, his Father and himſelf; which ſhow them to be two diſtinct divine perſons, and equal to each other: and now if the teſtimony of two men is true, firm, and authentic, and to be depended upon and received, then much more the teſtimony of two divine perſons; ſee 1 John v. 9.

Ver. 19. Then ſaid they unto him, where is thy father? &c.] The Perſic verſion adds, ſhew him unto us; produce this witneſs boaſted of, let us ſee him; this they ſaid in a ſneering, taunting, and inſulting manner; where's thy father? what! he is in Galilee, fetch him from thence; it is Joſeph the carpenter you mean; a goodly witneſs indeed! Jeſus anſwered, ye neither know me nor my Father; if ye had known me, ye ſhould have known my Father alſo; they did not know the divine original of Chriſt, that he was the Son of God, and that God was his Father; they greatly boaſted of their knowledge of God, but they knew him not; their ignorance of Chriſt ſhowed it: the knowledge of both go together, and which is life eternal; nor can any truly know the one, without the other; and where the one is known, the other will be alſo; Chriſt is the brightneſs of his Father's glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon; ſo that he that has ſeen the one, muſt know the other; and indeed, no one can know the Father, but he to whom the Son reveals him: this was a ſevere mortification to theſe men of knowledge.

Ver. 20. Theſe words ſpake Jeſus in the treaſury, &c.] The place where the thirteen cheſts ſtood, into which the people put their voluntary contributions for the ſacrifices, and ſervice of the temple; the Ethiopic verſion renders it, at the alms-cheſt; ſee the note on Mark xii. 41. The deſign of this obſervation of the Evangeliſt, is to ſuggeſt to us, that it was in a very publick place, in the temple, openly, that Chriſt delivered the above words: as he taught in the temple; where the Jews reſorted, where his miniſtry was publick, and he ſpake freely, and without reſerve; in a very bold manner, with intrepidity, and without fear of man: and no man laid hands on him; though they had ſought to do it the day before; had ſent officers to take him; and they themſelves had a good-will to it; and yet they were ſo awed and over-ruled by one means, or one account or another, that no man did it: the reaſon was, for his hour was not yet come; the time appointed for his ſufferings and death.

Ver. 21. Then ſaid Jeſus again unto them, &c.] It may be, immediately after he had ſaid the above words; or rather ſome time after, it may be on the ſame day: I go my way; meaning, the way of all fleſh, or that he ſhould die: the way of ſpeaking ſhews, that his death was certain, a determined thing; which muſt be, and yet was voluntary; he was not drove, nor forced, but went freely; this being the path, the way, through which he muſt enter into his kingdom and glory: and ye ſhall ſeek me; that is, ſhall ſeek the Meſſiah, as their deliverer and ſaviour, when in diſtreſs; and whom he calls himſelf, becauſe he was the true Meſſiah, and the only Saviour and Redeemer of his people, in a ſpiritual ſenſe; otherwiſe they would not, nor did they ſeek Jeſus of Nazareth: and ſhall die in your ſins; or in your ſin; ſo it is in the Greek text, and in the Vulgate Latin, and Perſic verſions; meaning, in their ſin of unbelief, and rejection of him the true Meſſiah: the ſenſe is, that in the midſt of their calamities, which ſhould come upon them, for their ſin againſt him, they ſhould in vain ſeek for the Meſſiah, as a temporal deliverer of them; for their nation, city, and temple, and they therein ſhould utterly periſh, for their iniquity; and their ruin would not only be temporal, but eternal: ſince it follows, whither I go ye cannot come; ſignifying, that whereas he was going to his Father, to heaven and glory; to enjoy eternal happineſs at his Father's right-hand, in the human nature; they ſhould never come there, but whilſt many ſat down in the kingdom of heaven, with their fathers Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, who ſhould come from afar, they would be ſhut out, and not ſuffered to enter in.

Ver. 22. Then ſaid the Jews, will he kill himſelf? &c.] Which was not only a wicked, but a fooliſh conſequence, drawn from his words; for it by no means followed, becauſe he was going away, and whither they could not come, that therefore he muſt deſtroy himſelf; this ſeems to be what they would have been glad he would have done, and ſuggeſted the thought that he might do it, in which they imitated ſatan, Matt. iv. 6. under whoſe influence they now apparently were, and hoped that he would, which would at once extricate them out of their difficulties on his account: becauſe he ſaith, whither I go ye cannot come; this is no reaſon at all; for had Chriſt's meaning been, as they blaſphemouſly intimate, they might have deſtroyed themſelves too, and have gone after him.

Ver. 23. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] Upon this wicked remark of theirs, and query on his words: ye are from beneath; not only of the earth, earthy, and ſo ſpoke of the earth, and as carnal men; but even of hell, they were the children of the devil; they breathed his ſpirit, ſpoke his language, and did his luſts, as in ver. 44. I am from above; not with reſpect to his human body, which he did not bring with him from heaven, that was formed below, in the virgin's womb; otherwiſe he would not have been the ſeed of the woman, the ſon of Abraham, David, and Mary: but either with regard to his divine nature and perſon, he was of God, the Son of God, the only-begotten of the Father, who then lay in his boſom, and was in heaven above at that time; or to his miſſion, which was from heaven. Ye are of this world; they were, as they were born into the world, ſinful, carnal, and corrupt; they were in it, and belonged to it, had never been choſen, or called out of it; they had their converſation according to the courſe of it, and conformed to its evil cuſtoms and manners; they were under the influence of the God of the world, and were taken with the ſinful and ſenſual luſts thereof; they were men of worldly ſpirits; they minded earth, and earthly things, and had their portion in this world, and might be truly called the men of it. I am not of this world; he was in it, but not of it; he was come into it to ſave the chief of ſinners, but he did not belong to it, nor did he conform to it; for tho' he converſed with ſinners, eat with them, and received them, being called to repentance by him; yet he was ſeparate from them, and did not as they did: nor did he purſue the pleaſures, honours, and riches of this world, being all his days a man of ſorrows, and deſpiſed of men; and though Lord of all, had not where to lay his head.

Ver. 24. I ſaid therefore unto you, &c.] Becauſe they were from beneath, and of the world, and diſcovered an earthly, worldly, carnal, yea, deviliſh diſpoſition, in their conduct towards him: that ye ſhall die in your ſins; this he had ſaid in ver. 21. and now repeats it, and confirms it by the following reaſon: for if ye believe not that I am he; the everlaſting and unchangeable I am, the true God, God over all, bleſſed for ever; the eternal Son of God, God manifeſt in the fleſh, really made fleſh, and become incarnate; the true Meſſiah, the only saviour of ſinners; the one and only mediator between God and man; the head of the church, prophet, prieſt, and king, and the judge of quick and dead; as alſo the light of the world he had declared himſelf to be: theſe are things that are neceſſary to be believed concerning Chriſt; indeed, carnal and unregenerate men may believe all theſe things; the devils themſelves do, and tremble at them; but then they, and ſo unconverted men, have no faith in them, with an application of them to themſelves: true faith in Chriſt deals not with him in a general way, but in a ſpecial regard to a man's ſelf; it is a ſeeing of Chriſt for a man's ſelf; it is not an implicit faith, or a believing him to be what he is, merely upon report, but upon ſight; it is a going out of the ſoul to Chriſt, a renouncing its own righteouſneſs, and a truſting in him alone for life and ſalvation; it is with the heart, and from it, and is unfeigned; it works by love to Chriſt, and his people, and is attended with the fruits of righteouſneſs, and a chearful obedience to the commands and ordinances of Chriſt. Tho' perhaps no more than a general faith is here intended, for want of which, and their rejection of Jeſus, as the Meſſiah, the Jews ſuffered temporal ruin; and had they but believed that Jeſus was the Son of God, and true Meſſiah, they had been ſaved from that temporal deſtruction which came upon their nation, city, and temple; but not believing this in a general and notional way, they periſhed, as is here threatened: ye ſhall die in your ſins; in which they were, being defiled with them, guilty before God for them, under the power of them, and liable to puniſhment for them; and ſo they remained, and did remain, and were yet in their ſins, even until death, when they died in them, and for them, not only a corporal, but an eternal death: for dying in their ſins, theſe would be found upon them, and they would be charged with them, and muſt be anſwerable for them, and conſequently endure the puniſhment of them, which is the ſecond death. Dying in ſin, and dying in Chriſt, are too widely different things. They that die in faith, die in Chriſt; they that die in unbelief, die in ſin; and this is dreadful dying; ſee Joſh. xxii. 2[illegible] where the Targum paraphraſes it, and he, one man, (or alone) לא מות בחוביה, did not die in his ſins.

Ver. 25. Then ſaid they unto him, who art thou? &c.] That talks at this rate, and threatens with death, in caſe of unbelief; this they ſaid with an haughty air, and in a ſcornful manner: And Jeſus ſaith unto them, even the ſame that I ſaid unto you from the beginning; meaning, either of this diſcourſe, as that he was the light of the world, and which he continued to aſſert; or of his being had before the Sanhedrim, when he affirmed that God was his Father, and by many ſtrong arguments proved his divine Sonſhip; or of his miniſtry, when by miracles, as well as doctrines, he made it to appear that he was he that was to come, the true Meſſiah; or who ſpake from the beginning to Moſes, ſaying, I am that I am, hath ſent thee, and to the church, and Jewiſh fathers in the wilderneſs; and who is that Word that was from the beginning with God; and who is called the beginning, the firſt cauſe of all things, and of the creation of God; and ſome think this is intended here.

Ver. 26. I have many things to ſay, and to judge of you, &c.] Being God omniſcient, he knew their perſons and actions, their lives and converſations, and all their ſins and tranſgreſſions, which he could juſtly have complained of, and charged them with, and proved againſt them, and judged and condemned them for; but this was not his preſent buſineſs, he came not to judge and condemn, but to ſave: wherefore he waved theſe things, and took no notice of them, leaving them to his Father, who would call them to an account, and puniſh them for them: but he that ſent me is true; as to his promiſes concerning the miſſion of his Son, to be the ſaviour of ſinners; ſo to his threatenings, to bring down vengeance on thoſe that diſbelieve him, and reject him: and I ſpeak to the world, or in the world, thoſe things which I have heard of him; as concerning his love, grace, and mercy to thoſe that ſhould believe in him, ſo of the deſtruction of the deſpiſers and rejecters of him; which things he ſpoke not in ſecret, in a corner, but publickly and openly, before all the world, to Jews and Gentiles, and to as many as were in the treaſury, in the temple at this time; ſee John xviii. 20.

Ver. 27. They underſtood not that he ſpake to them of the Father.] That ſent him, and who was true and faithful to all he had ſaid, whether in a way of promiſe, or threatning; ſuch was their ſtupidity, that they did not know that he meant God the Father by him that ſent him, ſo deriving his miſſion and doctrine from him; their hearts were made fat, and hardened, and their eyes were blinded. The Vulgate Latin verſion reads, they did not know that he ſaid, God was his father; and ſo Beza's moſt ancient copy, and another exemplar of his.

Ver. 28. Then ſaid Jeſus unto them, &c.] Upbraiding them with their ignorance, and giving them a ſign, as well as pointing out the time when they either, by good or ſad experience, ſhould have knowledge of him: when ye have lift up the ſon of man; meaning himſelf, who was to be liſted up upon the croſs, as the ſerpent was upon the pole, in the wilderneſs; and which ſignified the manner of death he ſhould die, the death of the croſs; and ſuggeſted, that what the Jews deſigned for his reproach, ſhame, and abaſement, would be the way and means of his riſe and exaltation; and this lifting him up, or crucifying him, he aſcribes to them, becauſe they would deliver him to Pontius Pilate to be condemned, and ſtir up the people to aſk, and be importunate themſelves for his crucifixion: then ſhall ye know that I am he; the Son of God, and true Meſſiah, as the centurion, and thoſe that were with him did, when they obſerved the earthquake, and the things that were done at his death; and after the death, reſurrection, and aſcenſion of Chriſt, and the pouring forth of his Spirit, many of the Jews had not only a notional, but a true and ſpiritual knowledge of Jeſus, as the Meſſiah; and upon the deſtruction of their temple, city, and nation, and their diſappointment by falſe Chriſts, they doubtleſs many of them muſt, and did know, that the true Meſſiah was come, and that Jeſus of Nazareth was he: and that I do nothing of myſelf; ſee the note on ch. v. 19. but as my Father hath taught me, I ſpeak theſe things; this he ſays not as leſſening himſelf, or making himſelf inferior to the Father, but to ſhew the excellency of his doctrine, and to aſſert the original, authority, and divinity of it; ſuggeſting that it was not an human doctrine, or a device of man's, or his own, as man, but was divine, and from God; ſee ch. vii. 16.

Ver. 29. And he that ſent me is with me, &c.] By virtue of that near union there is between them, they being one in nature, eſſence, power, and glory, and by the gracious, powerful, comfortable, aſſiſting, and ſtrengthening preſence of his father, which he vouchſafed to him as man, and mediator: the Father hath not left me alone; Chriſt, as the Word, was with the Father from all eternity, and as the Son of God was in heaven, and in the boſom of the Father, when he, as the ſon of man, was here on earth; for tho' he came forth from the Father into this world, by aſſumption of the human nature, yet the Father was always with him, and he with the Father, thro' the unity of the divine nature; nor did he with-hold his ſupporting and aſſiſting preſence from him, as man; nor did he withdraw, at leaſt he had not yet withdrawn his gracious and comfortable preſence from him, tho' he afterwards did, when upon the croſs: compare with this ch. xvi. 32. for I do always thoſe things that pleaſe him; by ſubmitting to Goſpel-ordinances, as to baptiſm, at which the Father declared his well-pleaſedneſs in him; and by complying with the ordinances of the ceremonial law, which were typical of him; and by perfectly obeying the precepts of the moral law, and bearing the penalty of it; or by ſuffering and dying in the room and ſtead of his people; all which were the will of God, and well-pleaſing to him.

Ver. 30. As he ſpake theſe words, &c.] Concerning his being lifted up, or his crucifixion, and the knowledge the Jews ſhould then have of him; of the excellency and divinity of his doctrine, of his miſſion from the Father, and of the Father's preſence with him, and of his always doing the things that are pleaſing in his ſight; which were ſpoken by him with majeſty and authority, and came with power: many believed on him; as the Son of God, and true Meſſiah: faith came by hearing; Chriſt's hearers were of different ſorts; ſome underſtood him not, and diſbelieved, and rejected him; others had their eyes, and their hearts opened, and received him, and his words.

Ver. 31. Then ſaid Jeſus to thoſe Jews that believed on him, &c.] For he knew inſtantly who they were, and when they believed on him; and therefore he immediately turned himſelf to them, and thus addreſſed them: if ye continue in my word; meaning the Goſpel, called his, becauſe he was both the author, and preacher, and ſum, and ſubſtance of it: and to continue in it, is having cordially received it, to abide by it, and hold it faſt, and not to be moved from it, by the temptations of ſatan; the cunning of thoſe that lie in wait to deceive; nor by the revilings and perſecutions, the frowns and flatteries of men: and when men continue thus ſtedfaſt in it, and faithful to it, it is an evidence that it has come with power, and has a place in their hearts, and that they are the true followers of Chriſt: then are ye my diſciples indeed; there are two ſorts of diſciples of Chriſt; ſome are only nominal, and merely in profeſſion ſuch; and theſe ſometimes draw back from him, diſcontinue in his word, and go out from among his people; which ſhows that they never were of them, nor are the true diſciples of Jeſus; for the genuine diſciples of Chriſt, continue in his Goſpel, hold faſt to him the head, and remain with his people; which to do to the end, is an evidence of their being diſciples indeed.

Ver. 32. And ye ſhall know the truth, &c.] Either the truth of the Goſpel, the truth as it is in Jeſus; meaning, that they ſhould have a larger knowledge of it, while others are ever learning, and never come to the knowledge of the truth; but the Spirit of truth ſhould lead them into all truth, and cauſe them to grow and increaſe in Goſpel-light and knowledge; or Jeſus himſelf, who is the way, the truth, and the life: and the ſenſe is, that they ſhould know more of him, of the dignity of his perſon, of the nature and uſefulneſs of his offices, of the efficacy of his blood, the excellency of his righteouſneſs, and the fulneſs of his grace, and that for themſelves: and the truth ſhall make you free; from ignorance and error, and the prejudices of education, under which the whole nation laboured, and from the thraldom of the law.

Ver. 33. They anſwered him, &c.] Not the believing Jews, whom he peculiarly addreſſed, but the unbelieving Jews, who were preſent, and heard theſe things: we be Abraham's ſeed; this the Jews always valued themſelves upon, and reckoned themſelves, on this account, upon a level with the nobles and the princes of the earth. “Says R. Akiba[c], “even the poor of Iſrael are to be conſidered as if “they were, בני חורין, noblemen, that are fallen “from their ſubſtance, becauſe they are the children “of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob;” and were never in bondage to any man; which is a very great falſhood, for it was declared to Abraham himſelf, that his ſeed ſhould ſerve in a land, not theirs, and be afflicted four hundred years, as they were; and as the preface to the law which the Jews gloried in, ſhows, which ſays, that the Lord their God brought them out of Egypt, out of the houſe of bondage; and they were frequently overcome by their neighbours, the Moabites, Ammonites, and Philiſtines, and reduced to ſervitude under them, until delivered by one judge, or another: and not to take notice of their ſeventy years captivity in Babylon, they were at this very time under the Roman yoke, and paid tribute to Cæſar; and yet ſuch was the pride of their hearts, they would not be thought to be in bondage; and therefore, with an haughty air, add, how ſayeſt thou, ye ſhall be made free? when they thought themſelves, and would fain have been thought by others, to have been free already, and ſo to ſtand in no need of being made free.

[c] Miſn. Bava Kama, c. 8. §. 6. & T. Bab. Bava-Kama, fol. 86. 1. & 91. 1.

Ver. 34. Jeſus anſwered them, verily verily I ſay unto you, &c.] Taking no notice of their civil liberty, to which he could eaſily have replied to their confuſion and ſilence, he obſerves to them their moral ſervitude and bondage, and in the ſtrongeſt manner affirms, that whoſoever committeth ſin, is the ſervant of ſin: which muſt be underſtood, not of one that commits a ſingle act of ſin, tho' ever ſo groſs, as did Noah, Lot, David, Peter, and others, who yet were not the ſervants of ſin; or of ſuch who ſin thro' ignorance, weakneſs of the fleſh, and the power of ſatan's temptations, and eſpecially who commit ſin with reluctance, the ſpirit luſting againſt it; nor indeed of any regenerate perſons tho' they are not without ſin; nor do they live without the commiſſion of it, in thought, word, or deed; and tho' they fall into it, they don't continue and live in it, but riſe up out of it, thro' the grace of God, and by true repentance; and ſo are not to be reckoned the ſervants of ſin, or to be of the devil. But this is to be underſtood of ſuch whoſe biaſs and bent of their minds are to ſin; who give up themſelves unto it, and ſell themſelves to work wickedneſs; who make ſin their trade, buſineſs, and employment, and are properly workers of it, and take delight and pleaſure in it: theſe, whatever liberty they promiſe themſelves, are the ſervants of corruption; they are under the government of ſin, that has dominion over them; and they obey it in the luſts thereof, and are drudges and ſlaves unto it, and will have no other wages at laſt but death, even eternal death, if grace prevent not; ſee Rom. vi. 16. 2 Pet. ii. 19.

Ver. 35. And the ſervant abideth not in the houſe for ever, &c.] The ſervant of God, and of Chriſt, does, but not the ſervant of ſin: there may be ſervants of ſin in the houſe or church of God here below; and ſuch were theſe Jews Chriſt is ſpeaking to; but ſuch ſhall not abide there for ever: ſome that get into this houſe are quickly diſcerned, as Simon Magus was, and are ſoon removed; and others that may ſtay longer, are ſometimes ſuffered to fall into ſome foul ſin, or into ſome groſs error and hereſy, for which they are caſt out of the houſe or church of God, according to the rules of God's word; others make parties, draw diſciples after them, and ſeparate themſelves, and go out of their own accord, to ſerve their own purpoſes; and others, when perſecution and tribulation ariſe becauſe of the word, they are offended and gone; this is the fan with which Chriſt ſometimes winnows his floor, and removes the chaff; and thoſe that continue longeſt, even to the end of their days, or of the world, or the ſecond coming of Chriſt, as the fooliſh virgins, will then be diſcerned and ſeparated; for the ungodly ſhall not ſtand in judgment, nor ſinners in the congregation of the righteous; they ſhall not enter into the houſe above, into the houſe not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, which is Chriſt's Father's houſe: none but ſons are brought to glory; theſe are the only heirs of ſalvation; others will be bid to depart, as workers of iniquity, as the ſervants of ſin; even ſuch who have made a profeſſion of religion, and have been, and have had a ſtanding in the houſe of God below. The alluſion is to the caſe of ſervants in common; and, in a literal ſenſe, it is true both of good and bad ſervants: good ſervants don't always continue in their maſter's houſe; even an Hebrew ſervant, that loved his maſter, and would not go out free at the end of his ſervitude; and who, after having his ear bored, is ſaid to ſerve him for ever, Exod. xxi. 6. yet that for ever was but until the year of jubilee, whether near or remote, as the Jewiſh commentators [d] in general explain it; nay, if his maſter died before that time, he went out free; he was not obliged to ſerve his ſon or heirs; and ſo ſay the Miſnic doctors [e]: "one that is bored is obtained by boring, and he poſſeſſes himſelf (or becomes free) by the year of jubilee, and by the death of his maſter." And to this agrees what Maimonides [f] ſays; "he that has ſerved ſix years, and will not go out, lo, this is bored, and he ſerves until the year of jubilee, or until his maſter dies; and altho' he leaves a ſon, he that is bored does not ſerve the ſon; which may be learned from the letter of the words, he ſhall ſerve him, not his ſon, for ever, for his ever of the jubilee: from whence it appears, that he that is bored does not poſſeſs himſelf, (or is free) but by the jubilee, and by the death of his maſter." And one of their writers [g] obſerves, that the word rendered, ſhall ſerve him, is by Gematry, and not his ſon. And among the Romans, good ſervants were oftentimes made free, and bad ones were turned out, and put into a work-houſe, to grind corn in mills, a ſort of bridewell; and ſuch evil ſervants may more eſpecially be reſpected, ſince Chriſt is ſpeaking of ſervants of ſin: but the Son abideth ever; the Son of God, the only-begotten Son of God, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt will always continue as a Son in his own houſe, as the Lord and proprietor of it; and as an high-prieſt over it, having an unchangeable prieſthood; and as he that takes care of it, provides for it, and manages all the affairs thereof, the family in heaven and in earth being named of him. And as he, ſo all the adopted ſons of God ſhall continue, being pillars in this houſe, that ſhall never go out; ſuch are no more ſervants, nor foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the ſaints, and of the houſhold of God; and being ſons, are heirs, and ſhall never be caſt out, as the bond-woman and her ſon have been: but theſe being the children of the free, ſhall for ever enjoy the inheritance they are adopted to; once ſons, always ſo; the relation ever continues; they will ever remain in the family, and being intitled to the heavenly eſtate, ſhall ever poſſeſs it.

Ver. 36. If the Son therefore ſhall make you free, &c.] Alluding to the cuſtom of adoption by the ſons or brethren in the family, which obtained in Greece, called αδελφοθεσια, the adoption of brethren, as Grotius, and others have obſerved; or rather to a cuſtom among the Romans, of a ſon's making free after his father's death, ſuch as were born ſlaves in his houſe. Such a caſe as this is ſuppoſed [h]; "a man having a ſon or a daughter by his ſervant-maid, that which is born of her, ſince of a ſervant, is without doubt a ſervant: wherefore, if he (the ſon) ſhould ſay, this is my natural brother, or my natural ſiſter; for ſince my father "had children by his maid-ſervant, whom he did not make free; and he dying, the law has made me lord of theſe, εγω τȣτȣς ελευθερωσα, I have made theſe free, becauſe of their natural kindred." This is allowed to be a juſt and good reaſon of manumiſſion. Now this anſwers very much to the caſe in hand. Men are home-born ſlaves; the choſen people of God are ſuch by nature; they are born in ſin, and are the ſervants of it; Chriſt the Son makes them free; and then they are no more foreigners and ſtrangers, but fellow-citizens with the ſaints, and of the houſhold of God. This ſuggeſts, that true freedom is by Jeſus Chriſt, the Son of God; ſee Gal. v. 1. He it is that makes the ſaints free from ſin; not from the being of it in this life, but from the bondage and ſervitude of it, from its power and dominion, and from its guilt and liableneſs to puniſhment for it, by procuring the pardon of their ſins thro' his blood, and juſtifying their perſons by his righteouſneſs: he alſo makes them free, or delivers them from the captivity of ſatan, by ranſoming them out of his hands, taking the prey from the mighty, binding the ſtrong man armed, and delivering them from him, and from the power of darkneſs, and putting them into his own kingdom; he does not indeed free them altogether from his temptations, but he preſerves them by his power, from being hurt and deſtroyed by him: he likewiſe makes his people free from the law, not only the ceremonial law, which is aboliſhed by him, but from the moral law; not from obedience to it, as it is in his hands, and a rule of walk and converſation to them, but as in the hands of Moſes, and as a covenant of works, and from the rigorous exaction of it, and from ſeeking juſtification and life by it, and from its curſe and condemnation: and he gives them freedom of acceſs to God, as their father, thro' his blood, and by his Spirit; and admits them to all the privileges and immunities of the church below; and gives them a right to, faith in, and an expectation of the glorious liberty of the children of God hereafter; and ſuch are truly Chriſt's freemen: ye ſhall be free indeed; this is true freedom; what the Jews boaſted of, ſuppoſing what they ſaid was right, was but a ſhadow of freedom in compariſon of this; and that liberty which ſinful men promiſe themſelves in ſin, is all deceit; there's no true, ſolid, ſubſtantial freedom but what is by Chriſt, the ſon of God. Even that freedom which the children of God had under the legal diſpenſation, was a ſervitude, in compariſon of that which the ſaints enjoy by Chriſt under the Goſpel-diſpenſation; tho' they were ſons and heirs, yet being in nonage, differed nothing from ſervants, being under tutors and governours, in bondage under the elements of the world, and under the influence of a ſpirit of bondage unto fear; ſee Gal. iv. 1, 2, 3. Rom. viii. 15. but ſuch that have received the Spirit of adoption from Chriſt, they are really free: they have not only the name of children, and of freemen, but they are truly ſuch, and wholly ſo; perhaps there may be ſome reference had to ſuch ſort of perſons among the Jews, who were partly ſervants, and partly free: ſo it is ſaid [i], "מי שחציו עבד, he who is half a ſervant, or partly a ſervant, and partly free, ſhall ſerve his maſter one day, and himſelf another." And ſuch an one, as the commentators [k] ſay, is one who is a ſervant of two partners, and is made free by one of them; or who has paid half his price to his maſter (for his freedom) but the other half is ſtill due: and of one in ſuch circumſtances it is ſaid [l], that "he that is partly a ſervant, and partly free, may not eat of his maſter's" (lamb at the paſſover): but now thoſe who are made free by Chriſt the Son of God, they are not in part only, but are wholly free, and have a right to all the privileges of his houſe, to the ſupper of the Lord, and to every other immunity.

Ver. 37. I know that ye are Abraham's ſeed, &c.] In anſwer to the other part of the Jews objection to Chriſt, and in favour of themſelves, Chriſt owns that they were the natural ſeed of Abraham; for truth muſt be allowed to an adverſary. But then this hindered not but they might be, as they were, in moral bondage to ſin, and a generation of vipers, as thoſe of them who came to John's baptiſm were; and might not be the ſons of God, for not becauſe they were the natural ſeed of Abraham, were they all the adopted ſons of God; and might be caſt out of the houſe of God, as Iſhmael was caſt out of Abraham's, though he was his natural ſeed. And what follows, proves them to be under the power, and in the ſervitude of ſin, and that they were the ſeed of the ſerpent that was to bruiſe the heel of the woman's ſeed, or put the Meſſiah to death, tho' they were the natural ſeed of Abraham: but ye ſeek to kill me; which none but ſuch who are under the governing power of ſin, are ſlaves unto it, and the vaſſals of the devil, would ever do: the reaſon of which is, becauſe my word hath no place in you; their hearts were barred and bolted againſt it, with ignorance, enmity, and unbelief; it had no entrance into them; it did not come with power to their hearts, nor work effectually in them; it had no place at all in them, much leſs a dwelling; had it had one, it would have produced another effect in them, even love to Chriſt; which the doctrine of Chriſt, wherever it comes with power, and takes place in the ſoul, brings along with it; but where it does not, as here, hatred, and indignation, envy and malice, more or leſs, ſhew themſelves. This clauſe is differently rendered, and ſo admits of different ſenſes. The Vulgate Latin renders it, my word does not take in you; it did not take place in them, nor did it take with them; they could not receive it; in which ſenſe the word is uſed in Matt. xix. 11. for the natural man cannot receive the doctrines of Chriſt; they are not ſuited to his taſte; they are diſagreeable to him. The Syriac verſion renders it, ye are not ſufficient for my word, to take it in; they were not capable of it; they could not underſtand it; it requires divine illumination, and a ſpiritual diſcerning, which they had not: the Perſic verſion is, ye are not worthy of my words; of having the Goſpel preached to them, and continued with them; they contradicting and blaſpheming it, and rejecting the author of it; ſee Acts xiii. 45, 46. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, my word does not remain with you; and to the ſame purpoſe the Arabic verſion, my word is not firm in you; as ſoon as it was heard by them, it was catched away from them by ſatan, whoſe children they were; it made no laſting impreſſions on them, but was like water ſpilt upon the ground: it may be rendered, my word does not enter into you; it did not make its way and penetrate into their hearts; for though, when attended with the demonſtration of the Spirit, and of power, it is quick and powerful, and ſharper than a two-edged ſword, and enters into the conſcience, and penetrates to the dividing aſunder of ſoul and ſpirit, and lays open the ſecret thoughts and intents of the heart; yet of itſelf is an inſufficient means of converſion; it can't make its own way; there muſt be an exertion of powerful and efficacious grace; which ſhows the hardneſs and obſtinacy of the heart of man.

[k] Maimonides, Jarchi, & Bartenora in ib.

[l] Miſn. Peſachim, c. 8. §. 1.

Ver. 38. I ſpeak that which I have ſeen with my Father, &c.] This is an aggravation of the ſin of the Jews, in ſeeking to kill Chriſt, on account of his doctrine, ſince it was not his own, but his Father's; was not merely human, but divine; was what he the only-begotten Son, that lay in the boſom of his Father, had ſeen in his heart, in his purpoſes, and decrees, in his council, and covenant, and ſo was clear, compleat, certain, and to be depended on: and ye do that which ye have ſeen with your father; meaning the devil, whom, tho' they had not ſeen with their eyes, nor any of his perſonal actions; yet acted ſo much under his influence, and according to his will, as if they had cloſe and intimate conſultation with him, and took their plan of operation from him, and had him continually before them, as their example and pattern, to copy after. The Ethiopic verſion reads, what ye have heard; and ſo it is read in three of Beza's copies, and in three of Stephens's.

Ver. 39. They anſwered and ſaid unto him, &c.] On account of his making mention of a father, whoſe works they did, and whom they imitated: Abraham is our father; meaning their only one, nor had they any other: Jeſus ſaith unto them, if ye were Abraham's children, ye would do the works of Abraham; for who ſhould children imitate but their parents? Abraham was a merciful, charitable, and hoſpitable man, as well as a man of ſtrict juſtice and integrity; he feared God, believed in him, and was ready to receive every meſſage and revelation which came from him; and they are his genuine children and offspring, who walk in the ſteps of his faith, charity, juſtice, and piety: and this is a rule which the Jews themſelves give [m], whereby the ſeed of Abraham may be known: "whoever is merciful "to the creature (man), it is evident, that he is "of the ſeed of Abraham, our father; but whoever "has not mercy on the creature, it is a clear caſe "that he is not of the ſeed of Abraham our father." And if this is a ſure rule of judging, theſe men could not be the ſeed of Abraham, who were a mercileſs, barbarous, and cruel generation. Another of their writers [n] has this obſervation, agreeable to the way of reaſoning Chriſt uſes; "a diſciple is to "be judged of according to his manners; he that "walks in the ways of the Lord, he is of the diſciples of Abraham, our father, ſeeing he is uſed "to his manners, and learns of his works; but "the diſciple who is corrupt in his manners, tho' "he is of the children of Iſrael, lo, he is not of "the diſciples of Abraham, ſeeing he is not accuſtomed to his manners." Whence it appears, that they ſay theſe things not to diſtinguiſh themſelves from other people who claimed a deſcent from Abraham, as the Iſhmaelites or Saracens did; as did alſo the Spartians or Lacedemonians; for ſo writes Areus their king, to Onias the high-prieſt of the Jews, "it is found in writing, that the Lacedemonians and Jews are brethren, and that they are "of the ſtock of Abraham, 1 Maccab. xii. 20, 21." But to diſtinguiſh thoſe who were religious and virtuous among the Jews themſelves, from thoſe that were not; and ſo our Lord means not to deny, that the Jews, tho' they were evil men, were the ſeed of Abraham, according to the fleſh; but that they were not ſo in a ſpiritual ſenſe, they did not tread in his ſteps, or do the works he did. The Perſic verſion reads in the ſingular number, ye would do the work of Abraham; and if any particular work is deſigned, it is moſt likely to be the work of faith, ſince it was that which Abraham was famous for; and the doing of which denominated men, even Gentiles, the children of Abraham, and which the Jews were wanting in, they diſbelieving and rejecting the Meſſiah.

Ver. 40. But now ye ſeek to kill me, &c.] A temper and diſpoſition very foreign from that of Abraham's: a man that hath told you the truth, which I have heard of God; to ſeek to kill a man is a very great crime, and puniſhable with death; to kill an innocent one, that had done no ſin, who was pure, holy, harmleſs, and inoffenſive to God and man, was an aggravation of the iniquity; and to kill a prophet, and one more than a prophet, who brought a revelation from God himſelf, and declared the whole truth of the Goſpel, and particularly that of his divine, eternal ſonſhip, which incenſed them againſt him, and put them upon ſeeking to take away his life, ſtill increaſed the ſin. This did not Abraham: the ſenſe is not, that Abraham did not tell the truth he had heard of God; for he did inſtruct, and command his children after him, to walk in the ways of the Lord, which he had learned from him; but that Abraham did not reject any truth that was revealed unto him, and much leſs ſeek to take away the life of any perſon that brought it to him; and indeed not the life of any man that deſerved not to die: and our Lord ſuggeſts, that if he had been on the ſpot now, he would not have done as theſe his poſterity did, ſince he ſaw his day by faith, and rejoiced in the foreſight of it, ver. 56. The Jew [o] makes an objection from theſe words againſt the deity of Chriſt; "you ſee, ſays he, that "Jeſus declares concerning himſelf, that he is not "God, but man; and ſo ſays Paul concerning him, "Rom. v. 15. and ſo Jeſus, in many places, calls him- "ſelf the ſon of man: nor do we find in any "place that he calls himſelf God, as the Nazarenes believe." To which may be replied, that Jeſus does not declare in theſe words, nor in any other place, that he is not God; he ſays no ſuch thing; he only obſerves, that he was a man, as he really was: nor is his being man, any contradiction to his being God; for he is both God and man; and ſo thoſe that believe in him affirm: and tho' Chriſt does not in expreſs terms call himſelf God, yet he owned himſelf to be the Son of God, Mark xiv. 61. and ſaid ſuch things of himſelf, as manifeſtly declared him to be God; and upon account of which the Jews concluded, that he not only made himſelf equal with God, but that he made himſelf God, John v. 17, 18. and x. 33. Beſides, he ſuffered himſelf to be called God by a diſciple of his, which he would never have done, had he not been really and truly God, John xx. 28. yea, he ſeems to call himſelf ſo, when being tempted by ſatan, he obſerved to him what is written, thou ſhalt not tempt the Lord thy God, Matt. iv. 7. The reaſon why he ſo often calls himſelf the ſon of man, is, becauſe it was more ſuitable to him in his ſtate of humiliation; and indeed, there was no need for him to aſſert his deity in expreſs words, ſince his works and miracles moſt clearly proved that he was God: and as for the Apoſtle Paul, though he ſometimes ſpeaks of him as a man, he alſo ſays of him, that he is God over all, bleſſed for ever; and calls him the great God, and our Saviour, and God manifeſt in the fleſh, Rom. ix. 5. Tit. ii. 13. 1 Tim. iii. 16.

[n] Abarbinel Nachaleth Abot, fol. 183. 1.

[o] R. Iſaac Chizzuk Emuna, par. 2. c. 48. p. 436. & par. 1. c. 10. p. 118.

Ver. 41. Ye do the deeds of your father, &c.] Not Abraham, but the devil. Then ſaid they unto him, we be not born of fornication; meaning either literally, that they were not a brood of baſtards, children of whoredom, illegitimately begotten in unlawful copulation, or wedlock; or figuratively, that they were not the children of idolaters, idolatry being called fornication in ſcripture; but that they were the holy ſeed of Iſrael, and children of the prophets, who had retained the pure word, and the true worſhip of God; tho' in all this they might have been contradicted and confuted; to which they add, we have one father, even God; Iſrael being called by God his ſon, and firſt-born, to them belonged the adoption, in a national ſenſe, and of this they boaſted; tho' few of them were the children of God by ſpecial adoption, or God their father by regenerating grace.

Ver. 42. Jeſus ſaid unto them, if God were your father, &c.] By adoption; and this was diſcovered by the grace of regeneration; or in other words, if they had been born of God, ye would love me; for in regeneration love to Chriſt, is always implanted: it is a fruit of the ſpirit, which always comes along with the ſuper-abounding grace of God in converſion; whoever are begotten again, according to abundant mercy, love an unſeen Jeſus; and where there is no love to Chriſt, there can be no regeneration: ſuch perſons are not born again; nor is God their father, at leaſt manifeſtatively: for I proceeded forth, and came from God; the former of theſe phraſes is obſerved by many learned men, to be uſed by the Septuagint, of a proper, natural birth, as in Gen. xv. 4. and xxxv. 11. and here deſigns the eternal generation of Chriſt, as the ſon of God, being the only-begotten of the father, and the ſon of the father in truth and love; and the other is to be underſtood of his miſſion from him, as mediator: neither came I of myſelf; or did not take the office to himſelf, without being called unto it, and inveſted with it, by his Father: but he ſent me; not by force, or againſt the will of Chriſt, or by change of place, but by aſſumption of nature; he ſent him at the time agreed upon, in human nature, to obtain eternal redemption for his people: and upon both theſe accounts, Chriſt is to be loved by all regenerate perſons, or who have God for their father; both on account of his being the ſon of God, of the ſame nature and eſſence with him, ſee 1 John v. 1. and on account of his miſſion into this world, as Mediator, ſince he was ſent, and came to be the Saviour of loſt ſinners.

Ver. 43. Why do ye not underſtand my ſpeech? &c.] Language, idiom, dialect, and form of ſpeaking, in a figurative way; for they did not know what he meant by liberty, and bondage, and by having another father than Abraham, or by his own proceſſion and coming forth from God: even becauſe ye cannot hear my word; as they had no ſpiritual diſcerning and underſtanding of the doctrine of Chriſt, which ſhewed them to be carnal, and natural men, and not regenerate ones, and the children of God; ſo they had an averſion to it, and could not bear to hear it.

Ver. 44. Ye are of your father the devil, &c.] Not of his ſubſtance, but by imitation and example; and as being under his authority and influence, his inſtructions and directions, and ready to follow after him, and obey his commands; the word your is rightly ſupplied, and is in ſome copies: and the luſts of your father ye will do; the Syriac and Perſic verſions read in the ſingular number, the luſt, or deſire of your father; by which may be particularly meant, his eager deſire after the death of Chriſt, which he ſhewed at different times; he inſtigated Herod to ſeek to deſtroy his life in his infancy, and when he was juſt entering on his publick miniſtry, he tempted him to deſtroy himſelf; and often ſtirred up the Scribes and Phariſees, to ſtone him or kill him, ſome other way; and at laſt put it into the heart of one of his diſciples, Judas Iſcariot, to betray him: this looks as if though the devil had a notion of the ſalvation of men by Chriſt, yet that he thought, as ſome erroneous men have alſo done, that it was only by his doctrine and example, and therefore he was in haſte to get him out of the world, that he might not be uſeful, or any more ſo that way; and not by the ſhedding of his blood, the ſacrifice of himſelf, or by his ſufferings and death, in the room of ſinners; or otherwiſe it is ſcarcely credible, that he would have ſought his death ſo earneſtly: now this ſelf-ſame luſt and inſatiable deſire after the death of Chriſt, prevailed in the Jews; and they were reſolute and bent upon fulfilling it at any rate, nor could any thing divert from it; this is the thing Chriſt is ſpeaking of in the context, and is what fully proved the devil to be their father, and them to be his children: he was a murderer from the beginning; he was not only ſpoken of from the beginning, as he that ſhould bruiſe the Meſſiah's heel, or ſhould compaſs his death, but he was actually a murderer of Adam and Eve, and of all their poſterity, by tempting them to ſin, which brought death and ruin upon them; and who quickly after that, inſtigated Cain to ſlay his brother; and has had, more or leſs, a concern in all murders committed ſince; and has been in all ages, and ſtill is, a murderer of the ſouls of men; and therefore is rightly called Abaddon, and Apollyon, which ſignify the deſtroyer: the phraſe from the beginning, does not intend the beginning of his own creation; for he was created a holy creature, was in the truth, though he abode not in it; and was in an happy ſtate, though he loſt it: nor ſtrictly the beginning of time, or of the creation of the world, which were ſome days at leaſt before the fall of man, when the devil commenced a murderer; but it being very near it, therefore this phraſe is made uſe of: the Syriac verſion renders it, from Bereſhith, which is the firſt word in the Hebrew bible, and is frequently uſed by the Jewiſh Rabbins, for the ſix days of the creation; and if Adam fell, as ſome think, the ſame day he was created, it might be properly ſaid that the devil was a murderer from thence. Philo [p] ſpeaks of Eve's ſerpent, as ανθρωπου φονωντα, a murderer of man; applying to this purpoſe, the text before referred to, Gen. iii. 15. and abode not in the truth; neither in the integrity, innocence, and holineſs, in which he was created; nor in veracity, or as a creature of veracity, but ſpake lies, and formed one, by which he deceived Eve, ſaying, ye ſhall not ſurely die, when God had ſaid they ſhould; nor in the truth of the Goſpel, which was at leaſt in part made known unto him; particularly that the Son of God ſhould become man, and in that nature be the head of angels and men: this he and his aſſociates, in the pride of their hearts, not bearing that the human nature ſhould be exalted above that of theirs, left their firſt eſtate, broke off their allegiance to God, and turned rebels againſt him: becauſe there is no truth in him; not that this is a reaſon why he continued not in the truth, truth, for there was originally truth in him, though he abode not in it; but a reaſon, ſhewing there was none in him now, ſince he was fallen from it, and abode not in it; there is no truth in him, that is natural and genuine, and eſſential to him; and if at any time he ſpeaks it, it is not from his heart, but becauſe he is forced to it, or has an evil deſign in it: when he ſpeaketh a lie, he ſpeaketh of his own; that is genuine and natural, of his own deviſing, willing, and approving: for he is a liar, and the father of it; he was a liar, as early as he was a murderer, or rather earlier; it was with a lie he deceived, and ſo murdered our firſt parents, and he has continued ſo ever ſince; he was the firſt author of a lie; the firſt lie that ever was told, was told by him; he was the firſt inventor of one; he was the firſt of that trade; in this ſenſe the word father is uſed, Gen. iv. 20, 21. ſo the ſerpent is by the Cabbaliſtic Jews [q] called, the lip of lie, or the lying lip.

Ver. 45. And becauſe I tell you the truth, &c.] And no lie, the whole truth of the Goſpel, and particularly the truth of his divine ſonſhip: ye believe me not; to ſuch an infatuation and judicial blindneſs were they given up, to diſbelieve him, becauſe he told the truth, and to believe a lie, that they might be damned; which ſhewed them to be the children of the devil, and under his power and influence.

Ver. 46. Which of you convinceth me of ſin? &c.] Of any immorality in life, or of any impoſture, corruption, or deceit in doctrine. There were many of them that were forward enough to charge him with both ſcandalous ſins, and falſe doctrines; but none of them all could prove any thing againſt him, ſo as to convict him according to law: they called him a wine-bibber, and a glutton; gave out they knew he was a ſinner; charged him with blaſphemy and ſedition; ſought to bring proof of it, but failed in their attempt: and if I ſay the truth, why do ye not believe me? ſince as no ſin in life, ſo no corruption in doctrine, could be proved againſt him, what he ſaid muſt be truth; and therefore it was a moſt unreaſonable thing in them, and ſhewed invincible obſtinacy, not to believe him.

Ver. 47. He that is of God, &c.] Who is born, not of blood, by carnal deſcent from any perſon, or of the carnal will, or by the power of free-will, or of the will of the beſt man in the world; but of God, according to his abundant mercy, of his own will, by the power of his grace; and ſo has God to be his Father: ſuch an one heareth God's words; the doctrines of the Goſpel, which have God for their author, being of his ordaining, ſending, and publiſhing; and his grace for the matter of them, diſplayed in election, redemption, juſtification, pardon, adoption, and eternal ſalvation, and his glory for the end: now a regenerate man has eyes to ſee into the glory, lovelineſs, excellency, ſuitableneſs, and uſefulneſs of theſe things; and he has ears to hear, and a heart to underſtand them, which others have not; and therefore hears them with pleaſure, receives them in the love of them, cordially embraces them by faith, and diſtinguiſhes them from the words of man; and puts ſuch of them in practice, as requires it: ye therefore hear them not, becauſe ye are not of God; becauſe God was not their father, or they were not born of him, as they boaſted; therefore they had not eyes to ſee, nor ears to hear, nor hearts to underſtand: and it may as fairly be inferred, that becauſe they did not hear the words of God, therefore they were not of God; for theſe two neceſſarily put each other; it looks very dark on ſuch perſons, who neither hear the doctrines of the Goſpel, externally nor internally.

Ver. 48. Then anſwered the Jews, and ſaid unto him, &c.] Being incenſed to the laſt degree, that he ſhould ſay they were of their father the devil, and not of God; and that he ſpoke the truth, and no one could convince him of ſin: ſay we not well, that thou art a Samaritan? it ſeems they had ſaid ſo before, though it is not recorded; and now they thought themſelves juſtified in it, ſince he treated them, the true ſons of Abraham, in ſuch a manner; and the rather, ſince he had been lately among the Samaritans, and had in a parable ſpoken in favour of a Samaritan: they meant by this expreſſion, that he was an irreligious man, and one that had no regard to the law of Moſes; or at leaſt played faſt and looſe with religion and the law, and was for any thing, as times ſerved: the Jews had a very ill opinion of the Samaritans, on theſe accounts; and to call a man a Samaritan, was all one as to call him an heretick, an idolater, or an excommunicated perſon; for ſuch were the Samaritans with the Jews; they charged them with corrupting the ſcriptures, and with worſhipping idols, which were hid in mount Gerizzim; and they give us a dreadful account of their being anathematized by Ezra, Zorobabel, and Joſhua; who they ſay [r], "gathered the whole congregation into the temple, and brought in three hundred prieſts, and three hundred children, and three hundred trumpets, and three hundred books of the law, in their hands; they blew the trumpets, and the Levites ſung, and they anathematized the Samaritans, by the inexplicable name of God, and by the writing on tables, and with the anathema of the houſe of judgment, above and below; (ſaying,) let not any Iſraelite for ever eat of the fruit, or of the leaſt morſel of a Samaritan; hence they ſay, whoſo eateth the fleſh of a Samaritan, it is all one as if he eat ſwines fleſh; alſo let not a Samaritan be made a proſelyte, nor have a part in the reſurrection of the dead; as it is ſaid, You have nothing to do with us, to build an houſe unto our God, Ezra iv. 3. neither in this world, nor in the world to come: moreover, alſo let him have no part in Jeruſalem; as it is ſaid, But you have no portion, nor right, nor memorial in Jeruſalem, Neh. ii. 20. and they ſent this anathema to the Iſraelites that were in Babylon, and they added thereunto, curſe upon curſe: moreover, king Cyrus added an everlaſting anathema to it, as it is ſaid, And the God that hath cauſed his name to dwell there, deſtroy, &c. Ezra vi. 12." And hence, becauſe the Samaritans were had in ſuch abhorrence by the Jews, they would not aſk a bleſſing over food in company with them [s], nor ſay Amen after they had aſked one [t]; nor indeed, after the better ſort of them had aſked, unleſs the whole bleſſing was diſtinctly heard [u], that ſo they might be ſure there was no hereſy in it; by all which it appears, how opprobrious this name was, and what a ſad character was fixed upon a man that bore it; ſee the note on John iv. 9. and as Chriſt was called by the Jews a Samaritan, they having no name more hateful and reproachful to call him by, ſo the chriſtians are ſtill in their writings called Cuthites, or Samaritans; and it is indeed with them a general name for all Gentiles and idolaters, or whom they eſteem ſuch: and haſt a devil; familiarity and converſe with one; by which means they imagined he knew their thoughts, and their actions, and by his aſſiſtance performed his miracles; or they took him for a lunatick, or a madman; whoſe lunacy and madneſs proceeded from the devil, with whom he was poſſeſſed: and this rather ſeems to be the ſenſe, ſince in ver. 52. the Jews ſay they knew he had a devil, which they concluded from his ſaying, that ſuch that obſerved his words, and kept them, ſhould never die; which they conſidered as the words of a man out of his ſenſes, ſeeing all men, even the beſt of men die, they not underſtanding his meaning; whereas they could not gather from hence, that he dealt with familiar ſpirits; and what ſtill confirms this ſenſe is, that theſe two are joined together in John x. 20. he hath a devil, and is mad, and ſuch as were demoniacks, men poſſeſſed with devils, were either mad, or lunatick, and melancholy; ſee Matt. viii. 28. Mark v. 2—5. Matt. xvii. 15. compared with Mark ix. 17, 25. To which may be added, that it was a prevailing notion with the Jews, that madneſs and melancholy were owing to evil ſpirits, which had the predominancy over men: and ſeeing Chriſt was thought to be beſides himſelf by his friends and relations, Mark iii. 21. it need not be wondered at, that his enemies ſhould fix ſuch a character on him; nor was this an unuſual one to be given to good men; the prophets and ſpiritual men of the Old Teſtament, were accounted madmen, 2 Kings ix. 11. Hoſ. ix. 7. And ſince our Lord was uſed in this abuſive manner, it need not ſeem ſtrange, that his followers ſhould be treated in the ſame way; as the apoſtle Paul and his companions in the miniſtry were, Acts xxvi. 24. 2 Cor. v. 13. ſee John x. 20.

Ver. 49. Jeſus anſwered, I have not a devil, &c.] He takes no notice of the firſt charge and ſcandalous character, that he was a Samaritan; it being ſo notorious to all the Jews, that he was not; but was, as they ſuppoſed, a Galilean, and of Nazareth; and beſides, this was a term of reproach, which they gave to any man, that they had no good opinion of; juſt as we call a man a Turk, or a Jew; not meaning that he is in fact ſuch an one, but behaves like one: to the other Chriſt replies, that he had not a devil, had no converſation with one, nor was he poſſeſſed or aſſiſted by him, or was mad, and acted the part of a madman: in proof of which he obſerves, but I honour my Father; by aſcribing his doctrine and miracles to him, by doing his will, ſeeking his glory, and ſpeaking well of him; all which he would not, had he been in confederacy with the devil; for no man can be familiar with him, or be aſſiſted by him, and honour God; nor could a man out of his ſenſes, do all this: and ye do diſhonour me; by ſuch wicked charges, and ſcandalous imputations: and Jews, who deny Jeſus to be the Meſſiah, and treat him in this opprobrious manner, are not the only perſons that diſhonour Chriſt; there are many that are called by his name, who greatly diſhonour him; ſome by their bad principles, and others by their evil practices: ſuch highly reflect upon him, who deny his proper deity, and eternal ſonſhip; who aſſert, that he is only God by office, and did not exiſt before his incarnation; who deſpiſe and reject his righteouſneſs, ſubmit not to it, but eſtabliſh their own; who account his blood as common and uſeleſs, and ſpeak diſreſpectfully of his ſacrifice and ſatisfaction; and who conſider his ſufferings and death, only as an example to men, and for the confirmation of his doctrine, but not as in the room and ſtead of his people, to anſwer and ſatisfy divine juſtice for them: and others they diſhonour him, though they talk much of him, and pretend to faith in him, and love to him, and hope of eternal life by him, through their ſcandalous lives and converſations; diſhonour his name and Goſpel; give the enemy an occaſion to reproach and blaſpheme, and by reaſon of them, the ways and truths of Chriſt are evil ſpoken of.

Ver. 50. I ſeek not mine own glory, &c.] In his doctrine, or in his miracles; which ſhowed, that he was no impoſtor, but a true, faithful, and upright perſon; and though he was ſo very much reproached and abuſed, he was not over ſolicitous of his own character, and of retrieving his honour, and of ſecuring glory from man; he knew that wiſdom was juſtified of her children, and he committed himſelf to God that judgeth righteouſly, who would take care of his glory, and vindicate him from all the unjuſt charges and inſults of men: there is one that ſeeketh and judgeth; meaning God his Father, who had his glory at heart; who had glorified him on the mount, and would glorify him again, when he ſhould raiſe him from the dead, and ſpread his Goſpel in all the world; and when he would judge the nation of the Jews, and bring wrath upon them, upon their nation, city and temple, for their contempt and rejection of him.

Ver. 51. Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, &c.] This is truth, and may be depended upon, as coming from the Amen, and faithful witneſs: if a man keep my ſaying; or doctrine, receives the Goſpel in the love of it, obeys it from his heart, and cordially embraces and firmly believes it; and retains and holds it faſt, having a ſpiritual and comfortable experience of the doctrines of Chriſt, and yielding a chearful and ready obedience to his commands and ordinances, in faith and love: he ſhall never ſee death; the ſecond death, eternal death, which is an everlaſting ſeparation of a man, body and ſoul from God; this death ſhall have no power on ſuch a perſon, he ſhall never be hurt by it; and though he dies a corporal death, that ſhall not be a curſe, a penal evil to him; nor ſhall he always lie under the power of it, but ſhall riſe again, and live in ſoul and body, for ever with the Lord: ſeeing and taſting death as in the next verſe, are Hebraiſms expreſſive of dying.

Ver. 52. Then ſaid the Jews unto him, &c.] Upon theſe laſt words that he ſpake, giving aſſurance, that whoever kept his ſaying, ſhould not die: now we know that thou haſt a devil; they thought and ſaid ſo before, but now they were aſſured, that he muſt be under diabolical influence, muſt be poſſeſſed with the devil, and mad, and out of his ſenſes; for they thought no man in his ſenſes, would ever talk at this rate: Abraham is dead, and the prophets; that is, they are dead alſo, as the Ethiopic verſion adds; ſee Zech. i. 5. and thou ſayeſt, if a man keep my ſaying, he ſhall never taſte of death: Abraham and the prophets, were ſo far from pretending by their doctrine to communicate life and ſecure men from death, that they could not keep themſelves from dying; and therefore it muſt be diabolical madneſs and phrenzy, to aſſert any thing of this kind.

Ver. 53. Art thou greater than our father Abraham? &c.] So the woman of Samaria ſaid, concerning Jacob, ch. iv. 12. The Jews had a mighty opinion of their anceſtors, eſpecially of Abraham; and yet they allow the Meſſiah to be greater than he, as Jeſus truly was: ſo one of their ancient commentators [w] on thoſe words of Iſa. lii. 13. thus paraphraſes them, "Behold my ſervant ſhall deal prudently, this is the king Meſſiah; he ſhall be exalted above Abraham, as it is written, Gen. xiv. 22. and extolled above Moſes, as it is written, Numb. xi. 12. and he ſhall be higher than the miniſtring angels, as it is written, Ezek. i. 18. Zech. iv. 7. for he ſhall be, גדול מן אבות, greater than the fathers." They add here, of Abraham, which is dead; he was a great and good man, and yet dead: and the prophets are dead; though they truly kept, and faithfully delivered the word of God: whom makeſt thou thyſelf? who art a poor carpenter's ſon, a Galilean, a Nazarene, and yet makeſt thyſelf greater than Abraham, or any of the prophets; yea, makeſt thyſelf to be God, to promiſe ſecurity from death, and an everlaſting continuance of life, upon keeping thy word.

Ver. 54. Jeſus anſwered, if I honour myſelf, my honour is nothing, &c.] It is empty and vain, and will not continue; ſee 2 Cor. x. 18. it is my father that honoureth me; by a voice from heaven, both at his baptiſm, and transfiguration, declaring him to be his beloved ſon, and by the works and miracles he did by him; as he afterwards alſo honoured him by raiſing him from the dead, and ſetting him at his own right hand, by pouring forth his Spirit on his diſciples, and ſucceeding his Goſpel in every place: of whom ye ſay that he is your God; your covenant God and Father, being the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob; of this the Jews boaſted. The Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, and all the Oriental verſions read, our God.

Ver. 55. Yet ye have not known him, &c.] Not as the Father of Chriſt, nor as in Chriſt, whom to know is life eternal: they had no ſpiritual knowledge of him, nor communion with him; nor did they know truly his mind and will, nor how to worſhip and ſerve him as they ought: but I know him; his nature and perfections, being of the ſame nature, and having the ſame perfections with him; and his whole mind and will lying in his boſom: nor did, or does any know the Father, but the Son, and he to whom he is pleaſed to reveal him: and if I ſhould ſay, I know him not, I ſhould be a liar, like unto you. Our Lord ſtill intimates, that they were of their father the devil, and imitated him not only as a murderer, but as a liar: this is quite contrary to the character they give of themſelves, for they ſay [x], that an Iſraelite will not tell a lye. But I know him, and keep his ſaying; do his will, and always the things that pleaſe him, obſerve his law, preach his Goſpel, fulfil all righteouſneſs, and work out the ſalvation of men, which were the will and work of his Father he came to do.

Ver. 56. Your father Abraham rejoiced to ſee my day, &c.] Or he was deſirous to ſee my day, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions rightly render the word; or very deſirous, as the Perſic verſion: and indeed, this was what many kings and prophets, and righteous men, were deſirous of, even of ſeeing the Meſſiah and his day: we often read of, ימות המשיח, the days of the Meſſiah; and the Jews in their Talmud [y], diſpute much about them, how long they will be; one ſays forty years, another ſeventy, another three ages: it is the opinion of ſome, that they ſhall be according to the number of the days of the year, three hundred and ſixty-five years; ſome ſay [y] ſeven thouſand years, and others as many as have been from the beginning of the world; and others, as many as from Noah; but we know the day of Chriſt better, and how long he was here on earth; and whoſe whole time here is called his day; this Abraham had a very great deſire to ſee: and he ſaw it and was glad; he ſaw it with an eye of faith, he ſaw it in the promiſe, that in his ſeed all the nations of the earth ſhould be bleſſed; and when it was promiſed him he ſhould have a ſon, which was the beginning of the fulfilment of the other, he laughed, and therefore his ſon was called Iſaac, to which ſome reference is here made; he ſaw him in the birth of his ſon Iſaac and rejoiced, and therefore called his name Iſaac, that is, laughter: he ſaw alſo Chriſt and his day, his ſufferings, death, and reſurrection from the dead, in a figure; in the binding of Iſaac, in the ſacrifice of the ram, and in the receiving of Iſaac, as from the dead; and he not only ſaw the Meſſiah in his type Melchizedeck, and who ſome think was the Son of God himſelf, but he ſaw the ſecond perſon, the promiſed Meſſiah, in an human form, Gen. xviii. 2. and all this was matter of joy and gladneſs to him. This brings to mind what the Jews ſay at the rejoicing at the law, when the book of the law is brought out [z]: "Abraham rejoiced with the rejoicing of the law, he that cometh ſhall come, the bra[illegible]h the joy of the law; Iſaac, Jacob, Moſes, Aaron, Joſhua, Samuel, David, Solomon, rejoiced with the joy of the law; he that cometh ſhall come, the branch with the joy of the law."

Ver. 57. Then ſaid the Jews unto him, thou art not yet fifty years old, &c.] One copy reads forty, but he was not that; no, not much more than thirty; not above two or three and thirty years old: the reaſon of their fixing on this age of fifty might be, becauſe Chriſt might look like ſuch an one, being a man of ſorrows and acquainted with griefs, as well as of great gravity; or they might be free in allowing him as many years, as could be thought he ſhould be of, and gain their point; for what were fifty years, when Abraham had been dead above two thouſand? and therefore he could never ſee Abraham, nor Abraham ſee him: moreover, this age of fifty, is often ſpoken of by the Jews, and much obſerved; at the age of fifty, a man is fit to give counſel they ſay [a]; hence the Levites were diſmiſſed from ſervice at that age, it being more proper for them then to give advice, than to bear burdens; a Methurgeman, or an interpreter in a congregation, was not choſen under fifty years of age [b]; and if a man died before he was fifty, this was called the death of cuting off [c]; a violent death, a death inflicted by God, as a puniſhment; Chriſt lived not to that age, he was now many years ſhort of it: and haſt thou ſeen Abraham? if he had not, Abraham had ſeen him, in the ſenſe before given, and in which Chriſt aſſerted it, and it is to be underſtood.

Ver. 58. Jeſus ſaid unto them, verily verily I ſay unto you, &c.] Whether it will be believed or no, it is certainly fact: before Abraham was, I am; which is to be underſtood, not of his being in the purpoſe and decree of God, fore-ordained to ſufferings, and to glory; for ſo all the elect of God may be ſaid to be before Abraham, being choſen in Chriſt before the foundation of the world: or that Chriſt was man, before Abraham became the father of many nations; that is, before the calling of the Gentiles;

Gentiles; for nothing is ſaid in the text about his being the father of many nations; it is a bold and impudent addition to it: and beſides, Abraham was made the father of many nations, as Iſhmaelites, Iſraelites, Hagarenes, &c. long before the incarnation of Chriſt; yea, he was ſo from the very promiſe in Gen. xvii. 5. which ſo runs, a father of many nations have I made thee; ſo that this appears a falſe ſenſe of the text, which is to be underſtood of the deity, eternity, and immutability of Chriſt, and refers to the paſſage in Exod. iii. 14. I am that I am——I am hath ſent me unto you, the true Jehovah; and ſo Chriſt was before Abraham was in being, the everlaſting I am, the eternal God, which is, and was, and is to come: he appeared in an human form to our firſt parents before Abraham was, and was manifeſted as the mediator, ſaviour, and living redeemer, to whom all the patriarchs before Abraham looked, and by whom they were ſaved: he was concerned in the creation of all things out of nothing, as the efficient cauſe thereof; he was ſet up from everlaſting as mediator; and the covenant of grace was made with him, and the bleſſings and promiſes of it were put into his hands before the world began; the eternal election of men to everlaſting life was made in him before the foundation of the world; and he had a glory with his father before the world was; yea, from all eternity he was the Son of God, of the ſame nature with him, and equal to him; and his being of the ſame nature proves his eternity, as well as deity, that he is from everlaſting to everlaſting God; and is what he ever was, and will be what he now is: he is immutable, the ſame to-day, yeſterday, and for ever; in his nature, love, grace, and fulneſs, he is the invariable and unchangeable I am.

Ver. 59. Then they took up ſtones to caſt at him, &c.] Suppoſing that he had ſpoken blaſphemy; for they well underſtood that he, by ſo ſaying, made himſelf to be the eternal God, the unchangeable Jehovah. Should it be aſked how they came by their ſtones in the temple? it may be replied, the temple was ſtill building, John ii. 20. and ſtones, or pieces of ſtones might lie about, with which they furniſhed themſelves, in order to have deſtroyed Chriſt: and this they attempted, tho' it was on the ſabbath-day, as appears from ch. ix. 1, 14. and with them, סקילה בשבת, ſtoning on the ſabbath-day[d] was allowed in ſome caſes. But Jeſus hid himſelf, not in any corner of the temple, or behind a pillar; but he withdrew himſelf from them directly, and made himſelf inviſible to them, by holding their eyes, or caſting a miſt before them, that they could not ſee him: and went out of the temple; by one of the gates of it: going through the midſt of them; not of the perſons that took up ſtones to ſtone him; but the reſt of the people, who were there in great multitudes to hear his doctrine, and ſee his miracles: and ſo paſſed by, and eſcaped out of their hands; the laſt words, going through the midſt of them, and ſo paſſed by, are not in Beza's moſt ancient copy, and in the Vulgate Latin verſion.
